

3
THIS BOOK MUST NOT BE REMOVED FROM THE LIBRARY

UNIVERSITY OF LONDON LIBRARY

46.4

1x. N. Gallery.

UNIVERSITY OF LONDON LIBRARY

THE ALL ENGLAND LAW REPORTS

OF CASES DECIDED IN
THE HOUSE OF LORDS THE PRIVY COUNCIL
ALL DIVISIONS OF THE SUPREME COURT AND COURTS OF SPECIAL JURISDICTION

1947
VOLUME 2

Consulting Editor :

Sir ROLAND BURROWS, K.C.

Recorder of Cambridge.

Managing Editor of Halsbury's Laws of England, Hailsham Edition.

Consulting Editor for Chancery Cases :

HAROLD CHRISTIE, K.C.

Bencher of Lincoln's Inn.

Consulting Editor for Taxation Cases :

CYRIL KING, K.C.

Bencher of the Middle Temple.

General Editor :

G. F. L. BRIDGMAN,

of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law.

[For list of Reporters see overleaf]

Published by the Proprietors of
THE LAW JOURNAL, 11 & 12 BELL YARD, TEMPLE BAR, LONDON, W.C.2.

ALL ENGLAND LAW REPORTS.

CONSULTING EDITOR :

SIR ROLAND BURROWS, K.C.,

Recorder of Cambridge.

MANAGING EDITOR OF HALSBURY'S LAWS OF ENGLAND, HAILSHAM EDITION

CONSULTING EDITOR FOR CHANCERY CASES :

HAROLD CHRISTIE, Esq., K.C.,

Bencher of Lincoln's Inn.

CONSULTING EDITOR FOR TAXATION CASES :

CYRIL KING, Esq., K.C.,

Bencher of the Middle Temple.

GENERAL EDITOR :

G. F. L. BRIDGMAN, Esq.

of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law.

REPORTERS :

House of Lords	C. ST. JOHN W. NICHOLSON, B.A. (OXON.)	Barrister-at-Law
Privy Council	C. R. L. PHILLIPS	Barrister-at-Law
Court of Appeal, No. 1 ..	{ J. A. CROCKETT F. GUTTMAN }	Barristers-at-Law
Court of Appeal, No. 2 ..	C. ST. JOHN W. NICHOLSON, B.A. (OXON.)	Barrister-at-Law
Court of Appeal, No. 3 ..	{ C. N. BEATTIE R. L. ZIAR, B.A. (CANTAB.) }	Barristers-at-Law
Chancery Division ..	R. D. H. OSBORNE	Barrister-at-Law
King's Bench Division ..	{ W. J. ALDERMAN F. A. AMIES, B.A. (LEEDS) M.D. CHORLTON, M.A. (OXON.) GWYNEDD LEWIS CONRAD OLDHAM }	Barristers-at-Law
Court of Criminal Appeal, and Railway and Canal Commission Cases	{ R. HENDRY WHITE }	Barrister-at-Law
Probate and Divorce ..	R. HENDRY WHITE	Barrister-at-Law
Ecclesiastical Cases ..	R. HENDRY WHITE	Barrister-at-Law

These reports are cited thus :

[1947] 2 All E. R.

CASES REPORTED IN VOLUME 2

	PAGE		PAGE
ABBEY PANEL & SHEET METAL CO., LTD. v. BARSON PRODUCTS (A FIRM) [C.A.]	809	BRYANT, ECCLES v. [CH.D.]	63
ABERDARE URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL v. PONTYPRIDD AREA ASSESSMENT COMMITTEE [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	877	—, [C.A.]	865
ADMIRALTY COMRS. v. NORTH OF SCOTLAND AND ORKNEY AND SHETLAND STEAM NAVIGATION CO., LTD. [H.L.]	350	BURLINSON, Ex parte , R. v. EPPING (WALTHAM ABBEY) JJ. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	537
ANGLO-SAXON PETROLEUM CO., LTD. v. DAMANT. SAME v. REGEM [C.A.]	465	BURT BOULTON & HAYWARD, LTD., WHITBY v. [K.B.D.]	324
APT (OTHERWISE MAGNUS) v. APT [C.A.]	677	BUTTERWASSER, R. v. [C.C.A.]	415
ARMEMENT ANVERSOIS SOCIETE ANONYME, TYNE IMPROVEMENT COMRS. v. THE BRABO [C.A.]	363	C. v. C. [DIV.]	50
ARMSTRONG WHITWORTH SECURITIES CO., LTD., Re [CH.D.]	479	CAIRNS, PUBLIC TRUSTEE v., Re DONKIN [CH.D.]	690
ASCOT LODGE, LTD., Ex parte , R. v. HAMPSTEAD AND ST. PANCRAS RENT TRIBUNAL [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	12	CAMPBELL v. PROUD'S ENGINEERING CO., LTD. [C.A.]	97
ASSOCIATED EQUIPMENT CO., LTD., EVERETT v. [C.A.]	132	CANTER, MORELL (H.) & SONS, LTD. v. [C.A.]	533
ASSOCIATED LONDON PROPERTIES, LTD. v. WILLIAMS (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) [K.B.D.]	474	CARR v. DECCA GRAMOPHONE CO., LTD. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	20
ASSOCIATED PROVINCIAL PICTURE HOUSES, LTD. v. WEDNESBURY CORPN. [C.A.]	680	CARTER PATERSON AND PICKFORDS CARRIERS, LTD., WESSEL v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	280
ATTORNEY-GENERAL, COTTESLOE v. Re MIDDLETON'S SETTLEMENT [C.A.]	134	CASSEL v. GRANT, Re BISCHOFFSHEIM [CH.D.]	830
ATTORNEY-GENERAL, TEMPERLEY v., Re STRAKOSCH (deceased) [CH.D.]	607	CHAPMAN, BLOWS v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	576
ATTORNEY-GENERAL, UNIACKE v. Re MILLER'S AGREEMENT [CH.D.]	78	CHAPMAN, OAK PROPERTY CO., LTD. v. [C.A.]	1
AUSTEN, WARREN v. [C.A.]	185	CHAPMAN (H.M. INSPECTOR OF TAXES), DE POIX v. [K.B.D.]	649
AVARD, Re , HOOK v. PARKER [CH.D.]	548	CHEEK, MALCOLM v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	881
BACON v. BACON [DIV.]	327	CHILLINGWORTH v. BATE, BATE, Re (deceased) [CH.D.]	418
BALTYK, THE [ADM.]	560	CHOWDHARY v. GILLOT [K.B.D.]	541
BARKING CORPN., WILKINSON v. [K.B.D.]	24	CLELAND, POWELL v. [C.A.]	672
BARNES v. BARNES (AYRES CITED) [DIV.]	326	COATS' TRUSTS, Re , COATS v. GILMOUR [CH.D.]	422
BARRINGTON v. KENT RIVERS CATCHMENT BOARD [K.B.D.]	782	COBARRO, BRANCA v. [C.A.]	101
BARSON PRODUCTS (A FIRM), ABBEY PANEL & SHEET METAL CO., LTD. v. [C.A.]	809	COHEN v. COHEN [C.A.]	69
BATE, Re (deceased), CHILLINGWORTH v. BATE [CH.D.]	418	COLLIS REMOVAL SERVICE, WOOLF v. [C.A.]	260
BATTERSEA BOROUGH COUNCIL, Ex parte , R. v. WILSON [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	569	COMMERCIAL STRUCTURES, LTD. v. R. A. BRIGGS (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) [K.B.D.]	659
BAXTER v. BAXTER [H.L.]	886	COMMISSIONER OF POLICE, R. v., Ex parte NALDER [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	611
BAYER PRODUCTS, LTD.'S APPLICATION, Re [C.A.]	188	COMPTOIR D'ACHAT ET DE VENTE DU BOERENBOND BELGE S.A. v. LOUIS DE RIDDER, LIMITADA [C.A.]	443
BEARD v. PORTER [C.A.]	407	COMPTON AND COOPER, R. v. [C.C.A.]	701
BECKENHAM RATING AUTHORITY, THOMPSON v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	274	CONSETT IRON CO., LTD., PLATER v. [C.A.]	460
BEDROCK INVESTMENTS, LTD., Ex parte , R. v. PADDINGTON AND ST. MARLYBONE RENT TRIBUNAL [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	15	COOPER AND COMPTON, R. v. [C.C.A.]	701
BEER v. BEER (NEILSON CITED). BEER v. BEER AND NEILSON [DIV.]	711	CO-OPERATIVE PRESS, LTD., JELIC v. [C.A.]	767
BENARDOUT, HOUSE PROPERTY AND INVESTMENT CO., LTD. v. [K.B.D.]	753	COPLANS v. KING [C.A.]	393
BENNETT, WRIGHT v. [K.B.D.]	61	CORNFORD, RHODES v. [C.A.]	601
BENTLEY, Ex parte , Re SANDERS [CH.D.]	828	COTTESLOE v. H.M. ATTORNEY-GENERAL, Re MIDDLETON'S SETTLEMENT [C.A.]	134
BETHUNE v. LUCAS, Re LUCAS [CH.D.]	213	COVERED MARKETS, LTD. v. GREEN [K.B.D.]	140
BIONDI v. KIRKINGTON & PICCADILLY ESTATES, LTD. [CH.D.]	59	CRATE v. MILLER [C.A.]	45
BIRD v. HILDAGE [C.A.]	7	CRESSWELL v. SIRL [C.A.]	730
BISCHOFFSHEIM, Re , CASSEL v. GRANT [CH.D.]	830	CUTLER v. WANDSWORTH STADIUM, LTD. [C.A.]	815
BLOWS v. CHAPMAN [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	576	DAILEY v. DAILEY (OTHERWISE SMITH) [C.A.]	269
BOWEN, TARTTELIN v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	837	DALGLEISH v. LEIGHTON, EDWARD'S WILL TRUSTS, Re [CH.D.]	521
BRABO, THE. TYNE IMPROVEMENT COMRS. v. ARMEMENT ANVERSOIS SOCIETE ANONYME [C.A.]	363	DAMANT, ANGLO-SAXON PETROLEUM CO., LTD. v. ANGLO-SAXON PETROLEUM CO., LTD. v. REGEM [C.A.]	465
BRANCA v. COBARRO [C.A.]	101	DAVENPORT, LEEDS (DUKE) v. Re DUKE OF LEEDS' WILL TRUSTS [CH.D.]	200
BRANNAN v. PEEK [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	572	DAVIS (W.) (SPITALFIELDS), LTD. v. HUNTLEY [C.A.]	371
BREED v. BRITISH DRUG HOUSES, LTD. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	613	DAW, MUNRO v. [C.A.]	360
BRIGGS (R. A.) (INSPECTOR OF TAXES), COMMERCIAL STRUCTURES, LTD. v. [K.B.D.]	659	DE POIX v. CHAPMAN (H.M. INSPECTOR OF TAXES) [K.B.D.]	649
BRIGHTSTEIN v. BRIGHTSTEIN [C.A.]	121	DE RENEVILLE (COMTESSE) (OTHERWISE SHERIDAN) v. DE RENEVILLE (COMTE) [DIV.]	112
BRITISH DRUG HOUSES, LTD., BREED v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	613	DECCA GRAMOPHONE CO., LTD., CARR v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	20
BRITTLE v. BRITTLE (BY HIS GUARDIAN) [DIV.]	383	DICKSON (V. R.), APPEAL OF. Re A DECISION OF A DISTRICT AUDITOR [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	47
BROWN v. BROWN (OTHERWISE GRAYSON) (BY HER GUARDIAN) [DIV.]	160	DISTRICT AUDITOR, Re A DECISION OF A. APPEAL OF V. R. DICKSON [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	47
		DONKIN, Re , PUBLIC TRUSTEE v. CAIRNS [CH.D.]	690
		DORMAN, LONG & CO., LTD., GALLAGHER v. [C.A.]	38
		DORRINGTON v. LONDON PASSENGER TRANSPORT BOARD [K.B.D.]	84
		DUFFIELD v. GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY CO. [C.A.]	636
		EASTERN COUNTIES BUILDING SOCIETY v. RUSSELL [C.A.]	734
		EASTERN TELEGRAPH CO., LTD., Re [CH.D.]	104
		EASTEX MANUFACTURING CO., LTD.'S APPLICATION, Re [CH.D.]	55

	PAGE
ECCLLES v. BRYANT [Ch.D.]	63
—, [C.A.]	565
EDWARD'S WILL TRUSTS, Re . DALGEISH v. LEIGHTON [Ch.D.]	521
EGERTON v. ESPLANADE HOTELS, LONDON, LTD. [K.B.D.]	88
ENTERTAINMENTS & GENERAL INVESTMENT CORPN., LTD., G. C. & E. NUTHALL (1917), LTD. v. [K.B.D.]	384
EPPING (WALTHAM ABBEY) JJ., R. v., Ex parte BURLINSON [K.B.D. DIVL. Ct.]	537
ESPLANADE HOTELS, LONDON, LTD., EGERTON v. [K.B.D.]	88
EVANS v. EVANS [K.B.D. DIVL. Ct.]	656
EVANS v. MINISTER OF PENSIONS [K.B.D.]	436
EVANS, WHEELER v. [C.A.]	740
EVERETT v. ASSOCIATED EQUIPMENT CO., LTD. [C.A.]	132
FAIRRIE (J. L.) v. HALL (J. M.) (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) [K.B.D.]	141
FARRUGIA v. GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY CO. [C.A.]	565
FINDLAY v. FINDLAY [C.A.]	71
FITTON, WATKINS v. Re OLIVER [Ch.D.]	162
FLETCHER v. MINISTER OF TOWN AND COUNTRY PLANNING [K.B.D.]	496
FORSYTH v. FORSYTH [C.A.]	623
FRAENKEL v. WHITTY [Ch.D.]	646
FRAMPTON, HARTE v. [C.A.]	604
FRANKLIN v. MINISTER OF TOWN AND COUNTRY PLANNING [H.L.]	289
FRANKS, RE, FRANKS v. FRANKS [Ch.D.]	638
GALLAGHER v. DORMAN, LONG & CO., LTD. [C.A.]	38
GILLOT CHOWDHARY v. [K.B.D.]	541
GILMOUR, COATS v. COATS' TRUSTS, Re [Ch.D.]	422
GINESI v. GINESI [Div.]	438
GLASBROOK BROTHERS, LTD., WILLIAMS v. [C.A.]	884
GLASGOW CORPN. v. NELSON [H.L.]	346
GLENTANAR v. WELLINGTON, Re DUKE OF WELLINGTON [Ch.D. and C.A.]	854
GOODMAN v. SERLE [K.B.D. DIVL. Ct.]	318
GOSS v. GOSS [Div.]	617
GOTT v. MEASURES [K.B.D. DIVL. Ct.]	609
GRANT, CASSEL v. Re BISCHOFFSHEIM [Ch.D.]	830
GREAT BOULDER PROPRIETARY GOLD MINES, LTD., GRUNDT v. [Ch.D.]	439
GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY CO., DUFFIELD v. [C.A.]	636
GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY CO., FARRUGIA v. [C.A.]	565
GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY CO., HYETT v. [C.A.]	264
GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY CO., RAILWAY ASSESSMENT AUTHORITY v. [H.L.]	794
GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY CO., TUDOR v. [C.A.]	768
GREEN, COVERED MARKETS, LTD. v. [K.B.D.]	140
GREEN (H. E.) & SONS v. MINISTER OF HEALTH [K.B.D.]	469
GREENBERG, Ex parte , R. v. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS AND SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE COLONIES [VACATION COURT]	550
GREENHALGH v. MALLARD [C.A.]	255
GRUNDT v. GREAT BOULDER PROPRIETARY GOLD MINES, LTD. [Ch.D.]	439
GRUNDY, SOTHEBY v. [K.B.D.]	761
HALE v. HANTS & DORSET MOTOR SERVICES, LTD. [C.A.]	628
HALL (J. M.) (INSPECTOR OF TAXES), FAIRRIE (J. L.) v. [K.B.D.]	141
HAMPSTEAD AND ST. PANCRAS RENT TRIBUNAL, R. v., Ex parte ASCOT LODGE, LTD. [K.B.D. DIVL. Ct.]	12
HANTS & DORSET MOTOR SERVICES, LTD., HALE v. [C.A.]	628
HARCOURT v. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL v. SHELLEY [K.B.D. DIVL. Ct.]	320
—, [C.A.]	720
HARTE v. FRAMPTON [C.A.]	604
HASTING v. HASTING [C.A.]	744
HASTINGS, PUBLIC TRUSTEE v. Re POWER'S WILL TRUSTS [Ch.D.]	282
HEWITT, MOORE v. [K.B.D. DIVL. Ct.]	270
HICK BROTHERS MANUFACTURING CO., LTD., HINDLE v. [C.A.]	825
HIGGINS, R. v. [C.C.A.]	619
HILDAGE, BIRD v. [C.A.]	7
HINDLE v. HICK BROTHERS MANUFACTURING CO., LTD. [C.A.]	825
HINES v. WINNICK [Ch.D.]	517
HOOK v. PARKER, Re AVARD [Ch.D.]	548
HORATIO CROWTHER & CO., LTD., Ex parte , R. v. NATIONAL ARBITRATION TRIBUNAL [K.B.D. DIVL. Ct.]	693
HORTON v. HORTON [H.L.]	871
HOUSE PROPERTY AND INVESTMENT CO., LTD. v. BENARDOUT [K.B.D.]	753

	PAGE
HOUSE PROPERTY AND INVESTMENT CO., LTD. v. JAMES WALKER, GOLDSMITH AND SILVERSMITH, LTD. [K.B.D.]	789
HOWARD v. WALKER [K.B.D.]	197
HUDDESFIELD POLICE AUTHORITY v. WATSON [K.B.D. DIVL. Ct.]	193
HUGHES v. LANCASTER STEAM COAL COLLIERIES, LTD. [C.A.]	556
HUNTLEY, W. DAVIS (SPITALFIELDS), LTD. v. [C.A.]	371
HUTCHINSON v. HUTCHINSON [K.B.D.]	792
HUTTON v. WATLING [Ch.D.]	641
HYETT v. GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY CO. [C.A.]	264
INLAND REVENUE COMRS., JAY'S THE JEWELLERS, LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. JAY'S THE JEWELLERS, LTD. [K.B.D.]	762
INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. LAURENCE PHILIPPS & CO. (INSURANCE), LTD. [K.B.D.]	144
INLAND REVENUE COMRS., LONDON AND NATIONAL PROPERTY CO., LTD. v. [K.B.D.]	799
INLAND REVENUE COMRS., NATIONAL ANTI-VIVISECTION SOCIETY v. [H.L.]	217
INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. ROWNTREE & CO., LTD. [K.B.D.]	473
INLAND REVENUE COMRS., RUSTPROOF METAL WINDOW CO., LTD. v. [C.A.]	454
INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. SCOTT-ELLIS [C.A.]	502
INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. TOOTAL BROADHURST LEE CO., LTD. [C.A.]	409
INLAND REVENUE COMRS., WOLFSON v. [K.B.D.]	150
INNS, RE, INNS v. WALLACE [Ch.D.]	308
J. (OTHERWISE S.) v. J. [C.A.]	43
JAMES v. MINISTER OF PENSIONS [K.B.D.]	432
JAMES WALKER, GOLDSMITH AND SILVERSMITH, LTD., HOUSE PROPERTY AND INVESTMENT CO., LTD. v. [K.B.D.]	789
JAY'S THE JEWELLERS, LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. JAY'S THE JEWELLERS, LTD. [K.B.D.]	762
JELIC v. CO-OPERATIVE PRESS, LTD. [C.A.]	767
JOBBINS v. MIDDLESEX COUNTY COUNCIL [K.B.D. DIVL. Ct.]	748
JOHN, STEFANI v. [K.B.D. DIVL. Ct.]	615
JOHNSON (B.), & CO. (BUILDERS), LTD. v. MINISTER OF HEALTH [C.A.]	395
JOHNSTONE & CUMBERS, LTD., MAYNE v. [K.B.D.]	159
JONES, RE, WILLIAMS v. ROWLANDS [Ch.D.]	716
JORDAN, R. v. Ex parte LUTRING [K.B.D. DIVL. Ct.]	875
KADEL CHAJKIN AND CE DE, LTD. v. MITCHELL COTTS & CO. (MIDDLE EAST), LTD. AND A/S MOTORTRAMP [K.B.D.]	786
KENT RIVERS CATCHMENT BOARD, BARRINGTON v. [K.B.D.]	782
KILFORD v. KILFORD [Div.]	381
KING, COPLANS v. [C.A.]	393
KIRK v. KIRK [Div.]	118
KIRKBY v. PHILLIPS [Ch.D.]	777
KIRKINGTON & PICCADILLY ESTATES, LTD., BIONDI v. [Ch.D.]	59
KIRTON, SANDYS v. Re SANDYS' WILL TRUST [C.A.]	302
KOHN v. RINSON & STAFFORD (BROD), LTD. [K.B.D.]	839
LANCASTER v. LONDON PASSENGER TRANSPORT BOARD [C.A.]	267
LANCASTER STEAM COAL COLLIERIES, LTD., HUGHES v. [C.A.]	556
LARHOLT, NELSON v. [K.B.D.]	751
LAURENCE PHILIPPS & CO. (INSURANCE), LTD., INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. [K.B.D.]	144
LEEDS (DUKE OF) WILL TRUSTS, Re , LEEDS (DUKE OF) DAYENPORT [Ch.D.]	200
LEIGHTON, DALGLEISH v. EDWARD'S WILL TRUSTS, Re [Ch.D.]	521
LEWIS A. MAY (PRODUCE DISTRIBUTORS), LTD., MCCULLOCH v. [Ch.D.]	845
LEWISHAM BOROUGH COUNCIL v. MALONEY [C.A.]	36
LIVERPOOL AND LONDON WAR RISKS INSURANCE ASSOCIATION, LTD. v. OCEAN STEAMSHIP CO., LTD. [H.L.]	586
LOMAS v. PEEK [K.B.D. DIVL. Ct.]	574
LONDON AND NATIONAL PROPERTY CO., LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. [K.B.D.]	799
LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL v. SHELLEY. HARCOURT v. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL [K.B.D. DIVL. Ct.]	320
—, [C.A.]	720
LONDON PASSENGER TRANSPORT BOARD, DORRINGTON v. [K.B.D.]	84
LONDON PASSENGER TRANSPORT BOARD, LANCASTER v. [C.A.]	267
LONDON PASSENGER TRANSPORT BOARD, UPSON v. [C.A.]	509

	PAGE		PAGE
LORD'S SETTLEMENT, Re , MARTINS BANK, LTD. v. LORD [CH.D.]	685	PEEK, LOMAS v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	574
LUCAS, Re , BETHUNE v. LUCAS [CH.D.]	213	PEEK v. PEEK [DIV.]	578
LUCAS (deceased), Re , SHEARD v. MELLOR [CH.D.]	773	PERRATT, OKEN v. [K.B.D.]	236
LUIS DE RIDDER, LIMITADA, COMPTOIR D'ACHAT ET DE VENTE DU BOERENBOND BELGE S.A. v. [C.A.]	443	PHILLIPS, KIRKBY v. [CH.D.]	777
LUTRING, Ex parte , R. v. JORDAN [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	875	PHILPOT, TERRITORIAL FORCES ASSOCIATION v. [K.B.D.]	376
MCCULLOCH v. LEWIS A. MAY (PRODUCE DIS- TRIBUTORS), LTD. [CH.D.]	845	PLATER v. CONSETT IRON CO., LTD. [C.A.]	460
MALCOLM v. CHEEK [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	881	PONTYPRIDD AREA ASSESSMENT COMMITTEE, ABERDARE URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	877
MALLARD, GREENHALGH v. [C.A.]	255	PORTER, BEARD v. [C.A.]	407
MALONEY, LEWISHAM BOROUGH COUNCIL v. [C.A.]	36	POWELL v. CLELAND [C.A.]	672
MANNING, MORRIS AND MORRIS, MORRIS v. (KING'S PROCTOR SHOWING CAUSE) [DIV.]	377	POWER'S WILL TRUSTS, Re , PUBLIC TRUSTEE v. HASTINGS [CH.D.]	282
MANSER, MORGAN v. [K.B.D.]	666	PRESTON v. NORFOLK COUNTY COUNCIL [C.A.]	124
MARSHALL v. MINISTER OF PENSIONS [K.B.D.]	706	PROUD'S ENGINEERING CO., LTD., CAMPBELL v. [C.A.]	97
MARTINS BANK, LTD. v. LORD, Re LORD'S SETTLE- MENT [CH.D.]	685	PUBLIC TRUSTEE v. CAIRNS, Re DONKIN [CH.D.]	690
MAYNE v. JOHNSTONE & CUMBERS, LTD. [K.B.D.]	159	PUBLIC TRUSTEE v. HASTINGS, Re POWER'S WILL TRUSTS [CH.D.]	282
MEASURES, GOTT v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	609	R. v. BUTTERWASSER [C.C.A.]	415
MELLOR, SHEARD v. Re LUCAS (deceased) [CH.D.]	773	R. v. COMMISSIONER OF POLICE, Ex parte NALDER [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	611
MIDDLESEX COUNTY COUNCIL, JOBBINS v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	748	R. v. COOPER AND COMPTON [C.C.A.]	701
MIDDLESEX COUNTY COUNCIL, WHITING v. [K.B.D.]	758	R. v. EPPING (WALTHAM ABBEY) JJ., Ex parte BURLINSON [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	537
MIDLETON'S SETTLEMENT, Re , COTTESLOE v. H.M. ATTORNEY-GENERAL [C.A.]	134	R. v. HAMPSTEAD AND ST. PANCRAS RENT TRIBUNAL, Ex parte ASCOT LODGE, LTD. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	12
MILLENIUM PRODUCTIONS, LTD., WINTER GARDEN THEATRE (LONDON), LTD. v. [H.L.]	331	R. v. HIGGINS [C.C.A.]	619
MILLER, CRATE v. [C.A.]	45	R. v. JORDAN. Ex parte LUTRING [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	875
MILLER v. MINISTER OF PENSIONS [K.B.D.]	372	R. v. NATIONAL ARBITRATION TRIBUNAL, Ex parte HORATIO CROWTHER & CO., LTD. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	693
MILLER'S AGREEMENT, Re , UNIACKE v. ATTORNEY- GENERAL [CH.D.]	78	R. v. NICHOLSON [C.C.A.]	535
MIM, THE [ADM.]	476	R. v. PADDINGTON AND ST. MARYLEBONE RENT TRIBUNAL, Ex parte BEDROCK INVESTMENTS, LTD. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	15
MINISTER OF HEALTH, GREEN (H. E.) & SONS v. [K.B.D.]	469	R. v. ST. EDMUNDSBURY AND IPSWICH DIOCESE (CHANCELLOR). Ex parte WHITE [C.A.]	170
MINISTER OF HEALTH, JOHNSON (B.), & CO. (BUILDERS), LTD. v. [C.A.]	395	R. v. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS AND SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE COLONIES, Ex parte GREENBERG [VACATION COURT]	550
MINISTER OF PENSIONS, EVANS v. [K.B.D.]	436	R. v. SURREY (NORTH EASTERN AREA) ASSES- SMENT COMMITTEE, Ex parte SURREY COUNTY VALUATION COMMITTEE [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	276
MINISTER OF PENSIONS, JAMES v. [K.B.D.]	432	R. v. WILLESDEN JUSTICES, Ex parte UTLEY [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	838
MINISTER OF PENSIONS, MARSHALL v. [K.B.D.]	706	R. v. WILSON, Ex parte BATTERSEA BOROUGH COUNCIL [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	569
MINISTER OF PENSIONS, MILLER v. [K.B.D.]	372	RAILWAY ASSESSMENT AUTHORITY v. GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY CO. [H.L.]	794
MINISTER OF PENSIONS, RIDLEY v. [K.B.D.]	437	RAWLINSON, RIDSEL v. Re RIDSEL [CH.D.]	312
MINISTER OF PENSIONS, WILLIAMS v. [K.B.D.]	93	REGEM, ANGLO-SAXON PETROLEUM CO., LTD. v. ANGLO-SAXON PETROLEUM CO., LTD. v. RHODES v. CORNFORD [C.A.]	601
MINISTER OF PENSIONS, WILLIAMS v. [K.B.D.]	564	DAMANT [C.A.]	465
MINISTER OF TOWN AND COUNTRY PLANNING, FLETCHER v. [K.B.D.]	496	RIDLEY v. MINISTER OF PENSIONS [K.B.D.]	437
MINISTER OF TOWN AND COUNTRY PLANNING, FRANKLIN v. [H.L.]	289	RIDSEL, Re , RIDSEL v. RAWLINSON [CH.D.]	312
MINISTER OF TOWN AND COUNTRY PLANNING, ROLLO v. [K.B.D.]	488	RINSON & STAFFORD (BROD), LTD., KOHN v. [K.B.D.]	839
MITCHELL COTTS & CO. (MIDDLE EAST), LTD., AND A/S MOTORTAMP, KADEL CHAJKIN AND CE DE, LTD. v. [K.B.D.]	786	ROBERT (OTHERWISE DE LA MARE) v. ROBERT [DIV.]	22
MOLESWORTH v. MOLESWORTH [DIV.]	842	ROBIN AND RAMBLER COACHES, LTD. v. TURNER [K.B.D.]	284
MOORE v. HEWITT [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	270	ROLLO v. MINISTER OF TOWN AND COUNTRY PLANNING [K.B.D.]	488
MORELL (H.) & SONS, LTD. v. CANTER [C.A.]	533	ROWLANDS, WILLIAMS v. Re JONES [CH.D.]	716
MORGAN v. MANSER [K.B.D.]	666	ROWNTREE & CO., LTD., INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. [K.B.D.]	473
MORRIS v. MORRIS, MORRIS AND MANNING (KING'S PROCTOR SHOWING CAUSE) [DIV.]	377	RUSSELL, EASTERN COUNTIES BUILDING SOCIETY v. [C.A.]	734
MULLINS v. WESSEX MOTORS, LTD. [C.A.]	727	RUSTPROOF METAL WINDOW CO., LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. [C.A.]	454
MUNRO v. DAW [C.A.]	360	ST. EDMUNDSBURY AND IPSWICH DIOCESE (CHANCELLOR). R. v. Ex parte WHITE [C.A.]	170
NALDER, Ex parte , R. v. COMMISSIONER OF POLICE [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	611	SANDERS, Re , Ex parte BENTLEY [CH.D.]	828
NATIONAL ANTI-VIVISECTION SOCIETY v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. [H.L.]	217	SANDYS' WILL TRUSTS, Re , SANDYS v. KIRTON [C.A.]	302
NATIONAL ARBITRATION TRIBUNAL, R. v. , Ex parte HORATIO CROWTHER & CO., LTD. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	693	SCHULHOF, In the Goods of . In the Goods of WOLF [PROB.]	841
NEILSON, GLASGOW CORPN. v. [H.L.]	346	SCOTT-ELLIS, INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. [C.A.]	502
NEILSON AND BEER, BEER v. , BEER v. BEER (NEILSON cited) [DIV.]	711	SECRETARY OF STATE FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS AND SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE COLONIES, R. v. , Ex parte GREENBERG [VACATION COURT]	550
NELSON v. LARHOIT [K.B.D.]	751	SERLE, GOODMAN v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	318
NICHOLSON, R. v. [C.C.A.]	535	SHEARD v. MELLOR. Re LUCAS (deceased) [CH.D.]	773
NORFOLK COUNTY COUNCIL, PRESTON v. [C.A.]	124	SHELLEY, LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL v. HARCOURT v. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	320
NORTH OF SCOTLAND AND ORKNEY AND SHETLAND STEAM NAVIGATION CO., LTD., ADMIRALTY COMRS. v. [H.L.]	350	—, [C.A.]	720
NUTHALL (G. C. & E.) (1917), LTD. v. ENTER- TAINMENTS & GENERAL INVESTMENT CORPN., LTD. [K.B.D.]	384	SHORT v. TREASURY COMRS. [C.A.]	298
OAK PROPERTY CO., LTD. v. CHAPMAN [C.A.]	1
OCEAN STEAMSHIP CO., LTD., LIVERPOOL AND LONDON WAR RISKS INSURANCE ASSOCIATION, LTD. v. [H.L.]	586
OKEN v. PERRATT [K.B.D.]	286
OLIVER, Re , WATKINS v. FITTON [CH.D.]	162
PADDINGTON AND ST. MARYLEBONE RENT TRIBUNAL, R. v. Ex parte BEDROCK INVEST- MENTS, LTD. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	15
PARKER, HOOK v. , Re AVARD [CH.D.]	548
PEEK, BRANNAN v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	572

	PAGE		PAGE
SIRL, CRESSWELL v. [C.A.] ..	730	WARD v. WARD [Div.] ..	713
SMITH, deceased , Re , VEASEY v. SMITH [Ch.D.] ..	708	WARREN v. AUSTEN [C.A.] ..	185
SMITH v. SMITH [C.A.] ..	741	WATKINS v. FITTON, Re OLIVER [Ch.D.] ..	162
SOTHEYBY v. GRUNDY [K.B.D.] ..	761	WATLING, HUTTON v. [Ch.D.] ..	641
SQUIRE v. SQUIRE [Div.] ..	529	WATSON, HUDDERSFIELD POLICE AUTHORITY v. [K.B.D. Divl. Ct.] ..	193
STEFANI v. JOHN [K.B.D. Divl. Ct.] ..	615	WEDNESBURY CORPN., ASSOCIATED PROVINCIAL PICTURE HOUSES, LTD. v. [C.A.] ..	680
STENOR, LTD. v. WHITESIDES (CLITHEROE), LTD. [H.L.] ..	241	WEIGHMAN v. WEIGHMAN [C.A.] ..	852
STEWART v. STEWART [C.A.] ..	813	WELLINGTON, Re DUKE OF, GLENTANAR v. WELLINGTON [Ch.D. and C.A.] ..	854
STEWART, YEO v. [K.B.D.] ..	28	WEMBLEY ELECTRICAL APPLIANCES, LTD., THORNTON HALL v. [C.A.] ..	630
STRAKOSCH (deceased), Re , TEMPERLEY v. H.M. ATTORNEY-GENERAL [Ch.D.] ..	607	WESSEL v. CARTER PATERSON AND PICKFORDS CARRIERS, LTD. [K.B.D. Divl. Ct.] ..	280
SURREY COUNTY VALUATION COMMITTEE, Ex parte R. v. SURREY (NORTH EASTERN AREA) ASSESSMENT COMMITTEE [K.B.D. Divl. Ct.] ..	276	WESSEX MOTORS, LTD., MULLINS v. [C.A.] ..	727
SURREY (NORTH EASTERN AREA) ASSESSMENT COMMITTEE, R. v. Ex parte SURREY COUNTY VALUATION COMMITTEE [K.B.D. Divl. Ct.] ..	276	WHEELER v. EVANS [C.A.] ..	740
TABRISKY, Re [C.A.] ..	132	WHITBY v. BURT BOULTON & HAYWARD, LTD. [K.B.D.] ..	324
TARTELIN v. BOWEN [K.B.D. Divl. Ct.] ..	837	WHITE, Ex parte , R. v. ST. EDMUNDSBURY AND IPSWICH DIOCESE (CHANCELLOR) [C.A.] ..	170
TEMPERLEY v. H.M. ATTORNEY-GENERAL, Re STRAKOSCH (deceased) [Ch.D.] ..	607	WHITESIDES (CLITHEROE), LTD., STENOR, LTD. v. [H.L.] ..	241
TERRITORIAL FORCES ASSOCIATION v. PHILPOT [K.B.D.] ..	376	WHITING v. MIDDLESEX COUNTY COUNCIL [K.B.D.] ..	753
THOMSON v. BECKENHAM RATING AUTHORITY [K.B.D. Divl. Ct.] ..	274	WHITTY, FRAENKEL v. [Ch.D.] ..	646
THORNTON HALL AND PARTNERS v. WEMBLEY ELECTRICAL APPLIANCES, LTD. [C.A.] ..	630	WILKINSON v. BARRING CORPN. [K.B.D.] ..	24
TOOTAL BROADHURST LEE CO., LTD., INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. [C.A.] ..	409	WILLESDEN JUSTICES, R. v. Ex parte UTLEY [K.B.D. Divl. Ct.] ..	838
TREASURY COMRS., SHORT v. [C.A.] ..	298	WILLIAMS v. GLASBROOK BROTHERS, LTD. [C.A.] ..	884
TUDOR v. GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY CO. [C.A.] ..	768	WILLIAMS, MINISTER OF PENSIONS v. [K.B.D.] ..	93
TURNER, ROBIN AND RAMBLER COACHES, LTD. v. [K.B.D.] ..	284	WILLIAMS v. MINISTER OF PENSIONS [K.B.D.] ..	564
TYNE IMPROVEMENT COMRS. v. ARMENT ANVERSOIS SOCIETE ANONYME. THE BRABO [C.A.] ..	363	WILLIAMS v. ROWLANDS, Re JONES [Ch.D.] ..	716
UNIAKKE v. ATTORNEY-GENERAL, Re MILLER'S AGREEMENT [Ch.D.] ..	78	WILLIAMS (INSPECTOR OF TAXES), ASSOCIATED LONDON PROPERTIES, LTD. v. [K.B.D.] ..	474
UPSON v. LONDON PASSENGER TRANSPORT BOARD [C.A.] ..	509	WILSON, R. v. , Ex parte BATTERSEA BOROUGH COUNCIL [K.B.D. Divl. Ct.] ..	569
UTLEY, Ex parte , R. v. WILLESDEN JUSTICES [K.B.D. Divl. Ct.] ..	838	WINNICK, HINES v. [Ch.D.] ..	517
VEASEY v. SMITH, Re SMITH, deceased [Ch.D.] ..	708	WINTER GARDEN THEATRE (LONDON), LTD. v. MILLENIUM PRODUCTIONS, LTD. [H.L.] ..	331
WAKEMAN, Re , WAKEMAN v. WAKEMAN [Ch.D.] ..	74	WOLF, In the Goods of , In the Goods of SCHULHOF [Prob.] ..	841
WALKER, HOWARD v. [K.B.D.] ..	197	WOLFSON v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. [K.B.D.] ..	150
WALLACE, INNS v. Re INNS [Ch.D.] ..	308	WOOD v. WOOD [Div.] ..	95
WANDSWORTH STADIUM, LTD., CUTLER v. [C.A.] ..	815	WOOLF v. COLLIS REMOVAL SERVICE [C.A.] ..	260
		WOOLFENDEN (OTHERWISE CLEGG) v. WOOLFENDEN (OTHERWISE CLEGG) [Div.] ..	653
		WRIGHT v. BENNETT [K.B.D.] ..	61
		YEO v. STEWART [K.B.D.] ..	28

INDEX

PAGE

Accident. See Workmen's Compensation
Accommodation works. See Railways
Accounts, trustee's accounts. See Trusts and Trustees Acquisition, compulsory, of company. See Emergency Legislation

ACTION

Ubi jus ibi remedium—Breach of statutory duty—Civil action by private person—Bookmaker—Breach by occupier of dog racing track of duty to provide space for bookmaking—Betting and Lotteries Act, 1934 (c. 58), s. 11 (2) [CUTLER v. WANDSWORTH STADIUM, LTD.] .. 815
Administration, presumption of death, declaration of death by competent foreign court, independent evidence .. 841
Adulteration. See Food and Drugs
Adultery, evidence, period of gestation, 346 days .. 95 —, —, standard of proof .. 438
Agreement, "provisional" agreement "until" formal agreement executed, whether immediately binding .. 101

AGRICULTURE

Agricultural holding—Compensation for disturbance—Tenant quitting holding "in consequence of" notice to quit—Notice to quit—Tenant refusing to leave—Judgment for possession—Jurisdiction of High Court to hear Special Case—Agricultural Holdings Act, 1923 (c. 9), s. 12 (1), sched. II, r. 10 [PRESTON v. NORFOLK COUNTY COUNCIL] .. 124
Agricultural holding. See Agriculture
Aiding and abetting. See Criminal Law
Alimony. See Divorce

ANIMALS

Dog—Chasing cattle or sheep—Right to kill—Onus of proof [CRESSWELL v. SIRE] .. 730
"Unlawful and malicious killing"—Defence of property—Dog chasing game—Rights of owner of sporting rights—Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (c. 97), s. 41 [GOTT v. MEASURES] .. 609
Annuity, redemption. See Tithe and Tithe Rentecharge —, will, gift of £100 a year for life and to "give away" by will to donee's children, gift by will of donee to her children living at her death and to survivor, and on death of survivor capital to children living at donee's death and attaining 21 years .. 777
Appeal, divorce. See Divorce

ARBITRATION

Stay of legal proceedings—Deviation from terms of contract—Whether arbitration clause displaced—Application of clause to claim framed in tort—Arbitration Act, 1889 (c. 49), s. 4 [WOOLF v. COLLIS REMOVAL SERVICE] .. 260
Arrest, validity, on Irish warrant backed in England .. 611
Articles of association. See Companies
Audit, local government, powers of district auditor, fraud by company, surcharge on managing director .. 47
—, trustee's accounts. See Trusts and Trustees
Autrefois convict. See Criminal Law

BANKRUPTCY

Discharge—Suspension—Suspension for two years—Condition for payment of instalments to continue after discharge—Bankruptcy Act, 1914 (c. 59), s. 26 (2) [Re TABRISKY] .. 182

PAGE

Insolvency — Judgment debt — Committal—Order for committal to lie in office so long as debtor pays instalments—No previous order for payment by instalments—Bankruptcy Rules, 1915, r. 379 [Re SANDERS, Ex parte BENTLEY] .. 828

BASTARDY

Application proceedings—Evidence—Corroboration—Association on terms of close affection—Letters from putative father produced by complainant [MOORE v. HEWITT] 270
Bastardy, bastardization of issue, evidence of non-access, evidence directed solely to issue of condonation .. 377, 617
Betting. See Gaming and Wagering
Bookmaker, breach by occupier of dog racing track of duty to provide space for bookmaking, competence of civil action by bookmaker .. 815
Building operations, in factory, applicability of Factories Act, 1937, s. 26 .. 324
Cab, fare. See Street and Aerial Traffic
Certiorari. See Crown Practice
Charitable purposes. See Charities
Charitable trust. See Charities

CHARITIES

Charitable purposes—Advancement of religion—Carmelite convent—Association of strictly cloistered and purely contemplative nuns [Re COATS' TRUSTS, COATS v. GILMOUR] .. 422
—, "To strengthen bonds between Union of South Africa and Mother Country and incidentally conduce to appeasement of racial feeling in South Africa" [Re STRAKOSCH (deceased), TEMPERLEY v. H.M. ATTORNEY-GENERAL] .. 607
Charitable trusts — Gift to institution — Institution closed in lifetime of testator — Cy pres doctrine [Re LUCAS (deceased), SHEARD v. MELLOR] .. 773
Charity, liability to income tax, anti-vivisection society .. 217
Cheque, fraudulent encashment, notice to payee .. 751
Cinematograph. See Theatres and Places of Entertainment
Club, members' club, assessment for rating, factors not to be taken into account .. 877
Coal mine. See Mines
Collision, at sea, negligence, contributory negligence, vessel overtaking in swept channel, narrow berth given, overtaken vessel changing course .. 350
Committal, judgment debt, order to lie in office so long as debtor pays instalments .. 828
Common employment. See Master and Servant
Commorients. See Executors and Administrators

COMPANIES

Articles of association—Directors—Retirement by rotation—Retiring director to continue in office, in certain circumstances if vacancy not filled—Retiring director eligible for re-appointment—Proposed resolution for re-appointment lost—Vacancy not filled—Right of retiring director to continue in office [GRUNDT v. GREAT BOULDER PROPRIETARY GOLD MINES, LTD.] .. 439
Winding-up—Compulsory winding-up—Cessation of business — Power to "amalgamate" with company carrying on same business—Share capital acquired by company carrying on same business—Sale of physical assets to third company—Failure of substratum—Winding-up order just and equitable—Compulsory acquisition of shares by Treasury—Companies Act,

	PAGE
1929 (c. 23), s. 168 (3) (6) [Re EASTERN TELEGRAPH CO., LTD.]	104
—, Voluntary winding up—Distribution of assets—Future liabilities—Contingent claims—Possible claims for workmen's compensation—Declared distribution of assumed surplus—Balance of declared distribution remaining in liquidator's hands—Duty of liquidator—Extent of duty to communicate personally with creditors whose claims have not been admitted—Companies Act, 1929 (c. 23), ss. 247, 261—Companies (Winding-up) Rules, 1929, r. 104 (1) (2) [Re ARMSTRONG WHITWORTH SECURITIES CO., LTD.]	479
Compulsory acquisition of company. See Emergency Legislation

COMPULSORY PURCHASE

Coul mines — Compensation—Disposal as between beneficial interests under settlement—Coal Act, 1938 (c. 52), sched. III, pt. IV, para. 21 (2) [Re DUKE OF LEEDS' WILL TRUSTS, LEEDS (DUKE) v. DAVENPORT]	200
—, "Conventional rate of interest"—Appropriate rate [Re LUCAS, BETHUNE v. LUCAS]	213
Compulsory purchase order. See Public Health (Housing) Conditions of employment. See Emergency Legislation
Condonation. See Divorce

CONFLICT OF LAWS

Legitimacy — Will — Succession to personal property in England—Child illegitimate by English law, but legitimate by law of domicile of origin [Re BISCHOFF-SHEIM, CASSEL v. GRANT]	830
Succession — Immovables — Renvoi — Gift by English testator of property in Spain—Provision in Spanish Civil Code for succession to be governed by national law of deceased, whatever the nature of the property—Exclusion of doctrine of renvoi — Devolution under English law [Re DUKE OF WELLINGTON, GLENTANAR v. WELLINGTON]	854
Consistory court, issue of certiorari to	170

CONSPIRACY

Res judicata—Allegation that purpose unlawful—Subsequent action alleging means unlawful [GREENHALGH v. MALLARD]	255
Conspiracy, inclusion of charge in indictment. See Criminal Law (Indictment)

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW

Action against Minister of Crown—Competency—Minister of Supply—Privileges and immunities inherent in Crown—Action by consensancy authority against Minister as cargo owner to recover expenditure incurred in removing wrecked ship—War Department Stores Act, 1867 (c. 128), s. 20—Ministry of Supply Act, 1939 (c. 38), s. 2 (3)—Ministry of Supply (Transfer of Powers) (No. 1) Order, 1939 (S.R. & O., 1939, No. 877) [TYNE IMPROVEMENT COMRS. v. ARMEMENT ANVERSOIS SOCIÉTÉ ANONYME. THE BRABO]	363
Constructive trust. See Trusts and Trustees

CONTRACT

Agent of life assurance society—Rules of society incorporated in contract of employment — Amendment of rules — Whether binding on agent appointed before amendment—Validity of amendment [YEO v. STEWART]	28
Failure of consideration—Recovery of money paid—Sale of goods—Provision for payment against delivery order—Payment on receipt of delivery order containing undertaking and guarantee by sellers' agent—Delivery rendered impossible owing to enemy occupation of place of delivery [COMPTOIR D'ACHAT ET DE VENTE DU BOERENBOND BELGE S.A. v. LUIS DE RIDDER, LIMITADA]	443
Frustration—Impossibility of performance—Contract between manager and

	PAGE
variety artiste—Artiste called up for army service—Contract treated by parties as still subsisting [MORGAN v. MANSER]	666
Severability—Contract by quantity surveyor to prepare, for submission to War Damage Commission, schedule of work done by builders on bomb-damaged factory and to supervise work as agent of factory owners—Breach of contract—Surveyor becoming managing director of building company after preparation of schedule—Waiver of breach—Factory owners informed of facts [THORNTON HALL AND PARTNERS v. WEMBLEY ELECTRICAL APPLIANCES, LTD.]	630
Contract, voidable contract, sale of goods, fraud, hire purchase of motor car, hirer selling car for cash and another car, resale of second car, title to second car	284
Contributory negligence. See Negligence
Control of undertaking. See Emergency Legislation
Corroboration. See Evidence
Costs. See Practice
—, divorce. See Divorce
—, —, security for wife's costs. See Divorce
—, security, "plaintiff ordinarily resident out of the jurisdiction," "temporarily resident within jurisdiction"	767
Court of Appeal, decision binding on later Court of Appeal, earlier decision of House of Lords misinterpreted	884
Covenant, lease, breach, forfeiture, relief, sub-letting without consent	789

CRIMINAL LAW

Aiding and abetting—Receiving stolen goods—Thief convicted as a receiver—Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1843 (c. 43), s. 5 [WESSEL v. CARTER PATERSON AND PICKFORDS CARRIERS, LTD.]	280
Autorefois convict—Consideration of outstanding offences [R. v. NICHOLSON]	535
Evidence — Previous convictions — Imputations by defence on character of witnesses for prosecution—Evidence of previous convictions of prisoner—Admissibility—Evidence of convictions before verdict—Need of strict proof [R. v. BUTTERWASSER]	415
Indictment — Conspiracy — Inclusion of charge—Verdict—Guilty of conspiracy, but Not Guilty on specific charges—Unreasonable verdict—Criminal Appeal Act, 1907 (c. 23), s. 4 [R. v. COOPER AND COMPTON]	701

CROWN PRACTICE

Certiorari —Consistory court [R. v. ST. EDMUNDSBURY AND IPSWICH DIOCESE (CHANCELLOR), Ex parte WHITE]	170
—, Excess of jurisdiction — Error on face of proceedings—Fine in excess of statutory maximum for offence [R. v. WILLESSEN JUSTICES, Ex parte UTLEY]	838
Habeas corpus—Arrest—Irish warrant endorsed and executed in England—Indictable Offences Act, 1848 (c. 42), s. 12—Petty Sessions (Ireland) Act, 1851 (c. 93), s. 27 (3) [R. v. COMMISSIONER OF POLICE, Ex parte NALDER]	611
—, Illegal immigrants—Deportation order—Extra-territorial effect—Palestine Defence (Emergency) Regulations, 1945, reg. 112 [R. v. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS AND SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE COLONIES; Ex parte GREENBERG]	550
Petition of right—Crown acting as salvor—Merchant Shipping (Salvage) Act, 1940 (c. 43), s. 1 (1) [ANGLO-SAXON PETROLEUM CO., LTD. v. DAMANT. ANGLO-SAXON PETROLEUM CO., LTD. v. REDEM]	465
Cruelty. See Divorce
Custody, of child, legitimated child, "child of the marriage," no formal declaration of legitimacy	50
Dangerous machinery. See Factories and Shops
Death, presumption, administration, declaration of death by competent foreign court, independent evidence	841

Decree absolute, setting aside, decree nisi made absolute on premature application by guilty spouse, no summons to registrar, no notice to innocent spouse . . . 653
Deputation, extra-territorial effect of order of . . . 550
Desertion. See Divorce

PAGE

DESIGNS

Registration—"New or original design"—"mere mechanical device"—Design for fuse for use in vulcanising machine—Novelty claimed only for shape of fuse—Shape already anticipated in other articles in same class—Fuse only for use in a particular type of machine—Shape dictated solely by functional considerations—Patents and Designs Act, 1907 (c. 29), (as amended up to May 26, 1938), ss. 49 (1), 93 [STENOR, LTD. v. WHITESIDES (CLITHEROE), LTD.] . . . 241
Director (of company). See Companies
Distress, for rates. See Rates and Rating

DIVORCE

Alimony—Arrears—Enforcement—Judgment summons—Debtor's Act, 1869 (c. 62), s. 5—R.S.C. Ord. 41, r. 5—Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1947 (S.R. & O., 1947, No. 523/L.9), r. 62 (2) [FINDLAY v. FINDLAY] . . . 71

Appeal—Security for wife's costs—Application for new trial by unsuccessful husband petitioner—Jurisdiction of court to order security—Evidence to be considered on hearing of wife's application for security—Need for evidence of wife's means—Failure of husband to pay costs of hearing of petition—Stay of hearing of appeal [BRIGHTSTEIN v. BRIGHTSTEIN] . . . 121

Costs—Condonation—Revival of condoned offence—Effect on liability of co-respondent or party cited [BARNES v. BARNES (AYRES CITED)] . . . 326

Cruelty—Conduct arising from illness—Absence of deliberation, malignity and intent [SQUIRE v. SQUIRE] . . . 529

Legal responsibility—Onus of proof [BRITTELL v. BRITTELL (BY HIS GUARDIAN)] . . . 383

Desertion—Continuance of desertion—Animus deserendi—Feeble-minded person committed to institution for mental defectives—Release on licence—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1937 (c. 57), s. 2 (b) [BROWN v. BROWN (OTHERWISE GRAYSON)] . . . 160

Maintenance order—Non-cohabitation clause—Clause inserted through inadvertence—Effect of subsequent striking out [COHEN v. COHEN] . . . 69

Defence—Reasonable belief in deserted spouse's adultery—Belief induced by conduct or extraneous circumstances—Evidence—Burden of proof of sufficiency of belief [BEER v. BEER (NEILSON CITED). BEER v. BEER AND NEILSON] . . . 711

Evidence—Adultery—Period of gestation—Three hundred and forty-six days [WOOD v. WOOD] . . . 95

Standard of proof [GINESI v. GINESI] . . . 438

Non-access—Bastardization of issue—Evidence directed solely to issue of condonation [MORRIS v. MORRIS, MORRIS AND MANNING (KING'S PROCTOR SHOWING CAUSE)] . . . 377

[GOSS v. GOSS] . . . 617

Maintenance—Consent order—"Settlement" within Settled Land Act—Husband to secure house jointly held to wife "for her life occupation"—Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925 (c. 49), s. 1 (2)—Settled Land Act, 1925 (c. 18), s. 1 (1) and (7) [BACON v. BACON] . . . 327

Nullity—Jurisdiction—Domicil—Marriage in France—Petitioner born in England of English parents, and resident in England when petition presented—Respondent domiciled and resident in France [DE RENEVILLE (COMTESSE) (OTHERWISE SHERIDAN) v. DE RENEVILLE (COMTE)] . . . 112

PAGE

Petitioner resident in England at time of petition, but respondent resident in Guernsey—Marriage in Guernsey—Wilful refusal to consummate—Law to be applied [ROBERT (OTHERWISE DE LA MARE) v. ROBERT] . . . 22

Maintenance—Conduct of parties—Matters to be taken into consideration—Refusal of intercourse by wife without contraptives—Assent of husband—Ignorance of parties of legal position—Age of wife at time of decree—Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925 (c. 49), s. 190 (1) [DAILEY v. DAILEY (OTHERWISE SMITH)] . . . 269

Marriage by proxy—Val'ility [APT (otherwise MAGNUS) v. APT] . . . 677

Pregnancy before marriage by person other than husband—Discovery of existence of grounds for decree—Belief of husband—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1937 (c. 57), s. 7 (1) (d), proviso (iii) [SMITH v. SMITH] . . . 741

"Wilful refusal to consummate"—Definite decision arrived at without just excuse—Duty of judge—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1937 (c. 57), s. 7 (1) (a) [HORTON v. HORTON] . . . 871

Wilful refusal to consummate marriage—Husband sterilised before marriage by medical operation—Avoidance of procreation of children—Wife's knowledge of operation at time of marriage—whether bar to decree—"Lack of sincerity"—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1937 (c. 57), s. 7 (1) (a) [J. (OTHERWISE S.) v. J.] . . . 43

Insistence by wife on use of contraceptives by husband—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1937 (c. 57), s. 7 (1) (a) [BAXTER v. BAXTER] . . . 886

Petition—Service—Dispensing with service—Petitioner's lack of means—Respondent's probable knowledge of pending proceedings—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857 (c. 85), s. 42 [WEIGHMAN v. WEIGHMAN] . . . 852

Practice—Decree absolute—Setting aside—Decree nisi made absolute on premature application by guilty spouse—No summons to registrar—No notice to innocent spouse—Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925 (c. 49), s. 183 (3) (as amended by Matrimonial Causes Act, 1937 (c. 57), s. 9)—Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1947 (S.R. & O., 1947, No. 523/L.9), r. 40 (3) [WOOLFENDEN (otherwise CLEGG) v. WOOLFENDEN (otherwise CLEGG)] . . . 653

Re-hearing—Tribunal—"Error of the court"—Petitioner concealing material evidence—Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1944, r. 36 (1) [PEEK v. PEEK] . . . 578

Divorce, maintenance, application by wife during currency of maintenance order made by justices, wife's obligation to elect . . . 381
Dog, chasing game, right of owner of sporting rights to kill . . . 609 right to kill, worrying sheep . . . 730

Ecclesiastical court, issue of certiorari to . . . 170

EMERGENCY LEGISLATION

Conditions of employment—Trade dispute—Reference to National Arbitration Tribunal—Workmen dismissed before date of report to Minister—Power of tribunal to order reinstatement—Conditions of Employment and National Arbitration Order, 1940 (S.R. & O., 1940, No. 1305), art. 2 (1), 7 [R. v. NATIONAL ARBITRATION TRIBUNAL, Ex parte HORATIO CROWTHER & CO., LTD.] . . . 693

Control of undertaking—Compulsory acquisition of company—Transfer of shares to government nominees—Price to be paid for shares—Defence (General) Regulations, 1939 (S.R. & O., 1939, No. 927, as amended), reg. 78 (5) [SHORT v. TREASURY COMMISSIONERS] . . . 298

Essential work—Railway fireman—Transfer to lower grade in accordance with contract of employment—Claim to wages at original rate—Essential Work (General

	PAGE
Provisions) (No. 2) Order, 1942 (S.R. & O., 1942, No. 1594), art. 4 (1) [DUFFIELD v. GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY CO.]	636
Liabilities adjustment order—Order in favour of assignee of lease—Effect on liability for rent of original lessee—Liabilities (War-Time Adjustment) Act, 1941 (c. 24), s. 12 (1) [HOUSE PROPERTY AND INVESTMENT CO., LTD. v. BENARDOUT]	753
Registration of living accommodation—“Dwelling”—“Living accommodation”—Premises let for business purposes—Previous occupation as residence—Defence (General) Regulations, 1939 (S.R. & O., 1939, No. 927, as amended), reg. 68 CB (1) [OKEN v. PERRATT]	286
Requisition—Land—Land charges—Need for registration of interest of requisitioning authority—“Right or privilege over or affecting land”—Defence (General) Regulations, 1939, reg. 51 (1)—Land Charges Act, 1925 (c. 22), s. 10 (1), Class D (iii) [LEWISHAM BOROUGH COUNCIL v. MALONEY]	36
Enemy, trading with enemy, monthly sum payable under deed to beneficiary until vested in some other person, beneficiary becoming enemy, payment of further sums to Custodian of Enemy Property	646
Essential work. See Emergency Legislation

ESTATE AND OTHER DEATH DUTIES

Estate duty—Annuity—“Interest arising on death”—Annuity payable from death of annuitant’s father—Payment under deed made between annuitant’s father and covenants—Succession duty—Disposition of property—Whether annuitant “beneficially entitled”—Succession Duty Act, 1853 (c. 51), s. 2—Finance Act, 1894 (c. 30), s. 2 (1) (d) [Re MILLER’S AGREEMENT, UNIAKKE v. ATTORNEY-GENERAL]	78
Settlement—Investments in England representing proceeds of sale of land in Eire—“Purpose of devolution”—Settled Land Act, 1882 (c. 38), s. 22 (5)—Irish Free State Constitution Act, 1922 (Session 2) (c. 1), sched. 1, art. 73 [Re MIDDLETON’S SETTLEMENT, COTESLOE v. H.M. ATTORNEY-GENERAL]	134
Estate duty. See Estate and Other Death Duties
Evidence, appeal, divorce, application for security for wife’s costs of appeal, evidence to be considered on hearing of application—, corroboration, bastardy. See Bastardy—, divorce. See Divorce—, in criminal cases. See Criminal Law—, presumption. See Presumption—Excess profits tax. See Revenue—Executor, fraudulent encashment of cheque on trust account, notice to payee	121 751

EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS

Administration—Presumption of death—Declaration of death by competent foreign court—Independent evidence [In the goods of SCHULHOF. In the goods of WOLF]	841
Commorientes—Presumption—Death in order of seniority—“Uncertainty” of survival—Degree of evidence needed to remove—Law of Property Act, 1925 (c. 20), s. 184 [Re BATE (deceased), CHILLINGWORTH v. BATE]	418
Lunatic—Distribution of estate—Lunatic entitled as sole next of kin to estate of intestate brother—Brother entitled at his death to freehold property—Nature of lunatic’s beneficial interest in brother’s estate—“Beneficial interest in real estate”—Administration of Estates Act, 1925 (c. 23), ss. 33 (1) (4), 51 (2) [Re DONKIN, PUBLIC TRUSTEE v. CAIRNS]	690

FACTORIES AND SHOPS

Building operations—Operations in factory—Applicability of whole Act—Factories Act, 1937 (c. 67), ss. 26, 107 [WHITBY v. BURT, BOULTON & HAYWARD, LTD.]	324
---	-----

Dangerous machinery—Circular saw—Not properly fenced—Responsibility of operator—Liability of factory occupier—Burden of proof—Factories Act, 1937 (c. 67), s. 130 (2)—Woodworking Machinery Special Regulations, 1922-1945, regs. 10 (b) (ii), (c) [CARR v. DECCA GRAMOPHONE CO., LTD.]	20
—, Safety provisions—Statutory duty by employers—Delegation—Liability to employee in civil action—Breach of duty caused by act of injured employee—“Delegation”—Factories Act 1937 (c. 67), ss. 24 (4) (5), 137 (1) [GALLAGHER v. DORMAN, LONG & CO., LTD.]	38
Safety provisions—Floor—“Of sound construction and properly maintained”—Test to be applied—Factories Act, 1937 (c. 67), s. 25 (1) [MAYNE v. JOHNSTONE & CUMBERS, LTD.]	159
Factory, building not ready for use as factory, preparation for performance of work when building used as factory	782
Family provision. See Wills
Fine, exceeding statutory maximum for offence, certiorari, excess of jurisdiction, error on face of proceedings..	838

FIREARMS

Unlawful possession—Member of His Majesty’s forces—Firearm not held “in his capacity as such”—Firearms Act, 1937 (c. 12), ss. 1, 5 [TARTELIN v. BOWEN]	837
--	-----

FOOD AND DRUGS

Adulteration and impoverishment—Proceedings against offenders—Public house—Watered gin—Licensee prosecuted—Defence of employee’s default—Information laid against employee—Summons not served—Availability of defence—Time at which information must be laid—Food and Drugs Act, 1938 (c. 56), s. 83 (1) [MALCOLM v. CHEEK]	881
Sale to prejudice of purchaser—Drug not of nature, substance or quality ordered—Deficiency caused by manufacturing process—Common refuse—Food and Drugs Act, 1938 (c. 56), ss. 3 (1), 4, 83 (3) [BREED v. BRITISH DRUG HOUSES, LTD.]	613
Forfeiture, lease, relief, breach of covenant, sub-letting without consent..	789

FRIENDLY SOCIETIES

Life assurance society—Amendment of rules—Machinery for amendment contained in two rules—Amendment of rule providing for election of rules revision committee but no corresponding amendment of rule providing for special general meeting to amend rules—Validity of amendments made by special general meeting [YEO v. STEWART]	28
Frustration, of contract. See Contract

GAMING AND WAGERING

Betting—Licensed premises—Licensee permitting betting—Wording of information—Omission of “knowingly and wilfully”—Betting Act, 1853 (c. 119), s. 3—Criminal Justice Act, 1925 (c. 86), s. 32 (3) [LOMAS v. PEEK]	574
—, “Public place”—Bets taken in public house—Street Betting Act, 1906 (c. 43), s. 1 (4)—Police—Conduct [BRANNAN v. PEEK]	572
Dog race track where totalisator maintained—Provision of space for bookmakers—Breach of statutory duty—Competence of civil action at suit of injured bookmaker—Betting and Lotteries Act, 1934 (c. 58), s. 11 (2) [CUTLER v. WANDSWORTH STADIUM, LTD.]	815
Goodwill, compensation. See Landlord and Tenant

GUARANTEE

Mortgage—Surety—Building society—Proviso that surety’s liability should cease if “amount owing in respect of the advance” reduced below certain amount—Inclusion of bonus, interest and fines in “amount” [EASTERN COUNTIES BUILDING SOCIETY v. RUSSELL]	734
--	-----

	PAGE
Habeas corpus , arrest on Irish warrant endorsed in England	611
— See also Crown Practice

HIGHWAYS

Obstruction—Air-raid shelter—Street lighting obscured—Lamp on shelter unit—Liability of local authority [WHITING v. MIDDLESEX COUNTY COUNCIL]	758
Planting of trees—Branches allowed to overhang carriage way—Injury to passenger in passing omnibus—Liability of highway authority—“Reasonable use” of highway—Roads Improvement Act, 1925 (c. 68), s. 1 (1) (2) [HALE v. HANTS & DORSET MOTOR SERVICES, LTD.]	628
Highways, negligence, lorry laden with container driven under too low a bridge, boy running behind lorry injured by fall of container, extent of duty of care required of user of highway	565
Housing. See Public Health

HUSBAND AND WIFE

Desertion — Res judicata — Amendment of summons—Charge of desertion substituted for wilful neglect to maintain—Dismissal of summons—Further summonses alleging desertion and wilful neglect to maintain [MOLESWORTH v. MOLESWORTH]	842
Legal proceedings—Claim for possession of house—Parties judicially separated—Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75), s. 17 [HUTCHINSON v. HUTCHINSON]	792
—, Claim for possession of matrimonial home—Wife in peril of physical ejectment—Discretion of court—Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75), s. 17 [STEWART v. STEWART]	813
Maintenance—Amount of—One-third joint income standard—Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895 (c. 39), s. 5 (c) [WARD v. WARD]	713
—, Application later than one month after final decree—Leave given by judge—Matters for consideration of judge dealing with merits of application—Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925 (c. 49), s. 190 (2)—Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1944, r. 44 (1) [HASTING v. HASTING]	744
—, Enforcement of order—Wife “residing with” husband—Wife continuing to live in separate part of husband's house—“Resides with”—Summary Jurisdiction (Separation and Maintenance) Act, 1925 (c. 51), s. 1 (4) [EVANS v. EVANS]	656
—, Jurisdiction—Husband ordinarily resident in Scotland—Wife residing in England at wish of husband—Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895 (c. 39), s. 4 [FORSYTH v. FORSYTH]	623
—, Maintenance order made by justices — Wife granted divorce — Application to Divorce Court for maintenance order for nominal amount during currency of justices' order—Election by wife—Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925 (c. 49), s. 190 (2) [KILFORD v. KILFORD]	381
—, Maintenance order — Application to revoke—Decree of divorce granted to wife by Scottish court—Discretion of justices [KIRK v. KIRK]	118
Summary jurisdiction — Custody — Legitimated child—“Child of the marriage”—No formal declaration of legitimacy—Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895 (c. 39), s. 5 (b)—Married Women (Maintenance) Act, 1920 (c. 63), s. 1 (1)—Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925 (c. 49), ss. 188 (1), 193 (1)—Legitimacy Act, 1926 (c. 60), s. 1 (1) [C. v. C.]	50

INCOME TAX

Additional assessments—“If the surveyor discovers”	“Discovers”
Change of mind on question of law—Income Tax Act, 1918 (c. 40), s. 125 (1) [COMMERCIAL STRUCTURES, LTD. v. BRIGGS (INSPECTOR OF TAXES)]	659

Assessment — Deductions against profits—“Loss . . . connected with or arising out of trade”—“Disbursement wholly and exclusively laid for purposes of trade”—Damages and costs in libel action—Libel by sugar broker against chairman of rival company—Income Tax Act, 1918 (c. 40), sched. D, cases I and II, r. 3 (a) (e) [J. L. FAIRRIE v. J. M. HALL]	141
—, “Land wholly or mainly occupied for the purposes of husbandry”—Holding comprising 80 per cent. farm land—Finance Act, 1941 (c. 30), ss. 10, 11, [DE POIX v. CHAPMAN (H.M. INSPECTOR OF TAXES)]	649
Exemption — Charity — “Established for charitable purposes only”—Anti-vivisection society—Income Tax Act, 1918 (c. 40), s. 37 (1) (b) [NATIONAL ANTI-VIVISECTION SOCIETY v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS.]	217
Schedule A—Valuation of property—Air-raid shelter constructed by landlord—Rent or other consideration—Tenant to pay 8 per cent. of cost each year for 12 years—Finance Act, 1938 (c. 46), s. 17 (1) [ASSOCIATED LONDON PROPERTIES, LTD. v. WILLIAMS (INSPECTOR OF TAXES)]	474
Sur-tax—Settlement—Income under a settlement—Undistributed income from shares of foreign company—Taxpayer controlling chain of companies—“Body corporate”—Finance Act, 1938 (c. 46), s. 41 (4) (a) (ii)—Finance Act, 1939 (c. 41), s. 13 (3) [INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. SCOTT-ELLIS]	502
—, “Power to revoke or otherwise determine settlement”—Dividends from shares in investment company controlled by taxpayer—Whether power must be found in terms of settlement—Finance Act, 1938 (c. 46), s. 38 (1) (a) [WOLFSON v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS.]	150
Indictment. See Criminal Law

INFANTS AND CHILDREN

Maintenance—Discharge of order—Need of “fresh evidence”—Evidence not available when order made—Question for court—Confirmation of wife's adultery—Guardianship of Infants Act, 1925 (c. 45), s. 3 (4) [Re WAKEMAN, WAKEMAN v. WAKEMAN]	74
--	----

INNS AND INNKEEPERS

Duty of innkeeper to supply refreshment to traveller—Reasonableness of refusal—Question of fact for jury—Extent of duty at common law—Right to reserve tables [R. v. HIGGINS]	619
---	-----

INSURANCE

Marine insurance—War risks—Warlike operations—“Consequences of warlike operations”—Ship carrying war material including heavy deck cargo—Necessity to maintain speed and take zigzag course for fear of enemy submarines—Damage caused by effect of heavy seas on deck cargo and aggravated by reason of speed of ship [LIVERPOOL AND LONDON WAR RISKS INSURANCE ASSOCIATION, LTD. v. OCEAN STEAMSHIP CO., LTD.]	586
Insurance, motor vehicle. See Street and Aerial Traffic
Interlocutory judgment. See Practice
Invitee, customer of shop, defective paving of forecourt, injury to customer	197
—, duty of owner of premises to secure safety thereof	264
Judgment, by default. See Practice
Judgment debt, committal, order to lie in office so long as debtor pays instalments	828

JUDGMENTS

Judicial decisions as authorities—Court of Appeal—Earlier decision of House of Lords misinterpreted—Whether later Court of Appeal bound by decision of first Court of Appeal [WILLIAMS v. GLASBROOK BROTHERS, LTD.]	884
Judicial trustee. See Trusts and Trustees

	PAGE
Jurisdiction, husband and wife, maintenance, husband ordinarily resident in Scotland, wife residing in England at wish of husband ..	623
—, nullity, domicile, marriage in France, petitioner born in England of English parents and resident in England when petition presented, respondent domiciled and resident in France ..	112
—, marriage in Guernsey, petitioner resident in England at time of petition, but respondent resident in Guernsey ..	22
—, service of writ out of. See Practice ..
Jury, trial by, election by defendant in court of summary jurisdiction, election by defendant to be tried summarily after hearing of charge began ..	615
Land charge, requisition of land, need for registration of interest of requisitioning authority, "right or privilege over or affecting land" ..	36

LANDLORD AND TENANT

Compensation for goodwill—Business carried on in two separate premises—Apportionment of goodwill—Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927 (c. 36), ss. 4, 5 [H. MORELL & SONS, LTD. v. CANTER] ..	533
—, Value of premises enhanced for similar business—Landlord requiring premises for own purposes—Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927 (c. 36), ss. 4, 5 [MULLINS v. WESSEX MOTORS, LTD.] ..	727
—, Duration of tenancy—Yearly tenancy—Tenant for years remaining in possession—Rent payable weekly [COVERED MARKETS, LTD. v. GREEN] ..	140
—, Lease—Breach of covenant—Subletting without consent—Forfeiture—Relief—Grounds for relief—Law of Property Act, 1925 (c. 20), s. 146 (2) [HOUSE PROPERTY AND INVESTMENT CO., LTD. v. JAMES WALKER, GOLDSMITH AND SILVERSMITH, LTD.] ..	789
—, Forfeiture—Breach of covenant—Notice of breach—Notice not containing requirement that breach should be remedied—Permitting premises to be used as a brothel—Validity—Relief—Law of Property Act, 1925 (c. 20), s. 146 (1) (2) [EGERTON v. ESPLANADE HOTELS LONDON, LTD.] ..	88
—, Renewal—Lease for 35 years—Covenant to renew on request of lessees "made 6 months before the expiration of the term"—Request to renew made within 10 days of date of lease [BIONDI v. KIRKLINGTON & PICCADILLY ESTATES, LTD.] ..	59
—, Licence—Revocation—Length of notice—Reasonable notice—Licence for use of theatre—Express term entitling licensee to determine licence—No provision for determination by licensor [WINTER GARDEN THEATRE (LONDON), LTD. v. MILLENIUM PRODUCTIONS, LTD.] ..	331
—, New lease—Reasonableness of grant—Premises required for occupation by landlord—Relevant date—"Landlord"—Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927 (c. 36), s. 5 (3) [G. C. & E. NUTRALL (1917), LTD. v. ENTERTAINMENTS & GENERAL INVESTMENT CORPN., LTD.] ..	384
—, Notice to quit—Validity—Date of expiration—Periodic tenancy—Termination at end of current period—Date of last day of period [CRATE v. MILLER] ..	45
—, Validity of notice—Lease determinable by 3 months' notice at any time—No date for possession specified in notice [W. DAVIS (SPITALFIELDS), LTD. v. HUNTLEY] ..	371
—, Nuisance—Shop—Defective paving of forecourt—Injury to customer—Liability of landlord—No covenant by landlord to repair—Right of entry to inspect and repair—Repairs previously carried out by landlord [HOWARD v. WALKER] ..	197
—, Recognition of landlord's title—Payment of rent—Payment in ignorance of true state of title—Onus of proof [HINDLE v. HICK BROTHERS MANUFACTURING CO., LTD.] ..	825

	PAGE
Rent control—Furnished house—Reduction of rent—Reduction below amount of standard rent—Furnished Houses (Rent Control) Act, 1946 (c. 34), s. 7 [R. v. PADDINGTON AND ST. MARYLEBONE RENT TRIBUNAL, Ex parte BEDROCK INVESTMENTS, LTD.] ..	15
—, "Rent which includes payment for use of furniture or for services"—Need of contractual obligation of landlord—Breach of contract—Jurisdiction of tribunal—Furnished Houses (Rent Control) Act, 1946 (c. 34), ss. 2 (1), 12 (1) [R. v. HAMPSTEAD AND ST. PANCRAS RENT TRIBUNAL, Ex parte ASCOT LODGE, LTD.] ..	12
—, Rent restriction—Crown property—Flat owned by county Territorial Association—Whether exempt from Rent Restrictions Acts [TERRITORIAL FORCES ASSOCIATION v. PHILPOT] ..	376
—, Possession—Hardship—Hardship to landlord's relative—Reasonableness—Consideration of matters material to claims under specific paragraphs—Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933 (c. 32), s. 3 (1), sched. I (h), proviso [RHODES v. CORNFORD] ..	601
—, Hardship to persons affected other than landlord or tenant—Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933 (c. 32), sched. I (h), proviso [HARTE v. FRAMPTON] ..	604
—, Non-payment of rent—Waiver of past irregularities in payment—Rent "lawfully due"—Tender by tenant before proceedings commenced—Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933 (c. 32), sched. I, para. (a) [BIRD v. HILDAGE] ..	7
—, Reasonableness—Tenant taking paying guests to augment income—Use of gardens as playground for children—Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933 (c. 32), s. 3 (1) [WARREN v. AUSTEN] ..	185
—, Sub-tenancy—Whether premises "lawfully sub-let"—Date of institution of proceedings material date—Breach of tenancy—Waiver by landlord—Acceptance of rent—Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (c. 17), s. 15 (3) [OAK PROPERTY CO., LTD. v. CHAPMAN] ..	1
—, Recovery of possession—Dwelling-house required by landlord as residence for employee—Dwelling-house let to tenant "in consequence of employment" by landlord—Relationship of landlord and tenant—No evidence that house let in consequence of particular employment—Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933 (c. 32), sched. I (g) (i) [MUNRO v. DAW] ..	360
—, Dwelling-house required by landlord for own occupation—"Greater hardship"—Future hardship—Possession postponed for 4 months—Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933 (c. 32), sched. I, para. (h), proviso [WHEELER v. EVANS] ..	740
—, Hardship—Comparative hardship—Finality of decision of county court judge—Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933 (c. 32), sched. I, proviso [COPLANS v. KING] ..	393
—, Premises required by landlord for own occupation—Purchase of interest in dwelling-house after July 11, 1931—Landlord becoming landlord by taking lease at a rent—Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933 (c. 32), sched. I (h) [POWELL v. CLELAND] ..	672
—, Repairs—Inherent defects—Improper and insecure foundations—Premises demolished as dangerous structure—Liability of lessee for expenses of demolition [SOTHEBY v. GRUNDY] ..	761
—, Lease. See Landlord and Tenant —, Legitimacy. See Conflict of Laws
—, Liabilities adjustment. See Emergency Legislation

	PAGE
Libel, damages and costs, deduction in assessing defendant's income tax ..	141
Licence, revocation, length of notice, reasonable notice, licence for use of theatre, express term entitling licensee to determine licence, no provision for determination by licensor ..	331
Licensed premises, licensee permitting betting, wording of information ..	574

LOCAL GOVERNMENT

Audit—Powers of district auditor—Fraud by company—Surcharge on managing director—Local Government Act, 1933 (c. 51), s. 228 [Re A DECISION OF A DISTRICT AUDITOR. APPEAL OF V. R. DICKSON] ..	47
Superannuation—Amount of allowance—Area public assistance officer acting also as interim superintendent registrar of births and deaths—Inclusion of fees as registrar in calculation of average remuneration—Local Government Superannuation Act, 1937 (c. 68), s. 8 (2) (5), s. 40 (3) [JOBBINS v. MIDDLESEX COUNTY COUNCIL] ..	748
Superannuation of officers—Right to annual superannuation allowance on ceasing to be employed—Question to be decided by Minister—Claim after cessation of employment—Local Government Superannuation Act, 1937 (c. 68), s. 35 [WILKINSON v. BARKING CORPN.] ..	24
Lunatic, estate, distribution, lunatic entitled as sole next of kin to estate of intestate brother, brother entitled at his death to freehold property, nature of lunatic's beneficial interest in brother's estate ..	690

MAGISTRATES

Appeal—Case stated—Case stated out of time—Whether fatal objection—No fault of either party—Summary Jurisdiction Rules, 1915 (S.R. & O., 1915, No. 200), r. 52 [MOORE v. HEWITT] ..	270
Summary jurisdiction—Right to trial by jury—Omission to inform defendant—Election by defendant, after hearing of charge begun, to be tried summarily—Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879 (c. 49), s. 17 (1) [STEFANI v. JOHN] ..	615
Maintenance, of infant. See Infants and Children —, of wife. See Divorce
—, —, See Husband and Wife
—, order. See Husband and Wife
Marine insurance. See Insurance
Marriage, by proxy, legality ..	677

MASTER AND SERVANT

Common employment — "Common work"—"Special risk"—Omnibus collision on highway—Injury to conductress [GLASGOW CORPN. v. NELSON] ..	346
—, Dissimilar tasks—Plaintiff and negligent workmen in different departments of employers' organisation — "Factory"—Building not ready for use as factory—Preparation for performance of work when building equipped as factory—Factories Act, 1937 (c. 67), s. 25 (3), 151 (1) (b) [BARRINGTON v. KENT RIVERS CATCHMENT BOARD] ..	782
—, Linesman and trolley omnibus driver [LANCASTER v. LONDON PASSENGER TRANSPORT BOARD] ..	267
—, Servant temporarily off duty—Injured by negligence of fellow servant—Liability of employer [DORRINGTON v. LONDON PASSENGER TRANSPORT BOARD] ..	84
Loan of servant—Motor car left with manufacturers for repairs—Employee of company instructed to drive owner to railway station in owner's car—Accident due to negligence of driver—Liability of company [CHOWDHARY v. GILLOT] ..	541
Mental defective, ability to form animus deserendi ..	160
Metropolis, cab, fare. See Street and Aerial Traffic —, public health, nuisance, summons, service ..	569

	PAGE
Mines, coal mines, compulsory purchase, compensation, disposal as between beneficial interests under settlement ..	200
Minister of Crown, action against. See Constitutional Law National Arbitration Tribunal, reference of trade dispute to. See Emergency Legislation (Conditions of Employment)

NEGLIGENCE

Contributory negligence—Collision at sea—Vessel overtaking in swept channel—Narrow berth given—Overtaken vessel changing course [ADMIRALTY COMRS. v. NORTH OF SCOTLAND AND ORKNEY AND SHETLAND STEAM NAVIGATION CO., LTD.] ..	350
Highways—Lorry laden with container driven under too low a bridge—Boy running behind lorry injured by fall of container—Extent of duty of care required of user of highway [FARRUGIA v. GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY CO.] ..	565
Invitee—Duty of owner of premises to secure safety thereof—Novus actus interveniens—Voluntary assumption of risk—Attempting to put out fire on invitor's property [HYETT v. GREAT WESTERN RY. CO.] ..	264
Negligence, salvage, duty of salvor. See Shipping (salvage)
New Town. See Town and Country Planning
Notice to quit. See Landlord and Tenant
Novus actus interveniens. See Negligence
Nuisance, metropolis, summons, service ..	569
—, shop, defective paving of forecourt, injury to customer ..	197
—, statutory nuisance, proceedings against local authority ..	537
Nullity. See Divorce
Nuns, association of strictly cloistered and purely contemplative nuns, charitable purpose ..	422
Obstruction, on highway. See Highway
Option, option to purchase land, no time limit for exercise, specific performance against original grantee of option ..	641
Passing off. See Trade Marks and Trade Names
Pedestrian crossing, controlled crossing, duty of "approaching driver," interrupted view of crossing ..	509
Pension. See Royal Forces
—, police. See Police —, war injury. See War Injury

PERPETUITIES

Rule against perpetuities—Vendor and purchaser—Option to purchase land—No time limit for exercise—Specific performance against original grantee of option—Foundation of jurisdiction to grant decree [HUTTON v. WATLING] ..	641
Settlement—Limitation to a class—Introduction of new members into original class of takers—Gift to composite class of children and grandchildren who should attain 21 [Re LORD'S SETTLEMENT, MARTINS BANK, LTD. v. LORD] ..	685
Petition (divorce), service. See Divorce.
Petition of right. See Crown Practice

POLICE

Pension—"Injury received in execution of duty"—Duodenal ulcer—Police Pensions Act, 1921 (c. 31), s. 2 (1) (c) [HUDDERSFIELD POLICE AUTHORITY v. WATSON] ..	193
Police, conduct, commission of offence to secure evidence against offender ..	572

PRACTICE

Costs — Security — "Plaintiff ordinarily resident out of jurisdiction"—"Temporarily resident within jurisdiction"—R.S.C., Ord. 65, r. 6A [JELIC v. CO-OPERATIVE PRESS, LTD.] ..	767
—, Security for costs—Plaintiff resident out of jurisdiction—Palestine Judgments Extension Act, 1868 (c. 54)—Administration of Justice Act, 1920 (c. 81)—Foreign Judgments (Reciprocal Enforcement) Act, 1933 (c. 13) [KOHN v. RINSON & STAFFORD (BROD), LTD.] ..	839

—, Taxation — Refresher fees — “Total time occupied by trial” — Midday adjournment — R.S.C. Ord. 65, r. 27 (48) [WRIGHT v. BENNETT] .. 61
—, Judgment by default — Interlocutory judgment — “Liquidated demand” — Writ claiming price of goods and damages for breach of contract — Value of goods and damages claimed in statement of claim — R.S.C., Ord. 13, r. 7 [ABBAY PANEL & SHEET METAL CO., LTD. v. BARSON PRODUCTS (a firm)] .. 809
—, Procedure — Preliminary point of law — Unconditional appearance by defendants — Right to plead that plaintiff has no cause of action — R.S.C., Ord. 25, r. 2 [WILKINSON v. BARKING CORPN.] .. 24
—, Striking out pleading — Statement of claim — Action frivolous and vexatious — Conspiracy — Allegation that purpose unlawful — Subsequent action alleging that means unlawful [GREENHALGH v. MALLARD] .. 255
—, Writ — Service — Service out of the jurisdiction — Action “properly brought” against defendants within jurisdiction — Action by conservancy authority against shipowners and Minister of Supply as cargo owner to recover expenditure incurred in removing wreck — Shipowners outside jurisdiction — R.S.C., Ord. 11, r. 1 (g) [TYNE IMPROVEMENT COMRS. v. ARMENT ANVERSOIS SOCIETE ANONYME, THE BRABO] .. 363
—, Contract not governed by English law — Bill of lading — R.S.C., Ord. 11, r. 1 (e) (iii) and (g) [KADEL CHAJKIN AND CE DE, LTD. v. MITCHELL COTTS & CO. (MIDDLE EAST), LTD. AND A/S MOTORTRAMP] .. 786
—, Practice (divorce) . See Divorce
—, Presumption, commortuaries, death in order of seniority, “uncertainty” of survival, degree of evidence needed to displace .. 418
—, death, administration, declaration of death by competent foreign court, independent evidence .. 841

PRIZE LAW

—, Visit and search — Neutral ship ordered to British port for better examination — Reasonable suspicion [THE MIN] .. 476
—, Proxy marriage, legality .. 677
—, Public carriage, fare . See Street and Aerial Traffic

PUBLIC HEALTH

—, Housing — Accommodation of working classes — Recovery of possession — Rent exceeding £20 — Summary procedure before justices — Suspension of warrant — Small Tenements Recovery Act, 1938 (c. 74), s. 1 — Housing Act, 1936 (c. 51), ss. 83 (1), 156 (1) (a) (2) [LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL v. SHELLEY. HARCOURT v. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL] .. 320
—, Right of local authority — Exclusion of Rent Restrictions Acts — Small Tenements Recovery Act, 1938 (c. 74), s. 1 — Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (c. 17), ss. 5 (2) (4) — Housing Act, 1936 (c. 51), ss. 82 (1), 156 (1) (a) [LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL v. SHELLEY. HARCOURT v. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL] .. 720
—, Compulsory purchase order — Confirmation — Duties of Minister — Disclosure of information acquired before order made — “ Lis ” — “ Quasi-judicial ” — “ Duty to act fairly ” — Housing Act, 1936 (c. 51), sched. I (4) (5) [B. JOHNSON & CO. (BUILDERS), LTD. v. MINISTER OF HEALTH] .. 395
—, Houses for “working classes” — Intended allocation outside those classes — Additional amenities serving beneficial purpose to residents in neighbouring areas — Housing Act, 1936 (c. 51), ss. 73, 80 [H. E. GREEN & SONS v. MINISTER OF HEALTH] .. 469
—, Metropolis — Nuisance — Summons — Service — Summons on complaint of local authority — Public Health (London) Act,

1936 (c. 50), s. 301 (1) (a) (i) — London Government Act, 1939 (c. 40), s. 183 (1) [R. v. WILSON. Ex parte BATTERSEA BOROUGH COUNCIL] .. 569
—, Statutory nuisance — Proceedings against local authority — Competence — Public Health Act, 1936 (c. 49), ss. 92 (1) (c), 99 [R. v. EPPING (WALTHAM AMBRY) JJ., Ex parte BURLINSON] .. 537
—, “Public place,” public house, Street Betting Act, 1906, s. 1 (4) .. 572

RAILWAYS

—, Accommodation works — Adjoining owners accepting compensation in lieu — Rights of occupiers — Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (c. 20), s. 68 [TUDOR v. GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY CO.] .. 768
—, Railways, rating, “railway hereditament,” hostel and canteen for railway staff .. 794

RATES AND RATING

—, Assessment — Club — Members’ club — Factors not to be taken into account — Profits from sale of liquor — Absence of alternative accommodation — Monopoly of club facilities [ABERDARE URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL v. PONTYPRIDD AREA ASSESSMENT COMMITTEE] .. 877
—, Distress for rates — Rating period not expired — Poor Relief Act, 1601 (c. 2), s. 2 [THOMSON v. BECKENHAM RATING AUTHORITY] .. 274
—, Railways — “ Railway hereditament ” — Hostel and canteen for railway staff — “ Occupied as dwelling-house or hotel ” — Railways (Valuation for Rating) Act, 1930 (c. 24), s. 1 (3) [RAILWAY ASSESSMENT AUTHORITY v. GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY CO.] .. 794
—, Valuation list — Amendment — Appearance before assessment committee — County valuation committee — Officer authorised by general resolution of valuation committee — Rating and Valuation Act, 1925 (c. 90), s. 31 (9) [R. v. SURREY (NORTH EASTERN AREA) ASSESSMENT COMMITTEE, Ex parte SURREY COUNTY VALUATION COMMITTEE] .. 276
—, Receiving stolen goods, conviction of thief as receiver .. 280
—, Redemption annuity . See Tithes and Tithe Rentcharge
—, Registration of premises (living accommodation) . See Emergency Legislation
—, Re-hearing, divorce petition . See Divorce
—, Religion, advancement of, charitable purpose . See Charities
—, Rent control . See Landlord and Tenant
—, Rent restriction . See Landlord and Tenant
—, standard rent, reduction by [Furnished Houses Rent Tribunal] .. 15
—, Renvoi, doctrine . See Conflict of Laws
—, Repairs, liability of tenant for . See Landlord and Tenant
—, Res judicata, conspiracy, allegation that purpose unlawful, subsequent action alleging means unlawful .. 255
—, husband and wife, desertion, amendment of summons, charge of desertion substituted for wilful neglect to maintain, dismissal of summons, further summonses alleging desertion and neglect to maintain .. 842

REVENUE

—, Excess profits tax — Capital — Computation — “ Borrowed money ” — Proceeds of discounting bills — Finance (No. 2) Act, 1939 (c. 109), s. 14 (2), sched. VII, pt. II, para. 2 (1) [INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. ROWNTREE & CO., LTD.] .. 473
—, “ Capital employed in trade or business ” — Insurance company promoting underwriting syndicates — Loans to persons added as “names” — Finance (No. 2) Act, 1939 (c. 109), s. 13 (3), sched. VIII, pt. II para. 1 (1) (b) [INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. LAURENCE PHILLIPS & CO. (INSURANCE) LTD.] .. 144
—, Contract extending beyond accounting period — Spread-over of profits — “ Special circumstances ” — Discretion of

commissioners—Appeal from decision of commissioners—Competence—Finance (No. 2) Act, 1939 (c. 109), sched. VII, pt. I, para. 11 [LONDON AND NATIONAL PROPERTY CO., LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS.]	799
—, Income or capital—Lump sum payment for licence to use patented process—Finance (No. 2) Act, 1939 (c. 109), s. 12 (1) [RUSTPROOF METAL WINDOW CO., LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS.]	454
—, Income received from investments—Royalties received from licences of patented inventions—Investment—Finance (No. 2) Act, 1939 (c. 109), sched. VII, pt. I, para. 6 (1) [INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. TOOTAL BROADHURST LEE CO., LTD.]	409
—, Trade receipts—Period of account—Pawnbroker's undistributed surpluses—Pawnbrokers Act, 1872 (c. 93), ss. 16, 17, 18, 19, 21, 22, 24—Finance (No. 2) Act, 1939 (c. 109), s. 14 (1), sched. VII, para. 1 [JAY'S THE JEWELLERS, LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. JAY'S THE JEWELLERS, LTD.]	762
ROYAL FORCELS
Pension—Attributability—Accident to man while billeted in own home [RIDLEY v. MINISTER OF PENSIONS]	437
—, Burden of proof—Medical evidence—Death from cancer—Royal Warrant Concerning Retired Pay, Pensions, etc., 1943 (Cmd. 1943, No. 6489), art. 4 (2) (3) (4) [MILLER v. MINISTER OF PENSIONS]	372
—, Injury sustained while on leave—Command Paper disclaiming liability—Legal force—Pensions Appeal Tribunals Act, 1943 (c. 39), s. 1 (1) (a), s. 6 (2) [WILLIAMS v. MINISTER OF PENSIONS]	564
—, Test—War service a cause of disease—Hernia—Conditions of service producing cough leading to rupture [MARSHALL v. MINISTER OF PENSIONS]	706
—, Leave to appeal out of time—Appeal on basis of subsequent decision of superior court—R.S.C., Ord. 55E, r. 2 (1)—Pensions Appeal Tribunals Act, 1943 (c. 39), s. 6 (2) [JAMES v. MINISTER OF PENSIONS]	432
Rule against perpetuities. See Perpetuities Safety (in factories). See Factories and Shops

SALE OF GOODS

Contract—Voidable contract—Fraud—Hire purchase of motor car—Hirer selling car for cash and another car—Resale of second car—Title to second car—Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (c. 71), ss. 12 (1), 23 [ROBIN & RAMBLER COACHES, LTD. v. TURNER]	284
Sale of goods, failure of consideration, recovery of money paid by buyers, payment on receipt of delivery order containing undertaking and guarantee by sellers' agent, delivery rendered impossible owing to enemy occupation of place of delivery	443

SALE OF LAND

Agreement for sale—"Provisional" agreement "until" formal agreement executed—Whether immediately binding [BRANCA v. COBARRO]	101
Conditions of sale—Breach—Damages—Vacant possession by certain date—Failure by vendor to give possession—Purchaser's right to recover stamp duty and legal costs of purchase of second house [BEARD v. PORTER]	407
Contract—Duplicate contracts—Need of actual physical exchange [ECOLLE v. BRYANT]	63, 865
Salvage. See Shipping
Security for costs. See Costs
—, See Practice (costs).
Service, divorce petition. See Divorce.
—, of writ. See Writ.
Settled Land Acts, settlement, consent order after divorce decree, settled property, husband to secure house jointly held to wife "for her life occupation"	327

Settlement, estate duty, investments in England representing proceeds of sale of land in Eire, "purpose of devolution"	134 —, liability of settlor to income tax or income of settlement. See Income Tax
—, sur-tax, "income under a settlement," undistributed income from shares of foreign company, taxpayer controlling chain of companies, "body corporate"	502
—, within Settled Land Acts. See Settled Land Acts

SETTLEMENTS

Monthly sum payable to beneficiary until vested in some other person—Beneficiary becoming enemy—Payment of further sums to Custodian of Enemy Property—Trading with the Enemy Act, 1939 (c. 89), s. 7 (1) (a) (b)—Trading with the Enemy (Custodian) Order, 1939 (S.R. & O., 1939, No. 1198), art. 1 (i), (ii) (e) [FRAENKEL v. WHITTY]	646
Rule against perpetuities—Gift of income of trust fund to children of settlor on youngest child attaining 21—Vesting of interest on each child's attaining 21—Proviso that, if any child should die before "attaining a vested interest" leaving any children who should attain 21, such children should take parents' share "by substitution"—Introduction of new members into original class of takers [RE LORD'S SETTLEMENT, MARTINS BANK, LTD. v. LORD]	685

SHIPPING

Salvage—Negligence—Duty of salvor—Degree of care and skill—Salvage department of navy [ANGLO-SAXON PETROLEUM CO., LTD. v. DAMANT. ANGLO-SAXON PETROLEUM CO., LTD. v. REGENM.]	465
Towage—Liability of shipowners—Interrupted towage—Collision with third vessel while tug manoeuvring into position to continue towage—Condition in contract—Tug under control of ship "whilst towage" or assistance services being performed [THE BALTIC]	560
Shop, liability of shopkeeper to customer for injury, defective paving of forecourt	197
Specific performance, foundation of jurisdiction to grant	641
—, option to purchase land, no time limit for exercise, decree against original grantee of option	641

STATUTES

Construction—Breach of statutory duty—Civil action by private person—Bookmaker—Breach by occupier of dog racing track of duty to provide space for bookmaking—Betting and Lotteries Act, 1934 (c. 58), s. 11 (2) [CUTLER v. WANDSWORTH STADIUM, LTD.]	815
Headings and marginal notes—Reference to [R. v. SURREY (NORTH EASTERN AREA) ASSESSMENT COMMITTEE, Ex parte SURREY COUNTY VALUATION COMMITTEE]	276
Statutes, interpretation, where Crown named	465
Stay of proceedings, arbitration clause in contract, deviation from terms of contract, whether arbitration clause displaced, application of clause to claim framed in tort	260

STREET AND AERIAL TRAFFIC

Motor vehicle—Using vehicle on road without policy of insurance being in force—Disqualification for holding licence—"Special reasons" for refraining from disqualification—Farm labourer driving uninsured tractor—Road Traffic Act, 1930 (c. 43), s. 35 (2) [BLOWS v. CHAPMAN]	576
Pedestrian crossing—Controlled crossing—Duty of "approaching" driver—Interrupted view of crossing—Injury to passenger thereon—Pedestrian Crossing Places (Traffic) Regulations, 1941 (S.R. & O., 1941, No. 397), reg. 3 [UPSON v. LONDON PASSENGER TRANSPORT BOARD]	509
Public carriage—Fare—Metropolitan police area—Journey exceeding six miles—Agreed fare in excess of prescribed rates—

	PAGE
London Hackney Carriage Act, 1853 (c. 33), s. 17 (1) (2)—Metropolitan Public Carriages Act, 1869 (c. 115), s. 9 (3), restriction (2)—London Cab Order, 1934 (S.R. & O., 1934, No. 1346) [GOODMAN v. SERLE]	318
Succession, under will. See WILLS.
Succession duty, annuity, disposition of property, whether annuitant "beneficially entitled"	78
Summary jurisdiction, husband and wife. See Husband and Wife
—, right to trial by jury, omission to inform defendant, election by defendant to be tried summarily after hearing of charge begun . . .	615
Summons, nuisance, metropolis, service . . .	569
Sunday, cinema performance. See Theatres and Places of Entertainment (cinematograph)
Superannuation, local government officers. See Local Government (Superannuation)
Surety. See Guarantee
Sur-tax. See Income Tax
—, See Settlement
Taxation, of costs. See Practice (Costs)
Tenancy. See Landlord and Tenant

THEATRES AND PLACES OF ENTERTAINMENT

Cinematograph—Sunday performance—Permission—Condition—Prohibition of admission of child under 15—Sunday Entertainments Act, 1932 (c. 51), s. 1 (1) [ASSOCIATED PROVINCIAL PICTURE HOUSES, LTD. v. WEDNESBURY CORPN.]	680
Time, will, condition, right of pre-emption, option to purchase freehold property, exercise within 3 months after death of testatrix's sister, time of performance, time specified of essence of matter	548

TITHE AND TITHE RENTCHARGE

Redemption—Annuity—Remission—Agricultural holding—"Annual value"—Inclusion of value of house—Income Tax Act, 1918 (c. 40), sched. B, r. 1 (a)—Tithe Act, 1936 (c. 43), s. 14 (2) [R. v. JORDAN. Ex parte LUTRING]	875
Title, of landlord, recognition, payment of rent, payment in ignorance of true state of title, onus of proof	825
Towage. See Shipping

TOWN AND COUNTRY PLANNING

New Town—Duties of Minister—Information as to proposed new town—Consultation—New Towns Act, 1946 (c. 68), s. 1 (1), sched. I, para. 1 [ROLLO v. MINISTER OF TOWN AND COUNTRY PLANNING]	488
—, Duty of Minister—Administrative capacity—Need to support proposed order by public inquiry—"Bias"—New Towns Act, 1946 (c. 68), s. 1 (1), sched. I (3) [FRANKLIN v. MINISTER OF TOWN AND COUNTRY PLANNING]	289
Trade dispute, reference to National Arbitration Tribunal. See Emergency Legislation (Conditions of Employment)
—, —, Consultation—New Towns Act, 1946 (c. 68), s. 1 (1) [FLETCHER v. MINISTER OF TOWN AND COUNTRY PLANNING]	496

TRADE MARKS AND TRADE NAMES

Application to register—Mark "likely to deceive or cause confusion" with mark already on register—Defensive registration—Notional user—Trade Marks Act, 1938 (c. 22), ss. 12, 27 (1) (6) [RE EASTEX MANUFACTURING CO., LTD.'S APPLICATION]	55
—, —, Mark in respect of sulphadiazine preparations—Scheduled poison, supplied only under statutory regulations—Trade Marks Act, 1938 (c. 22), s. 12 (1) [RE BAYER PRODUCTS, LTD.'S APPLICATION]	188
—, —, Passing-off—No common field of activity—"Uncle Mac" of "Children's Hour" broadcasting programme—"Uncle Mac's Puffed Wheat" [MCCULLOCH v. LEWIS A. MAY (PRODUCE DISTRIBUTORS), LTD.]	845

	PAGE
—, Professional description—Fanciful name—Musician arranging music and conducting band under fanciful name—Name invented by producer, plaintiff's employer, but associated exclusively with plaintiff [HINES v. WINNICK]	517
Trading with the enemy. See Enemy
Tree, overhanging highway, injury to passenger in passing omnibus, liability of highway authority	628
Trial, by jury, election by defendant in court of summary jurisdiction, election by defendant to be tried summarily after hearing of charge begun	615
Trust, charitable. See Charities.

TRUSTS AND TRUSTEES

Constructive trust—Cheque fraudulently drawn by executor on executor's account—Recovery from payee—Cheque taken for value and in good faith—Constructive notice of want of authority [NELSON v. LARHOLT]	751
—, Judicial trustee—Power of compromise—Audit of accounts—Extent of auditors' duty—Sending of copy of accounts to beneficiaries—Judicial Trustees Act, 1896 (c. 35), s. 1 (1)—Trustee Act, 1925 (c. 19), s. 15 (f)—Judicial Trustee Rules, 1897, r. 12 (1), 15 (2) [RE RIDSDALE, RIDSDALE v. RAWLINSON]	312
—, Power—Power to appoint to himself—Power of disposition over trust property—Whether given as an individual or virtue office [RE EDWARD'S WILL TRUSTS, DALGLEISH v. LEIGHTON]	521
—, Professional trustee—Will—Charging clause—Construction—Testator having property in England and Canada—Trust company with separate English and Canadian scales of charges—Scale intended by testator [RE SANDY'S WILL TRUST, SANDY v. KIRTON]	302
Valuation list. See Rates and Rating
Vendor and purchaser, option to purchase land, no time limit for exercise, specific performance against original grantee of option	641

WAR INJURY

Approach of flying bomb when workers en route to shelter—Rush for cover—Personal Injuries (Civilians) Scheme, 1944 (S.R. & O., 1944, No. 369), art. 1 (25) [EVANS v. MINISTER OF PENSIONS]	436
—, Pension—Burden of proof—Test of causation—Personal Injuries (Civilians) Scheme, 1944 (S.R. & O., 1944, No. 369), arts. 2 (2), 6 [MINISTER OF PENSIONS v. WILLIAMS]	93
War risks. See Insurance (marine)
Warlike operations, insurance. See Insurance (marine)
Will, charging clause, remuneration of professional trustee, construction, testator possessed of property in England and Canada, trust company with separate English and Canadian scales of charges, scale intended by testator	302

WILLS

Condition—Condition subsequent—Trust to provide village hall—Site to be purchased by will trustees and conveyed to institute trustees—Institute trustees responsible for building hall—If hall not completed within specified time, site to be sold and gift to lapse—Gift over—Inability of will trustees to purchase site [RE JONES, WILLIAMS v. ROWLANDS]	716
—, Right of pre-emption—Option to purchase freehold property—Option to be exercised within 3 months after death of testatrix's sister—Time of performance—Time specified of essence of matter [RE AVARD, HOOK v. PARKER]	548
—, Construction—Accumulations—Direction to accumulate and invest surplus income for 21 years from testator's death—One third part to be held for residuary legatees—Income of two third parts to be paid to widow during her lifetime—Residuary trust fund to be divided on widow's

	PAGE
death—Whether accumulations of two third parts undisposed of or included in residuary trust fund [Re OLIVER, WATKINS v. FITTON]	162
—, Annuity—Gift of £100 a year for life and “to give away” by will to donee’s children—Gift by will of donee to her children living at her death and to survivor and on death of survivor capital to children living at donee’s death and attaining 21 years [KIRKBY v. PHILLIPS]	777
—, Disposal of residue by reference to settlement of even date—Unwitnessed memorandum of later date specifying dispositions under settlement—Subsequent codicils confirming will—Incorporation of memorandum in will [Re EDWARD’S WILL TRUSTS, DALGLEISH v. LEIGHTON]	521
—, Gift by testator’s Spanish will—Gift to person fulfilling two qualifications—Failure of gift—Effect of failure—Gift excepted out of property given by English will—Whether passing under residuary bequest in English will [Re DUKE OF WELLINGTON, GLENTANAR v. WELLINGTON]	854
—, Investment clause—Trustee empowered to invest trust moneys in purchase of freehold property—Whether empowered to purchase freehold house as home for widow and children [Re POWER’S WILL TRUSTS, PUBLIC TRUSTEE v. HASTINGS]	282
—, Omission—Necessary implication of intention—Provision for disposition “in event of husband predeceasing me or surviving for less than one month”—No disposition in event of husband’s survival for more than one month—Declaration that surviving husband entitled absolutely [Re SMITH, deceased, VEASEY v. SMITH]	708
—, Family provision—Infant child of second marriage—Testatrix dying at child birth—Provision made for child of first marriage—Form of order—Inheritance (Family Provision) Act, 1938 (c. 45), s. 1 (1) [Re FRANKS, FRANKS v. FRANKS]	638
—, Provision for wife — Life interest in marital home and gift of income—Income insufficient to enable wife to live in marital home—Inheritance (Family Provision) Act, 1938 (c. 45), s. 1 [Re INNS, INNS v. WALLACE]	308

	PAGE
Wills, legitimacy, succession to personal property in England, child illegitimate by law of England, but legitimate by law of domicile of origin	830
Winding-up, of company. See Companies
Woodworking regulations. See Factories and Workshops
Working classes, houses. See Public Health (Housing)

WORKMEN’S COMPENSATION

Accident—“Arising out of employment”—Workman going to employers’ pay office to draw pay—Jumping on passing lorry—Collision between lorry and trucks—Workmen’s Compensation Act, 1925 (c. 84), s. 1 (1) [CAMPBELL v. PROUD’S ENGINEERING CO., LTD.]	97
“Accident”—Incapacity due to hernia—Existing condition aggravated by use of pneumatic drill—Cumulative effect [HUGHES v. LANCASTER STEAM COAL COLLIERIES, LTD.]	556
Compensation—Amount—Partial incapacity—Difference between current and pre-accident earnings—Down-grading of war-time “dilutee”—Workmen’s Compensation Act, 1925 (c. 84), s. 9 (3) (i) [PLATER v. CONSETT IRON CO., LTD.]	460
Partial incapacity—Declaration of liability—Earnings not diminished by injury—Illness causing workman’s return to employment in which earnings diminished by injury—Workmen’s Compensation Act, 1925 (c. 84), ss. 1, 9 (3) (i) [EVERETT v. ASSOCIATED EQUIPMENT CO., LTD.]	132
Writ, service. See Practice
—, service out of jurisdiction, contract not governed by English law, bill of lading	786
Working classes, accommodation of. See Public Health (Housing)
Yearly tenancy. See Lardlord and Tenant

CASES REFERRED TO

	PAGE
Ackerley v. Parkinson, (1815), 3 M. & S. 411; 105 E.R. 665; 19 Digest 241, 229	170, 174
Acme Flooring and Paving Co. (1904), Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, May 14, 1947, unrep.	144, 149
Adam, Re , (1837), 1 Moo. P.C.C. 460; 12 E.R. 889; 2 Digest 122, 13	551, 554
Adams v. Adams, [1941] 1 All E.R. 334; [1941] 1 K.B. 536; 110 L.J.K.B. 241; 165 L.T. 15; Digest Supp.	113, 114, 115
Admiralty Comrs. v. Valverde (Owners), [1938] 1 All E.R. 162; [1938] A.C. 173; 107 L.J.K.B. 99; 158 L.T. 281; Digest Supp.	466, 468
Admiralty Comrs. v. S.S. Volute, [1922] 1 A.C. 129; 91 L.J.P. 38; 126 L.T. 425; 41 Digest 780, 6417	351, 354, 357, 358, 359
Aksionairnoye Obschestvo A.M. Luther v. Sagor (James) & Co., [1921] 3 K.B. 532; 90 L.J.K.B. 1202; 125 L.T. 705; 11 Digest 309, 17	677, 679
Aldrich v. Wright, (1873), 53 N.H. 398; 16 Am. Rep. 339	730, 733
Algar v. Middlesex County Council, [1945] 2 All E.R. 243; 173 L.T. 143; 109 J.P. 213; Digest Supp.	748, 749
Allen v. Maddock, (1858), 11 Moo. P.C.C. 427; 31 L.T.O.S. 359; affg. S.C., sub nom. , Maddock v. Allen, (1857), Dea. & Sw. 325; 44 Digest 243, 698	522, 528
Amalgamated Syndicate, Re , [1897] 2 Ch. 600; 66 L.J.Ch. 783; 77 L.T. 431; 4 Mans. 308; 10 Digest 822, 5357	105, 110
Anderton and Halstead, Ltd. v. Birrell, [1932] 1 K.B. 271; 101 L.J.K.B. 219; 146 L.T. 139; 16 Tax Cas. 200; Digest Supp.	659, 660, 662, 663, 664, 665
Andros, Re , Andros v. Andros, (1883), 24 Ch.D. 637; 52 L.J.Ch. 793; 49 L.T. 163; 3 Digest 375, 151	880, 883, 884, 886
Anglo-Newfoundland Development Co., Ltd. v. Pacific Steam Navigation Co., [1924] A.C. 406; 93 L.J.P.C. 182; 131 L.T. 258; 36 Digest 115, 768	351, 357, 359
Anstruther-Gough-Calthorpe v. McOscar, [1924] 1 K.B. 716; 130 L.T. 691; sub nom. , Calthorpe v. McOscar, 93 L.J.K.B. 273; 31 Digest 329, 4710	761
Aron v. Aron (unreported but noted at [1939] W.N. 402)	69, 70
Askew, Re , Majoribanks v. Askew, [1930] 2 Ch. 259; 99 L.J.Ch. 466; 143 L.T. 616; Digest Supp.	855, 858
Askew v. Woodhead, (1880), 14 Ch.D. 27; 49 L.J.Ch. 320; 42 L.T. 567; 44 J.P. 570; 11 Digest 247, 1477	200, 201, 210, 211
Astle v. Astle, [1939] 3 All E.R. 967; [1939] P. 415; 109 L.J.P. 6; Digest Supp.	383, 529, 531
Athel Line, Ltd. v. Liverpool and London War Risks Insurance Assn., Ltd. (The Atheltemplar), [1945] 2 All E.R. 694; [1946] K.B. 117; 115 L.J.K.B. 141; 174 L.T. 81; Digest Supp.	587, 597, 599, 601
Atkins v. Atkins, [1942] 2 All E.R. 637; Digest Supp.	529, 531, 532
A.-G. v. Adelaide S.S. Co. (The Warilda), [1923] A.C. 292; 92 L.J.K.B. 537; sub nom. , Adelaide S.S. Co. v. R., 129 L.T. 161; 29 Digest 228, 1850	587, 590, 592
A.-G. v. Ard Coasters, Ltd., Liverpool and London War Risks Assn., Ltd. v. S.S. Richard de Larrinaga Marine Underwriters, [1921] 2 A.C. 141; 91 L.J.K.B. 31; 125 L.T. 548; 29 Digest 228, 1851	587, 590, 591
A.-G. v. Haberdashers' Co., (1934), 1 My. & K. 420; 8 Digest 263, 254	422, 428
A.-G. v. Marchant, (1866), L.R. 3 Eq. 424; 36 L.J.Ch. 47; 8 Digest 330, 1128	218, 228, 235
A.-G. v. National Provincial and Union Bank of England, [1924] A.C. 262; sub nom. , Re Tetley, A.-G. v. National Provincial and Union Bank of England, 93 L.J.Ch. 231; 131 L.T. 34; Digest Supp.; affg. S.C., Re Tetley, National Provincial and Union Bank of England, Ltd. v. Tetley, [1923] 1 Ch. 258	218, 220, 221, 607, 608, 609
A.-G. v. Windsor (Dean and Canons), (1860), 8 H.L. Cas. 369; 30 L.J.Ch. 529; 2 L.T. 578; 24 J.P. 467	218, 235
A.-G. & General Council of Medical Education of United Kingdom Registration v. Barrett Proprietaries, Ltd., (1932), 50 R.P.C. 45; Digest Supp.	846, 849
A.-G. for Canada v. Cain. A.-G. for Canada v. Gilhula, [1906] A.C. 542; 75 L.J.P.C. 81; 95 L.T. 314; 17 Digest 433, 126	551, 553, 554, 555
Bach's Design, Re , (1889), 42 Ch.D. 661; 61 L.T. 765; 6 R.P.C. 376; 43 Digest 250, 912	242, 244, 253
Bailey v. Geddes, [1937] 3 All E.R. 671; [1938] 1 K.B. 156; 107 L.J.K.B. 38; 157 L.T. 364; Digest Supp.	510, 513, 514, 515, 516
Baker v. Lewis, [1946] 2 All E.R. 592; [1947] K.B. 186; [1947] L.J.R. 468; 175 L.T. 490	602, 605, 606, 672, 673, 674, 676
Baku Consolidated Oilfields, Ltd., Re , [1944] 1 All E.R. 24; Digest Supp.	105, 110
Ball v. Hunt (William) & Sons, Ltd., [1912] A.C. 496; 81 L.J.K.B. 782; 106 L.T. 911; 34 Digest 395, 3228	133
Bank Line, Ltd. v. Capel (A.) & Co., [1919] A.C. 435; 88 L.J.K.B. 211; 120 L.T. 129; 12 Digest 391, 3198	666, 671
Barclay, Re , Gardner v. Barclay, Steuart v. Barclay, [1929] 2 Ch. 173; 98 L.J.Ch. 410; 141 L.T. 447; Digest Supp.	422, 427
Barrington, Re , Gamblen v. Lyon, (1886), 33 Ch.D. 523; 56 L.J.Ch. 175; 55 L.T. 87; 11 Digest 248, 1500	200, 201, 210, 211
Barrow v. Isaacs & Son, [1891] 1 Q.B. 417; 60 L.J.Q.B. 179; 64 L.T. 686; 55 J.P. 517; 31 Digest 491, 6388	790, 791
Barry West End Labour Club, Ltd. v. Barry Assessment Committee, (1932), 16 R. & I.T. 166	878
Battcheller (Robert) & Sons, Ltd. v. Battcheller, [1945] 1 All E.R. 522; [1945] Ch. 169; 114 L.J.Ch. 156; 172 L.T. 298; Digest Supp.	440, 441, 442
Batten Pool v. Kennedy, [1907] 1 Ch. 256; 76 L.J.Ch. 162; 30 Digest 357, 789	825, 828
Beard v. Beard, [1945] 2 All E.R. 306; [1946] P. 8; 114 L.J.P. 33; 174 L.T. 65; Digest Supp.	326, 327
Beavis v. Carman, [1920] W.N. 159; 84 J.P. Jo. 197; 31 Digest 578, 7271	8, 11
Bednall v. Bednall and Shivussawa, [1927] P. 225; 96 L.J.P. 150; 137 L.T. 632; Digest Supp.	51, 52
Bell London & Provincial Properties, Ltd. v. Reuben, [1946] 2 All E.R. 547; [1947] 1 K.B. 157; Digest Supp.	602, 604
Bence, Re , Smith v. Bence, [1891] 3 Ch. 242; 60 L.J.Ch. 636; 65 L.T. 530; 37 Digest 105, 396	686, 689
Bensaude v. Thames & Mersey Marine Insurance Co., [1897] A.C. 609; 66 L.J.Q.B. 666; 77 L.T. 282; 29 Digest 47, 93	666, 669
Bent v. Cullen, (1871), 6 Ch. App. 235; 40 L.J.Ch. 250; 19 W.R. 368; 39 Digest 137, 308	777, 781
Berkley v. Thompson, (1884), 10 App. Cas. 45; 54 L.J.M.C. 57; 52 L.T. 1; 49 J.P. 276; 3 Digest 393, 312	623, 625, 626, 627
Berkeley (Earl), Re , Borrer v. Berkeley, [1944] 2 All E.R. 395; [1945] Ch. 1; 171 L.T. 303; Digest Supp.	432, 434

	PAGE
Bernisse, The, The Elve , [1921] 1 A.C. 458; 90 L.J.P. 118; 124 L.T. 554; 37 Digest 608, 499 476, 478, 479
Bernstein v. Bernstein, [1893] P. 292; 69 L.T. 513; sub nom. Bernstein v. Bernstein, Turner & Sampson, 63 L.J.P. 3	326
Berthiaume v. Dastous, [1930] A.C. 79; 99 L.J.P.C. 66; 142 L.T. 54, P.C.; Digest Supp. 22, 24, 677, 679
Birmingham Canal Co. v. Cartwright, (1879), 11 Ch.D. 421; 48 L.J.Ch. 552; 40 L.T. 784; 27 W.R. 597; 37 Digest 88, 89, 258	641, 643
Birtwhistle v. Vardill, (1840), 7 Cl. & Fin. 895; sub nom. Doe d. Birtwhistle v. Vardill, 6 Bing. N.C. 385; West, 500; 1 Scott, N.R. 828; previous proceedings sub nom. Doe d. Birtwhistle v. Vardill, (1835), 2 Cl. & Fin. 571; 18 Digest 6, 24	830, 832, 833
Blackwell v. Blackwell, [1929] A.C. 318; 98 L.J.Ch. 251; 140 L.T. 444; Digest Supp. 522, 528
Blake, Re , Berry v. Geen, [1938] 2 All E.R. 362; 107 L.J.Ch. 173; sub nom. , Berry v. Geen, [1938] A.C. 575; 159 L.T. 122; Digest Supp. 163, 167, 168, 169
Blakemore v. Delta Mill (1919), Ltd., (1935), 28 B.W.C.C. 193; sub nom. , Delta Mill (1919), Ltd. v. Blakemore, 104 L.J.K.B. 459; Digest Supp. 461, 462, 463, 464
Blewitt v. Roberts, (1841), Cr. & Ph. 274; 41 E.R. 495; sub nom. Blewitt v. Roberts, Blewitt v. Stauffers, 10 L.J.Ch. 324; 5 Jur. 979; 39 Digest 137, 305	777, 779, 780
Blight v. Hartnoll, (1881), 19 Ch.D. 294; 51 L.J.Ch. 162; sub nom. Re Blight, Blight v. Hartnoll, 45 L.T. 524; 39 Digest 136, 299	777, 779, 780
Blight v. Hartnoll, (1883), 23 Ch.D. 218; 52 L.J.Ch. 672; 48 L.T. 543; 44 Digest 427, 2573	855, 863
Bomford v. Osborne, (1941) 2 All E.R. 426; [1942] A.C. 14; 110 L.J.K.B. 462; 165 L.T. 205; 23 Tax Cas. 642; Digest Supp. 650, 651, 653
Bourne v. Keane, [1919] A.C. 815; 89 L.J.Ch. 17; 121 L.T. 426; 8 Digest 250, 106	218, 222
Bowman v. Secular Society, Ltd., [1917] A.C. 406; 86 L.J.Ch. 568; 117 L.T. 161; 8 Digest 265, 270	218, 220, 224, 226, 227, 231, 232, 240
Braby (Frederick) & Co., Ltd. v. Bedwell, [1926] 1 K.B. 456; 95 L.J.K.B. 412; 134 L.T. 320; 31 Digest 583, 7320	361, 362
Bracegirdle v. Oxley, [1947] 1 All E.R. 126; [1947] K.B. 349; 176 L.T. 187	373, 374
Bragg v. Bragg, [1925] P. 20; 94 L.J.P. 11; 132 L.T. 346; 27 Digest 565, 6242	118, 119, 120
Braithwaite & Co., Ltd. v. Elliott, [1946] 2 All E.R. 537; [1947] K.B. 177; [1947] L.J.R. 172; 176 L.T. 62	361, 362
Bramwell v. Bramwell, [1942] 1 All E.R. 137; [1942] 1 K.B. 370; 111 L.J.K.B. 430; Digest Supp.	793
Brannan v. Peek, [1947] 2 All E.R. 572	574, 575
Brett v. Cumberland, (1619), 3 Cro. Jac. 521; 3 Bulst. 163; Godb. 276; Poph. 136; 1 Roll. Rep. 359; 2 Roll. Rep. 63; 79 E.R. 446; 31 Digest 409, 5552	754, 755, 756
Briddon v. George, [1946] 1 All E.R. 609; 174 L.T. 380; Digest Supp. 601 602, 604
Briggs v. Calverly, (1800), 8 Term Rep. 629; 12 Digest 320, 2651	8, 10
Briggs v. Minister of Pensions, (1946), Reports of Selected War Pensions Appeals, Vol. 1, p. 211	373, 374
Brintons, Ltd. v. Turvey, [1905] A.C. 230; 74 L.J.K.B. 474; 92 L.T. 578; 34 Digest 464, 3799	193, 195
British & Argentine Meat Co., Ltd. v. Randall, [1939] 4 All E.R. 293; 162 L.T. 91; Digest Supp.	384, 386
British Columbian Electric Ry. Co., Ltd. v. Loach, [1916] 1 A.C. 719; 85 L.J.P.C. 23; 113 L.T. 946; 36 Digest 117, 751	351, 354, 356
British Fame (Owners) v. Macgregor (Owners), The Macgregor, [1943] 1 All E.R. 33; [1943] A.C. 197; 112 L.J.P. 6; 168 L.T. 193; Digest Supp.	351, 354
British Legion v. British Legion Club (Street), Ltd., (1931), 48 R.P.C. 555; Digest Supp. 846, 850
British Medical Association v. Marsh, (1931), 48 R.P.C. 565; Digest Supp. 846, 849
British Mexican Petroleum Co., Ltd. v. Jackson, British Mexican Petroleum Co., Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Comrs., (1932), 16 Tax Cas. 570; Digest Supp. 763, 764, 766
British S.S. Co. v. R., Green v. British India Steam Navigation Co., British India Steam Navigation Co. v. Liverpool and London War Risks Insurance Assocn. (The Petersham and the Matiana), [1921] 1 A.C. 99; 89 L.J.K.B. 881; 123 L.T. 721; 29 Digest 230, 1860; aff. , [1919] 2 K.B. 670	587, 592, 596, 597, 600
British Sugar Manufacturers, Ltd. v. Harris, [1938] 1 All E.R. 149; [1938] 2 K.B. 220; 107 L.J.K.B. 472; 159 L.T. 365; 21 Tax Cas. 528; Digest Supp. revers. , [1937] 3 All E.R. 702	660, 664, 665
Brodgen v. Metropolitan Ry. Co. (1877), 2 App. Cas. 666; 12 Digest 52, 289	63, 68
Bromage v. Prosser, (1825), 4 B. & C. 247; 1 C. & P. 673; 6 Dow. & Ry. K.B. 296; 3 L.J.O.S.K.B. 203; 15 Digest 1020, 11461	610
Bromley v. Mercer, [1922] 2 K.B. 126; 91 L.J.K.B. 577; 127 L.T. 282; 26 Digest 434, 1520	197, 198, 199
Brook v. Brook, (1861), 9 H.L. Cas. 193; 4 L.T. 93; 25 J.P. 259; aff. (1858), 3 Sm. & G. 481; 11 Digest 414, 806	830, 834
Brooke v. Garrod, (1857), 2 De G. & J. 62; 27 L.J.Ch. 226; 30 L.T.O.S. 194; 44 Digest 474, 2930; aff. , 3 K. & J. 608	548, 549, 550
Brownbridge, Re , Brownbridge v. Brownbridge, (1942), 193 L.T. Jo. 185	309, 311, 638, 639
Browne v. Brandt, [1902] 1 K.B. 696; 71 L.J.K.B. 367; 86 L.T. 625; 29 Digest 7, 75	619, 621
Bruce v. McManus, [1915] 3 K.B. 1; 84 L.J.K.B. 1860; 113 L.T. 332; 79 J.P. 294; 42 Digest 924, 188	384, 390
Brundsen v. Humphrey, (1884), 14 Q.B.D. 141; 53 L.J.Q.B. 476; 51 L.T. 529; 49 J.P. 4; 21 Digest 207, 480	256, 258
Burbidge v. Minister of Pensions, (1947), Reports of Selected War Pensions Appeals, Vol. 1, p. 307	373, 374
Burbury v. Jackson, [1917] 1 K.B. 16; 86 L.J.K.B. 255; 115 L.T. 713; 80 J.P. 455; 3 Digest 397, 323	270, 271, 272, 273
Burder v. Veley, (1840), 12 Ad. & El. 233; Arn. & H. 175; 4 Per. & Dav. 452; 9 L.J.Q.B. 267; 4 J.P. 379, 394; 113 E.R. 801; aff. , sub nom. , Veley v. Burder, (1841), 12 Ad. & El. 265, Ex. Ch.; 16 Digest 372, 2109	170, 177
Burr v. Theatre Royal, Drury Lane, Ltd., [1907] 1 K.B. 544; 76 L.J.K.B. 459; 96 L.T. 447; 34 Digest 210, 1728	84, 85
Burrell (Charles) & Sons, Ltd. v. Selva, (1921), 90 L.J.K.B. 1340; 126 L.T. 49; 14 B.W.C.C. 158; aff. , S.C. sub nom. , Selva v. Burrell (Charles) & Sons, Ltd., [1921] 1 K.B. 355; 34 Digest 272, 2309	557, 558
Bywell Castle, The, (1879), 4 P.D. 219; 41 L.T. 747; 36 Digest 118, 791	351, 357
Cameron v. Nystrom, [1893] A.C. 308; 62 L.J.P.C. 85; 68 L.T. 772; 57 J.P. 550; 34 Digest 27, 61	542, 544
Campbell (Donald) & Co. v. Pollak, [1927] A.C. 732; 96 L.J.K.B. 1132; 137 L.T. 356; 43 Digest 335, 1570	799, 805
Camden Charities, Re , (1881), 18 Ch.D. 310; 50 L.J.Ch. 646; 45 L.T. 152; 8 Digest 343, 1359	218, 228, 235, 238

	PAGE
Canada Rice Mills, Ltd. v. Union Marine & General Insurance Co., Ltd., [1940] 4 All E.R. 169; [1941] A.C. 55; 110 L.J.P.C. 1; 164 L.T. 367; Digest Supp.	587, 593
Canadian Pacific Ry. Co. v. R., [1931] A.C. 414; 100 L.J.P.C. 129; 145 L.T. 129; Digest Supp.	332, 339
Cape Asbestos Co. v. Lloyds Bank, Ltd., [1921] W.N. 274; Digest Supp.	8, 9
Capron v. Capron, [1927] P. 243; 96 L.J.P. 151; 137 L.T. 568; Digest Supp.	71, 72, 73
Cardiff Bridge Case, (1700), 1 Salk. 146; 91 E.R. 135; sub nom. , R. v. Glamorganshire (Inhabitants), 12 Mod. Rep. 403; 1 Ld. Raym. 580; sub nom. , R. v. —, 1 Com. 86; 16 Digest 401, 2458	170, 176
Carlton v. Bowcock, (1884), 51 L.T. 659; 30 Digest 356, 187	825, 826
Carmichael v. Carmichael, (1925), 42 T.L.R. 133; 27 Digest 332, 3125	827, 828
Carme's Settled Estates, Re , [1899] 1 Ch. 324; 68 L.J.Ch. 120; sub nom. , Re St. Donats Settled Estates , 79 L.T. 542; 40 Digest 735, 2647	328, 330
Carrick v. Hancock, (1895), 12 T.L.R. 59; 11 Digest 448, 1065	328, 329
Cartwright, Re , Cartwright v. Smith, [1938] 4 All E.R. 209; [1939] Ch. 90; Digest Supp.	623, 626
Cartwright v. Sculcoates Union, [1899] 1 Q.B. 667; affirmed [1900] A.C. 150; 69 L.J.Q.B. 403; 82 L.T. 157; 64 J.P. 229; 38 Digest 564, 1025	135, 139
Cary v. Abbot, (1802), 7 Ves. 490; 8 Digest 252, 133	878, 879
Casdagli v. Casdagli, [1919] A.C. 145; 88 L.J.P. 49; 120 L.T. 52; 11 Digest 323, 115	218, 233
Casson v. Churchley, (1884), 53 L.J.Q.B. 335; 50 L.T. 568; 30 Digest 203, 691	855, 858
Cass, Re , Lindeboom v. Camille, [1934] Ch. 162; 103 L.J.Ch. 49; 150 L.T. 131; Digest Supp.	193, 196
Cavalier v. Pope, [1906] A.C. 428; 75 L.J.K.B. 609; 95 L.T. 65; 31 Digest 348, 4900	423, 429, 431
Cave v. Page, [1923] W.N. 178; 67 Sol. Jo. 659; Digest Supp.	197, 198
Century Insurance Co., Ltd. v. Northern Ireland Road Transport Board, [1942] 1 All E.R. 491; [1942] A.C. 509; 111 L.J.P.C. 138; 167 L.T. 404; Digest Supp.	125, 128, 129, 130, 131, 132
Chamberlain v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1943] 2 All E.R. 200; 25 Tax Cas. 317; Digest Supp.	541, 542, 544
Chandler v. Strevett, [1947] 1 All E.R. 164; 176 L.T. 300	150, 154, 155, 156, 157, 158
Charities Comrs. v. McCartan, [1917] 1 I.R. 388; 8 Digest 276, a	393, 394, 395
Charles v. Taylor, Walker & Co., (1878), 3 C.P.D. 492; 38 L.T. 773; 42 J.P. 724; 34 Digest 212, 1749	422, 427
Chateney v. Brazilian Submarine Telegraph Co., Ltd., [1891] 1 Q.B. 79; 60 L.J.Q.B. 295; 63 L.T. 739; 1 Digest 296, 246	84, 86
Chesterman v. Federal Comr. of Taxation, [1926] A.C. 128; 95 L.J.P.C. 39; 134 L.T. 360; Digest Supp.	677, 679
Chichester v. Chichester, [1936] 1 All E.R. 271; [1936] P. 129; 105 L.J.P. 38; 154 L.T. 375; Digest Supp.	422, 426
Chichester Diocesan Fund and Board of Finance (Incorporated) v. Simpson, [1944] 2 All E.R. 60; [1944] A.C. 341; 113 L.J.Ch. 225; 171 L.T. 141; Digest Supp.	714, 715
Chillingworth v. Esche, [1924] 1 Ch. 97; 93 L.J.Ch. 129; 129 L.T. 808; Digest Supp.	218, 220
Chisholm v. London Passenger Transport Board, [1938] 4 All E.R. 850; [1939] 1 K.B. 426; 108 L.J.K.B. 239; 160 L.T. 79; Digest Supp.	63, 67, 865, 867
Churchman v. Churchman, [1945] 2 All E.R. 190; [1945] P. 44; 114 L.J.P. 17; 173 L.T. 108; Digest Supp.	510, 513, 515
Clan Colquhoun, The, [1936] P. 153; 105 L.J.P. 65; 155 L.T. 231; sub nom. , Port of London Authority v. Clan Colquhoun S.S. Owners, [1936] 1 All E.R. 429; Digest Supp.	438
Clan Line Steamers, Ltd. v. Board of Trade, The Clan Matheson, [1929] A.C. 514; 98 L.J.K.B. 408; 141 L.T. 275; Digest Supp.	560, 562, 563
Clark v. Clark, [1939] P. 228	587, 591, 597, 599, 600
Clark v. Downes, Clark v. Mawby, (1931), 145 L.T. 20; Digest Supp.	95, 96
Clark v. Freeman, (1848), 11 Beav. 112; 17 L.J.Ch. 142; 11 L.T.O.S. 22; 12 Jur. 149; 43 Digest 281, 1120	376
Clark and Wife v. Brims, [1947] 1 All E.R. 242; [1947] K.B. 497; [1947] L.J.R. 853	846, 849, 850
Clarke's Design, Re , [1896] 2 Ch. 38; 65 L.J.Ch. 629; sub nom. , Re Clarke's Registered Design , Clarke v. Sax & Co., Ltd., 74 L.T. 631; 13 R.P.C. 351; 43 Digest 248, 896	815, 823
Clock, Ltd. v. Clock House Hotel, Ltd., (1936), 53 R.P.C. 269; Digest Supp.	241, 244, 248, 252, 254
Cobb v. Cobb, [1900] P. 294; 69 L.J.P. 125; 83 L.T. 716; 27 Digest 558, 6135	840, 851
Cocks v. Manners, (1871), L.R. 12 Eq. 574; 40 L.J.Ch. 640; 24 L.T. 869; 36 J.P. 244; 8 Digest 248, 76	714
Colchester v. Peck, [1926] 2 K.B. 366; 95 L.J.K.B. 1038; 135 L.T. 32; 90 J.P. 130; Digest Supp.	422, 424, 425, 426, 427, 428, 429, 430
Coldrick v. Partridge, Jones & Co., Ltd., [1910] A.C. 77; 79 L.J.K.B. 173; 101 L.T. 835; 34 Digest 211, 1741	74, 77
Collier v. Rivaz, (1841), 2 Curt. 855; 11 Digest 381, 594	84, 87
Collins v. Worley, (1889), 60 L.T. 1748	855, 858
Commonwealth Shipping Representative v. Peninsular and Oriental Branch Service (The Geelong), [1923] A.C. 191; 92 L.J.K.B. 142; 29 Digest 226, 1838	61, 62
Cooley v. Walsh & Cooney, [1926] I.R. 239; Digest Supp.	587, 599
Cooper v. Cooper, [1940] 3 All E.R. 579; [1940] P. 204; 109 L.J.P. 126; 162 L.T. 228; Digest Supp.	602, 603, 605, 606
Co-operative Committee on Japanese Canadians v. A.-G. for Canada, [1947] A.C. 87; [1947] L.J.R. 836; 176 L.T. 547	69
Cope v. Sharpe (No. 2), [1912] 1 K.B. 496; 81 L.J.K.B. 346; 106 L.T. 56; 43 Digest 413, 361	551, 554, 555
Cork Steamship Co., Ltd. v. Kiddle, (1920), 2 L.L.L.R. 505	730, 732
Corner v. Irwin, (1874), 8 Ir. R. C.L. 504	351, 359
Cornish v. Stubbs, (1870), L.R. 5 C.P. 334; 39 L.J.C.P. 202; 22 L.T. 21; 30 Digest 513, 1685	382, 338
Corry v. Great Western Ry. Co., (1881), 7 Q.B.D. 322; 50 L.J.Q.B. 386; 44 L.T. 701; sub nom. Covey v. Great Western Ry. Co.; 45 J.P. 712; 38 Digest 291, 231	769, 770, 772
Coryton v. Helyar, (1745), 2 Cox. Eq. Cas. 340; 30 E.R. 156; Digest Supp.	709, 710
Cotterill v. Penn, [1936] 1 K.B. 53; 105 L.J.K.B. 1; 153 L.T. 377; 99 J.P. 276; Digest Supp.	730, 733
Courtfield (S.S.) (Owners) v. S.S. Atlantis (Owners), (1919), 1 L.L.L.R. 323	351, 355
Cowen v. Cowen, [1945] 2 All E.R. 197; [1946] P. 36; 114 L.J.P. 57; 173 L.T. 176; Digest Supp.	43, 44, 886, 887, 888, 890, 891, 892
Craig v. Kansen, [1943] 1 All E.R. 103; [1943] 1 K.B. 256; 112 L.J.K.B. 228; 168 L.T. 38; Digest Supp.	654, 655
Cranston, Re , Webb v. Oldfield, [1898] 1 I.R. 431; 8 Digest 259, 2141	218, 221, 222, 229, 234, 236, 238
Cricklewood Property & Investment Trust, Ltd. v. Leighton's Investment Trust, Ltd., [1945] 1 All E.R. 252; [1945] A.C. 221; 114 L.J.K.B. 110; 172 L.T. 140; Digest Supp.	666, 668

	PAGE
Crofter Hand Woven Harris Tweed Co., Ltd. v. Veitch, [1942] 1 All E.R. 142; [1942] A.C. 435; 111 L.J.P.C. 17; 166 L.T. 172; Digest Supp.	256, 257, 259
Cumming v. Danson, [1942] 2 All E.R. 653; 112 L.J.K.B. 145; sub nom. , Cumming v. Dawson, 168 L.T. 35; Digest Supp.	601, 602, 604, 605, 606
D—e v. A—g (falsely calling herself D—e), (1845), 1 Rob. Eccl. 279; 27 Digest 267, 2350	886, 889, 890, 891
Da Costa v. De Pas, (1754), Amb. 228; Dick. 258; sub nom. , De Costa v. De Pas, 2 Swan 487, n; 8 Digest 253, 141	218, 233
Dale v. Hatfield Chase Corp., [1922] 2 K.B. 282; 92 L.J.K.B. 237; 128 L.T. 194; 87 J.P. 11; Digest Supp.	125, 130, 384, 389
Dallmeyer, Re, Ex p. Dallmeyer, (1906), 22 T.L.R. 445; 4 Digest 574, 5277	182, 184, 185
Dalrymple v. Dalrymple, (1811), 2 Hag. Con. 54; on appeal (1814), 2 Hag. Con. 137, n; 22 Digest 625, 6396	830, 832
Daniel v. Jones, (1877), 2 C.P.D. 351; 41 J.P. 712; 2 Digest 217, 124	610, 611
Dartford Brewery Co. v. Freeman (No. 2), [1938] 4 All E.R. 78; Digest Supp.	384, 386
Davies v. Mann, (1842), 10 M. & W. 546; 12 L.J.Ex. 10; 7 J.P. 53; 36 Digest 113, 751	350, 353, 354, 358, 359
Davis v. Burrell and Lane, (1851), 10 C.B. 821; 31 Digest 207, 3475	274, 275
Davis v. Morton, [1913] 2 K.B. 479; 82 L.J.K.B. 665; 108 L.T. 677; 77 J.P. 223; 33 Digest 331, 441	615, 617
De Montaigu v. De Montaigu, [1913] P. 154; 82 L.J.P. 125; 109 L.T. 79; 11 Digest 425, 906	113, 115
De Thémmines v. De Bonneval, (1828), 5 Russ. 288; 7 L.J.O.S.Ch. 35; 8 Digest 265, 263	218, 227, 232
De Trafford v. Tempest, (1856), 21 Beav. 564; 44 Digest 421, 2515	855, 863
Delany, Re, Conoley v. Quick, [1902] 2 Ch. 642; 71 L.J.Ch. 811; 87 L.T. 46; 8 Digest 245, 50	422, 426, 427, 430
Denbigh Cowan & Co. and Atcherley (R.) & Co., Re, (1921), 90 L.J.K.B. 836; 125 L.T. 388; 39 Digest 580, 1834	443, 447
Dennis v. Hick, (1935), 19 Tax Cas. 219	650, 651, 652
Denny, Mott & Dickson, Ltd. v. Fraser (James B.) & Co., Ltd., [1944] 1 All E.R. 678; [1944] A.C. 265; 113 L.J.P.C. 37; 171 L.T. 345; Digest Supp.	666, 669
Dent v. Dent, (Apr. 15, 1942) (unreported)	714, 715
Derby (Territorial Army Association) v. Derby (South Eastern Area) Assessment Committee, [1935] 2 K.B. 373; 104 L.J.K.B. 611; 153 L.T. 340; 99 J.P. 260; Digest Supp.	376, 377
Desoutter Bros., Ltd. v. Hanger & Co., Ltd. and Artificial Limb Makers, Ltd., [1936] 1 All E.R. 535; Digest Supp.	454, 457
Dillon v. Cunningham, (1872), L.R. 8 Exch. 23; 42 L.J.Ex. 11; 27 L.T. 830; 5 Digest 1037, 8480	828, 829
Dilworth v. Stamps Comrs., Dilworth v. Land and Income Tax Comrs., [1899] A.C. 99; 79 L.T. 473; sub nom. , Dilworth v. New Zealand Stamps Comrs., 68 L.J.P.C. 1; 19 Digest 586, 182	232, 233
Distington Hematite Iron Co., Ltd. v. Possehl & Co., [1916] 1 K.B. 811; 85 L.J.K.B. 919; 115 L.T. 412; 2 Digest 175, 403	666, 671
Doe d. Martin v. Watts, (1797), 7 Term Rep. 83; 30 Digest 147, 1329	333, 341
Doe d. Rochester (Bp.) v. Bridges, (1831), 1 B. & Ad. 847; 9 L.J.O.S.K.B. 113; 42 Digest 750, 1737	25, 27, 815, 823
Donaldson's Hospital (Edinburgh) Trustees v. Esslemont, 1926 S.C. (H.L.) 68; Digest Supp.	125, 132
Donovan v. Laing, Wharton & Down Construction Syndicate, [1893] 1 Q.B. 629; 63 L.J.Q.B. 25; 68 L.T. 512; 57 J.P. 583; 34 Digest 26, 49	542, 544
Donovan v. Minister of Pensions, (1946), unreported	373, 374, 432, 433, 435
Douglas, Re, Obert v. Barrow, (1887), 35 Ch.D. 472; 56 L.J.Ch. 913; 56 L.T. 736; 8 Digest 258, 205	218, 228, 235
Drew v. Drew, (1888), 13 P.D. 97; 57 L.J.P. 64; 58 L.T. 923; 27 Digest 319, 2975	160, 162
Dumper's Case, (1603), 4 Co. Rep. 119 b; sub nom. , Dumper v. Syms, Cro. Eliz. 815; 31 Digest 393, 5393	2, 6
Dunn v. Chalmers, (1875), 3 R. (Ct. of Sess.) 236; 3 Digest 395, 317 xxiv	270, 271, 273
Dunne v. Byrne, [1912] A.C. 407; 81 L.J.P.C. 202; 106 L.T. 394; 8 Digest 294, 718	422, 426, 427, 428
Dwina, The, [1892] P. 53; 61 L.J.P. 71; 66 L.T. 862; 41 Digest 873, 7493	466, 468
Easterbrook v. Easterbrook (otherwise Jervis), [1944] 1 All E.R. 90; [1944] P. 10; 113 L.J.P. 17; 170 L.T. 26; Digest Supp.	113, 118
Eastern Telegraph Co. v. Dent, [1899] 1 Q.B. 835; 68 L.J.Q.B. 564; 80 L.T. 459; 31 Digest 491, 6389	790
Ecclesiastical Comrs. for England's Conveyance, Re, [1936] Ch. 430; 105 L.J.Ch. 168; 155 L.T. 281; Digest Supp.	79, 81
Education, Board of, v. Rice, [1911] A.C. 179; 80 L.J.K.B. 796; 104 L.T. 689; 75 J.P. 393; 19 Digest 602, 290	395, 396, 405
Edwards v. Minister of Pensions, [1947] 1 All E.R. 379; [1947] 1 K.B. 564	432, 434
Eliezer Zabrowski v. General Officer Commanding Palestine, [1947] A.C. 246	551, 554
Elliott v. Boynton, [1924] 1 Ch. 236; 93 L.J.Ch. 122; 130 L.T. 497; 31 Digest 553, 7003	2, 6
Ellis v. Dubowski, [1921] 3 K.B. 621; 91 L.J.K.B. 89; 126 L.T. 91; 85 J.P. 230; 42 Digest 921, 162	681, 684
English Crown Spelter Co., Ltd. v. Baker, (1908), 99 L.T. 353; 5 Tax Cas. 327; 28 Digest 48, 250	144, 147
Errington v. Minister of Health, [1935] 1 K.B. 249; 104 L.J.K.B. 49; 152 L.T. 154; 99 J.P. 15; Digest Supp.	396, 404, 405
Eurymedon, The, [1938] P. 41; 107 L.J.P. 81; 158 L.T. 445; sub nom. , Corstar Owners v. Eurymedon Owners, The Eurymedon, [1938] 1 All E.R. 122; Digest Supp.	350, 354, 359
Evans v. Evans, (1790), 1 Hag. Con. 35; 161 E.R. 466; 27 Digest 281, 2522	529, 530
Evans v. Evans and Blyth, [1904] P. 274; 73 L.J.P. 87; 91 L.T. 356; 27 Digest 532, 5762	51, 52
Faraker, Re, Faraker v. Durell, [1912] 2 Ch. 488; 81 L.J.Ch. 635; 107 L.T. 36; 56 Sol. Jo. 668, C.A.; 8 Digest 311, 921	773, 775, 776
Farley v. Westminster Bank, Ltd., Re Ashton's Estate, Westminster Bank Ltd. v. Farley, [1939] 3 All E.R. 491; [1939] A.C. 430; 108 L.J.Ch. 307; 161 L.T. 103; Digest Supp. 607, 608, 609	608, 609
Feather v. R., (1865), 6 B. & S. 257; 35 L.J.Q.B. 200; 12 L.T. 114; 29 J.P. 709; 16 Digest 236, 319	466, 469
Fender v. Midmay, [1937] 3 All E.R. 402; 106 L.J.K.B. 641; 157 L.T. 340; sub nom. , Fender v. St. John-Midmay, [1938] A.C. 1; Digest Supp.	677, 679
Fenton v. Livingstone, (1859), 3 Macq. 497; 33 L.T.O.S. 335; 23 J.P. 579; 3 Digest 374, 143	830, 831, 832, 834
Fibrosa Spolka Akcyjna v. Fairbairn Lawson Combe Barbour, Ltd., [1942] 2 All E.R. 122; [1943] A.C. 32; 111 L.J.K.B. 433; 167 L.T. 101; Digest Supp.	443, 453, 454

	PAGE
Fife Coal Co., Ltd. v. Young, [1940] 2 All E.R. 85; [1940] A.C. 479; 109 L.J.P.C. 49; 162 L.T. 344; sub nom. Young v. Fife Coal Co., 33 B.W.C.C. 107; Digest Supp.	557, 559
Finnerty v. Minister of Pensions, (1947), unreported	432, 434
Firth v. Firth, (1941) (unrep.)	886, 892
Fisher v. Fisher, [1942] 1 All E.R. 438; [1942] P. 101; 111 L.J.P. 28; 168 L.T. 225; Digest Supp.	744, 745, 746, 747, 748
Fisher v. Ruislip-Northwood Urban District Council & Middlesex County Council, [1945] 2 All E.R. 458; [1945] K.B. 584; 115 L.J.K.B. 9; 173 L.T. 261; 110 J.P. 1	758, 759, 760
Fitzsimons v. Ford Motor Co., Ltd., (Aero Engines) [1946] 1 All E.R. 429; 174 L.T. 233; 39 B.W.C.C. 26; Digest Supp.	557, 559
Fletcher v. Birkenhead Corp., [1907] 1 K.B. 205; 76 L.J.K.B. 218; 96 L.T. 287; 71 J.P. 111; 42 Digest 652, 597	277, 279
Forster v. Minister of Pensions, (1946), Reports of Selected War Pensions Appeals, Vol. 1, p. 145	373, 374
Forsyth v. Forsyth, [1947] 1 All E.R. 406; 111 J.P. 247; 176 L.T. 507	118, 119
Foster, Re , Hudson v. Foster, [1938] 3 All E.R. 357; Digest Supp.	79, 81, 82
Foster v. Usherwood, (1877), 3 Ex. D. 1; 47 L.J.Q.B. 30; 37 L.T. 389; 16 Digest 118, 167	623, 624
Foveaux, Re , Cross v. London Anti-Vivisection Society, [1895] 2 Ch. 501; 64 L.J.Ch. 856; 73 L.T. 202; 8 Digest 259, 206	217, 218, 219, 220, 221, 222, 224, 226, 227, 228, 229, 231, 234
Fowke v. Fowke, [1938] 2 All E.R. 638; [1938] Ch. 774; 107 L.J.Ch. 350; 159 L.T. 8; Digest Supp.	113, 114
Fulham Vestry v. London County Council, [1897] 2 Q.B. 76; 66 L.J.Q.B. 515; 76 L.T. 691; 61 J.P. 440; 36 Digest 179, 236	537, 540
Fullerton's Will, Re , [1906] 2 Ch. 138; 75 L.J.Ch. 552; 94 L.T. 667; 11 Digest 248, 1502	201, 211
G. v. M., (1885), 10 App. Cas. 171; 53 L.T. 398; 27 Digest 351, 3339	43, 44, 45, 886, 888
Gardner, Re , Ex p. Official Receiver v. Gardner, [1942] Ch. 50; 166 L.T. 81; sub nom. , Re Debtor (No. 6 of 1934), Ex p. Official Receiver, [1941] 3 All E.R. 289; 111 L.J.Ch. 75; Digest Supp.	182, 185
Garvin v. City of London Police Authority, [1944] 1 All E.R. 378; [1944] 1 K.B. 358; 113 L.J.K.B. 305; 170 L.T. 336; 108 J.P. 107; Digest Supp.	193, 194, 195, 196
Gaskill v. Gaskill, [1921] P. 425; 90 L.J.P. 339; 126 L.T. 115; 27 Digest 298, 2753	95, 96, 97, 377, 380, 711, 712
Gassock, Re , (1656), 1 Lilly's Register, 253, 363; Style's Practical Register, 4th edn., 154; 16 Digest 400, 2432	170, 176
Gaynor v. Gaynor, [1901] L.R. 217; 27 Digest 259, e	793
George Monro, Ltd. v. American Cyanamid & Chemical Corporation, [1944] 1 All E.R. 386; [1944] K.B. 432; 113 L.J.K.B. 235; 170 L.T. 281; Digest Supp.	787, 788
German Date Coffee Co., Re , (1882), 20 Ch.D. 169; 51 L.J.Ch. 564; 46 L.T. 327; 10 Digest 823, 5361	105, 109, 110
Gibaud v. Great Eastern Ry. Co., [1921] 2 K.B. 426; 90 L.J.K.B. 535; 125 L.T. 76; Digest Supp.	260, 261
Gibbs v. Rumsey, (1813), 2 Ves. & B. 294; 43 Digest 593, 419	522, 524
Gill v. Mellor, Gill v. Monday, [1924] 1 K.B. 97; 93 L.J.K.B. 55; 130 L.T. 211; 87 J.P. 190; 38 Digest 625, 1454	274, 276
Glenister v. Glenister, [1945] 1 All E.R. 513; [1945] P. 30; 114 L.J.P. 69; 172 L.T. 250; 109 J.P. 194; Digest Supp.	95, 97, 377, 378, 379, 380, 617, 618, 711, 712
Godden v. Yeomans & Partners, Ltd., (1947), unreported	461, 464
Goldsmith's Will Trusts, Re , Brett v. Bingham, [1947] 1 All E.R. 451; [1947] Ch. 339; [1947] L.J.R. 775; 176 L.T. 321	548, 550
Goodier v. Johnson, (1881), 18 Ch.D. 441; 51 L.J.Ch. 369; sub nom. , Re Goodier, Goodier v. Johnson, 45 L.T. 515; 37 Digest 102, 369	686, 689
Goodman's Trusts, Re , (1881), 17 Ch.D. 266; 50 L.J.Ch. 425; 44 L.T. 527; 3 Digest 372, 135	830, 832, 833, 834, 836
Goodright d. Stevens v. Moss, (1777), 2 Cowp. 591; 98 E.R. 1257; 3 Digest 365, 58	377, 379
Gott v. Measures, [1947] 2 All E.R. 609	730, 733
Graham v. Graham, [1923] P. 31; 92 L.J.P. 26; 128 L.T. 639; 27 Digest 892, 3867	113, 116
Graham (or Miller) v. Glasgow Corp., [1947] 1 All E.R. 1; [1947] L.J.R. 239; 176 L.T. 142; affg. , 1946 S.C. 109	84, 86, 346, 347, 348, 349, 350
Gray v. Fidler, [1943] 2 All E.R. 289; [1943] 1 K.B. 694; 112 L.J.K.B. 627; 169 L.T. 193; Digest Supp.	13, 14
Green v. Dunn, (1855), 20 Beav. 6; 24 L.J.Ch. 577; 25 L.T.O.S. 154; 44 Digest 419, 2497	855, 863
Green v. Green, [1929] P. 101; 98 L.J.P. 58; 140 L.T. 93; Digest Supp.	51, 52
Green v. Weatherill, [1929] 2 Ch. 213; 98 L.J.Ch. 369; 142 L.T. 216; Digest Supp.	256, 258
Gregory v. Cattle, [1943] 1 All E.R. 654; [1943] 1 K.B. 412; 112 L.J.K.B. 620; 168 L.T. 376; 107 J.P. 122; Digest Supp.	270, 271
Grove-Grady, Re , Plowden v. Lawrence, [1929] 1 Ch. 557; 98 L.J.Ch. 261; 140 L.T. 659; Digest Supp.; C.A.; varied on appeal, sub nom. , A.-G. v. Plowden, [1931] W.N. 89, H.L.	218, 221, 222, 228, 229, 236
Groves v. Wimborne (Lord), [1898] 2 Q.B. 402; 67 L.J.Q.B. 862; 79 L.T. 284; 42 Digest 759, 1858	815, 821, 823
Gutta Percha and Rubber (London), Ltd. (No. 789,574) Application, Re , (1935), 52 R.P.C. 383; Digest Supp.	242, 253
Hadley v. Baxendale, (1854), 9 Exch. 341; 23 L.J.Ex. 179; 23 L.J.O.S. 69; 17 Digest 93, 101	264, 266
Hagen, The, [1908] P. 189; 77 L.J.P. 124; 98 L.T. 891; Digest Practice 340, 579	364, 365
Hain S.S. Co., Ltd. v. Tate & Lyle, Ltd., [1936] 2 All E.R. 597; 155 L.T. 177; 55 Lloyd L.R. 159; Digest Supp.	260, 261, 262
Hall of Arts and Sciences Corp. v. Hall, (1934), 51 R.P.C. 398	846, 851
Hammersmith and City Ry. Co. v. Brand, (1869), L.R. 4 H.L. 171; 38 L.J.Q.B. 265; 21 L.T. 238; 34 J.P. 36; 42 Digest 655, 638	277, 279
Hanson, Re , Hanson v. Eastwood, [1928] 1 Ch. 96; 97 L.J.Ch. 86; 138 L.T. 462; 40 Digest 753, 2828	328, 329
Hardy v. Fothergill, (1888), 13 App. Cas. 351; sub nom. , Morgan v. Hardy, 35 W.R. 588 (C.A. only); 31 Digest 328-9, 4709	754, 757
Harman v. Butt, [1944] 1 All E.R. 558; [1944] K.B. 491; 114 L.J.K.B. 99; 170 L.T. 355; 108 J.P. 229; Digest Supp.	681, 683
Harriman v. Harriman, [1909] P. 123; 78 L.J.P. 62; 100 L.T. 557; 73 J.P. 193; 27 Digest 321, 2995	69, 70, 578, 584
Harris v. Associated Portland Cement Manufacturers, Ltd., [1938] 4 All E.R. 831; [1939] A.C. 71; 108 L.J.K.B. 145; 160 L.T. 187; 31 B.W.C.C. 434; Digest Supp.	98, 99

	PAGE
Harris v. Taylor, [1915] 2 K.B. 580; 84 L.J.K.B. 1839; 113 L.T. 221; 11 Digest 449, 1072	623, 624, 626
Harrison v. Rutland (Duke), [1893] 1 Q.B. 142; 62 L.J.Q.B. 117; 68 L.T. 35; 57 J.P.	566
278; 26 Digest 317, 491	602, 603
Harte v. Frampton, [1947] 2 All E.R. 604
Haskins v. Lewis, [1931] 2 K.B. 1; 100 L.J.K.B. 180; 144 L.T. 378; 95 J.P. 57; Digest	2, 4, 5
Supp.
Haven Gold Mining Co., Re , (1882), 20 Ch.D. 151; 51 L.J.Ch. 242; 46 L.T. 322; 10 Digest	105, 109
822, 3359
Hawker v. Doncaster Amalgamated Collieries, Ltd., [1938] 4 All E.R. 577; 160 L.T. 31;	98, 100
31 B.W.C.C. 472; Digest Supp.
Hay (or Bourhill) v. Young, [1942] 2 All E.R. 396; [1943] A.C. 92; 111 L.J.P.C. 97; 167	565, 566, 567, 568
L.T. 261; Digest Supp.	264, 266
Haynes v. Harwood, [1935] 1 K.B. 146; 104 L.J.K.B. 63; 152 L.T. 121; Digest Supp.
Heap v. Ind Coope & Allsop, Ltd., [1940] 3 All E.R. 634; [1940] 2 K.B. 476; 109 L.J.K.B.	197, 198
724; 163 L.T. 169; Digest Supp.	170, 180
Heaphy, Re , (1888), 22 L.R.Ir. 500
Hecla Foundry Co. v. Walker, Hunter & Co., (1889), 14 App. Cas. 550; 59 L.J.P.C. 46;	242, 248
61 L.T. 738; 6 R.P.C. 554; 43 Digest 258, 970
Hedderwick, Re , Morten v. Brinsley, [1933] 1 Ch. 669; 102 L.J.Ch. 193; 149 L.T. 188;	71, 72
Digest Supp.	777, 780
Hedges v. Harpur, (1846), 9 Beav. 479	256, 258
Henderson v. Henderson, (1843), 3 Hare 100; 1 L.T.O.S. 410; 21 Digest 174, 276	125, 130, 132
Hendry v. Walker, (1927), S.L.T. 333; Digest Supp.	63, 65
Henthorn v. Fraser, [1892] 2 Ch. 27; 61 L.J.Ch. 373; 66 L.T. 439; 12 Digest 61, 349	837, 838
Heritage v. Claxon, (1941), 85 Sol. Jo. 323; Digest Supp.
Herod v. Herod, [1938] 2 All E.R. 722; [1939] P. 11; 108 L.J.P. 27; 159 L.T. 530; Digest	578, 579
Supp.
Hewlin v. Shippam, (1826), 5 B. & C. 221; 7 Dow. & Ry. K.B. 783; 4 L.J.O.S.K.B. 241;	332, 338
19 Digest 7, 2
Heyman v. Darwins, Ltd., [1942] 1 All E.R. 337; [1942] A.C. 356; 111 L.J.K.B. 241; 166	260, 261, 262, 263
L.T. 306; Digest Supp.
Hickman v. Peacey, [1945] 2 All E.R. 215; [1945] A.C. 304; 114 L.J.Ch. 225; 173 L.T. 89;	418, 420
Digest Supp.	351, 355
Highgate, The, (1890), 62 L.T. 841; 6 Asp. M.L.C. 512; 41 Digest 749, 6010	381, 382
Higgs v. Higgs, [1935] P. 28; 104 L.J.P. 1; 152 L.T. 24; 98 J.P. 443; Digest Supp.	793
Hill v. Hill, [1916] W.N. 59; 27 Digest 260, 2291
Hirji Mulji v. Cheong Yue S.S. Co., [1926] A.C. 497; 95 L.J.P.C. 121; 134 L.T. 737;	666, 669
Digest Supp.	440, 442
Holt v. Catterall, (1931), 47 T.L.R. 332; Digest Supp.
Hood, Re , Public Trustee v. Hood, [1931] 1 Ch. 240; 100 L.J.Ch. 115; 143 L.T. 691; Digest	218, 225, 227, 232, 240
Supp.
Hood v. Anchor Line (Henderson Brothers), [1918] A.C. 837; 87 L.J.P.C. 156; 119 L.T.	542, 547
684; 8 Digest 104, 695	666, 668, 669
Horlock v. Beal, [1916] 1 A.C. 486; 85 L.J.K.B. 602; 114 L.T. 193; 12 Digest 384, 3166
Horton v. Horton, [1940] 3 All E.R. 380; [1940] P. 187; 109 L.J.P. 108; 163 L.T. 314;	529, 532
Digest Supp.	607, 608
Houston v. Burns, [1918] A.C. 337; 87 L.J.P.C. 99; 118 L.T. 462; 8 Digest 297, 739
Howe v. Dartmouth (Earl), Howe v. Aylesbury (Countess), (1802), 7 Ves. 137; 40 Digest	213, 214
672, 2090	828, 829
Howe v. Smale, (1888), 5 T.L.R. 24; 5 Digest 1039, 8492
Howell, Re , Re Buckingham, Liggins v. Buckingham, [1915] 1 Ch. 241; 84 L.J.Ch. 209;	522, 524
112 L.T. 188; 43 Digest 593, 426	422, 428
Howley, Re , Naughton v. Hegarty, [1940] I.R. 109; Digest Supp.
Hoystead v. Commissioner of Taxation, [1926] A.C. 155; 94 L.J.P.C. 79; 134 L.T. 354;	256, 258
Digest Supp.
Huddersfield Police Authority v. Watson, [1947] 2 All E.R. 193; [1947] K.B. 842; 177	706, 708
L.T. 114	706, 708
Hughes v. Lancaster Steam Coal Collieries, Ltd., [1947] 2 All E.R. 556; 177 L.T. 313	270, 271, 272
Hughes v. Wavertree Local Board, (1894), 58 J.P. 654; 33 Digest 414, 1241
Hummeltenberg, Re , Beatty v. London Spiritualistic Alliance, [1923] 1 Ch. 237; 92 L.J.Ch.	236, 238
326; 129 L.T. 124; Digest Supp.	201, 210
Hunt's Estate, Re , [1884] W.N. 181; 11 Digest 248, 1478
Hurst v. Picture Theatres, Ltd., [1915] 1 K.B. 1; 83 L.J.K.B. 1837; 111 L.T. 972; 30	332, 335, 336, 339, 343, 384, 390
Digest 513, 1682; 42 Digest 905, 23
Hutter v. Hutter (otherwise Perry), [1944] 2 All E.R. 368; [1944] P. 95; 113 L.J.P. 78;	113, 118
171 L.T. 241; Digest Supp.
Huxtable, In Re , Huxtable v. Crawford, [1902] 2 Ch. 793; 71 L.J.Ch. 876; 87 L.T. 415;	522, 528
8 Digest 304, 832
Hyde v. Hyde and Woodmansee, (1866), L.R. 1 P. & D. 130; 35 L.J.P. & M. 57; 14 L.T.	677, 678, 886, 890
188; 11 Digest 413, 800
Imperial Land Co. of Marseilles, Re , Harris' Case, (1872), 7 Ch. App. 587; 41 L.J.Ch. 621;	63, 65, 68
26 L.T. 781; 12 Digest 76, 440
Income Tax Special Purposes Comrs. v. Pemsel, [1891] A.C. 531; 61 L.J.Q.B. 265; 65
L.T. 621; 55 J.P. 805; 3 Tax Cas. 53; 8 Digest 241, 1	217, 220, 226, 232, 233, 239, 422, 426, 607, 608
Inland Revenue v. Dickson's Executors, [1928] 14 Tax Cas. 69; 1928 S.C. 752	799, 803
Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Auld Pemberton & Co., Ltd., [1919] 2 I.R. 66	799, 808
Inland Revenue Comrs. v. British Salmson Aero Engines, Ltd., British Salmson Aero
Engines, Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1938] 3 All E.R. 283; [1938] 2 K.B. 482;	454, 457, 458
107 L.J.K.B. 648; 159 L.T. 147; 22 Tax Cas. 29; Digest Supp.
Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Desoutter Bros., Ltd., [1946] 1 All E.R. 58; 174 L.T. 162	409, 410, 411, 412, 413, 414
Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Eccentric Club, [1924] 1 K.B. 390	878
Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Falkirk Temperance Cafe Trust, 1927 S.C. 261; 11 Tax Cas. 353;
Digest Supp.	218, 240
Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Gas Lighting Improvement Co., Ltd., (1923), 129 L.T. 481; 12 Tax
Cas. 503, H.L.; Digest Supp.	144, 148, 149
Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Gribble, [1913] 3 K.B. 212; 82 L.J.K.B. 900; 108 L.T. 887;
42 Digest 735, 1532	672, 674, 676
Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Imperial Tobacco Co. (of Great Britain & Ireland), Ltd., [1940]
3 All E.R. 248; [1940] 2 K.B. 287; 109 L.J.K.B. 737; 163 L.T. 810; Digest Supp.	144, 148

	PAGE
Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Mackinlay's Trustees, 1938, S.C. 765; 22 Tax Cas. 305; Digest Supp.	659, 660, 665
Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Payne, (1941), 110 L.J.K.B. 323; 23 Tax Cas. 610; Digest Supp.	150, 153, 154, 155, 157
Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Rolls-Royce, Ltd., [1944] 2 All E.R. 340; 171 L.T. 238; Digest Supp.	410, 411
Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Sangster, [1920] 1 K.B. 587; 89 L.J.K.B. 673; 122 L.T. 374; 12 Tax Cas. 208; Digest Supp.	410, 413
Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Temperance Council of Christian Churches of England and Wales (1926), 136 L.T. 27; 10 Tax Cas. 748; Digest Supp.	218, 225, 227, 232, 240
Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Warnes & Co., [1919] 2 K.B. 444; 89 L.J.K.B. 6; 121 L.T. 125; 12 Tax Cas. 227; 23 Digest 46, 235	141, 143
Ionides v. Universal Marine Insurance Co., (1863), 14 C.B.N.S. 259; 2 New Rep. 123; 32 L.J.P.C. 170; 8 L.T. 705; 29 Digest 229, 1354	587, 591, 596, 597
J. (otherwise S.) v. J., [1946] 2 All E.R. 760; Digest Supp.	886, 891
Jaber Elias Kotia v. Katr Bint Jiryes Nahas, [1941] 3 All E.R. 20; [1941] A.C. 403; 165 L.T. 401; Digest Supp.	855, 858
James v. Vane (Lord), (1860), 2 E. & E. 883; 29 L.J.Q.B. 169; 2 L.T. 281; 12 Digest 327, 2726	8, 12
James Smith & Sons (Norwood), Ltd. v. Goodman, [1936] Ch. 216; 105 L.J.Ch. 70; 154 L.T. 113; [1934-5] B. & C.R. 283; Digest Supp.	480, 487
Janson v. Brown, (1807), 1 Camp. 41; 2 Digest 214, 100	730, 732, 733, 734
Jenkins v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1944] 2 All E.R. 491; 171 L.T. 355; 26 Tax Cas. 265; Digest Supp.; aff., [1944] 2 All E.R. 160	150, 157, 158
Jenkins Productions, Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1944] 1 All E.R. 610; 170 L.T. 292; Digest Supp.	799, 803
Johnson v. Clay, (1817), 7 Taunt. 486; 1 Moore, C.P. 200; 12 Digest 319, 2634	8, 12
Johnson v. Johnson, [1900] P. 19; 69 L.J.P. 13; 81 L.T. 791; 64 J.P. 72; 27 Digest 567, 6252	74, 77
Johnson v. Pritchard, (1933), 97 J.P. Jo. 754; 176 L.T. Jo. 389; Digest Supp.	271, 272, 273
Johnson v. Taylor Brothers & Co., Ltd., [1920] A.C. 144; 89 L.J.K.B. 227; 122 L.T. 130; 39 Digest 660, 2515	787, 788
Johnson v. Upham, (1859), 2 E. & E. 250; 28 L.J.Q.B. 252; 33 L.T.O.S. 327; 18 Digest 326, 605	8, 12
Johnstone v. Johnstone, [1929] P. 165; 98 L.J.P. 76; 140 L.T. 451; Digest Supp.	121, 123
Jones, Re, Jones v. Jones, [1942] 1 All E.R. 642; [1942] Ch. 328; 111 L.J.Ch. 193; 167 L.T. 84; Digest Supp.	522, 528
Jones v. Amalgamated Anthracite Collieries, Ltd., [1944] 1 All E.R. 1; [1944] A.C. 14; 113 L.J.K.B. 49; 170 L.T. 78; 36 B.W.C.C. 195; Digest Supp. 461, 462, 463, 464, 465, 884, 885	799, 804
Jones v. Curling, (1884), 13 Q.B.D. 262; 53 L.J.Q.B. 373; 50 L.T. 349; 38 Digest 788, 1201	51, 52
Jones v. Jones, (1929), 98 L.J.P. 74; 140 L.T. 647; Digest Supp.	713, 714, 715
Jones (A.) v. Jones (D. L.), (1929), 142 L.T. 167; 94 J.P. 30; Digest Supp.	666, 669
Joseph Constantine S.S. Line, Ltd. v. Imperial Smelting Corp., Ltd., [1941] 2 All E.R. 165; [1942] A.C. 154; 110 L.J.K.B. 433; 165 L.T. 27; Digest Supp.	422, 423, 430
Joy, Re, Purday v. Johnson, (1888), 60 L.T. 175; 8 Digest 309, 398	828, 829
Judgment Debtor, Re A, [1935] W.N. 128; Digest Supp.
Keen, Re, Evershed v. Griffiths, [1937] Ch. 236; [1937] 1 All E.R. 452; 106 L.J.Ch. 177; 156 L.T. 207; Digest Supp.	522, 527
Keeves v. Dean, Nunn v. Pellegrini, [1924] 1 K.B. 685; 93 L.J.K.B. 203; 130 L.T. 593; 31 Digest 576, 7254	2, 3
Keppel v. Wheeler, [1927] 1 K.B. 577; 96 L.J.K.B. 433; 136 L.T. 203; Digest Supp.	63, 66, 68, 865, 868, 869
Keren Kayemeth Le Jisroel, Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1931] 2 K.B. 465; 100 L.J.K.B. 596; 145 L.T. 320; on appeal, [1932] A.C. 650; Digest Supp.	422, 423, 431
Kerr v. Glasgow Corp., 1946 S.C. 335; Digest Supp.	346, 348
Kerr v. Kerr, [1897] 2 Q.B. 439; 66 L.J.Q.B. 838; 77 L.T. 29; 4 Digest 300, 2811	71, 72
Kerrison v. Smith, [1897] 2 Q.B. 445; 66 L.J.Q.B. 762; 77 L.T. 344; 30 Digest 512, 1675	332, 336, 339
Kestos, Ltd. v. Kempat, Ltd. and Vivian Fitch Kemp, Re Kestos, Ltd. Registered Design (No. 725,716), (1935), 53 R.P.C. 139; Digest Supp.	241, 242, 245
Key v. Key, (1853), 4 De G.M. & G. 73; 1 Eq. Rep. 82; 22 L.J.Ch. 641; 22 L.T.O.S. 67; 44 Digest 1279, 11070	709, 711
King v. King, [1943] 2 All E.R. 253; [1943] P. 91; 112 L.J.P. 89; 169 L.T. 251; Digest Supp.	121, 123
Kirk v. Gregory, (1876), 1 Ex.D. 55; 45 L.J.Q.B. 186; 34 L.T. 488; 43 Digest 428, 527	730, 732
Kirk v. Kirk, [1947] 2 All E.R. 118	381, 382
Kitson & Co., Ltd., Re, [1946] 1 All E.R. 435; 175 L.T. 25	105, 110
L. v. L., 1931 S.C. 477; [1931] S.L.T. 256; Digest Supp.	43, 44
L. v. L. (otherwise D.), (1922), 38 T.L.R. 697; 27 Digest 267, 2357	886, 891
Laceyby v. Lacon & Co., [1899] A.C. 222; 68 L.J.Q.B. 480; 80 L.T. 473; 63 J.P. 371; 37 Digest 37, 293	694, 698
Ladies' Hosiery & Underwear, Ltd. v. Parker, [1930] 1 Ch. 304; 99 L.J.Ch. 201; 142 L.T. 299; Digest Supp.	140
Ladies' Hosiery & Underwear, Ltd. v. West Middlesex Assessment Committee, [1932] 2 K.B. 679; 101 L.J.K.B. 632; 147 L.T. 390; 96 J.P. 336; Digest Supp.	878
Laing v. Middlesex County Council & Wembley Corporation (unrep. Feb. 3, 1947)	758, 760
Lalor v. Bland, (1858), 8 I.C.L.R. 115	170, 180
Lamert v. Heath, (1846), 15 M. & W. 486; 4 Ry. & Can. Cas. 302; 7 L.T.O.S. 186; sub nom., Lambert v. Heath, 15 L.J.Ex. 297; 42 Digest 796, 52	443, 454
Landa v. Greenberg, (1908), 24 T.L.R. 441; 43 Digest 265, 1022	517, 519, 520
Lander v. British United Shoe Machinery Co., Ltd., (1933), 102 L.J.K.B. 768; 149 L.T. 395; 26 B.W.C.C. 411; Digest Supp.	706, 708
Lane v. Cox, [1897] 1 Q.B. 415; 66 L.J.Q.B. 193; 76 L.T. 135; 31 Digest 347, 4896	197, 198
Lane v. Rendall, [1899] 2 Q.B. 673; 33 Digest 411, 1214	271
Langworthy v. Langworthy, (1886), 11 P.D. 85; 55 L.J.P. 33; 54 L.T. 776; 27 Digest 552, 6057	51, 57
Lamphier v. Buck, (1865), 2 Drew. & Sm. 484; 34 L.J.Ch. 650; 12 L.T. 660; 44 Digest 1230, 10641; sub nom., Lamphier v. Buck, 6 New Rep. 196	686, 689
Larrinaga & Co. v. Societe Franco-Americaine des Phosphates de Medulla, Paris, (1923), 92 L.J.K.B. 455; 129 L.T. 65; 12 Digest 389, 3189	666, 669

	PAGE
Le Mesurier v. Le Mesurier, [1895] A.C. 517; 64 L.J.P.C. 97; 72 L.T. 873; 11 Digest 422, 885	113, 116
Lechmere v. Carlisle (Earl), (1733), 3 P. Wms. 211; affd. , sub nom. Lechmere v. Lechmere (Lady), (1735), Cas. temp. Talb. 80; 20 Digest 349, 878	716, 718
Leeds' Will Trusts, Re Duke of Leeds (Duke) v. Davenport, [1947] 2 All E.R. 200	213, 214
Leyland Shipping Co. v. Norwich Union Fire Insurance Society, [1918] A.C. 350; 87 L.J.K.B. 395; 118 L.T. 120; 29 Digest 229, 1858	587, 592, 597
Lievesley v. Gilmore, (1866), L.R. 1 C.P. 570; Har. & Ruth, 849; 35 L.J.C.P. 351; 15 L.T. 386; 2 Digest 314, 14	328, 330
Lilley v. Doubleday, (1881), 7 Q.B.D. 510; 51 L.J.Q.B. 310; 44 L.T. 814; 46 J.P. 708; 3 Digest 77, 163	260, 261, 262
Linton, Re, Linton v. Linton, (1885), 15 Q.B.D. 239; 54 L.J.Q.B. 529; 52 L.T. 782; 49 J.P. 597; 4 Digest 300, 2815	71, 72, 73
Lister v. Lane and Nesham, [1893] 2 Q.B. 212; 62 L.J.Q.B. 583; 69 L.T. 176; 57 J.P. 725; 31 Digest 328, 4700	761
Llanelli Ry. & Dock Co. v. London & North Western Ry. Co., (1875), L.R. 7 H.L. 550; 45 L.J.Ch. 539; 32 L.T. 575; affg. , (1873), 8 Ch. App. 942	332, 335, 337, 339, 343
Lloyd v. Lloyd and Hill, [1947] 1 All E.R. 383	326
Local Government Board v. Arlidge, [1915] A.C. 120; 84 L.J.K.B. 72; 111 L.T. 905; 79 J.P. 97; 38 Digest 217, 518	395, 396, 401
Lockett v. Norman-Wright, [1925] Ch. 56; 94 L.J.Ch. 123; 132 L.T. 532; Digest Supp. 63, 67, 865, 870
London and North Eastern Ry. Co. v. Brentnall, [1933] A.C. 489; 102 L.J.K.B. 435; 148 L.T. 530; sub nom. Brentnall v. London and North Eastern Ry. Co., 26 B.W.C.C. 225; Digest Supp.	794, 797
London & South Western Ry. Co. v. Gomm, (1882), 20 Ch.D. 562; 51 L.J.Ch. 530; 46 L.T. 449; 30 W.R. 620, C.A.; 37 Digest 79, 80, 195	641, 643, 644
London University v. Yarrow, (1857), 1 De. G. & J. 72; 26 L.J.Ch. 430; 29 L.T.O.S. 172; 21 J.P. 596; 8 Digest 258, 200	218, 222, 234
Longbottom v. Longbottom, (1852), 8 Exch. 203; 22 L.J.Ex. 74; 17 J.P. 169; 13 Digest 544, 993	170, 174
Lotinga v. North Eastern Marine Engineering Co., (1938) Ltd., [1941] 3 All E.R. 1; [1941] 2 K.B. 399; 111 L.J.K.B. 65; 106 J.P. 1; Digest Supp.	39, 41
Lovibond (John) & Sons, Ltd. v. Vincent, [1929] 1 K.B. 687; 98 L.J.K.B. 402; 141 L.T. 116; 93 J.P. 161; Digest Supp.	2, 3
Lowe v. Adams, [1901] 2 Ch. 598; 70 L.J.Ch. 783; 85 L.T. 195; 30 Digest 514, 1696	333, 342
Lowe & Sons, Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Comrs., (1938), 21 Tax Cas. 597	650, 651, 652
Lowther v. Clifford, [1927] 1 K.B. 130; 95 L.J.K.B. 576; 135 L.T. 200; Digest Supp.	125, 132
Luccioni v. Luccioni, [1943] 1 All E.R. 384; [1943] P. 49; 112 L.J.P. 51; 168 L.T. 263; affg. , [1943] 1 All E.R. 260; Digest Supp.	852, 853
Luxor (Eastbourne), Ltd. v. Cooper, [1941] 1 All E.R. 33; [1941] A.C. 108; 110 L.J.K.B. 131; 164 L.T. 313; Digest Supp.	333, 344
Lyon v. Taylor Bros., (1928), 21 B.W.C.C. 415; Digest Supp.	461, 463
Lysons v. Knowles (Andrew) & Sons, Ltd., Stuart v. Nixon & Bruce, [1901] A.C. 70; 70 L.J.K.B. 170; 84 L.T. 65; 65 J.P. 388; 34 Digest 423, 3433	133
M. v. M., [1945] 2 All E.R. 525; [1946] P. 31; 115 L.J.P. 29; 173 L.T. 305; Digest Supp.	51, 52, 53
M'Alister (or Donoghue) v. Stevenson, [1932] A.C. 562; 101 L.J.P.C. 119; 147 L.T. 281; Digest Supp.	466, 467
MacAndrew v. Inland Revenue Comrs., (1943), 25 Tax Cas. 500; Digest Supp.	150, 156, 158
Macdonnell v. Knight, (1890), 25 Q.B.D. 1; 59 L.J.Q.B. 517; 63 L.T. 43; 54 J.P. 788; 21 Digest 205, 473	256
Macduff, Re, Macduff v. Macduff, [1896] 2 Ch. 451; 65 L.J.Ch. 700; 74 L.T. 706; 8 Digest 296, 731	218, 220, 233, 422, 425, 427
Mackay v. Dick, (1881), 6 App. Cas. 251; 30 Digest 610, 5045	333, 342
Mackenzie v. Mackenzie, [1940] 1 All E.R. 256; [1940] P. 81; 109 L.J.P. 9; 162 L.T. 228; 104 J.P. 126; Digest Supp.	69, 70, 71
Mackonochie v. Penzance (Lord), (1881), 6 App. Cas. 424; 50 L.J.Q.B. 611; 44 L.T. 479; 45 J.P. 584; 19 Digest 224, 16	170, 174, 180
M'Lean v. Bell, 1932 S.C. (H.L.) 21	351, 359
MacLeod v. A.-G. for New South Wales, [1891] A.C. 455; 60 L.J.P.C. 55; 65 L.T. 321; 17 Digest 425, 66	551, 554
M'Naghten's Case, (1843), 10 Cl. & Fin. 200; sub nom. McNaughton's Case, 4 State Tr. N.S. 847; 1 Town St. Tr. 314; 1 Car. & Kir. 130, n.; sub nom. , Insane Criminals, 8 Scott, N.R. 595	529, 531, 532
McNamee v. Mansfield, [1945] I.R. 13; Digest Supp.	422, 428
McPherson v. McPherson, [1936] A.C. 177; 105 L.J.P.C. 41; 154 L.T. 221; Digest Supp.	654, 655
McQueen v. McQueen, [1920] 2 Sc. L.T. 405	118, 119, 623, 627
Maguire v. A.-G., [1943] I.R. 238; Digest Supp.	422, 428
Manners v. Manners and Fortescue, [1936] 1 All E.R. 41; [1936] P. 117; 105 L.J.P. 26; 154 L.T. 271; Digest Supp.	578, 583
Margaret, The, (1884), 9 P.D. 47; 53 L.J.P. 17; 50 L.T. 447; on appeal, sub nom. , Cayzer v. Carron Co., 9 App. Cas. 873; 41 Digest 764, 6170	351, 357, 359
Marlborough (Duke) v. Attorney-General (No. 2), [1945] Ch. 145; Digest Supp.	135, 138
Marsh v. Means, (1857), 30 L.T.O.S. 89; 21 J.P. 725; 8 Digest 312, 933	218, 234
Marshall v. Glanville, [1917] 2 K.B. 87; 86 L.J.K.B. 767; 116 L.T. 560; 12 Digest 300, 2468	666, 671
Mason v. Ogden, [1903] A.C. 1; 72 L.J.Ch. 152; 87 L.T. 622; affg. , S.C. sub nom. Re Mason, Ogden v. Mason, [1901] 1 Ch. 619; 44 Digest 420, 2510	855, 863
Massey v. Haynes, (1888), 21 Q.B.D. 330; 57 L.J.Q.B. 468; 59 L.T. 470; Digest Practice 356, 701	364, 365
Masson Tempplier & Co. v. De Fries, [1910] 1 K.B. 535; 79 L.J.K.B. 392; 102 L.T. 155	61
Matthews v. Smallwood, [1910] 1 Ch. 777; 79 L.J.Ch. 322; 102 L.T. 228; 31 Digest 379, 5251	2, 6
Mellor, Re, Alvarez v. Dodgson, [1922] 1 Ch. 312; 91 L.J.Ch. 393; 126 L.T. 562; 43 Digest 791, 2289	163, 168
Mellor v. Daintree, [1866], 33 Ch.D. 198; 56 L.J.Ch. 33; 55 L.T. 175; 44 Digest 1184, 10244	709, 711
Mellor v. Watkins, (1874), L.R. 9 Q.B. 400; 30 Digest 513, 1686	332, 338
Mersey Docks & Harbour Board v. Cameron, Jones v. Mersey Docks, (1865), 11 H.L. Cas. 443; 20 C.B.N.S. 56; 6 New Rep. 378; 35 L.J.M.C. 1; 12 L.T. 643; 29 J.P. 483; 38 Digest 466, 286	376, 377
Mersey Docks & Harbour Board v. Coggins & Griffiths (Liverpool), Ltd., and McFarlane, [1946] 2 All E.R. 345; 175 L.T. 270; affg. , S.C., sub nom. , McFarlane v. Coggins & Griffiths (Liverpool), Ltd., [1945] K.B. 301; Digest Supp.	542, 543, 544, 545
Mersey Steel & Iron Co. v. Naylor, Benzon & Co., (1884), 9 App. Cas. 434; 53 L.J.Q.B. 497; 51 L.T. 637; 12 Digest 339, 2335	630, 631, 634

Metcalf v. London Passenger Transport Board, [1939] 2 All E.R. 542; 108 L.J.K.B. 733; 160 L.T. 599; 103 J.P. 246; Digest Supp.	267, 268, 346, 349
Metropolitan Water Board v. Dick, Kerr & Co., [1918] A.C. 119; 87 L.J.K.B. 370; 117 L.T. 766; 82 J.P. 61; 12 Digest 399, 3233	666, 671
Mezger v. Mezger, [1936] 3 All E.R. 130; [1937] P. 19; 106 L.J.P. 1; 155 L.T. 491; 100 J.P. 475; Digest Supp.	118, 119, 120
Michael v. Phillips, [1924] 1 K.B. 16; 93 L.J.K.B. 21; 130 L.T. 142; 31 Digest 568, 7155	15, 18
Miles v. Hutchings, [1903] 2 K.B. 714; 72 L.J.K.B. 775; 89 L.T. 420; 2 Digest 216, 116	610, 611, 730, 733
Miller v. Glasgow Corp., [1947] 1 All E.R. 1; [1947] L.J.R. 239; 176 L.T. 142; aff. 1946 S.C. 109	84, 86, 267, 268, 346, 347, 348, 349, 350
Miller v. Minister of Health, [1946] K.B. 626; [1947] L.J.R. 146	395, 396, 403, 404
Miller v. Minister of Pensions, [1947] 2 All E.R. 372	432, 434, 435
Mills v. Jones, (1929), 142 L.T. 337; 14 Tax Cas. 769; Digest Supp.	454, 457
Mills v. Mills, [1940] 2 All E.R. 254; [1940] P. 124; 109 L.J.P. 86; 163 L.T. 272; Digest Supp.	381, 382
Mills v. Rose, [1923] W.N. 330; 68 Sol. Jo. 420; Digest Supp.	125, 130, 131, 132
Minister of Health v. Bellotti, [1944] 1 All E.R. 238; [1944] 1 K.B. 298; 113 L.J.K.B. 436; 170 L.T. 146; Digest Supp.	333, 339
Minister of Pensions v. Chennell, [1946] 2 All E.R. 719; [1947] K.B. 250; [1947] L.J.R. 700; 176 L.T. 164	93, 94, 95, 706, 708
Minister of Pensions v. French, [1946] 1 All E.R. 272; [1946] K.B. 260; 115 L.J.K.B. 267; 174 L.T. 238	436, 437
Minister of Supply v. British Thomson-Houston Co., Ltd., [1943] 1 All E.R. 615; [1943] K.B. 478; 112 L.J.K.B. 520; 168 L.T. 389; Digest Supp.	363, 364, 368, 369
Moore v. Gamgee, (1890), 25 Q.B.D. 244; 59 L.J.Q.B. 505; 16 Digest 122, 202	25, 26
Moore v. Palmer, (1886), 2 T.L.R. 781; 51 J.P. 196; 34 Digest 26, 47	542, 544
Morgan, Re , Morgan v. Morgan, [1893] 3 Ch. 222; 62 L.J.Ch. 789; 69 L.T. 407; 39 Digest 137, 310	777, 781
Morgan v. Vale of Neath Railway Co., (1865), L.R. 1 Q.B. 149; 5 B. & S. 736; 35 L.J.Q.B. 23; 13 L.T. 564; 30 J.P. 36; 34 Digest 212, 1750	84, 85, 267
Morice v. Durham (Bp.), (1805), 10 Ves. 522; 8 Digest 293, 705	217, 219, 233
Morley v. Tattersall, [1938] 3 All E.R. 296; 159 L.T. 197; 22 Tax Cas. 51; Digest Supp.	762, 763, 764, 765, 766
Morris v. Morris, Morris and Manning (King's Proctor Showing Cause), [1947] 2 All E.R. 377	617, 618
Morris v. Nugent, (1836), 7 C. & P. 572; 2 Digest 214, 93	730, 732, 733
Mulcahy v. R., (1868), L.R. 3 H.L. 306; 42 Digest 983, 137	256, 259
Multipar Syndicate, Ltd. v. Devitt, [1945] 1 All E.R. 298; 173 L.T. 84; 26 Tax Cas. 359; Digest Supp.	660, 665
Munster & Leinster Bank v. A.-G., [1940] I.R. 19; Digest Supp.	422, 427
Nachimson v. Nachimson, [1930] P. 217; 99 L.J.P. 104; 143 L.T. 254; 94 J.P. 211; Digest Supp.	677, 679
Napier v. Napier, [1915] P. 184; 84 L.J.P. 177; 113 L.T. 764; 27 Digest 268, 2370	886, 889
Nash v. Nash, [1940] 1 All E.R. 206; [1940] P. 60; 109 L.J.P. 60; 164 L.T. 48; Digest Supp.	43, 44, 45
National Anti-Vivisection Society v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1947] 2 All E.R. 217; [1947] L.J.R. 1112; 177 L.T. 226	607, 608
Netherlands American Steam Navigation Co. v. Procurator General, [1926] 1 K.B. 84; 95 L.J.K.B. 227; 134 L.T. 233; 37 Digest 649, 1014	476, 477
Nethersole v. Withers (Inspector of Taxes), [1946] 1 All E.R. 711; 175 L.T. 108	454, 457
Newbould v. A.-G., [1931] P. 75; 100 L.J.P. 54; 144 L.T. 728; Digest Supp.	113, 114
Niboyet v. Niboyet, (1878), 4 P.D. 1; 48 L.J.P. 1; 39 L.T. 486; 43 J.P. 140; 11 Digest 423, 894	113, 116
Noble v. Southern Ry. Co., [1940] 2 All E.R. 383; [1940] A.C. 583; 109 L.J.K.B. 509; 33 B.W.C.C. 176; Digest Supp.	98, 99
Norman v. Simpson, [1946] 1 All E.R. 74; [1946] 1 K.B. 158; 115 L.J.K.B. 107; 174 L.T. 279	1, 2, 4
Norris v. Norris, Lawson & Mason, (1865), 4 Sw. & Tr. 237; 30 L.J.P.M. & A. 111; 27 Digest 346, 3270	326
Norton, Re , Pinney v. Beauchamp, [1929] 1 Ch. 84; 98 L.J.Ch. 219; 140 L.T. 348; Digest Supp.	328, 329
Oates v. Fitzwilliam's (Earl) Collieries Co., [1939] 2 All E.R. 498; 32 B.W.C.C. 82; Digest Supp.	557, 559
O'Hanlon v. Logue, [1906] 1 I.R. 247; 8 Digest 251, a	423, 429, 431
Olive v. Paynter, [1932] 2 K.B. 666; 101 L.J.K.B. 786; 148 L.T. 65; 90 J.P. 113; Digest Supp.	125, 132
Orduna (Owners) v. Shipping Controller, [1921] 1 A.C. 250; sub nom. , Orduna (Owners) v. Shipping Controller, The Orduna, 90 L.J.P. 67; 41 Digest 741, 5925	351, 355
Orr Ewing, Re , Orr Ewing v. Orr Ewing, (1882), 22 Ch.D. 456; 52 L.J.Ch. 529; 48 L.T. 555; on appeal , sub nom. , Ewing v. Orr Ewing, (1883), 9 App. Cas. 34; Digest Practice 381, 388	25, 26
Ottaway v. Hamilton, (1878), 3 C.P.D. 393; 47 L.J.Q.B. 725; 38 L.T. 925; 42 J.P. 660; 27 Digest 207, 1796	121, 123
Owens v. Scott & Sons (Bakers), Ltd. and Wastall, [1939] 3 All E.R. 663; Digest Supp.	197, 199
Page v. Liverpool Victoria Friendly Society, (1927), 43 T.L.R. 712; Digest Supp.	29, 33
Panoutsos v. Raymond Hadley Corporation of New York, [1917] 1 K.B. 767; (C.A.), [1917] 2 K.B. 473; 86 L.J.K.B. 1325; 117 L.T. 330; 12 Digest 434, 3516	7, 8, 9
Pargeter v. Pargeter, [1946] 1 All E.R. 570; Digest Supp.	793
Parry, Re , Brown v. Parry, [1946] 2 All E.R. 412; [1947] Ch. 23; [1947] L.J.R. 81; 175 L.T. 395	213, 214
Parry v. Harding, [1925] 1 K.B. 111; 94 L.J.K.B. 37; 132 L.T. 390; 88 J.P. 194; 38 Digest 216, 505	721, 726
Pasmore v. Oswaldtwistle Urban Council, [1898] A.C. 387; 67 L.J.Q.B. 635; 78 L.T. 569; 62 J.P. 628; 16 Digest 302, 1150; 42 Digest 752, 1758	25, 27, 815, 823, 824
Patent Agents Institute v. Lockwood, [1894] A.C. 347; 63 L.J.P.C. 74; 71 L.T. 205; 42 Digest 751, 1755	815, 822
Pearks v. Moseley, Re Moseley's Trusts, (1880), 5 App. Cas. 714; 50 L.J.Ch. 57; 43 L.T. 449; 37 Digest 68, 98	686, 689
Pearson v. Holborn Urban Assessment Committee, [1893] 1 Q.B. 389; 62 L.J.M.C. 77; 68 L.T. 351; 57 J.P. 169; 38 Digest 486, 444	364, 368
Peirce v. London Horse & Carriage Repository, Ltd., [1922] W.N. 170	284, 285

	PAGE
Petrel, The, [1893] P. 320; 62 L.J.P. 92; 70 L.T. 417; 34 Digest 213, 1757	84, 86, 346, 350
Petty v. Petty, [1943] 2 All E.R. 511; [1943] P. 101; 112 L.J.P. 97; 169 L.T. 224; Digest Supp.	578, 579, 583, 584
Phillips v. Britannia Hygienic Laundry Co., [1923] 2 K.B. 832; 93 L.J.K.B. 5; 129 L.T. 777; 42 Digest 870, 197	815, 823
Phillips v. Copping, [1935] 1 K.B. 15; 104 L.J.K.B. 73; 152 L.T. 175; Digest Supp.	15, 17
Phillips v. Edwards, (1864), 33 Beav. 440; 3 New Rep. 658; 12 Digest 170, 1246	63, 66
Phillips v. Minister of Pensions, (1946), unreported	432, 434
Phillips' Trusts, Re, (1868), L.R. 6 Eq. 250; 11 Digest 247, 1476	201, 210
Pianolist Co.'s Application, Re, (1906), 23 R.P.C. 774; 43 Digest 170, 257	55, 58
Pickavance v. Pickavance, [1901] P. 60; 70 L.J.P. 14; 84 L.T. 62; 27 Digest 562, 6182	842, 844
Pochin's Will Trusts, Re, Midland Bank Executor and Trustee Co., Ltd. v. Godkin and Others, (Dec. 14, 1943) (unreported).	773, 775
Polemis & Furness, Withy & Co., Ltd., Re, [1921] 3 K.B. 560; sub nom., Polemis v. Furness, Withy & Co., Ltd., 90 L.J.K.B. 1353; 126 L.T. 154; 41 Digest 419, 2620	260, 261, 264
Polglass v. Oliver, (1831), 2 Cr. & J. 15; 2 Tyr. 89; 1 L.J.Ex. 5; 3 Digest 198, 431	8, 10
Port of London Authority v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1922] 2 K.B. 599; 91 L.J.K.B. 746; 12 Tax Cas. 112; Digest Supp.	799, 805
Powell v. Rawle, (1874), L.R. 18 Eq. 243; 44 Digest 476, 2946	548, 550
Pratt v. Patrick, [1924] 1 K.B. 488; 93 L.J.K.B. 174; 130 L.T. 735; 36 Digest 62, 399	542, 545, 546
Preston v. Iamono, (1876), 1 Ex.D. 361; 45 L.J.Q.B. 797; 35 L.T. 341; 40 J.P. 745; Digest Practice 372, 829	25, 26
Price v. Minister of Health, [1947] 1 All E.R. 47; [1947] L.J.R. 291; 176 L.T. 305	395, 396, 403, 404
Property Holdings Co., Ltd. v. Mischeff, [1946] 2 All E.R. 294; [1946] 1 K.B. 645; 175 L.T. 192	13, 14, 15, 18
Protheroe v. Mathews, (1833), 5 C. & P. 581; 2 Digest 214, 99	730, 732
Pugh, Re, Pugh v. Pugh, [1943] 2 All E.R. 361; [1943] Ch. 387; 112 L.J.Ch. 311; 169 L.T. 284; Digest Supp.	308, 309, 311, 638, 639, 640
Pulsford v. Devenish, [1903] 2 Ch. 625; 73 L.J.Ch. 35; 10 Digest 1000, 6943	480, 487
Queen's Club Gardens Estates, Ltd. v. Bignell, [1924] 1 K.B. 117; 93 L.J.K.B. 107; 130 L.T. 26; 31 Digest 447, 5932	45, 46
R. v. Boaler, (1892), 67 L.T. 354; 56 J.P. 792; 16 Digest 401, 2448	170, 175, 179
R. v. Boaler, (1898), Times, Jan. 25; 16 Digest 403, 2487	170, 176
R. v. Boulton, (1871), 12 Cox, C.C. 87; 14 Digest 122, 930	702, 704
R. v. Burnley JJ., Ex p. Longmore, (1916), 85 L.J.K.B. 1565; 115 L.T. 525; 80 J.P. 382; 42 Digest 921, 161	681, 684
R. v. Chiswick Police Station Superintendent, Ex p. Sacksteder, [1918] 1 K.B. 578; 87 L.J.K.B. 608; 118 L.T. 160; 82 J.P. 137; 2 Digest 196, 553	551, 555
R. v. Cockshott, [1898] 1 Q.B. 532; sub nom., R. v. Cockshott, etc., Southport JJ., Ex p. Rickerby, 67 L.J.Q.B. 467; 78 L.T. 163; 62 J.P. 325; 33 Digest 319, 345	615, 616
R. v. Cridland, (1857), 7 E. & B. 853; 27 L.J.M.C. 28; 29 L.T.O.S. 210; sub nom. R. v. Bacon, R. v. Cridland, 21 J.P. 404; 16 Digest 428, 2883	838, 839
R. v. Electricity Comrs., Ex p. London Electricity Joint Committee Co. (1920), Ltd., [1924] 1 K.B. 171; 93 L.J.K.B. 390; 130 L.T. 164; 88 J.P. 13; Digest Supp.	170, 177, 181
R. v. Essex JJ., Ex p. Perkins, [1927] 2 K.B. 475; 96 L.J.K.B. 530; 137 L.T. 455; 91 J.P. 94; Digest Supp.	290, 296
R. v. Hampstead and St. Pancras Rent Tribunal, Ex p. Ascot Lodge, Ltd., [1947] 2 All E.R. 12	15, 17
R. v. Hobson, (1942), 29 Cr. App. Rep. 30; Digest Supp.	838, 839
R. v. Holland, Lincolnshire JJ., (1882), 46 J.P. 312; 15 Digest 754, 8133	88, 89
R. v. Home Secretary, Ex p. Chateau Thierry (Duke), [1917] 1 K.B. 922; 86 L.J.K.B. 923; 116 L.T. 226; 81 J.P. 125; 2 Digest 196, 552	551, 555
R. v. Horndon-on-the-Hill (Inhabitants), (1816), 4 M. & S. 562; 30 Digest 504, 1628	332, 338
R. v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1918] 1 K.B. 143; sub nom. R. v. Inland Revenue Comrs., Ex p. France (William) Fenwick & Co., Ltd., 87 L.J.K.B. 198; 118 L.T. 162; 16 Digest 309, 1213. Appeal from [1917] 2 K.B. 405.	799, 807, 808
R. v. International Trustee for Protection of Bondholders Aktiengesellschaft, [1937] 2 All E.R. 164; [1937] A.C. 500; 106 L.J.K.B. 236; 156 L.T. 352; Digest Supp.	787
R. v. Kay, (1873), L.R. 8 Q.B. 324; sub nom. R. v. Key, 37 J.P. Jo. 309; 16 Digest 428, 2880	838, 839
R. v. Kensington Income Tax Comrs., [1913] 3 K.B. 870; 83 L.J.K.B. 364; 109 L.T. 708; 6 Tax Cas. 279; on appeal, [1914] 3 K.B. 429; and sub nom., Kensington Income Tax Comrs. v. Aramayo, [1916] 1 A.C. 215; 38 Digest 121, 388	660, 661, 662, 663
R. v. Kingsland Parish, Inspector of Taxes, Ex p. Pearson, Kingsland Estate, R. v. Income Tax Comrs. and Kingsland Parish, Inspector of Taxes, (1922), 8 Tax Cas. 327; 28 Digest 101, 620	660, 662
R. v. Lanyon, (1872), 27 L.T. 355; 3 Digest 403, 364	69, 70
R. v. Leslevy, (1860), Bell C.C. 220; 29 L.J.M.C. 97; 1 L.T. 452; 24 J.P. 115; 11 Digest 413, 799	551, 553
R. v. London School Board, (1886), 17 Q.B.D. 738; 55 L.J.M.C. 169; 55 L.T. 384; 50 J.P. 419; 38 Digest 522, 713	878
R. v. Luberg, (1926), 135 L.T. 414; 90 J.P. 183; 28 Cox, C.C. 264; 19 Cr. App. Rep. 133; Digest Supp.	702, 704
R. v. McMinn, (1945), 109 J.P. 130; 30 Cr. App. Rep. 138; Digest Supp.	535, 536
R. v. Market Bosworth Licensing JJ., (1887), 56 L.J.M.C. 96; 57 L.T. 56; 51 J.P. 438; 30 Digest 36, 286	799, 804
R. v. Middlesex JJ., Ex p. Bond, [1933] 1 K.B. 72; 102 L.J.K.B. 40; 148 L.T. 134; 96 J.P. 487; Digest Supp.	381, 382
R. v. Middlesex JJ., Ex p. Bond, [1933] 2 K.B. 1; 102 L.J.K.B. 432; 148 L.T. 544; 97 J.P. 130; Digest Supp.	74, 77
R. v. Mills, (1844), 10 Cl. & Fin. 534; 27 Digest 43, 222	677, 679
R. v. Parby, (1889), 22 Q.B.D. 520; 58 L.J.M.C. 49; 60 L.T. 422; 53 J.P. 327; 36 Digest 173, 234	537, 539, 540
R. v. Price, (1880), 5 Q.B.D. 300; 49 L.J.M.C. 49; 42 L.T. 439; 44 J.P. 248; 33 Digest 369, 782	274, 275, 276
R. v. Roberts, [1908] 1 K.B. 407; 77 L.J.K.B. 281; 98 L.T. 154; 72 J.P. 81; 33 Digest 40, 217	47, 49
R. v. Rowton, (1865), Le. & Ca. 520; 10 Cox C.C. 25; 5 New Rep. 428; 34 L.J.M.C. 57; 11 L.T. 745; 29 J.P. 149; 14 Digest 289, 3051	415, 416
R. v. St. Pancras Assessment Committee, (1877), 2 Q.B.D. 581; 46 L.J.M.C. 243; sub nom., Willing v. St. Pancras Assessment Committee, 37 L.T. 126; 41 J.P. 662; 38 Digest 423, 5	384, 390

	PAGE
R. v. Shropshire County Court Judge, (1887), 20 Q.B.D. 242; sub nom. , R. v. Rogers, 57 L.J.Q.B. 143; 53 L.T. 86; 16 Digest 122, 203	623, 625
R. v. Slade, Ex p. Saunders, R. v. London J.J., Ex p. Saunders, (1895), 64 L.J.M.C. 273; 72 L.T. 568; 59 J.P. 279; 16 Digest 429, 2885	838, 839
R. v. Snell, Ex p. Marylebone Borough Council, [1942] 1 All E.R. 612; [1942] 2 K.B. 137; 111 L.J.K.B. 530; 167 L.T. 13; 106 J.P. 160; Digest Supp.	320, 321, 322, 323, 324, 720, 721, 722, 725
R. v. Sussex J.J., Ex p. McCarthy, [1924] 1 K.B. 256; 93 L.J.K.B. 129; 83 J.P. 3; sub nom. , R. v. Hurst, Ex p. McCarthy, 130 L.T. 510; 33 Digest 294, 97	290, 296
R. v. Westminster Assessment Committee, Ex p. Grosvenor House (Park Lane), Ltd., [1940] 4 All E.R. 132; [1941] 1 K.B. 53; 104 J.P. 428; Digest Supp.	395, 396, 405, 406
Radcliffe v. Ribbles Motor Services, Ltd., [1939] 1 All E.R. 637; [1939] A.C. 215; 108 L.J.K.B. 320; 160 L.T. 420; Digest Supp.	84, 85, 267, 268, 346, 347, 348, 350, 782, 783, 784, 785
Radley v. L. & N.W. Railway Co., (1876), 1 App. Cas. 754; 46 L.J.Q.B. 573; 35 L.T. 637; 41 J.P. 484; 36 Digest 109, 729	350, 353
Raeburn v. Andrews, (1874), L.R. 9 Q.B. 118; 43 L.J.Q.B. 73; 30 L.T. 15; 22 W.R. 489; Digest Practice, 909, 4502	839, 840, 841
Railway Assessment Authority v. Southern Ry. Co., London County Council v. Southern Ry. Co., [1936] 1 All E.R. 26; [1936] A.C. 266; 105 L.J.K.B. 115; 154 L.T. 314; 100 J.P. 123; affg. S.C. sub nom. Re Southern Ry. Co. Appeals , (1935), 152 L.T. 299; Digest Supp.	794, 798 560, 563
Ramsden, The, [1943] P. 46; 112 L.J.P. 49; 168 L.T. 284; Digest Supp.	290, 296
Ranger v. Great Western Railway Co., (1854), 5 H.L. Cas. 72; 24 L.T.O.S. 22; 2 Digest 400, 580	242, 244, 253
Read & Greswell's Design, Re, (1889), 6 R.P.C. 471; 42 Ch.D. 260; 58 L.J.Ch. 624; 61 L.T. 450; 43 Digest 250, 911	852, 853
Read v. Read, [1942] 1 All E.R. 226; [1942] P. 87; 111 L.J.P. 41; 166 L.T. 153; Digest Supp.	751, 752 105, 109 476, 478
Reckitt v. Barnett, Pembroke & Slater, Ltd., [1929] A.C. 176; 98 L.J.K.B. 136; 140 L.T. 208; Digest Supp.	15, 17
Red Rock Gold Mining Co., Ltd., Re , (1889), 61 L.T. 785; 1 Meg. 436; 10 Digest 823, 5363	144, 148
Regina d'Italia, The, (1919), (unreported), referred to in Hull's Digest of Prize Cases, p. 112	384, 389
Regional Properties, Ltd. v. Oxley, [1945] 2 All E.R. 418; [1945] A.C. 347; 114 L.J.K.B. 473; 173 L.T. 201; Digest Supp.	432, 434 271, 273
Reid's Brewery Co., Ltd. v. Male, [1891] 2 Q.B. 1; 60 L.J.Q.B. 340; 64 L.T. 294; 55 J.P. 216; 28 Digest 56, 285	170, 172, 180
Richards v. Pryse, [1927] 2 K.B. 76; 96 L.J.K.B. 743; 137 L.T. 170; Digest Supp.	641, 645, 646
Richardson v. Minister of Pensions, (1945), Reports of Selected War Pensions Appeals, 427 (Court of Session)	709, 711 799, 805 113, 116, 118
Richardson v. Standish, (1933), unreported	22, 23, 113, 116, 117
Ricketts v. Bodenham, (1836), 4 Ad. & El. 433; 5 L.J.K.B. 102; 111 E.R. 850; sub nom. , Bodenham v. Ricketts, 1 Har. & W. 753; 6 Nev. & M.K.B. 170, 537; 19 Digest 308, 1069	681, 684 489, 496
Rider v. Ford, [1923] 1 Ch. 541; 92 L.J.Ch. 565; 129 L.T. 347; 67 Sol. Jo. 484; 30 Digest 473, 1359	878
Ridge's Trusts, Re , (1872), 7 Ch. App. 665; 41 L.J.Ch. 787; 27 L.T. 141; 44 Digest 1287, 11147	201, 211 1, 2, 4, 5
Ritter v. Godfrey, [1920] 2 K.B. 47; 89 L.J.K.B. 467; 122 L.T. 396	809, 812
Robert (otherwise De La Mare) v. Robert, [1947] 2 All E.R. 22	855, 858
Roberts v. Brennan, [1902] P. 143; 71 L.J.P. 74; sub nom. , Brennan (otherwise Roberts) v. Brennan, 86 L.T. 599; 11 Digest 428, 926	377, 380
Roberts v. Hopwood, [1925] A.C. 578; 94 L.J.K.B. 542; 133 L.T. 289; 89 J.P. 105; reversg. , S.C., sub nom. , R. v. Roberts, Ex p. Scurr, [1924] 2 K.B. 695; 33 Digest 20, 83	88, 90
Robinson v. Minister of Town and Country Planning, [1947] 1 All E.R. 851	529, 530
Robinson Bros. (Brewers), Ltd. v. Houghton & Chester-le-Street Assessment Committee, [1937] 2 All E.R. 298; [1937] 2 K.B. 445; 106 L.J.K.B. 835; 157 L.T. 147; 101 J.P. 321; Digest Supp.; affirmed [1938] 2 All E.R. 79; 107 L.J.K.B. 369; sub nom. Robinson Bros. (Brewers), Ltd. v. Durham County Assessment Committee (Arca No. 7), [1938] A.C. 321; 158 L.T. 498; 102 J.P. 313; Digest Supp.	379, 617, 618 364, 365
Robinson's Settlement Trusts, Re , [1891] 3 Ch. 129; 60 L.J.Ch. 776; 65 L.T. 244; 11 Digest 248, 1503	773, 775, 776
Roe v. Russell, [1928] 2 K.B. 117; 97 L.J.K.B. 290; 138 L.T. 253; 92 J.P. 81; Digest Supp.	541, 542, 545, 547
Rosenthal v. Alderton & Sons, Ltd., [1946] 1 All E.R. 583; [1946] K.B. 374; 115 L.J.K.B. 215; 174 L.T. 214; Digest Supp.	242, 248 777, 780
Ross, Re, Ross v. Waterfield, [1930] 1 Ch. 377; 99 L.J.Ch. 67; 142 L.T. 189; Digest Supp.	537, 539, 540
Rowell v. Rowell, [1900] 1 Q.B. 9; 69 L.J.Q.B. 55; 81 L.T. 429; C.A.; 27 Digest 246, 2172	79, 80, 82
Rugby School v. Tannahill, [1935] 1 K.B. 87; 104 L.J.K.B. 159; 152 L.T. 198; Digest Supp.
Russell v. Russell, [1897] A.C. 395; 66 L.J.P. 122; 77 L.T. 249; 61 J.P. 771; 27 Digest 291, 2661
Russell v. Russell, [1924] A.C. 687; 93 L.J.P. 97; 131 L.T. 432; 27 Digest 297, 2743; Digest Supp.
Russell (John) & Co., Ltd. v. Cayzer, Irvine & Co., Ltd., [1916] 2 A.C. 298; 85 L.J.K.B. 1152; 115 L.T. 86; Digest Practice 362, 739
Rymer, Re, Rymer v. Stanfield, [1895] 1 Ch. 19; 64 L.J.Ch. 86; 71 L.T. 590; 43 W.R. 87; 39 Sol. Jo. 26; 12 R. 22 C.A.; 8 Digest 312, 926
Rysta, Ltd.'s Application, Re , Re Aristoc, Ltd.'s Opposition, (1943) 1 All E.R. 400; reversd. , sub nom. , Aristoc, Ltd. v. Rysta, Ltd., [1945] 1 All E.R. 34; [1945] A.C. 68; 114 L.J.Ch. 52; 172 L.T. 69; 62 R.P.C. 65; Digest Supp.
St. David's (Bp.) v. Lucy, (1699), as reported in 1 Ld. Raym. 539; 91 E.R. 1260; sub nom. , Lucy v. St. David's (Bp.), Brod. & F. 332; 19 Digest 323, 1270
Salvesen (or von Lorang) v. Austrian Property Administrator, [1927] A.C. 641; 96 L.J.P.C. 105; 137 L.T. 571; Digest Supp.
Samson v. Aitchison, [1912] A.C. 844; 82 L.J.P.C. 1; 107 L.T. 106; 36 Digest 100, 667
Saunders v. Wiel, [1893] 1 Q.B. 470; 62 L.J.Q.B. 341; 68 L.T. 133; 10 R.P.C. 29; 43 Digest 250, 910
Savery v. Dyer, (1752), Amb. 139; Dick. 162; 27 E.R. 91; 39 Digest 112, 41
Scarborough Corpn. v. Scarborough Sanitary Authority, (1876), 1 Ex. D. 344; 34 L.T. 768; 40 J.P. 726; 36 Digest 235, 745
Schebsman, Re , Ex p. Official Receiver, Trustee v. Cargo Superintendents (London), Ltd. & Schebsman, [1943] 2 All E.R. 768; [1944] Ch. 83; 113 L.J.Ch. 33; 170 L.T. 9; Digest Supp.

Scott v. Scott, [1921] P. 107; 90 L.J.P. 171; 124 L.T. 619; 27 Digest 510, 5486	81, 382, 744, 746, 747
Scudamore v. Scudamore, (1720), Prec. Ch. 543; 2 Eq. Cas. Abr. 375; 20 Digest 371, 1085	716, 718
Selby v. Whitbread & Co., [1917] 1 K.B. 736; 86 L.J.K.B. 974; 116 L.T. 690; 81 J.P. 165; 2 Digest 515, 1540	694, 699
Seviour v. Somerset Collieries, Ltd., [1940] 1 All E.R. 649; 162 L.T. 403; 33 B.W.C.C. 62; Digest Supp.	98, 100
Sharp v. Wakefield, [1891] A.C. 173; 60 L.J.M.C. 70; 64 L.T. 180; 55 J.P. 197; affg.	799, 804
S.C. (1888), 22 Q.B.D. 239; 30 Digest 12, 49
Sharpe's Deed of Release, Re, Sharpe v. Fox, [1938] 3 All E.R. 449; 54 T.L.R. 1039; Digest Supp.	328, 329
Sharplin v. Bawn & Co., Ltd., [1947] 1 All E.R. 436	460, 461, 462, 464, 465
Shaw v. Gould, (1868), L.R. 3 H.L. 55; 37 L.J.Ch. 433; 18 L.T. 833; 11 Digest 428, 929
affg. S.C. sub nom. Re Wilson's Trusts (1865), L.R. 1 Eq. 247	830, 833, 835, 836
Shenton, Re, [1935] Ch. 651; 153 L.T. 343; sub nom., Re Shenton, Ex p. Bates, 104 L.J.Ch. 311; sub nom., Re Shenton, Bates v. Harris, [1934-5] B. & C.R. 201; Digest Supp.	312, 313, 315
Sidebotham v. Holland, [1895] 1 Q.B. 373; 64 L.J.Q.B. 200; 72 L.T. 62; 31 Digest 440, 5866	45, 46, 47
Simpson, Re, Clarke v. Simpson, [1913] 1 Ch. 277; 82 L.J.Ch. 169; 108 L.T. 317; 40 Digest 752, 2319	200, 201, 211
Simpson v. Charrington & Co., Ltd., [1934] 1 K.B. 64; 103 L.J.K.B. 49; 150 L.T. 103; C.A.; on appeal, sub nom., Charrington & Co., Ltd. v. Simpson, [1935] A.C. 325; 104 L.J.K.B. 226; 152 L.T. 469; H.L.; Digest Supp.	384, 385, 386
Sinclair's Life Policy, Re, [1938] 3 All E.R. 124; [1938] Ch. 799; 107 L.J.Ch. 405; 159 L.T. 189; Digest Supp.	79, 81, 82
Sinfra Akt v. Sinfra, Ltd., [1939] 2 All E.R. 675; Digest Supp.	677, 680
Smart, In the Goods of, [1902] P. 238; 71 L.J.P. 123; 87 L.T. 142; 44 Digest 389, 2234	522, 526, 527
Smith, Re, Public Trustee v. Smith, [1932] 1 Ch. 153; 100 L.J.Ch. 409; 146 L.T. 145; Digest Supp.	607, 608, 609
Smith v. Baveystock & Co., Ltd., [1945] 1 All E.R. 531; Digest Supp.	20, 21, 39, 41
Smith v. Davey, Paxman & Co. (Colchester), Ltd., [1943] 1 All E.R. 286; 36 B.W.C.C. 60; Digest Supp.	93, 94, 95
Smith v. Metropolitan Properties Co., Ltd., [1932] 1 K.B. 314; 101 L.J.K.B. 110; 146 L.T. 133; Digest Supp.	384, 385, 386, 387, 389, 390
Smith v. Smith, [1945] 1 All E.R. 584; 114 L.J.P. 30; 173 L.T. 8; Digest Supp.	328, 329
Smith v. Williams, (1892), 56 J.P. 840; 2 Digest 216, 117	610, 611
Smith Hayden's Application, Re, (1946), 63 R.P.C. 97	55, 56
Smith (J.) & Sons (Norwood), Ltd. v. Goodman, [1936] Ch. 216; 105 L.J.Ch. 70; 154 L.T. 113; [1934-5] B. & C.R. 283; Digest Supp.	754, 757
Sottomayor v. De Barros, (1877), 3 P.D. 1	22, 24
South Eastern Ry. Co. v. Associated Portland Cement Manufacturers, (1900), Ltd., [1910] 1 Ch. 12; 79 L.J.Ch. 150; 101 L.T. 865; 74 J.P. 21; 54 Sol. Jo. 80, C.A.; 37 Digest 80, 200	641, 644, 645, 646
Southern Foundries (1926), Ltd. v. Shirlaw, [1940] 2 All E.R. 445; [1940] A.C. 701; 109 L.J.K.B. 461; 164 L.T. 251; Digest Supp.	29, 33
Spaight v. Tedcastle, (1881), 6 App. Cas. 217; 44 L.T. 589; 36 Digest 113, 758	351, 357
Speed v. Swift (Thomas) & Co., Ltd., [1943] 1 All E.R. 539; [1943] 1 K.B. 557; 112 L.J.K.B. 487; 169 L.T. 67; Digest Supp.	324, 325
Spenceley, In the Goods of, [1892] P. 255; 61 L.J.P. 133; 23 Digest 86, 755	841, 842
Spottiswoode, Ballantyne & Co., Ltd. v. Doreen Appliances, Ltd., [1942] 2 All E.R. 65; [1942] 2 K.B. 32; 111 L.J.K.B. 569; 167 L.T. 33; Digest Supp.	63, 67
Spurrier v. La Cloche, [1902] A.C. 446; 71 L.J.P.C. 101; 86 L.T. 631; 11 Digest 380, 644	787, 789
Starr v. Minister of Pensions, Nuttall v. Minister of Pensions, Bourne v. Minister of Pensions, [1946] 1 All E.R. 400; [1946] K.B. 345; 115 L.J.K.B. 449; 175 L.T. 1; Reports of Selected War Pensions Appeals, Vol. 1, p. 125	373, 374
State, The, at the prosecution of Michael Kennedy v. Edward J. Little, District Justice, [1931] I.R. 39	611, 613
Stathatos v. Stathatos, [1913] P. 46; 82 L.J.P. 34; 107 L.T. 592; 11 Digest 425, 905	113, 115
Steel v. Glasgow Iron and Steel Co., Ltd., 1944 S.C. 237; Digest Supp.	264, 266
Stephen v. Cooper, [1929] A.C. 570; 98 L.J.P.C. 97; 141 L.T. 300; 22 B.W.C.C. 339; Digest Supp.	98, 99
Stephenson v. Stephenson, (1925), 41 T.L.R. 550; Digest Supp.	714, 715
Stevenage New Town (Designation) Order, 1946, Re, Franklin v. Minister of Town and Country Planning, [1947] 2 All E.R. 289	489, 496
Stokes v. Stokes, [1911] P. 195; 80 L.J.P. 142; 105 L.T. 416; 75 J.P. 502; 27 Digest 561, 6173	842, 844
Stonor v. Fowle, (1887), 13 App. Cas. 20; 57 L.J.Q.B. 387; 58 L.T. 1; 52 J.P. 228; revsg. S.C. sub nom. R. v. Brompton County Court Judge, (1886), 18 Q.B.D. 213; and sub nom. Reeves v. Fowle, 56 L.J.K.B. 49; 5 Digest 1040, 8501	828, 829
Stoughton, Re, [1941] I.R. 166	135, 138
Strong & Co., Ltd. v. Woodfield, [1906] A.C. 448; 75 L.J.K.B. 864; 95 L.T. 241; 5 Tax Cas. 215; 28 Digest 57, 290	141, 142, 143
Styler, Re, Styler v. Griffith, [1942] 2 All E.R. 201; [1942] Ch. 387; 111 L.J.Ch. 263; 167 L.T. 295; Digest Supp.	308, 309, 311, 638, 639
Summers v. Minister of Health, [1947] 1 All E.R. 184; 176 L.T. 237	395, 396, 404
Sutton v. Dorf, [1932] 2 K.B. 304; 101 L.J.K.B. 536; 47 L.T. 171; 96 J.P. 259; Digest Supp.	2, 3
Suzanna, Ex p., (1924), 295 Fed. Rep. 713	677, 679
Sweeting v. Prideaux, (1876), 2 Ch.D. 413; 45 L.J.Ch. 378; 34 L.T. 240; 44 Digest 1258, 10864	709, 711
Symons v. Southern Ry. Co., (1935), 153 L.T. 98; Digest Supp.	769, 771, 772
Taff Vale Railway Co. v. Cardiff Railway Co., [1917] 1 Ch. 299; 86 L.J.Ch. 129; 115 L.T. 800; 11 Digest 111, 68	36, 37
Tamplin (F. A.) S.S. Co., Ltd. v. Anglo-Mexican Petroleum Products Co., Ltd., [1916] 2 A.C. 397; 85 L.J.K.B. 1389; sub nom., Re F. A. Tamplin S.S. Co., Ltd. v. Anglo-Mexican Petroleum Products Co., Ltd., 115 L.T. 315; 12 Digest 390, 3194	666, 668, 669
Taylor v. Burgess, (1859), 5 H. & N. 1; 29 L.J.Ex. 7; 1 L.T. 12; 30 Digest 200, 690	193, 196
Taylor v. Popham, (1782), 1 Bro. C.C. 168; 44 Digest 469, 2889	548, 549, 550
Tecalemit, Ltd. v. Ewatts, Ltd. (No. 2), (1927), 44 R.P.C. 503; 43 Digest 247, 892	242, 245
Theatre de Luxe (Halifax), Ltd. v. Gledhill, [1915] 2 K.B. 49; 112 L.T. 519; 79 J.P. 238; 24 Cox, C.C. 614; sub nom., Halifax Theatre de Luxe, Ltd. v. Gledhill, 84 L.J.K.B. 649; 42 Digest 920, 160	681, 684

	PAGE
Thomas v. Devonport Corp., [1900] 1 Q.B. 16; 69 L.J.Q.B. 51; 81 L.T. 427; 63 J.P. 740; 33 Digest 90, 597	313, 315
Thomas v. Jones, [1921] 1 K.B. 22; 90 L.J.K.B. 49; 124 L.T. 179; 85 J.P. 38; Digest Supp.	270, 271, 273
Thomas v. Ocean Coal Co., Ltd., [1933] A.C. 100; 102 L.J.K.B. 142; 148 L.T. 219; 25 B.W.C.C. 436; Digest Supp.	98, 100
Thomas v. Sorrell, (1673), Vaugh. 330; 3 Keb. 264; Freem. K.B. 137; 30 Digest 501, 1594	332, 335, 338
Thomas Roberts v. Inland Revenue Comrs., (1946) Excess Profits Tax Leaflet, No. 42	144, 149
Thomasset v. Thomasset, [1894] P. 295; 63 L.J.P. 140; 71 L.T. 148; 27 Digest 533, 5780	51, 52, 53
Thornton v. Howe, (1862), 31 Beav. 14; 31 L.J.Ch. 767; 6 L.T. 525; 26 J.P. 774; 8 Digest 250, 96	218, 229
Timmins v. Timmins, [1919] P. 75; 88 L.J.P. 78; 120 L.T. 544; 27 Digest 567, 6255	74, 77
Tolley v. Fry (J. S.) & Sons, Ltd., [1931] A.C. 333; 100 L.J.K.B. 328; 145 L.T. 1; Digest Supp.	846, 852
Towns v. Wentworth, (1858), 11 Moo. P.C.C. 526; 31 L.T.O.S. 274; 6 W.R. 397; 14 E.R. 794; 44 Digest 553, 3706	709, 710, 711
Townsend v. Ascroft, [1917] 2 Ch. 14; 86 L.J.Ch. 517; 116 L.T. 680; 39 Digest 139, 336	777, 781
Tracy v. Talbot, (1704), 6 Mod. Rep. 214; Holt, K.B. 581; 2 Salk. 532; 3 Salk. 260; Sett. and Rem. 237; 33 Digest 452, 191	274, 275
Trebanog Working Men's Club & Institute, Ltd. v. MacDonald, Monkwearmouth Conservative Club, Ltd. v. Smith, [1940] 1 All E.R. 454; [1940] 1 K.B. 576; 109 L.J.K.B. 288; 162 L.T. 305; 104 J.P. 171; Digest Supp.	878
Trollope (George) & Sons v. Martyn Bros., [1934] 2 K.B. 436; 103 L.J.K.B. 634; 152 L.T. 88; Digest Supp.	865, 867
Trunk Roads Act, 1936, Re the, and Re the London-Portsmouth Trunk Road (Surrey) Compulsory Purchase Order (No. 2), 1938, [1939] 2 All E.R. 464; [1939] 2 K.B. 515; 108 L.J.K.B. 555; 160 L.T. 554; Digest Supp.	290, 297
Turner v. Thompson, (1888), 13 P.D. 37; 58 L.T. 387; 52 J.P. 151; 11 Digest 332, 214	113, 114
Tyrer & Co. and Hessler & Co., Re , (1902), 86 L.T. 697; 9 Asp. M.L.C. 292; 7 Com. Cas. 166; 12 Digest 349, 2899	8, 9
Underwood v. Underwood, [1945] 2 All E.R. 561; [1946] P. 84; 115 L.J.P. 49; 173 L.T. 274; 109 J.P. 248; Digest Supp.	74, 77, 714, 715
Unger v. Preston Corp., [1942] 1 All E.R. 200; Digest Supp.	666, 671
University College of North Wales v. Taylor, [1908] P. 140; 77 L.J.P. 20; 98 L.T. 472; 44 Digest 241, 675	522, 527
Uranienborg, The, [1936] P. 21; 105 L.J.P. 10; 154 L.T. 664; Digest Supp.	560, 562, 563
Vallance v. Falle, (1884), 13 Q.B.D. 109; 53 L.J.Q.B. 459; 51 L.T. 158; 48 J.P. 519; 41 Digest 253, 943	815, 820, 823
Van Gruten v. Foxwell [1897] A.C. 658; 66 L.J.Q.B. 745; 77 L.T. 170; 43 Digest 735, 1704	502, 506
Vestey's (Baron and Baronet) Executors v. Inland Revenue Comrs., (1946), Tax Leaflets, No. 1413	660, 665
Vidal v. Vidal and Wilson, (1921), The Times, Oct. 13	121, 123
Villers-Wilkes, Re , Bower v. Goodman, [1895], 72 L.T. 323; 8 Digest 351, 1453	218, 232
Vyner v. Waldenburg Bros., Ltd., [1945] 2 All E.R. 547; [1946] 1 K.B. 50; 115 L.J.K.B. 119; 173 L.T. 330; Digest Supp.	39, 41
Waite v. Waite and Muir, (1916), 32 T.L.R. 432; 27 Digest 490, 5225	121, 122
Waldie (James) & Sons, Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Comrs., (1919), 12 Tax Cas. 113; Digest Supp.	144, 148
Walker v. Hockney Brothers, (1909), 2 B.W.C.C. 20; 34 Digest 273, 3211	557, 559
Walker, Hunter & Co. v. Falkirk Iron Co., (1887), 4 R.P.C. 390; 14 R. (Ct. of Sess.) 1072; 43 Digest 245, 9	242, 248
Walking, Ltd. v. Robinson, (1930), 99 L.J.K.B. 171; 143 L.T. 105; 94 J.P. 73; Digest Supp.	881, 882
Walter v. Drew, (1723), 1 Com. 372; 92 E.R. 1117; 44 Digest 1280, 11075	709, 710
Ward, Re , Public Trustee v. Berry, [1941] 2 All E.R. 125; 110 L.J.Ch. 171; sub nom. , Re Ward, Public Trustee v. Ward, [1941] Ch. 308; 165 L.T. 115; Digest Supp.	422, 427
Watson v. Tuckwell, Oct. 27, 1947, (unreported)	656, 657
Weatherall v. Thornburgh, (1878), 8 Ch.D. 261; 47 L.J.Ch. 658; 39 L.T. 9; 37 Digest 146, 724	166, 167
Weatherley v. Weatherley, [1947] 1 All E.R. 583; 176 L.T. 434	886, 890
Webb v. Paternoster, (1619), 2 Roll. Rep. 143; Godb. 282; Palm. 71; Poph. 151; sub nom. , Plummer v. Webb, Nov. 98; 30 Digest 513, 1634	332, 338
Wedderspoon v. Minister of Pensions, [1947] K.B. 562; 177 L.T. 8; Reports of Selected War Pensions Appeals, Vol. 1, p. 347	373, 375
Wedgewood, Re , Allen v. Wedgewood, [1915] 1 Ch. 113; 84 L.J.Ch. 107; 112 L.T. 66; 8 Digest 259, 208	218, 222, 228, 229, 234, 239
Western National Bank of City of New York v. Perez, Triana & Co., [1891] 1 Q.B. 304; 60 L.J.Q.B. 272; 64 L.T. 543; Digest Practice 381, 589	25, 26
White, Re , White v. White, [1893] 2 Ch. 41; 62 L.J.Ch. 372; 68 L.T. 187; 8 Digest 249, 89	422, 425, 426, 427
White v. Bijou Mansions, Ltd., [1937] 3 All E.R. 269; affd. , [1938] 1 All E.R. 546; [1938] Ch. 351; 107 L.J.Ch. 212; 158 L.T. 338; Digest Supp.	79, 80, 81
White v. Minister of Pensions, (1946), Reports of Selected War Pensions Appeals, 483 (Court of Session)	432, 434
White (otherwise Bennett) v. White, [1937] 1 All E.R. 708; [1937] P. 111; 106 L.J.P. 49; 156 L.T. 422; Digest Supp.	22, 23, 113, 116, 117, 118
Whiteman Smith Motor Co., Ltd. v. Chaplin, [1934] 2 K.B. 35; 103 L.J.K.B. 328; 150 L.T. 354; Digest Supp.	727, 729
Whittall v. Kirby, [1946] 2 All E.R. 552; 175 L.T. 449; Digest Supp.	576, 577
Wicks v. Dowell & Co., Ltd., [1905] 2 K.B. 225; sub nom. , Wilkes v. Dowell & Co., 74 L.J.K.B. 572; 92 L.T. 677; 34 Digest 266, 2265	706, 708
Wicks Marriage Settlement, Re , Public Trustee v. Wicks, [1940] Ch. 475; 109 L.J.Ch. 163; 163 L.T. 31; Digest Supp.	51, 52, 53
Wightman, Re , Bradbury and another v. Cambridge University and others, unreported (Apr. 17, 1945)	646, 647
Wilchick v. Marks and Silverstone, [1934] 2 K.B. 56; 103 L.J.K.B. 372; 151 L.T. 60; Digest Supp.	197, 198, 199
Wilds v. Amalgamated Anthracite Collieries, Ltd., [1947] 1 All E.R. 551; 177 L.T. 192; 40 B.W.C.C. 107	884, 885
Wilkinson v. Adam, (1813), 1 Ves. & B. 422; 35 E.R. 163; 44 Digest 1251, 10786	709, 710

	PAGE
Wilkinson v. Chetham-Strode, [1940] 2 All E.R. 643; [1940] 2 K.B. 310; 109 L.J.K.B. 823; 163 L.T. 26; 104 J.P. 283; Digest Supp.	510, 515
Willcocks et al. v. Union Insurance Co., (1809), Binney's Reports, Pennsylvania, Vol. 2, p. 574	476, 477
Williams, Re, Metcalf v. Williams, [1914] 2 Ch. 61; 83 L.J.Ch. 570; 110 L.T. 923; 44 Digest 798, 6540	686, 689
Williams, Re, Public Trustee v. Williams, [1927] 2 Ch. 283; 96 L.J.Ch. 449; 137 L.T. 477; Digest Supp.	422, 426
Williams v. Grundy Trustees, [1934] 1 K.B. 524; 103 L.J.K.B. 204; 150 L.T. 378; 18 Tax Cas. 271; Digest Supp.	659, 660, 663, 664, 665
Williams v. Minister of Pensions, (1947), Reports of Selected War Pensions Appeals, Vol. 1, p. 503	373, 374
Williams v. Williams, [1929] P. 114; 98 L.J.P. 40; 140 L.T. 383; Digest Supp.	121, 123
Williams v. Williams, [1939] 3 All E.R. 825; [1939] P. 365; 108 L.J.P. 140; 161 L.T. 202; Digest Supp.	160, 161, 162
Williams' Trustees v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1947] 1 All E.R. 513; 176 L.T. 462	607, 608
Williams (Sir H. J.) Trusts, Trustees v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1947] 1 All E.R. 513	218, 238
Williamson Film Printing Co., Ltd., v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1918] 2 K.B. 720; 88 L.J.K.B. 24; 119 L.T. 374	799, 808
Wilson, Re, Twentyman v. Simpson, [1913] 1 Ch. 314; 82 L.J.Ch. 161; 108 L.T. 321; 57 Sol. Jo. 245; 8 Digest 313, 948	773, 775
Wilson v. Chatterton, [1946] 1 All E.R. 431; [1946] K.B. 360; 115 L.J.K.B. 381; 175 L.T. 325; Digest Supp.	706, 708
Wilson v. Balfour, (1929), 45 T.L.R. 625; Digest Supp.	63, 67
Wilson v. Tavener, [1901] 1 Ch. 578; 70 L.J.Ch. 263; 84 L.T. 48; 30 Digest 514, 1693	332, 339
Willsons & Clyde Coal Co. v. M'Ferrin, Kerr v. Dunlop (James) & Co., [1926] A.C. 377; 95 L.J.P.C. 130; 135 L.T. 164; 19 B.W.C.C. 1; 34 Digest 301, 2499	98, 99
Windsor & Annapolis Ry. Co. v. R. & Counties Ry. Co., (1886), 11 App. Cas. 607; 55 L.J.P.C. 41; 55 L.T. 271; 51 J.P. 260; 16 Digest 239, 346	466, 469
Winn v. Bull, (1877), 7 Ch.D. 29; 47 L.J.Ch. 139; 42 J.P. 230; 12 Digest 86, 511	865, 867
Winter v. Winter, [1942] 2 All E.R. 390; [1942] P. 151; 111 L.J.P. 95; 167 L.T. 258; Digest Supp.	578, 583, 584
Winter v. Woolfe, [1931] 1 K.B. 549; 100 L.J.K.B. 92; 144 L.T. 311; 95 J.P. 20; Digest Supp.	88, 89
Wixon v. Thomas, Lambert v. Thomas, Burrows v. Thomas, [1911] 1 K.B. 43; 80 L.J.K.B. 104; 103 L.T. 731; 75 J.P. 58; 38 Digest 487, 447	376, 377
Woolfenden v. Woolfenden, [1945] 2 All E.R. 539; [1946] P. 61; 115 L.J.P. 1; 173 L.T. 301; Digest Supp.	677, 679
Wood v. Leadbitter, (1845), 13 M. & W. 838; 14 L.J.Ex. 161; 4 L.T.O.S. 433; 9 J.P. 312; 30 Digest 515, 1708	332, 336, 338
Wood v. Wood, [1947] 2 All E.R. 95	711, 712
Woodall v. Clifton, [1905] 2 Ch. 257; 74 L.J.Ch. 555; 92 L.T. 292; 53 W.R. 203; aff'd. , [1905] 2 Ch. 266, C.A.; 37 Digest 81, 211	641, 643
Worthing Corp'n. v. Heather, [1906] 2 Ch. 532; 75 L.J.Ch. 761; 95 L.T. 718; 50 Sol. Jo. 668; 4 L.G.R. 1179; 37 Digest 81, 82, 212	641, 643
Worthington & Co., Ltd. v. Abbott, [1910] 1 Ch. 588; 79 L.J.Ch. 252; 101 L.T. 895; 35 Digest 538, 2677	328, 330
Wragg, Re, Wragg v. Palmer, [1919] 2 Ch. 58; 88 L.J.Ch. 269; 121 L.T. 78; 43 Digest 928, 3662	282, 283
Wright v. Prescott Urban District Council, (1916), 86 L.J.Ch. 221; 115 L.T. 772; 81 J.P. 43; Digest Pleading 82, 694	25, 26
Yates v. Maddan, (1851), 3 Mac. & G. 532; 21 L.J.Ch. 24; 16 Jur. 45; 42 E.R. 365; 39 Digest 135, 294	777, 779, 780
Yates v. University College, London, (1875), L.R. 7 H.L. 438; 45 L.J.Ch. 137; 32 L.T. 43; 44 Digest 440, 2662	716, 719, 720
Yorkshire Dale S.S. Co., Ltd. v. Minister of War Transport, The Coxwold, [1942] 2 All E.R. 6; [1942] A.C. 691; 111 L.J.K.B. 512; 167 L.T. 349; Digest Supp.; reversd. , [1941] 3 All E.R. 214	587, 589, 590, 591, 592, 597, 598, 599, 600
Young v. Bristol Aeroplane Co., Ltd., [1944] 2 All E.R. 293; [1944] K.B. 718; 113 L.J.K.B. 513; 171 L.T. 113; 37 B.W.C.C. 51; Digest Supp.	193, 195, 271, 272, 884, 885
Young v. The Scotia, [1903] A.C. 501; 72 L.J.P.C. 115; 89 L.T. 374; 1 Digest 109, 130	364, 368

STATUTES, ETC., REFERRED TO

	PAGE
Poor Relief Act, 1601 (c. 2), s. 2	274
Small Tenements Recovery Act, 1838 (c. 74), s. 1	320, 720
Railway Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (c. 20), s. 68	768
Indictable Offences Act, 1848 (c. 42), s. 12	611
Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848 (c. 43), s. 5	280
Petty Sessions (Ireland) Act, 1851 (c. 93), s. 27 (3)	611
London Hackney Carriage Act, 1853 (c. 33), s. 17 (1) (2)	318
Succession Duty Act, 1853 (c. 51), s. 2	78
Betting Act, 1853 (c. 119), s. 3	574
Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857 (c. 85), s. 42	852
Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (c. 97), s. 41	609
War Department Stores Act, 1867 (c. 128), s. 20	363
Judgments Extension Act, 1868 (c. 54)	839
Debtor's Act, 1869 (c. 62), s. 5	71
Metropolitan Public Carriages Act, 1869 (c. 115), s. 9 (3), restriction (2)	318
Pawnbrokers Act, 1872 (c. 93), ss. 16, 17, 18, 19, 21, 22, 24	762
Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879 (c. 49), s. 17 (1)	615
Settled Land Act, 1882 (c. 38), s. 22 (5)	134
Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75), s. 17	792, 813
Arbitration Act, 1889 (c. 49), s. 4	260
Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (c. 71), ss. 12 (1), 23	284
Finance Act, 1894 (c. 30), s. 2 (1) (d)	78
Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895 (c. 39), s. 4	623
—, s. 5 (b)	50
—, s. 5 (c)	713
Judicial Trustees Act, 1896 (c. 35), s. 1 (1)	312
Street Betting Act, 1906 (c. 43), s. 1 (4)	572
Criminal Appeal Act, 1907 (c. 23), s. 4	701
Patents and Designs Act, 1907 (c. 29), (as amended up to May 26, 1938), ss. 49 (1), 93	241
Bankruptcy Act, 1914 (c. 59), s. 26 (2)	182
Income Tax Act, 1918 (c. 40), s. 37 (1) (b)	217
—, s. 125 (1)	659
—, sched. B, r. 1 (a)	875
—, sched. D, cases I and II, r. 3 (a), (e)	141
Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (c. 17), s. 5 (2) (4)	720
—, s. 15 (3)	1
Married Women (Maintenance) Act, 1920 (c. 63), s. 1 (1)	50
Administration of Justice Act, 1920 (c. 81)	839
Police Pensions Act, 1921 (c. 31), s. 2 (1) (c)	193
Irish Free State Constitution Act, 1922 (Session 2) (c. 1), sched. I, art. 73	134
Agricultural Holdings Act, 1923 (c. 9), s. 12 (1), sched. II, r. 10	124
Settled Land Act, 1925 (c. 18), s. 1 (1) and (7)	327
Trustee Act, 1925 (c. 19), s. 15 (f)	312
Law of Property Act, 1925 (c. 20), s. 146 (1) (2)	88
—, s. 146 (2)	789
—, s. 184	418
Land Charges Act, 1925 (c. 22), s. 10 (1), Class D (iii)	36
Administration of Estates Act, 1925 (c. 23), ss. 33 (1) (4), 51 (2)	690
Guardianship of Infants Act, 1925 (c. 45), s. 3 (4)	74
Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925 (c. 49), s. 183 (3) (as amended by Matrimonial Causes Act, 1937 (c. 57), s. 9)	653
—, ss. 188 (1), 193 (1)	50
—, s. 190 (1)	269
—, s. 190 (2)	381, 744
—, s. 192	327
Summary Jurisdiction (Separation and Maintenance) Act, 1925 (c. 51), s. 1 (4)	656
Roads Improvement Act, 1925 (c. 63), s. 1 (1) (2)	628
Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925 (c. 84), s. 1 (1)	97
—, ss. 1, 9 (3) (i)	132
—, s. 9 (3) (i)	460
Criminal Justice Act, 1925 (c. 86), s. 32 (3)	574
Rating and Valuation Act, 1925 (c. 90), s. 31 (9)	276
Legitimacy Act, 1926 (c. 60), s. 1 (1)	50
Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927 (c. 36), ss. 4, 5	533, 727
—, s. 5 (3)	384
Companies Act, 1929 (c. 23), s. 168 (3) (6)	104
—, ss. 247, 261	479
Railways (Valuation for Rating) Act, 1930 (c. 24), s. 1 (3)	794
Road Traffic Act, 1930 (c. 43), s. 35 (2)	576
Sunday Entertainments Act, 1932 (c. 51), s. 1 (1)	680
Foreign Judgments (Reciprocal Enforcement) Act, 1933 (c. 13)	839
Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933 (c. 32), s. 3 (1)	185
—, s. 3 (1) (b), sched. I (h), proviso	601
—, sched. I, para. (a)	7
—, sched. I (g) (i)	360
—, sched. I (h)	672
—, sched. I, proviso	393
—, sched. I (h), proviso	604, 740

	PAGE
Local Government Act, 1933 (c. 51), s. 228	47
Betting and Lotteries Act, 1934 (c. 58), s. 11 (2)	815
Tithe Act, 1936 (c. 43), s. 14 (2)	875
Public Health Act, 1936 (c. 49), ss. 92 (1) (c), 99	537
Public Health (London) Act, 1936 (c. 50), s. 301 (1) (a) (i)	569
Housing Act, 1936 (c. 51), ss. 73, 80	469
—, ss. 82 (1), 156 (1) (a)	720
—, ss. 83 (1), 156 (1) (a) (2)	320
—, sched. 1 (4) (5)	395
Firearms Act, 1937 (c. 12), ss. 1, 5	837
Matrimonial Causes Act, 1937 (c. 57), s. 2 (b)	160
—, s. 7 (1) (a)	43, 871, 886
—, s. 7 (1) (d), proviso (iii)	741
Factories Act, 1937 (c. 67), ss. 24 (4) (5), 137 (1)	38
—, s. 25 (1)	159
—, s. 25 (3), 151 (1) (b)	782
—, ss. 26, 107	324
—, s. 130 (2)	20
Local Government Superannuation Act, 1937 (c. 68), ss. 8 (2) (5), 40 (3)	748
—, s. 35	24
Trade Marks Act, 1938 (c. 22), s. 12 (1)	188
—, ss. 12, 27 (1) (6)	55
Inheritance (Family Provision) Act, 1938 (c. 45), s. 1	303
—, s. 1 (1)	638
Finance Act, 1938 (c. 46), s. 17 (1)	474
—, s. 38 (1) (a)	150
—, s. 41 (4) (a) (ii)	502
Coal Act, 1938 (c. 52), sched. III, pt. IV, para. 21 (2)	200
Food and Drugs Act, 1938 (c. 56), ss. 3 (1), 4, 83 (3)	613
—, s. 83 (1)	881
Ministry of Supply Act, 1939 (c. 38), s. 2 (3)	363
London Government Act, 1939 (c. 40), s. 183 (1)	569
Finance Act, 1939 (c. 41), s. 13 (3)	502
Trading with the Enemy Act, 1939 (c. 89), s. 7 (1) (a) (b)	646
Finance (No. 2) Act, 1939 (c. 109), s. 12 (1)	454
—, s. 13 (3), sched. VII, pt. II, para. 1 (1) (b)	144
—, s. 14 (1), sched. VII, para. 1	762
—, s. 14 (2), sched. VII, pt. II, para. 2 (1)	473
—, sched. VII, pt. I, para. 6 (1)	409
—, sched. VII, pt. I, para. 11	799
Merchant Shipping (Salvage) Act, 1940 (c. 43), s. 1 (1)	465
Liabilities (War-Time Adjustment) Act, 1941 (c. 24), s. 12 (1)	753
Finance Act, 1941 (c. 30), ss. 10, 11	649
Pensions Appeal Tribunals Act, 1943 (c. 39), ss. 1 (1) (a), 6 (2)	564
—, s. 6 (2)	432
Furnished Houses (Rent Control) Act, 1946 (c. 34), ss. 2 (1), 12 (1)	12
—, s. 7	15
New Towns Act, 1946 (c. 68), s. 1 (1)	496
—, s. 1 (1), sched. 1, para. 1	488
—, s. 1 (1), sched. 1 (3)	289
R.S.C. Ord. 11, r. 1 (e) (iii) and (g)	786
—, Ord. 11, r. 1 (g)	363
—, Ord. 13, r. 7	809
—, Ord. 25, r. 2	24
—, Ord. 41, r. 5	71
—, Ord. 55E, r. 2 (1)	432
—, Ord. 65, r. 6A	767
—, Ord. 65, r. 27 (48)	61
Bankruptcy Rules, 1915, r. 379	823
Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1944, r. 36 (1)	578
—, r. 44 (1)	744
Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1947 (S.R. & O., 1947, No. 523/L.9), r. 40 (3)	653
—, r. 62 (2)	71
Companies (Winding-Up) Rules, 1929, r. 104 (1) (2)	479
Judicial Trustee Rules, 1897, rr. 12 (1), 15 (2)	312
Summary Jurisdiction Rules, 1915 (S.R. & O., 1915, No. 200), r. 52	270
Defence (General) Regulations, 1939, reg. 51 (1)	36
—, reg. 68 CB (1)	286
—, reg. 78 (5)	293
Woodworking Machinery Special Regulations, 1922-1945, regs. 10 (b) (ii), (c)	20
Pedestrian Crossing Places (Traffic) Regulations, 1941, reg. 3	509
Palestine Defence (Emergency) Regulations, 1945, reg. 112	550
London Cab Order, 1934 (S.R. & O., 1934, No. 1346)	318
Ministry of Supply (Transfer of Powers) (No. 1) Order, 1939 (S.R. & O., 1939, No. 877)	363
Trading with the Enemy (Custodian) Order, 1939 (S.R. & O., 1939, No. 1198), art. 1 (i), (ii) (e)	646
Conditions of Employment and National Arbitration Order, 1940 (S.R. & O., 1940, No. 1305), art. 2 (1), 7	693
Essential Work (General Provisions) (No. 2) Order, 1942 (S.R. & O., 1942, No. 1504), art. 4 (1)	636
Personal Injuries (Civilians) Scheme, 1944 (S.R. & O., 1944, No. 369), art. 1 (25)	436
—, arts. 2 (2), 6	93
Royal Warrant Concerning Retired Pay, Pensions, etc., 1943 (Cmd. 1943, No. 6489), art. 4 (2) (3) (4)	372

WORDS AND PHRASES

	PAGE
Accident	556
Amalgamate	104
Amount	734
Amount owing in respect of the advance	734
Annual value	875
Approaching	509
Arising out of employment	97
Attaining a vested interest	685
Beneficial interest in real estate	690
Beneficially entitled	78
Bias	289
Body corporate	502
Borrowed money	473
By substitution	685
Capital employed in trade or business	144
Child of the marriage	50
Children's hour	845
Common work	346
Consequences of warlike operations	586
Conventional rate of interest	213
Delegation	38
Dilute	460
Disbursement wholly and exclusively laid for purposes of trade	141
Discovers	659
Duty to act fairly	395
Dwelling	286
Error of the court	578
Established for charitable purposes only	217
Factory	782
For her life occupation	327
Fresh evidence	74
Greater hardship	740
If the surveyor discovers	659
In consequence of	124
In consequence of employment	360
In his capacity as such	837
In the event of husband predeceasing me or surviving for less than one month	708
Income received from investments	409
Income under a settlement	502
Injury received in execution of duty	193
Interest arising on death	78
Investment	409
Knowingly and wilfully	574
Lack of sincerity	43
Land wholly or mainly occupied for the purposes of husbandry	649
Landlord	384
Lawfully due	7
Lawfully sub-let	1
Likely to deceive or cause confusion	55, 188
Liquidated demand	809
Lis	395
Living accommodation	286
Loss . . . connected with or arising out of trade	141
Made 6 months before the expiration of the term	59
Mere mechanical device	241
Names	144
New or original design	241
Occupied as dwelling-house or hotel	794
Of sound construction and properly maintained	159
Plaintiff ordinarily resident out of jurisdiction	767
Power to revoke or otherwise determine settlement	150
Properly brought	363
Provisional	101
Public place	572
Purpose of devolution	134
Quasi-judicial	395
Railway hereditament	794
Reasonable use	628
Rent or other consideration	474
Rent which includes payment for use of furniture or for services	12
Resides with	656
Residing with	656
Right or privilege over or affecting land	36
Settlement	327
Special circumstances	799
Special reasons	576
Special risk	346
Temporarily resident within jurisdiction	767
The King can do no wrong	466, 468
To give away	777
To strengthen bonds between Union of South Africa and Mother Country and incidentally con- duce to appeasement of racial feeling in South Africa	607
Total time occupied by trial	61
Uncertainty	418
Uncle Mac	845
Uncle Mac's Puffed Wheat	845
Unlawful and malicious killing	609
Until	101
Whilst towage . . . or assistance services being performed	560
Wilful refusal to consummate	871
Working classes	469

CORRIGENDA

[1947] Vol. 1.

- P. 62. HILL v. HILL. Line E.7: for "[1925] Ch. 120" read "[1925] Ch. 220."
- P. 337. JOHN T. ELLIS v. HINDS. Line C.7: for "aged 17" read "aged under 17."
- P. 486. A.-G. v. NORTHWOOD ELECTRIC Co. Line H.1: for the sentence beginning "It is said . . ." as printed read "It is said that it is given notwithstanding the fact that the customer has no right to keep it as against the company, and that there is a waiver of what" etc., as printed.
- P. 613. FRANKLIN v. MINISTER OF TOWN AND COUNTRY PLANNING. Line A.2; for "affirmed" read "reversed."
- P. 622. APT v. APT. Line 7: for "transaction" read "translation."
- P. 784. MARTIN v. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL. Line D.3: for "As gratuitous bailee . . ." read "A gratuitous bailee . . ."
- P. 801. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. ISLES. Running heading: for "Tucker" read "Atkinson."

[1947] Vol. 2.

- P. 59. BIONDI v. KIRKINGTON AND PICCADILLY ESTATES, LTD. Line G.6: for "plaintiff" read "defendants." Line H.2: for "defendants" read "plaintiff."
- P. 103. BRANCA v. COBARRO. Line C.5: for "argument" read "agreement."
- P. 344. WINTER GARDEN THEATRE (LONDON), LTD. v. MILLENIUM PRODUCTIONS, LTD. Line D.2 and 3: for "the circumstances of the contract" read "the circumstances or the contract."
- P. 347. GLASGOW CORPN. v. NEILSON. Line A.1: for "Lord Maclean" read "Lord Mackay." P. 349, line H.5: for "who are their fellow servants" read "who are not their fellow servants."
- P. 378. MORRIS v. MORRIS, MORRIS AND MANNING. Counsel: for "Petrie" read "J. H. Moss."
- P. 438. GINESI v. GINESI. Line G.5: for "probably" read "properly."
- P. 655. WOOLFENDEN v. WOOLFENDEN. Solicitors: Haslewood, Hare & Co. were agents for Aston, Harwood & San Garde & Green, Manchester.
- P. 720. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL v. SHELLEY. Line G.1: for "ss. 82 (1) . . ." read "ss. 83 (1) . . ."
- P. 745. HASTING v. HASTING. Line D.3: for "under s. 190 (1) to make an order 'on any decree,'" read "under s. 190 (1) to make an order is 'on any decree.'"

THE ALL ENGLAND LAW REPORTS

Principle applied. CARTER v. GREEN.
[1950] 1 All E.R. 627.

OAK PROPERTY CO., LTD. v. CHAPMAN AND ANOTHER.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Somervell and Evershed, L.JJ., and Wynn-Parry, J.),
April 29, 30, May 1, 16, 1947.]

Landlord and Tenant—Rent restriction—Possession—Sub-tenancy—Whether premises “lawfully sub-let”—Date of institution of proceedings material date—Breach of tenancy—Waiver by landlord—Acceptance of rent—Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (c. 17), s. 15 (3).

Before Mar. 1, 1946, the statutory tenant of certain premises sub-let part of them furnished to Mrs. J., and, on Mar. 1, 1946, she sub-let to a sub-tenant the rest of the premises unfurnished without having obtained the landlord's consent as was required under her original lease. It appeared from the evidence that both sub-lettings were intended to be temporary as the tenant expected later to re-occupy the premises. Mrs. J. left the premises sub-let to her on Aug. 1, 1946, and the tenant's furniture was still there on Aug. 20, 1946, when the landlords started proceedings for possession against the tenant and the sub-tenant of the unfurnished letting. The tenant submitted to an order for possession, but the sub-tenant claimed the benefit of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920, s. 15 (3), and contended that the absence of consent to the sub-letting had been waived by the landlords since they had accepted two instalments of rent from the tenant after they had full knowledge of the sub-letting :—

HELD : (i) in determining whether premises were lawfully sub-let for the purposes of s. 15 (3) of the Act of 1920, the relevant facts must be determined at the date of the institution of proceedings; even if the sub-tenancy was ineffectual in law on Mar. 1, 1946, it became effective on Aug. 1, 1946, when the tenant regained actual possession of the remainder of the premises, and it remained effective so long as those conditions existed; and, therefore, on Aug. 20, 1946, the sub-tenant was entitled to the benefit of s. 15 (3), as a person to whom part of the premises had been lawfully sub-let.

Roe v. Russell ([1928] 2 K.B. 117) and Norman v. Simpson ([1946] 1 All E.R. 74) applied.

(ii) in the case of a statutory tenancy, the question whether the acceptance of rent by the landlord is an unequivocal act of affirmance of the tenancy is a question of fact for the judge.

Semle : the strict common law rule in regard to a qualified acceptance of rent by a landlord after knowledge of a non-continuing breach of covenant by the tenant entitling him to go to the court is not applicable to a statutory tenancy, and a qualified acceptance of rent from a statutory tenant is not necessarily fatal to a landlord's right to seek an order for possession.

[AS TO POSITION OF SUB-TENANT, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 20, pp. 333, 334, para. 399; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 31, p. 576, Nos. 7251-7253.

AS TO WAIVER OF FORFEITURE, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 20 pp. 254-257, paras. 287-289; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 31, pp. 497-502, Nos. 6427-6487.]

Cases referred to :

- (1) Keeves v. Dean, Nunn v. Pellegrini, [1924] 1 K.B. 685 ; 93 L.J.K.B. 203 ; 130 L.T. 593 ; 31 Digest 576, 7254.
- (2) Lovibond (John) & Sons, Ltd. v. Vincent, [1929] 1 K.B. 687 ; 98 L.J.K.B. 402 ; 141 L.T. 116 ; 93 J.P. 161 ; Digest Supp.
- (3) Sutton v. Dorf, [1932] 2 K.B. 304 ; 101 L.J.K.B. 536 ; 47 L.T. 171 ; 96 J.P. 259 ; Digest Supp.
- (4) Roe v. Russell, [1928] 2 K.B. 117 ; 97 L.J.K.B. 290 ; 138 L.T. 253 ; 92 J.P. 81 ; Digest Supp.
- (5) Haskins v. Lewis, [1931] 2 K.B. 1 ; 100 L.J.K.B. 180 ; 144 L.T. 378 ; 95 J.P. 57 ; Digest Supp.
- (6) Norman v. Simpson, [1946] 1 All E.R. 74 ; [1946] 1 K.B. 158 ; 115 L.J.K.B. 107 ; 174 L.T. 279.
- (7) Matthews v. Smallwood, [1910] 1 Ch. 777 ; 79 L.J.Ch. 322 ; 102 L.T. 228 ; 31 Digest 379, 5251.
- (8) Dumpon's Case (1603), 4 Co. Rep. 119 b ; sub nom. Dumper v Syms, Cro. Eliz. 815 ; 31 Digest, 393, 5393.
- (9) Elliott v. Boynton, [1924] 1 Ch. 236 ; 93 L.J.Ch. 122 ; 130 L.T. 497 ; 31 Digest 553, 7003.

APPEAL by the landlords from an order of His Honour JUDGE DAVIES, K.C., at Bloomsbury County Court, dated Nov. 1, 1946.

The landlords claimed possession of premises within the Rent Restrictions Acts against the tenant and a sub-tenant of part of the premises. The tenant (the first defendant) submitted to the order, but the sub-tenant (the second defendant) resisted it and the county court judge decided in his favour. The facts appear in the judgment of the court delivered by SOMERVELL, L.J.

Safford, K.C., and Neligan for the landlords.

Heathcote-Williams for the sub-tenant.

Cur. adv. vult.

May 16. SOMERVELL, L.J., read the following judgment of the court. In this case the plaintiffs sued, as landlords, for possession and for arrears of rent and mesne profits against the first defendant, who was, at material times, a statutory tenant of the whole premises known as 5, Arkwright Mansions, London, and the second defendant, who was, or claimed to be, a sub-tenant of part of such premises. The tenant submitted to an order for possession, but the sub-tenant claimed the benefit of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920, s. 15 (3), which is as follows :—

Where the interest of a tenant of a dwelling-house to which this Act applies is determined, either as the result of an order or judgment for possession or ejectment, or for any other reason, any sub-tenant to whom the premises or any part thereof have been lawfully sub-let shall, subject to the provisions of this Act, be deemed to become the tenant of the landlord on the same terms as he would have held from the tenant if the tenancy had continued.

The county court judge decided in favour of the sub-tenant. The point with which he dealt may be summarised as follows.

Under the original lease to the tenant there was a provision against sub-letting without the consent of the landlords and a right of re-entry if this covenant was broken. On Mar. 1, 1946, when the tenant sub-let to the sub-tenant, no such consent had been obtained. The sub-tenant submitted that this fact could not be relied on, the absence of consent having been waived in circumstances which I will set out more fully later. Counsel for the landlords took, as his first point, one which, in our view, is not dealt with in the judgment of the county court judge and which does not appear, we think, on the judge's note. Junior counsel for the landlords, who appeared before the county court judge for the landlords, told us that he referred to the point, but we have come to the conclusion that it was not effectively taken within the familiar principles which have been laid down. Counsel for the sub-tenant, however, was anxious that the point should be dealt with if the court felt itself in a position to deal with it, and full argument was, therefore, heard on both sides. In the circumstances, counsel for the landlords conceded that, as regards the facts, the court must make, consistently with the findings of the county court judge and the evidence, all necessary assumptions most favourably to the sub-tenant. On this basis the facts which the court must take as found or proved were that prior to Mar. 1, 1946, the tenant had sub-let to a Mrs. Jacobson all the premises other than the part which became the subject-matter of the sub-letting to the sub-tenant. The letting to Mrs. Jacobson was a furnished letting and the circumstances were such as to raise clearly the inference that the tenant intended and expected to reoccupy the premises herself and to negative the conclusion that she had abandoned the idea of making the house or any part thereof her home. The sub-letting to the sub-tenant was an unfurnished letting, and, from the evidence, it appeared that this letting also was intended to be of a temporary nature, namely, pending the marriage of the sub-tenant, then thought to be imminent. On or about Aug. 1, 1946, Mrs. Jacobson left the premises sub-let to her and on Aug. 20, 1946, the date of the commencement of the present action, such premises were vacant, save that the tenant's furniture remained thereon. During the period from Aug. 1 to 20 it must be assumed that rent was paid by the sub-tenant to the tenant and accepted in the ordinary way.

The argument of counsel for the landlords was that, since, at the date of the so-called "sub-letting" to the sub-tenant, the tenant had already sub-let the remainder of the premises, the sub-letting to the sub-tenant, as a matter of law and notwithstanding the intention of either party to the contract, involved necessarily an abandonment by her of all possession or right to possession of the whole premises, so that, never having had any other interest, in the eye of the law, in the premises than the right of possession, she could, at the date of the sub-letting, confer on the sub-tenant no estate right or interest of any kind in the part which she purported to sub-let. The contract of Mar. 1, 1946, was, accordingly, (as counsel for the landlords says) a nullity ab initio, and, as such, incapable of being animated or enlarged by anything which occurred since the date of the contract.

On this part of the landlords' case there is, in our view, only one question with which we are concerned, namely, does the sub-tenant come within the ambit of s. 15 (3) of the Act of 1920 as a sub-tenant to whom part of the premises have been lawfully sub-let? The answer to the question depends on the proper interpretation of the sub-section and particularly of the words "sub-tenant" and "sub-let," for on this part of the argument it must be assumed that the contract of "sub-letting" did not involve any breach of the contractual terms imported by the statutes into the statutory tenancy. As regards the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933, sched. I, para. (d), (to which further reference is made presently), though it is, no doubt, true that the absence of the landlords' consent at the time of the alleged sub-letting would then have given to the landlords the right to invoke the jurisdiction of this court, the terms of the paragraph cannot, in our judgment, be held to produce the result, for the purposes of this part of the landlords' argument, that any sub-letting of part of the premises, the remainder being already sub-let, made at the time without the landlords' consent, must be regarded altogether as a nullity.

In our judgment, it is neither necessary nor profitable to consider what right or interest in the property the tenant created or was capable of creating by the "sub-tenancy" under discussion. The question, and the only question, is whether the sub-tenant, however spectral her interest in the property by virtue of this contract of sub-tenancy, can properly be described as a sub-tenant to whom the premises had been lawfully sub-let within the meaning—the somewhat artificial meaning—of s. 15 (3) of the Act of 1920. It is to be noted that the sub-section makes in its terms no distinction between one kind of sub-letting and another.

It must now be taken as well settled by decisions of this court that the nature of the right or interest of a statutory tenant is that of a personal right of possession on the terms partly of the original contract of tenancy and partly derived from the statutes. The words "tenant," "sub-tenant," "tenancy," etc., are, therefore, used so as to comprehend such an interest involving no estate in the land recognised by the common law. The interest of the statutory tenant is not, therefore, capable of assignment, bequest or devolution to a trustee in bankruptcy: see, for example, Keeves v. Dean (1), Lovibond & Sons, Ltd. v. Vincent (2) and Sutton v. Dorf (3). As a matter of principle and logic it would appear, at first sight, necessarily to follow that a sub-tenancy, whether of the whole or of any part of the premises in question, must equally fail to confer on the grantee any such estate in the property. It is, however, plain from the terms of s. 15 (3) of the Act of 1920 that persons to whom a statutory tenant has purported to grant a sub-tenancy may thereby acquire at least a personal right to continue in possession, good against the landlord after the statutory tenancy has come to an end.

The effect of sub-lettings by statutory tenants of parts of dwelling-houses within the scope of the Rent Restrictions Acts had to be considered by this court in Roe v. Russell (4), and Haskins v. Lewis (5), but in neither of these cases was it necessary for the court to decide on the validity of a sub-letting, uno flatu, of the whole premises, or of part of the premises, the remainder having already been sub-let. In these cases, and particularly in the former, the court had to consider, in the light of the earlier decisions relating to assignment and devolution, whether, as a matter of principle, a sub-letting of part of the premises by a statutory tenant could have any force or validity. In Roe v. Russell (4), the Divisional Court had been faithful to logic and decided adversely to the sub-tenant. The Court of Appeal, reversing the Divisional Court, resolved the difficulty by concluding that a statutory tenant who had sub-let only part of the premises had not, quoad the premises as a whole, so renounced his personal right of irremovability as to disqualify him from retaining any interest in the premises and so from effectually conferring on his sub-tenant a valid right. It must, therefore, be taken as established by decision of this court that a sub-letting by a statutory tenant of part of his premises will be effectual to confer on the sub-tenant the rights specified in s. 15 (3) of the Act of 1920 if, at whatever be the material date or dates, the statutory tenant retained a sufficient possession of, or interest in, the remainder of the premises to preserve his own rights as statutory tenant.

Applying this principle to the facts of this case, we are of opinion that the landlords must fail, for, in our judgment, the material date on which to determine whether the principle applies is that of the issue of proceedings. On that date in the present case, namely, Aug. 20, 1946, Mrs. Jacobson, the sub-tenant of the part of the premises first sub-let, had gone out of possession. The remainder of the premises were not, therefore, on Aug. 20, in fact, sub-let. These premises were, as we have stated, then vacant, but the statutory tenant's furniture was on them, and, on the evidence, it seems reasonably clear that the statutory tenant had at no time abandoned the premises as her home. Norman v. Simpson (6), decided that, in determining whether a tenant (in that case a contractual tenant) had "lawfully sub-let" premises for the purposes of s. 15 (3) of the Act of 1920, it was sufficient, though the sub-letting had been originally "unlawful" in the sense that it had involved a breach of the tenant's obligations under the tenancy, that such breach had been waived and the "unlawfulness" thereby remedied at the date of the determination of the tenancy. From this case and others which have since followed it, the principle must now, in our judgment, be taken as established that in a case arising under s. 15 (3) of the Act of 1920 the relevant facts must be determined at the date of the institution of proceedings. We do not accept the view that the sub-tenancy to the sub-tenant in the present case, if ineffectual in law on Mar. 1, 1946, was thereafter incapable of being rendered effective. The contract, which was one of weekly tenancy, continued, inter partes, and was given effect to, in fact, by the possession thereunder of the sub-tenant. If, at the date when it was originally made, it was legally ineffectual to confer on the sub-tenant any right under the Acts, we can see no reason why thereafter, when the statutory tenant had regained actual possession of the remainder of the premises, it should not have become and remained effective so long as those conditions existed.

In our view, therefore, the sub-tenant was, on Aug. 20, 1946, a person falling within the definition of a sub-tenant to whom the premises had been sub-let, and (for the purposes of this part of the argument of counsel for the plaintiffs) it must be assumed lawfully sub-let, within s. 15 (3) of the Act of 1920. It becomes, accordingly, unnecessary for us to express any opinion on the questions (i) what was the effect of the sub-letting on its date, Mar. 1, 1946, and (ii) what would have been the position had Mrs. Jacobson remained in occupation of the part of the premises sub-let to her on Aug. 20, 1946, or (iii) on the more general question left undecided by Roe v. Russell (4) and

Haskins v. Lewis (5), whether a sub-letting by a statutory tenant, either of the whole premises or of part of the premises, the remainder being already sub-let, in each case in circumstances from which it could be inferred that there had been an abandonment by the statutory tenant of the whole premises or any part thereof as his home, would or could be effective to confer on the sub-tenant any right under s. 15 (3). On these matters we reserve our judgment. Should the last of them come before the courts and fall at any time to be considered by the highest tribunal, the House may consider whether the grounds stated by this court in Roe v. Russell (4), were necessary for its decision—whether, in other words, having regard to the characteristics of a statutory tenancy, the tenant's inability to pass to a third party by assignment or otherwise any right or interest in the property recognised by the law is a material or necessary consideration in determining whether a third party who is in actual occupation under a contract of "sub-tenancy" can claim the benefit of s. 15 (3) of the Act of 1920. It is also unnecessary, in the circumstances, for us to express any view on the argument, much relied on by counsel for the landlords, based on sched. I, para. (d), to the Act of 1933, which entitles a landlord to invoke the jurisdiction of the court if ... the tenant without the consent of the landlord has ... assigned or sub-let the whole of the dwelling-house or sub-let part of the dwelling-house, the remainder being already sub-let.

It is true that sub-lettings of the kind specified are treated, for the purposes of the paragraph, as being in pari materia with an assignment. On the other hand—particularly having regard to the reference to the landlord's consent—we are by no means satisfied, having regard to the express provisions of s. 15 (3) of the Act of 1920, that the language of the paragraph should be treated as supporting the view that such a "sub-letting" can have no more force and effect for any purpose than an "assignment." As we have already stated, at the material date in the present case the remainder of the premises were not, in fact, sub-let, and had not been for more than two weeks. In our judgment, therefore, the landlords are not entitled to succeed on the first part of their argument, assuming it to be open to them.

It, therefore, becomes necessary to consider their second point, which was argued before the county court judge and decided by him adversely to the landlords. It is common ground that the grant of the sub-tenancy to the sub-tenant was in breach of the contractual terms imported into the statutory tenancy, as it was also without the landlords' consent within sched. I, para. (d), to the Act of 1933. The county court judge held, however, that the acceptance by the landlords of two instalments of rent from the statutory tenant after they had full knowledge of the sub-letting waived the absence of consent—applying, in this respect, to the case of a statutory tenancy the well-established principles as to waiver appropriate to a common law lease. The argument of the landlords is that this analogy is false. In the case of a common law lease, the doctrine of waiver by acceptance of rent after knowledge of breach of covenant (other than continuing breach) proceeds, as they argue, from the premises that acceptance of rent in such circumstances is consistent, and consistent only, with an affirmation of the tenancy, whereas, in the case of a statutory tenancy, since such tenancy continues by virtue of the statute until the tenant dies or delivers up possession either voluntarily or under an order of the court and since the obligation to pay rent continues as an incident of the tenancy until its determination, receipt of rent after notice of an act by the statutory tenant which entitles the landlord to invoke the jurisdiction of the court to order possession is equivocal at best and cannot, therefore, operate per se as a waiver of the landlord's right to assert the "unlawfulness" of the sub-letting.

There is, we think, force in this argument. By the common law, which tended to construe forfeiture provisions as effective to render leases voidable and not void, a landlord was bound, as soon as he was fully aware of a non-continuing breach of covenant by the tenant entitling the landlord to avoid the lease, to elect at once for or against avoidance and to notify the tenant if he elected for the former. On this principle, acceptance of any rent accrued due after the landlord's knowledge of the tenant's breach was regarded necessarily as inconsistent with an election to avoid the lease and consistent only with its affirmance. The acceptance of the rent being, in the circumstances, an unequivocal act, waiver of the breach followed as a matter of law, according to PARKER, J. ([1910] 1 Ch. 786, 787) in Matthews-v. Smallwood (7). And so unequivocal was the act of acceptance of rent that the landlord was held disentitled to get the best of both worlds by attempts to qualify the acceptance by stating that he accepted the rent without prejudice to his rights of forfeiture: see the notes to Dumpor's Case (8) in SMITH'S LEADING CASES, 13th ed., vol. 1, p. 38, et seq. Nor do we think that these principles have been in any way qualified by the decision of this court in Elliott v. Boynton (9), relied on by the sub-tenant. That case only decided that the obligation to pay rent under a contractual tenancy continues until the tenancy is determined in fact by re-entry, namely, the issue of the writ for possession.

It must, in our judgment, be conceded that the principles of the common law above stated cannot apply, or cannot wholly apply, to a statutory tenancy. In the first place, the landlord of a statutory tenant has no right to avoid the tenancy. His only right is to invoke the jurisdiction of the court to make an order for possession and the tenancy continues until at least the date of the order. Secondly—and consequentially—the obligation of the tenant to pay rent and the right of the landlord to accept it continues notwithstanding the breach of covenant and notwithstanding the landlord's election to invoke the court's jurisdiction and the issue by him of his summons pursuant to his election. In our judgment, therefore, it may fairly be said that the acceptance of rent by a landlord after knowledge of a non-continuing breach of covenant by a tenant entitling the landlord to go to the court is not so unequivocal an act of affirmance of the tenancy as is acceptance of rent in like circumstances from a contractual tenant. On the other hand, it is, we think, important to bear in mind that under the scheme of the Rent Acts the incidents of tenancy as understood by our law continue to apply to a statutory tenancy so far as they are consistent with the provisions of the Acts. From long usage the acceptance of rent by a landlord after knowledge of circumstances giving rise to a claim for possession have come to be regarded by landlords and tenants alike as evidence of an intention to affirm the tenancy. Moreover, the landlord has, in the case of a statutory tenancy, a choice—he may either rely on the breach and go to the courts, or he may waive it—though his choice is not the same as that presented to the common law landlord. Finally, (and to this extent Elliott v. Boynton (9), in our view, assists the sub-tenant) the continuance of the obligation to pay rent under a contractual tenancy accruing after the breach for some period is not itself inconsistent with the landlord's election to forfeit.

If, therefore, it is not justifiable to treat the common law rule as entirely applicable to a statutory tenancy (as the county court judge implied), we think that the question whether in any case the acceptance of rent by the landlord is an unequivocal act of affirmance of the tenancy is a question of fact for the judge to determine in the circumstances of the case, and, if he decides that question of fact affirmatively, then the ordinary legal consequences would prima facie follow. Thus, we are strongly inclined to think that the strict common law rule in regard to a qualified acceptance of rent is not applicable to a statutory tenancy and that a qualified acceptance of rent from a statutory tenant is not necessarily fatal to the landlord's rights to seek an order for possession. As at present advised, we think that the fair rule is that a landlord who has acquired full knowledge of a non-continuing breach of covenant by a statutory tenant entitling him to invoke the court's jurisdiction should be entitled thereafter to receive rent and should not by reason of such receipt be held to have waived the breach, provided he makes it clear to the tenant at the time of or prior to the receipt that his receipt is without prejudice to his right to go to the court and provided he issues his summons for possession within such time as, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, the court hearing the summons regards as reasonable.

In the present case, the facts as regards waiver do not appear to have been very closely examined. It is, however, clear from the evidence that the tenant assumed from the acceptance of her rent after the fact of her sub-letting was known that her position had been secured. She, accordingly, took no step, as she might have done, to try to remedy her position. It is also clear from the evidence that the landlords' agents assumed that acceptance of rent after knowledge of the sub-letting would be fatal to any claim founded on the sub-letting and gave instructions accordingly to the collector of the rent—instructions which were, unfortunately for the landlords, disregarded on two occasions. In the circumstances, therefore, and bearing in mind the general background to which we have alluded, we come to the conclusion that, as a question of fact, the act of the landlords amounted, and were understood by the sub-tenant to amount, to such an unequivocal affirmation of the tenancy that they must be taken to have waived their statutory rights and condoned the absence of consent. For these reasons we think that the plaintiffs' second point also fails and that the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors: Leslie A. Fawke (for the appellant); Woolley, Tyler & Bury (for the respondents).

[Reported by R. L. ZIAR, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

BIRD v. HILDAGE.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Cohen and Evershed, L.JJ., and Lynskey, J.), April 23, 24, May 15, 1947.]

Landlord and Tenant—Rent restriction—Possession—Non-payment of rent—Waiver of past irregularities in payment—Rent “lawfully due”—Tender by tenant before proceedings commenced—Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933 (c. 32), sched. I, para. (a).

The statutory tenant of a dwelling-house had held as tenant from year to year of the landlord on the terms, except as to rent, of an expired lease. The rent was payable quarterly on the usual quarter days, but the landlord had been in the habit of allowing the tenant to make the payments a month or so after the due dates. The tenant failed to pay the rent due on Mar. 25, 1946, but tendered it to the landlord's solicitors on May 16, on which day the landlord sent the particulars of claim to the county court. The solicitors, on instructions, refused to accept the payment, and on May 21, 1946, the plaint was entered in the county court books. It was conceded that May 21 was the date of the commencement of the proceedings. The tenant paid the rent into court.

HELD: (i) where an act has to be done periodically, the fact that it has been done irregularly in the past does not, unless a variation of the agreement can be inferred, justify the assumption that the irregularity will be waived in the future, and, therefore, the landlord was entitled to take advantage of the non-payment of rent by the tenant although he had not given the tenant notice that he was going to insist in the future on the punctual fulfilment of the contract.

Panoutsos v. Raymond Hadley Corpn. of New York ([1917] 1 K.B. 767) explained.

(ii) even if, as a result of his forbearance in permitting irregularities, a landlord were disabled from terminating a contractual tenancy without first giving notice of his intention so to do, it did not follow that such forbearance ousted the jurisdiction of the court to give possession under the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933, sched. I, para. (a), unless the circumstances amounted to a variation of the terms of the tenancy.

(iii) where a tender of rent is made after the due date but before the commencement of proceedings for possession, such tender prevents rent being “lawfully due” from the tenant to the landlord within the meaning of para. (a) of sched. I to the Act of 1933, unless time has been made the essence of the contract.

(iv) if the words “lawfully due” must be taken to mean that the obligation to pay rent has arisen and not been discharged in fact, and if the offer made by the tenant was to be taken not to have discharged the debt, the words in para. (a) “and has not been paid” would, on the facts, be fatal to the landlord.

Per cur.: Although tender can never amount to payment, where time is not made the essence of the contract either expressly or impliedly it can always be made after the due date, and the creditor refuses at his peril.

[AS TO ORDERS FOR POSSESSION FOR BREACH OF TENANCY OBLIGATION, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 20, pp. 329, 330, paras. 392, 393; and FOR CASES see DIGEST, Vol. 31, pp. 578, 579, Nos. 7270-7275.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Panoutsos v. Raymond Hadley Corporation of New York, [1917] 1 K.B. 767; (C.A.) [1917] 2 K.B. 473; 86 L.J.K.B. 1325; 117 L.T. 330; 12 Digest 434, 3516. A
- (2) Re Tyrer & Co. and Hessler & Co. (1902), 86 L.T. 697; 9 Asp. M.L.C. 292; 7 Com. Cas. 166; 12 Digest 349, 2899.
- (3) Cape Asbestos Co. v. Lloyds Bank, Ltd., [1921] W.N. 274; Digest Supp.
- (4) Briggs v. Calverly (1800), 8 Term Rep. 629; 12 Digest 320, 2651.
- (5) Polglass v. Oliver (1831), 2 Cr. & J. 15; 2 Tyr. 89; 1 L.J. Ex. 5; 3 Digest 198, 431.
- (6) Beavis v. Carman, [1920] W.N. 159; 84 J.P. Jo. 197; 31 Digest 578, 7271.
- (7) Johnson v. Upham (1859), 2 E. & E. 250; 28 L.J.Q.B. 252; 33 L.T.O.S. 327; 18 Digest 326, 605. B
- (8) Johnson v. Clay (1817), 7 Taunt. 486; 1 Moore, C.P. 200; 12 Digest 319, 2634.
- (9) James v. Vane (Lord) (1860), 2 E. & E. 883; 29 L.J.Q.B. 169; 2 L.T. 281; 12 Digest 327, 2726.

APPEAL of the landlord from an order of His Honour JUDGE WILLES at Bakewell County Court, dated Sept. 10, 1946, dismissing the landlord's claim for possession of an unfurnished dwelling-house. C

The county court judge held that, in view of the previous conduct of the parties in relation to the payment and acceptance of rent after the due date, he had no jurisdiction, under the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933, s. 3 and sched. I, para. (a), to make an order for possession. The facts appear in the judgment.

H. A. Hill for the landlord. D

Charles Russell for the tenant.

Cur. adv. vult.

May 15. COHEN, L.J., read the following judgment of the court. When possession was based (a) on non-payment of rent and (b) on alleged breaches of covenant. The judge decided against the landlord on both grounds. On appeal to us the landlord did not seek to disturb the judge's findings as regards the other breaches of covenant, but he contended that the judge had erred in law in coming to the conclusion that there was no default in payment of the rent due by the tenant within the meaning of the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933, sched. I, para. (a). E

The tenant, who was a statutory tenant, had held as tenant to the landlord from year to year on the terms, except as to rent, of an expired lease dated Mar. 9, 1934, made between the landlord's predecessors in title and the tenant. The rent reserved under the expired lease had been £50 per annum payable half-yearly on Mar. 25, and Sept. 29, but when the lease expired the rent was increased to £65 per annum payable quarterly on the usual quarter days. The judge found as a fact that the former landlord and the landlord had been in the habit of allowing the tenant to make the quarterly payment of rent a month, or sometimes less or sometimes a little more than a month, in arrear, and had never asserted the right to complain of the delay in payment. The tenant failed to pay the rent due on Mar. 25, 1946, and on May 21, 1946, the plaintiff in this matter was entered in the county court books. There could be no doubt that the rent had not been paid on the due date, but the judge held that, in view of the previous conduct of the parties in relation to the payment and acceptance of rent after the due date, he had no jurisdiction under the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933, s. 3 and sched. I, to make an order for possession. The reasons for this conclusion are to be found in a passage in his judgment where he says: F

A landlord cannot suffer periodic defaults and then without warning suddenly terminate the contract on the ground that the rent is not paid punctually. He has the right to punctual payment, but if he wants to get back to that right, after suffering a continual series of delays, he must give the tenant notice he is going to insist on the future fulfilment of his contract. I think that is the right view having regard to the judgment of BAILLACHE, J., in Panoutsos v. Raymond Hadley Corpn. G H

(1), which counsel was good enough to read to me. In view of the principle underlying that decision, I find it impossible to hold that there was, within the meaning of para. (a) of the schedule to the Act, a default in payment of the rent by the tenant to the landlord which justifies me in saying that there was a breach of contract and gives me power to enforce this contract.

A In our view, the decision cited does not justify the conclusion which the judge reached nor is that conclusion well-founded in principle. In Panoutsos v. Raymond Hadley Corpn. (1), there was a contract for delivery of 4,000 tons of flour to be dispatched by steamer or steamers not later than Nov. 7, 1915. The contract provided that each shipment was to be deemed a separate contract, but there was a provision: "Payment by confirmed credit." As we understand the statement of facts in the case, this provision was interpreted as meaning that before deliveries commenced the buyer was to open a confirmed credit for the whole amount due under the contract. He did open a credit for the full amount, but it was not irrevocable, and was, therefore, not a "confirmed credit" within the meaning of the contract. None the less, the sellers made some shipments for which they were duly paid. When they made these shipments, they were aware that the credit was not irrevocable. The sellers then purported to cancel the balance of the contract on the ground (among others) that the buyer had failed to open a "confirmed credit." The buyer refused to accept this cancellation, and it was held that, by waiving for a time the breach of the condition precedent as to a confirmed credit, the sellers were not bound to act on the existing credit up to the end of the contract, but that they were not entitled to cancel the contract on that ground without giving to the buyer reasonable notice of their intention so to do, thereby enabling the buyer to remedy the default. In the course of his judgment BAILHACHE, J., said ([1917] 1 K.B. 770):

D If they desire to cancel the contract in circumstances such as these I think that they must give some reasonable notice to the other party of their intention so to do. The sellers have not given any such reasonable notice. In my opinion, therefore, the sellers struck too soon, and a cancellation of the contract on the ground that the credit was not in order ought to have been preceded, in the circumstances of this case, by a reasonable notice to the buyer that they would cancel the contract.

E The case went to the Court of Appeal, who affirmed the decision of BAILHACHE, J., but in the course of his judgment, in which LORD COZENS-HARDY, M.R. and SCRUTTON, L.J. concurred, VISCOUNT READING, C.J., pointed out the distinction between the case with which the court was dealing and a case such as Re Tyrer & Co. and Hessler & Co. (2), saying ([1917] 2 K.B. 478):

F The case of In re Tyrer & Co., and Hessler & Co. (2), was cited as an authority for the proposition that the moment the sellers chose to avail themselves of the failure to perform the condition precedent they could put an end to the contract without giving the buyer an opportunity of remedying the default which had hitherto been waived. That case is not an authority for that proposition. It shows that, where there are stipulated times in a charterparty for payment of the hire of a ship and a power to withdraw the ship if the payment is not made at the stipulated time, the mere fact that there has been default in payment at one or more stipulated times, of which advantage has not been taken, does not entitle the party in default at a subsequent time to a notice so as to enable him to comply with the condition before the right to withdraw arises. That is a totally different case from the present.

G The true basis of the decision of BAILHACHE, J., in Panoutsos v. Raymond Hadley Corpn. (1), is made still more plain by that judge himself in Cape Asbestos Co. v. Lloyds Bank, Ltd. (3), where he said ([1921] W.N. 275):

H That case [i.e., Panoutsos v. Raymond Hadley Corpn. (1)] was an authority for the proposition that where an act had to be done by the buyer of goods, such, for instance, as the opening of a confirmed banker's credit, and he did not perform that act, and the seller nevertheless went on delivering the goods with knowledge that the act had not been performed, the seller could not suddenly cancel the contract and refuse to make further deliveries without giving the buyer reasonable notice of his intention so as to give the buyer an opportunity of putting himself right. That case was no authority for the proposition, that where an act had to be done periodically, as, for instance, the delivery of a bill of lading in such a case as the present, the fact that it had been done irregularly in the past justified the assumption that the irregularity would be waived in the future. The Panoutsos (1) case had only reference to an act which had to be done once for all, and not to an act which had to be done periodically.

In the present case, the quarterly instalments of rent are plainly periodical acts and we respectfully agree with the observations made by BAILHACHE, J., in the passage last cited. Indeed, it would be most unfortunate if, in such a case, mere forbearance by a landlord to exercise his rights of distress or re-entry on one or more occasions was held to bind him for the future, since landlords would then tend to be more harsh in the enforcement of their legal rights. There may, no doubt, be cases where the court can properly infer from the conduct of the parties a variation of the original agreement. LYNSEY, J., gave an illustration of such a case in the course of the argument, when he put to counsel the case where the tenancy agreement provided for the payment of weekly rent on a Monday, but for the convenience of the landlord the rent was always collected on a Wednesday. We can find here no evidence of any such variation of the contract, and, in our opinion, the reasons given by the judge do not justify the conclusion which he reached.

There is, moreover, this further reason for our conclusion. We are concerned in this case, not with the question whether, by reason of a breach by the tenant of one of his obligations, the landlord can determine the contract of tenancy, but with the question whether, by the terms of the statute, the court has jurisdiction to entertain the suit. Parliament has provided that such jurisdiction arises if "any rent lawfully due from the tenant has not been paid." Even if, as a result of his forbearance, a landlord were disabled from terminating a contractual tenancy without first giving notice of an intention so to do, it by no means follows that such forbearance ousts the jurisdiction of the court. As a matter of construction of the statute, unless the circumstances amounted to a variation of the terms of the tenancy or (as counsel for the tenant concedes they would not) estopped the landlord from averring that any rent was, in fact, due or unpaid, it is, in our opinion, impossible to say that the conditions of the statute are not satisfied.

Counsel for the tenant sought, however, to support the judge's judgment on another ground. He said that, the rent having been tendered before the plaint was entered and such tender having been refused, no part was, at the date of the institution of proceedings, lawfully due and unpaid. The relevant facts to enable us to decide this point are as follows: (1) Payment of rent had always been made by cheque sent to the landlord's solicitors. (2) On May 15 the tenant sent by post to the landlord's solicitors a cheque for £16 5s. 0d., the amount of rent due on Mar. 25. (3) This letter was received on May 16 and on the same day the landlord sent the particulars of claim by post to the county court. (4) On May 17 the landlord's solicitors replied to the letter of May 15. The first paragraph of their letter is in the following terms:

We are in receipt of your letter of the 15th inst. but are obliged to return your cheque in accordance with instructions. The matter has now been entered in the Bakewell County Court.

(5) Owing to some defect in the particulars of claim the plaint was not, in fact, entered in the county court books until May 21. Counsel for the landlord conceded that, despite the dispatch of the particulars of claim to the county court on May 16, May 21 must be taken as the date of commencement of these proceedings: see Briggs v. Calverly (4). He also admitted that, having regard to the terms of the letters which have been read, he could not dispute that, although tender had been by cheque, the rent due on Mar. 25 had been tendered before action brought: see Polglass v. Oliver (5); and that the landlord had refused to accept that rent. It was also agreed that the tenant had paid the amount of the rent into court. In these circumstances, counsel for the tenant argued that no rent lawfully due was unpaid. His argument depended in part on the construction of the Act, and we must, therefore, refer to the relevant provisions which are to be found in the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933, s. 3, and sched. I thereto. Section 3, provides:

(1) No order or judgment for the recovery of possession of any dwelling-house to which the principal Acts apply or for the ejectment of a tenant therefrom shall be made or given unless the court considers it reasonable to make such an order or give such a judgment, and (a) the court has power so to do under the provisions set out in sched. I to this Act . . .

Schedule I provides :

A A court shall, for the purposes of s. 3 of this Act, have power to make or give an order or judgment for the recovery of possession of any dwelling-house to which the principal Acts apply or for the ejectment of a tenant therefrom without proof of suitable alternative accommodation (where the court considers it reasonable so to do) if (a) any rent lawfully due from the tenant has not been paid, or any other obligation of the tenancy (whether under the contract of tenancy or under the principal Acts), so far as the obligation is consistent with the provisions of the principal Acts, has been broken or not performed . . .

B The first question that arises is of the date on which we have to determine whether the rent had been paid or not. Counsel for the landlord argued that that date was the date fixed by the contract for the payment thereof. He pointed out that under the second branch of para. (a) of the schedule, in determining whether an obligation had been broken, the court had merely to
C look at the terms of the obligation and see whether it had, in fact, been broken. The fact that the breach had been made good would not deprive the court of jurisdiction though it would, of course, be relevant in determining whether it was reasonable to make an order for possession. So, he said, in the case of rent, events subsequent to the due date fixed by the terms of the tenancy for the payment of rent are relevant only on the question of reasonableness. We are unable to accede to this argument. It requires, as D it seems to us, the word "punctually" to be read into the language of the paragraph before the word "paid." Alternatively, had the argument been well-founded, the paragraph would, we think, have read somewhat as follows : "if—(a) any obligation of the tenancy (whether as regards rent or otherwise and whether under the contract of tenancy or under the principal Acts), so far as the obligation is consistent with the provisions of the principal Acts, has been broken or not performed." Section 3 and sched. I lay down the E circumstances in which the court may make an order or give a judgment for recovery of possession, and we think that, in reaching a conclusion whether any rent is lawfully due and has not been paid, the court must look at the date of commencement of the proceedings by which the landlord is seeking to recover possession. The rights of the parties crystallised at that date, and nothing happening thereafter could, in our opinion, deprive the court of jurisdiction to make an order for recovery of possession, if the court thought it reasonable to do so : see Beavis v. Carmen (6). In that case the plaintiff sought to recover possession from the defendant and the defendant relied on the Rent and Mortgage Interest (War Restrictions) Act, 1915, s. 1 (3), which provided :

F No order for the recovery of possession of a dwelling-house to which this Act applies or for the ejectment of a tenant therefrom shall be made so long as the tenant continues to pay rent at the agreed rate as modified by this Act and performs the other conditions of the tenancy.

G The tenant had failed to pay the rent up to the date of commencement of the proceedings, but tendered the rent after he had been served with the writ in the action. He contended that he had thus put himself in the position of a tenant who had paid rent at the agreed rate as modified by the Act. The judge rejected the contention saying : "to give effect to that contention would be to disregard the true meaning of the enactment. The plaintiff had a right to recover possession of the premises when the writ was served, and nothing had happened since to deprive her of that right." The case deals only with tender of rent after proceedings brought and does not deal with the case of tender before the institution of the proceedings, which, in our view, is the material date.

H Before the court can have jurisdiction the landlord must prove two things, namely, (1) that some rent was lawfully due from the tenant at the date of the institution of the proceedings, and (2) that such rent was unpaid. The question, therefore, arises in the present case : Was any rent lawfully due from the tenant on May 21, 1946, to the landlord ? In our view, rent is not lawfully due unless it can be recovered by process at law. A landlord may recover rent lawfully due in two ways, i.e., either by distress or by judgment in an action. In this case it is admitted that a valid tender was made of the rent due on Mar. 25, 1946, amounting to £16 5s. 0d., on May 16, 1946. As a result of that tender, the landlord could not thereafter distrain for his rent : Johnson v. Upham (7), and see HILL & REDMAN: LAW OF LANDLORD AND TENANT, 10th ed., p. 323. Equally, in view of that tender and the payment into court which the tenant was entitled to make and did make as the result of that tender, the landlord could not obtain judgment for his rent, and, in fact, did not do so : see Johnson v. Clay (8), and James v. Vane (9), per COCKBURN, C.J. (29 L.J.Q.B. 171).

The result is, in our view, that where tender of rent is made, even after the due date where time is not made the essence of the contract, such tender prevents rent being lawfully due from the tenant to the landlord within the meaning of the schedule. It would be a very curious construction of the schedule if the result was that, although a landlord could not succeed in an action to recover judgment for his rent, he could nevertheless require the court to exercise its jurisdiction on the ground that rent was lawfully due to him and unpaid. Although tender can never amount to payment, where time is not made the essence of the contract, either expressly or impliedly, it can always be made after the due date, and the creditor refuses at his peril. If the creditor does refuse it and subsequently brings proceedings to recover the debt and a payment into court is made, he cannot recover judgment. Judgment will be given against him for the costs of the proceedings as a plea of tender is a defence to a claim that the defendant is indebted to him. Where the debtor has a defence in law to a claim for money, whether it be rent or otherwise, it seems to us impossible to say that the money claimed is lawfully due from the debtor to the creditor or the tenant to the landlord.

We add that, in our judgment, if the words "lawfully due" must be taken to mean that the obligation to pay rent has arisen and not been discharged in fact, and if the offer made by the tenant in the present case is to be taken not to have discharged the debt, the words "has not been paid" would in the circumstances of this case be fatal to the landlord. As a matter of English law the words "pay" and "paid" do not necessarily import both the act of offering the money and the act of its acceptance. If rent is taken to be lawfully due so long as the debt is undischarged, it would have been sufficient for the paragraph to have said "if any rent is lawfully due," and a landlord could always invoke the jurisdiction of the court by declining to accept rent a day after the due date for its payment. For these reasons, which differ from those given by the county court judge, we think his decision was right and that the appeal must be dismissed accordingly.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors : Sharpe, Pritchard & Co., agents for H. Shelley Barker & Son, Sheffield (for the landlord); Cree & Son, agents for Brooke Taylor & Co., Sheffield (for the tenant).

Explained. R. v. PADDINGTON AND ST. MARLBORNE RENT TRIBUNAL. [1949] 1 All E.R. 720. Reported by R. L. ZIAR, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

R. v. HAMPSTEAD AND ST. PANCRAS RENT TRIBUNAL, Ex parte ASCOT LODGE, LTD.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., Atkinson and Oliver, JJ.), May 8, 1947.]

Landlord and Tenant—Rent control—"Rent which includes payment for use of furniture or for services"—Need of contractual obligation of landlord—Breach of contract—Jurisdiction of tribunal—Furnished Houses (Rent Control) Act, 1946 (c. 34), ss. 2 (1), 12 (1).

In the absence of any contractual obligation on the landlord to provide furniture or services the rent of premises cannot be said to include "payment for the use of furniture or for services" within s. 2 (1) of the Furnished Houses (Rent Control) Act, 1946, and, consequently, a rent tribunal has no jurisdiction to hear and determine a case referred to it by the lessee of such premises.

Per curiam : Where there is a provision for the supply of furniture or services, or both, the tribunal must see what the lease provides and consider whether the rent reserved is a fair rent for the use of the premises with those services, but the Act gives the tribunal no power to decide questions of breach of contract or to award compensation to tenants for breaches of contract by way of reduction of rent. Where, therefore, a tribunal has jurisdiction to hear a case it is not entitled to reduce the rent merely because the landlord is not providing that which he has contracted to provide.

[FOR THE FURNISHED HOUSES (RENT CONTROL) ACT, 1946, ss. 2 (1), 12 (1), see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 39, pp. 230, 234.]

A Cases referred to :

- (1) Gray v. Fidler, [1943] 2 All E.R. 289 ; [1943] 1 K.B. 694 ; 112 L.J.K.B. 627 ; 169 L.T. 193 ; Digest Supp.
- (2) Property Holdings Co., Ltd. v. Mischeff, [1946] 2 All E.R. 294 ; [1946] 1 K.B. 645 ; 175 L.T. 192.

B MOTION on behalf of the landlords for an order of prohibition addressed to the Hampstead and St. Pancras Rent Tribunal on the ground that, the premises having been let unfurnished, the tribunal had no jurisdiction to entertain an application by the tenant under s. 2 (1) of the Furnished Houses (Rent Control) Act, 1946.

Paull, K.C., Percy Lamb and Denis Purcell for the landlords.

H. L. Parker for the tribunal.

C C. L. Hawser for the tenants.

LORD GODDARD, C.J. : The Furnished Houses (Rent Control) Act, 1946, s. 2 (1) provides :

Where a contract has, whether before or after the passing of this Act, been entered into whereby one person (hereinafter referred to as the "lessor") grants to another person (hereinafter referred to as the "lessee") the right to occupy as a residence a house or part of a house situated in a district in which this Act is in force in consideration of a rent which includes payment for the use of furniture or for services, whether or not, in the case of such a contract with regard to part of a house, the lessee is entitled, in addition to exclusive occupation thereof, to the use in common with any other person of other rooms or accommodation in the house, it shall be lawful for either party to the contract or for the local authority to refer the contract to the tribunal for the district . . .

Then the tribunal may call upon the lessor to provide certain information, to answer certain questions. If he fails to do so, he is liable to a penalty.

E By s. 12 :

(1) . . . "services" includes attendance, the provision of heating or lighting, the supply of hot water and any other privilege or facility connected with the occupancy of a house or part of a house, not being a privilege or facility requisite for the purposes of access, cold water supply or sanitary accommodation . . . (2) Where separate sums are payable by the lessee of any premises to the lessor for any two or more of the following, namely :—(a) occupation of the premises ; (b) use of furniture ; and (c) services ; the expression "rent" shall, in relation to those premises, mean the aggregate of those sums, and where such sums are payable under separate contracts, those contracts shall be deemed to be one contract.

F The object of sub-s. (2) was probably to deal with the common case of service flats, where one pays separate sums for the rent and for the services rendered by the servants of the landlord, and to prevent a landlord getting out of the provisions of the Act by inserting in his lease merely a sum for the rent of the flat or rooms and having a separate agreement for the furniture, which he might put in at an extravagant figure.

G In the present case prohibition is moved on behalf of the owners of a block of flats on the ground that the tribunal has no jurisdiction to inquire into the rent or to entertain an application by the tenants because this is an unfurnished letting under which the landlords do not agree to supply furniture or to supply services. To see whether that is right or not, one has to look at the lease which makes the matter perfectly clear. The landlords let the premises for a sum of £240, and there is not a word in the lease about furniture or providing services as is found in some leases. It is said that, in fact, there was furniture, but the only pretence for saying there was furniture is that, instead of there being ordinary fireplaces, there was what is called panel heating, an electric fire which becomes part of the wall of the flat, and a part of the fittings generally called, I think, an electric immersion heater. It was made clear to the tenants that they had to pay for the electricity. I do not think anybody, by any stretch of imagination, could describe as furniture a panel electric fire which is just as much part of the structure as an ordinary fireplace. We have the authority of the Court of Appeal in Gray v. Fidler (1)—and it is also common sense—that, in considering the word “furniture” in these Acts, one has to give it its ordinary, every-day meaning. I am sure no one would speak of an immersion heater or a panel fireplace as furniture.

With regard to services, we are told that there are on the premises porters who do this, that and the other things for the tenants. But it was decided in Property Holdings Co., Ltd. v. Mischeff (2) that, for a purpose so similar to the present that there is no distinction to be drawn, “attendance” means attendance to which the tenant is contractually entitled. The tenant is not contractually entitled to any service in the present case. In Property Holdings Co., Ltd. v. Mischeff (2) the Court of Appeal ([1946] 2 All E.R. 296) cited with approval a passage from the judgment of HENN COLLINS, J., in the court below, in which he said :

Taking next the presence of the hall porters, the plaintiffs undertake to use every precaution to employ no one but a competent and trustworthy person as resident porter, but beyond that their obligation does not go.

In this case there is not even that provision. Then he goes on :

Though the porter may, and no doubt does, make himself obliging to the tenants, he has no duty to perform for them, and I do not think that such attendance as he chooses to give can be said to be any part of that for which the tenant pays his rent. Much the same considerations apply to the removal of refuse. The receptacles are in practice removed from the back doors of the flats, by someone employed by the plaintiffs, to the point of collection by the local authority, but this service is not stipulated for in the lease and the tenant would have no valid ground of complaint if he was left to make his own arrangements for this to be done. I do not think “attendance” can be extended to anything to which the tenant is not contractually entitled.

Whether one agrees with that, or not—and I assuredly do—that is an opinion binding on this court. Accordingly, I can find nothing here which enables the tenant to say that the rent which he is paying is in respect of either furniture or services. That he may expect to get, and that it is highly probable that he will get, a certain amount of attendance, is another thing. There is no contractual obligation on the landlord to provide it, and the rent reserved by the lease is, therefore, nothing to do with the attendance or the furniture.

That is enough to dispose of this case, but I wish to say one other word. If the lease had contained a provision that the landlord was to provide furniture or services, then, no doubt, the rent tribunal would have had jurisdiction to entertain the case, but I desire to say for the guidance of these rent tribunals, that because they have jurisdiction to entertain the case, it does not mean that they can reduce the rent merely because the landlord is not providing that which he has contracted to provide. The Act gives no power to the rent tribunal to decide questions of breach of contract or to award compensation to tenants for breaches of contract by way of reduction of rent. In a case where there is a provision for the supply of services or furniture, or both, the only way, in my judgment, in which the tribunal can approach the case is for them to see what the lease provides and consider whether the rent reserved is a fair rent for the use of the premises with those services. If it is, then it seems to me the rent tribunal can do nothing. If they come to the conclusion, say, that £250 a year is a fair rent for the flat with services which the landlord has undertaken to provide, there is an end of the matter. The fact that the landlord has not provided them means that the landlord is in breach of his covenant, and for the breach of covenant the law gives a remedy in damages. These damages have to be sued for and assessed in a court of law, either the county court or the High Court, according to the amount of the damage which has been sustained, but it is important to say, and I say it for the guidance of the tribunals, that the Act does not, in my judgment, give them any power to reduce the rent because they find that the landlord has not provided services stipulated for in the lease. They would then be abrogating to themselves the right of deciding a question of breach of covenant, which they have no power to decide, and assessing damages which they have no power to assess, because the law does not allow the rent to be reduced as a result of the landlord not having performed his covenant. In my opinion, the order for prohibition must go.

ATKINSON, J. : I agree. Reading the affidavits filed on behalf of the tenant it seems to me plain that his real complaint is that the landlord made certain promises which were never carried out, and he (the tenant) thinks he has a claim for damages for breach of those promises. That is a case with which the tribunal has no power to deal.

OLIVER, J. : I agree.

Order accordingly.

A Solicitors : Thompson & Co. (for the landlords); Solicitor, Ministry of Health (for the tribunal); Lesser, Garber & Selby (for the tenants).
[Reported by F. A. AMIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

irmed. C.A. [1948] 2 All E.R. 528.

B R. v. PADDINGTON AND ST. MARYLEBONE RENT TRIBUNAL, Ex parte BEDROCK INVESTMENTS, LTD.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., Atkinson and Oliver, JJ.),
May 8, 12, 13, 1947.]

C Landlord and Tenant—Rent control—Furnished house—Reduction of rent—Reduction below amount of standard rent—Furnished Houses (Rent Control) Act, 1946 (c. 34), s. 7.

There is no jurisdiction in a rent tribunal set up under the Furnished Houses (Rent Control) Act, 1946, to reduce the rent of any premises below the standard rent for those premises. The tribunal is, in effect, forbidden to do so by s. 7 of the Act which preserves, inter alia, the standard rent and all rights in respect of it, whether of the landlord or the tenant.

D The provision by a landlord of services cannot, in the absence of contractual obligation to supply such services, operate to bring a letting within the jurisdiction of a rent tribunal under the Furnished Houses (Rent Control) Act, 1946.

R. v. Hampstead and St. Pancras Rent Tribunal, Ex p. Ascot Lodge, Ltd. (ante p. 12), followed.

E [FOR THE FURNISHED HOUSES (RENT CONTROL) ACT, 1946, s. 7, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 39, p. 233.]

Cases referred to :

- (1) R. v. Hampstead and St. Pancras Rent Tribunal, Ex p. Ascot Lodge, Ltd., [1947] 2 All E.R. 12.
- (2) Phillips v. Copping, [1935] 1 K.B. 15; 104 L.J.K.B. 78; 152 L.T. 175; Digest Supp.
- (3) Regional Properties, Ltd. v. Oxley, [1945] 2 All E.R. 418; [1945] A.C. 347; 114 L.J.K.B. 473; 173 L.T. 201; Digest Supp.
- (4) Michael v. Phillips, [1924] 1 K.B. 16; 93 L.J.K.B. 21; 130 L.T. 142; 31 Digest 568, 7155.
- (5) Property Holdings Co., Ltd. v. Mischeff, [1946] 2 All E.R. 294; [1946] 1 K.B. 645; 175 L.T. 192.

G MOTIONS for orders of certiorari to bring up to be quashed orders made under the Furnished Houses (Rent Control) Act, 1946, by the Paddington and St. Marylebone Rent Tribunal, whereby they reduced the rent of certain flats. The facts appear in the judgment of LORD GODDARD, C.J.

Paull, K.C., P. Lamb and J. D. Purcell for the applicants (the landlords).
H. L. Parker for the Paddington and St. Marylebone Rent Tribunal.
Bernstein for the tenants.

H LORD GODDARD, C.J. : The applications were made on two grounds. First, it is said that the tribunal had no jurisdiction to hear the cases in question, because the houses all fell within the provisions of the Rent Restrictions Acts and so outside the scope of the Furnished Houses (Rent Control) Act, 1946. Secondly, it was said that, as the leases contained no provision whereby the landlords were bound to render services, there was no question but that they were let unfurnished and the tribunal had no jurisdiction, following the decision of this court in R. v. Hampstead and St. Pancras Rent Tribunal, Ex p. Ascot Lodge, Ltd. (1).

Explained. R. v. PADDINGTON AND ST. MARYLEBONE RENT TRIBUNAL.

It was agreed that all these flats come within the Rent Restrictions Acts, and the question turns on the provisions of the Furnished Houses (Rent Control) Act, 1946, s. 7. We are not concerned with the policy of the Act of 1946 except, of course, in so far as it throws light on its interpretation, and it is a sound rule that we have to look at the mischief intended to be cured as well as to the remedy provided. The mischief was the letting of property at an excessive rent where furniture or services were provided, either or both of which might be of little value. It cannot be contended that no house or flat which was controlled by the Rent Acts could come within the jurisdiction of the tribunal. That would often be exactly the sort of property which it would be most proper should be dealt with by such tribunals. A landlord with a flat with a controlled rent of, say, £80 a year might put in a few sticks of furniture or provide a service of some trifling nature and then charge an excessive rent. What is contended here is that while, where a house is within the Rent Acts, there may be jurisdiction to hear the case and give certain relief, the tribunal has no right to reduce the rent below the standard rent.

The Furnished Houses (Rent Control) Act, 1946, s. 7, provides :

Sections 9 and 10 of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (which relate respectively to limitation on rent of houses let furnished and to penalty for excessive charges for furnished lettings) shall not apply as regards the rent charged for any house or part of a house entered in the register under the provisions of this Act in respect of any period subsequent to such registration, but save as aforesaid nothing in this Act shall affect any provisions of the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Acts, 1920 to 1939.

It is not disputed that the rents fixed by the tribunal in this case are below the standard rent. It is true that the rents are those of a first letting of these flats after the houses were converted, so that the rents in the actual leases before the court are the standard rents, but that is fortuitous, and makes no difference. If the tribunal had jurisdiction to do what they have done here, they could act in the same way if the standard rent was one that had been fixed since the Rent Acts first came into force, even if the first letting had been 50 years ago and the rent then fixed had become the standard. It would, indeed, be a curious result if a landlord who lets a flat at the standard rent, which incontestably is the rent recoverable under the Rent Acts, should be liable to have that rent reduced merely because he agrees to give his tenant something in addition, such as hot water or central heating, or puts in some furniture and still charges only the standard rent. It is, of course, in the highest degree unlikely that a new letting would ever be made at or under the standard rent, with something given in addition. It is not at all unlikely that a landlord might let a flat or rooms at the standard rent and give something in addition for a further consideration. If that is done, the additional consideration has to be regarded as part of the rent under s. 12 (2) of the Act of 1946, and I have no doubt the tribunal can then take the matter into consideration, and if they see fit, give a reduction, so, however, that they do not reduce the total sum payable below the standard rent. If they can reduce the standard rent, I do not see how it can be said that they are not affecting the provisions of the Rent Acts by using the provisions of the Furnished Houses (Rent Control) Act. Jurisdiction to fix standard rents and to apportion rents is given to the county court judge without appeal, and I should expect very clear words in the present Act if it were intended that these tribunals could deal with rents determined by the courts. Here the language of s. 7 seems to me to contemplate the exact opposite. If the tribunal can reduce the standard rent, I can attach no meaning to the concluding words of s. 7. Whatever else they can do, it seems to me clear they cannot affect the standard rent. If they could, the resulting situation would be startling indeed. In the case of, say, a weekly or monthly tenancy, where the contractual rent is less than the standard rent, a landlord can determine the tenancy by notice, and let again to the tenant at the standard rent, but under this Act he would, apparently, be deprived of this right because the registered rent becomes the rent for all purposes.

Counsel for the rent tribunal agreed that a difficulty might arise in the case of a statutory tenant, and suggested that, as there was in that case no contract, the provisions of the Act of 1946 might not apply, but take the case of a house let at £x, and reduced to £x-£y so that it is under the standard rent. The tenant dies, and a member of his family asserts his right to remain as a statutory tenant. It has been decided by the Court of Appeal in Phillips v. Copping (2), approved in the House of Lords in Regional Properties, Ltd. v. Oxley (3), that the statutory tenant could then be charged the standard rent, yet the landlord might find himself faced with an order fixing the rent until the expiration of the Furnished Houses (Rent Control) Act, as in the present case, though possibly it might be for a shorter period, prohibiting him from demanding the higher rent except by exposing himself to fine and imprisonment.

In my opinion, there is no jurisdiction in these tribunals to reduce the rent below the standard rent. They are forbidden to do so by s. 7, which preserves, among other things, the standard rent, and leaves untouched all rights in respect of it, whether of the landlord or the tenant. If they find a house, the standard rent of which is £x, and it is let for £x plus £y, £y representing the use of furniture or services, they can deal with £y as they like, so long as the total is not reduced below £x. This is enough to dispose of all the cases, but the further point is taken that the landlords have not covenanted to supply anything, and, therefore, the case is covered by the recent decision of this court in R. v. Hampstead and St. Pancras Rent Tribunal, Ex p. Ascot Lodge, Ltd. (1). It is said in answer that the tenants are given the right to use a bathroom in common with others, and, therefore, the landlord impliedly covenanted to supply hot water. Further, it is said that he supplies electricity for lighting, because he makes no charge for it, though he does for power, the power current being supplied through slot meters from which the money is collected. The answer to that, I think, is the same as in R. v. Hampstead and St. Pancras Rent Tribunal (1). The lease imposes no obligation on the landlord to supply hot water, any more than it imposes an obligation on the tenant to use the bathroom. There is no ground, in my opinion, for implying any covenant, and none ought ever to be implied unless there is such a necessary implication that the court can have no doubt what covenant or undertaking they ought to write into the agreement. So far as the supply of electricity is concerned, here again there is no promise to supply it.

I think it is desirable to add one word, again for the guidance of these tribunals. We have already pointed out in R. v. Hampstead and St. Pancras Rent Tribunal (1) that they cannot try breaches of contract and reduce rents because a landlord has not given something which he undertook by his contract to provide. Still less can they reduce rents because the landlord may have represented that he would provide something as to which the lease is silent. In some of these cases it is clear that what the tenants are really saying is that the lease does not give them that for which they bargained. If that be so, their remedy is rectification, which can be decreed only by a court of equity and not by a Furnished Houses Rent Tribunal. In my opinion, the orders for certiorari must go.

ATKINSON, J. : I agree. These applications concern a number of leases and lettings relating to three blocks of flats in Craven Hill Gardens. The leases or tenancy agreements are all in precisely the same form. The flats are let, along with the right in common with others, to use the "water closets, lavatory accommodation and bathrooms situate in the said building." It is not suggested that there is any furniture in any of the rooms, and the contract provides for no services whatever. It is plain that they are not contracts within the Furnished Houses (Rent Control) Act, 1946, but, it is said, electricity is supplied for lighting purposes and hot water is supplied to the different flats, and it is argued that the rendering of these services brings the lettings within the Act. However, I adhere to the view which this court expressed in R. v. Hampstead and St. Pancras Rent Tribunal (1), that services voluntarily rendered do not bring lettings within the Act which otherwise would not be within the Act. It is the contract that has to be considered. This seems to me to be perfectly plain if one looks at ss. 2 and 3 of the Act. Section 2 provides :

(1) where a contract has . . . been entered into whereby one person (hereinafter referred to as the "lessor") grants to another person (hereinafter referred to as the "lessee") the right to occupy as a residence a house or part of a house situated in a district in which this Act is in force in consideration of a rent which includes payment for the use of furniture or for services, . . . it shall be lawful for either party to the contract or for the local authority to refer the contract to the tribunal for the district,

... (2) Where any contract to which this Act applies is referred to a tribunal ... the tribunal shall consider it, and, after making such inquiry as they think fit ... shall approve the rent payable under the contract or reduce it ...

It seems clear that it is the contract, and nothing else, that can be referred to the tribunal. A similar question arose with regard to the Rent Restrictions Acts in Michael v. Phillips (4). There it was argued that, if there was a letting and certain furniture was included, although not provided for in the letting, that ought to be enough to take the house out of the Acts, but BANKES, L.J., A said :

Mr. Matthews argued strenuously that the facts of the case must be considered without regard to the obligations in the lease and that if the rent of the tenement in fact covered attendance then it ought to be held that the case came within proviso (i) to s. 12 (2). I cannot agree. On the plain construction of the proviso it applies only to board, attendance and use of furniture which as between the landlord and tenant the landlord has contracted to provide. B

SCRUTTON, L.J., said the same thing. The same view was taken in Property Holdings Co., Ltd. v. Mischeff (5), where the headnote says :

Held (1) that since there was no contractual right on the part of the tenant to such attendance as was in fact provided, the flat was not let at a rent which included payments in respect of attendance. C

It seems to me that the forms which are sent to the lessee by the tribunal for him to fill in are framed on the wrong basis. There is no question asking what services are contracted for. Question No. 5 is : " Services provided for you by the lessor," and, of course, services which are, in fact, provided may be filled in although they have no relation to the contract. That indicates that the tribunal is approaching these questions from a totally wrong point of view. If the tenant contends that the lease does not contain the real terms agreed on, he may or may not have a case for rectification, but, if he has, he must seek that rectification in the appropriate courts. These tribunals have no power to rectify contracts or to treat them as rectified without even going through the process of rectifying. It was argued that, at any rate, the facts here indicate an implied obligation to provide hot water. My Lord has dealt with that, but I would add that it is clear that, if the question had been raised, the landlord might well have said : " I am not going to enter into any contractual obligation to supply hot water. I may not be able to get coal. I am not going to promise, because, if I do, I shall bring the letting within the Act, and I do not intend to do that. If I supply hot water, it will be on a voluntary basis, and I will do my best, but I am not going to enter into any contract with regard to it." There is nothing wrong about an attitude of that sort, and, to my mind, the tribunal is not entitled to consider services which are voluntarily rendered. D

There is another point with which we have to deal. The landlords rely on a further contention that these lettings are plainly within the Rent Restrictions Acts—that is not in dispute—and that a Furnished Houses Rent Tribunal has no power to reduce a rent below the standard rent which can be charged in the case of the premises in question. Lettings seem to fall into three classes. There are lettings in which there is no furniture and no attendance included ; E secondly, lettings in which a substantial portion of the rent is fairly attributable to the use of furniture or to attendance ; thirdly, lettings in which part of the rent not amounting to a substantial portion is attributable to the use of furniture or to attendance. As to the first, the Act of 1946 can have no application ; as to the second, the Rent Restrictions Acts can have no application ; as to the third, on the face of it they may be within both Acts. Then the question arises : Which set of provisions is to prevail ? The 1946 Act seems clear about that. F

Section 7 provides : G

Sections 9 and 10 of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (which relate respectively to limitation on rent of houses let furnished and to penalty for excessive charges for furnished lettings) shall not apply as regards the rent charged for any house or part of a house entered in the register under the provisions of this Act in respect of any period subsequent to such registration, but save as aforesaid nothing in this Act shall affect any provisions of the Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Acts, 1920 to 1939. H

Sections 9 and 10 were entirely outside the scheme of the Rent Restrictions Act. They relate to furnished houses, and furnished houses only. Therefore, I do not think the fact that ss. 9 and 10 up to a point still have some application notwithstanding the Act of 1946, throws any light on the meaning of the last three lines of s. 7, which seem to me to express quite clearly that, if there is a conflict between the two Acts, it is the Rent Restrictions Act which must govern the contract.

- A There is one consideration which, to my mind, settles this beyond argument. It is clear under the Rent Restrictions Act that a landlord is entitled to charge the standard rent. He cannot increase the rent during the life of a tenancy or lease because he is bound by his contract, but when the existing tenancy or lease expires, he is entitled under that Act to charge the standard rent, plus two permitted increases—one is the 8 per cent. on any money which has been spent on structural improvements, and the other is an increase in respect of an increase of rates.
- B Of the tenancies in the present case, one expired on Mar. 31, 1947, another expires in November, two expire in March, 1948, and one in January, 1949. Under the Rent Restrictions Act, when these tenancies come to an end, the landlords are expressly permitted when a new agreement is entered into, to charge the standard rent plus those increases. That is the position if they are governed by the Rent Restrictions Act. What happens if they are within the Furnished Houses (Rent Control) Act, if these reductions are good? Under s. 3, the reduced rents have got to be registered, and under s. 4, at no time can those rents be exceeded:

(1) Where the rent payable for any premises is entered in the register under the provisions of this Act, it shall not be lawful to require or receive (a) on account of rent for those premises in respect of any period subsequent to the date of such entry . . . payment of any sum in excess of the rent so entered; . . .

- D It would be absurd to say that that would not be depriving the lessors of rights, expressly given to them by the Rent Restrictions Act, on any new letting to charge the standard rent plus the permitted increases. Those lines in s. 7:

. . . save as aforesaid nothing in this Act shall affect any provisions of the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Acts . . .

- E seem to me to make it clear that there can be no power in these rent tribunals to do anything to interfere with that right. It may be that, even if a letting is controlled by the Rent Acts, for some purposes the tribunal can still deal with the letting. We have not considered that, but I am satisfied that they have no power to do anything which interferes with the right of the landlord to charge the standard rent plus permitted increases. That is sufficient in itself for holding that all these decisions are ultra vires, and that these orders ought to go.

- F OLIVER, J. : I agree. Counsel for the rent tribunal argued on the concluding words of s. 7 of the Furnished Houses (Rent Control) Act, 1946, that the Rent Restrictions Acts do not authorise the charging of the standard rent. It is quite true the Rent Restrictions Acts do not in terms authorise charging the standard rent, but implicitly they do. They say, in effect, that a contract between the parties, up to the amount of the standard rent is enforceable, and
- G I cannot attribute any other meaning to them.

Orders accordingly.

Solicitors: Thompson & Co. (for the applicants); Solicitor, Ministry of Health (for the rent tribunal); Barnett Janner (for certain tenants).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

CARR v. DECCA GRAMOPHONE CO., LTD.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., Atkinson and Oliver, JJ.), April 23, May 12, 1947.]

Factories and Shops—Dangerous machinery—Circular saw—Not properly fenced—Responsibility of operator—Liability of factory occupier—Burden of proof—Factories Act, 1937 (c. 67), s. 130 (2)—Woodworking Machinery Special Regulations, 1922-1945, regs. 10 (b) (ii), (c).

A circular saw at a factory occupied by the respondents was fitted with a proper riving knife and an adequate guard, but neither was adjusted in accordance with the Woodworking Machinery Special Regulations, 1922-1945, and, therefore, the saw was not properly fenced. The operator of the machine, who had been first employed by the employers five days earlier, had told them that he was a sawyer of 18 years' experience and was conversant with the regulations. The employers "took him at his own valuation," giving him no instructions with regard to the working or adjustment of the machine and there was no supervision of such matters by them.

Held: a contravention by the workman of the regulations would be "a contravention by an employed person . . . with respect to duties of [the person] employed" or "a contravention by [him] of [a] regulation . . . which expressly imposes [a] duty upon him" within the Factories Act, 1937, s. 130 (2), and the employers were entitled to take advantage of the defence afforded by that sub-section (although they had not taken the steps specified by s. 137 (2) to bring the workman before the court) unless the prosecution proved that they had failed to take reasonable steps to prevent the contravention.

Smith v. A. Baveystock & Co. Ltd. ([1945] 1 All E.R. 535) distinguished.

[AS TO FENCING DANGEROUS MACHINERY, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 14, pp. 594, 595, paras. 1130, 1131; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 24, pp. 908-911, Nos. 62-81.]

Case referred to:

(1) Smith v. Baveystock & Co., Ltd., [1945] 1 All E.R. 531; Digest Supp.

CASE STATED by a metropolitan magistrate.

On July 11, 1946, the respondents were charged at a court of summary jurisdiction at Lambeth on two informations preferred by the appellant, an inspector of factories, with offences against the Woodworking Machinery Special Regulations, 1922 to 1945. The offences charged were that, being occupiers of a factory at Lambeth within the meaning of the Factories Act, 1937, they: (1) contravened reg. 10 (b) (ii) in that at a circular saw the distance between the front edge of the riving knife and the teeth of the saw exceeded a half inch at the level of the bench table, whereby the respondents were guilty of an offence under s. 130 (1) of the Act; (2) contravened reg. 10 (c) in that the guard for the top of a circular saw, being provided with a flange at the side of the saw farthest from the fence, was not kept so adjusted that the said flange extended below the roots of the teeth of the saw, whereby the respondents were guilty of an offence under s. 130 (1). The magistrates dismissed the informations. The inspector of factories appealed.

W. Arthian Davies for the appellant.

T. F. Southall for the respondents.

Cur. adv. vult.

May 12. LORD GODDARD, C.J., read the following judgment of the court. The first contravention alleged was that the distance between the front edge of the riving knife and the teeth of a circular saw exceeded half an inch at the level of the bench table, and the second was that the guard for the top of the saw, being provided with a flange at the side of the saw farthest from the fence, was not kept so adjusted that the flange extended below the roots of the teeth of the saw.

The facts found by the magistrate show that on May 18, 1946, the date of the alleged offences, the saw in question was in motion at the factory of which the respondents were occupiers. It was fitted with a proper riving knife and an adequate guard, but neither were adjusted in accordance with the regulations, so it cannot be contended that it was properly or securely fenced. It is found that both the riving knife and the guard could easily have been adjusted so as to conform with the regulations, and from that finding we infer that the excessive distance between the guard and the wood was not due to the nature of the work then being done. There is nothing to suggest that they were as close as practicable. Nor is there any suggestion that the actual work rendered the use of the guard impracticable so that advantage could be taken of reg. 23. The machine was being worked by a man who had first been employed by the respondents five days earlier. He had told them that he was a sawyer of 18 years' experience and that he knew the regulations. While the magistrate finds that the man was competent to work and reset the saw without instructions, he also finds that no instructions were given to him as to its working or adjustment nor were those matters ever supervised by anyone on the respondents' behalf. Therefore, it follows that they took the operator at his own valuation as to experience and knowledge and took no pains to find out whether, accepting that he had full knowledge of the regulations, he was a careful and reliable workman who could be trusted to see that the regulations were observed.

It seems to us clear that the magistrate intended to hold that the contravention of the regulations in this case was a contravention by the operator. It was his duty to use and maintain the machine in proper adjustment. This he failed to do, and the contravention, therefore, was "with respect to duties of [the person] employed" or the "contravention . . . of [a] regulation . . . which expressly imposes [a] duty upon him." In these circumstances, it seems to the court that the Factories Act, 1937, s. 130 (2), provides the employer with a defence unless it is proved that he failed to take all reasonable steps to prevent the contravention. It was argued for the appellant that a breach of a duty by the workman would not avail the employer as a defence unless he had taken the steps provided by s. 137, which provides for the actual offender being brought before the court when, if the employer proves to the satisfaction of the court that he has used all due diligence to enforce the execution of the Act and that the other person has committed the offence without his consent, connivance or wilful default, the other person shall be convicted and not the occupier. We are unable to accede to this contention.

Section 130 (2) expressly provides that in the circumstances there mentioned the employed person shall be guilty of an offence and the occupier or owner shall not be guilty of an offence, and where the contravention is by the employed person the onus is on the prosecution to prove that the owner failed to take reasonable steps to prevent the contravention. Section 137 deals with a different state of affairs. It does not deal with the case in which an employed person is guilty of a contravention. It is intended to provide for such a case as might occur if some contractor's workman who was present in the factory interfered with the guards of a machine so that it was left in an unguarded or unsafe condition. The fact that it was in an unsafe condition is a breach of the occupier's absolute duty, but the section gives him a defence if he can show that the contravention was caused by someone else, but in that case the onus of proving all reasonable care is the other way to what it is in s. 130 (2), and it is for the occupier to prove that he was not guilty of want of care. The magistrate has not, however, given any direct finding whether it was proved in the present case that the respondents did not exercise all reasonable care. We think that it may be that he misunderstood the observations of DU PARCQ, L.J., in Smith v. A. Baveystock & Co., Ltd. (1) to which he refers. The Lord Justice was not, in our opinion, laying down any proposition of law. What was decided in that case was that in its particular circumstances there had been no breach of the regulations by anyone. A piece of timber of varying thickness was being cut and the guard was adjusted so as to permit of the thickest part being cut. This was permitted by reg. 21, as it would have been impracticable from a commonsense point of view to keep stopping and readjusting the machine according to whether the actual part being cut was one inch, two inches or three inches. In expressing the opinion that in that case, had there been a prosecution, the employers might have had a defence, the Lord Justice was dealing with a man who had been working on a circular saw for two-and-a-half years at the employers' works and for some part of his previous service with the employers extending over 12 years before he joined the army. The Lord Justice said that in those circumstances he thought that it might have been very difficult to say that the employers had not taken reasonable steps. We repeat that he was there dealing with the particular facts of that case and was making no observations of general application. He was certainly not dealing with such a case as this, where, according to the magistrate's findings, the workman had only been employed for five days at these particular works and during that time had not been subjected to any supervision to find whether he was a careful workman who could be trusted to observe the regulations. A

This case must, therefore, go back to the magistrates with a direction that he find whether, on the facts which he states were proved by the prosecution, he is satisfied that the respondents did take all reasonable steps to prevent the contravention of the regulations. If he finds that the respondents did not take all reasonable care, he will convict, and the appellant will then have the costs of this appeal. If he finds that they did, the dismissal will stand, and the respondents will have their costs in this court. B

Case remitted.

Solicitors: The Solicitor, Ministry of Labour and National Service (for the appellant); Rowe & Maw (for the respondents).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.] C

ROBERT (otherwise DE LA MARE) v. ROBERT.

[PROBATE, DIVORCE AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION (Barnard, J.), November 11, 1946, February 21, March 25, May 7, 1947.] D

Divorce—Nullity—Jurisdiction—Petitioner resident in England at time of petition, but respondent resident in Guernsey—Marriage in Guernsey—Wilful refusal to consummate—Law to be applied.

On Feb. 7, 1940, the parties went through a ceremony of marriage in Guernsey in accordance with the law of Guernsey. They never lived together. The husband was serving in England in the Royal Air Force, and later the wife came to England and joined the Auxiliary Territorial Service. The wife was bona fide resident in England when she presented her petition for a decree of nullity on Oct. 9, 1945, but, unknown to her, the husband had returned to Guernsey where he was served with the petition on May 1, 1946. In Feb., 1946, the wife returned to Guernsey. The parties were at all material times domiciled in Guernsey. E HELD: (i) the wife being resident in England at the time of the institution of her suit, the court had jurisdiction to entertain it.

White (otherwise Bennett) v. White ([1937] P. 111) applied.

(ii) the law to be applied was the lex loci celebrationis because wilful refusal to consummate a marriage, in order to be justified as a ground for annulment and not dissolution, must be considered as a defect in marriage. F

Bertiaume v. Dastous ([1930] A.C. 79) applied. G

(iii) if wilful refusal to consummate a marriage were to be considered as something affecting the capacity of one of the parties to contract marriage, the lex domicilii must be applied.

Sottomayor v. De Barros (1877), 3 P.D. 1) followed.

AS TO JURISDICTION OF ENGLISH COURTS IN SUITS FOR THE NULLITY OF MARRIAGE, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 6, p. 303, para. 357; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 11, p. 428, Nos. 924-926. H

Cases referred to:

- (1) White (otherwise Bennett) v. White, [1937] P. 111.
- (2) Roberts v. Brennan, [1902] P. 143; 71 L.J.P. 74; sub nom. Brennan (otherwise Roberts) v. Brennan, 86 L.T. 599; 11 Digest 428, 926.
- (3) Bertiaume v. Dastous, [1930] A.C. 79; 99 L.J.P.C. 66; 142 L.T. 54, P.C.; Digest Supp.
- (4) Sottomayor v. De Barros (1877), 3 P.D. 1.

PETITION by a wife for a decree of nullity of marriage on the ground that her husband had wilfully refused to consummate it. The suit was undefended. The facts appear in the judgment and are summarised in the headnote.

Tolstoy for the wife,

Cur. adv. vult.

A May 7. BARNARD, J., read the following judgment. This case originally came before me on Nov. 11, 1946, and, having heard the evidence, I was satisfied on the facts that the wife had established her case that the marriage had not been consummated owing to the husband's wilful refusal to consummate. I adjourned the case for proof of the Guernsey marriage and for legal argument as to the court's jurisdiction to entertain the suit, and the case again came before me on Feb. 21, 1947.

B The wife, Yolande Helene Robert, otherwise De La Mare, on Feb. 7, 1940, went through a ceremony of marriage with Nicholas John Auguste Robert at the register office, Saint Peter Port, in the Isle of Guernsey, and I am now satisfied that this ceremony was in accordance with the law of Guernsey. The parties never lived together. The husband was serving in England in the Royal Air Force Regiment and later the wife came to England and joined the Auxiliary Territorial Service. I am satisfied that she had a bona fide residence in England from Dec., 1942, to Feb., 1946. She was, therefore, resident here when she presented her petition on Oct. 9, 1945, praying that her marriage be pronounced null and void. In Feb., 1946, she returned to her home in Guernsey. It was alleged in the petition that both the wife and the husband were domiciled in England, but no attempt was made to establish an English domicile and I am satisfied on the evidence before me that both the wife and the husband were at all material times domiciled in the Isle of Guernsey. D The notice to appear, at the end of the petition, is addressed to "No. 502019 Corporal Nicholas John Auguste Robert of the Royal Air Force Regiment at present stationed with the Home Forces," but at the time of the presentation of the petition, though unknown to the wife, the husband had returned to his home in Guernsey and was served there with the petition on May 1, 1946. The husband did not appear to the petition and the case was undefended.

E Counsel on behalf of the wife argued that this court had jurisdiction to entertain this suit, first, by reason of the fact that the wife was bona fide resident in this country at the time she instituted her proceedings, and, secondly, by reason of the fact that the husband had not objected to the jurisdiction of the court. The jurisdiction of the ecclesiastical courts was based on the residence of the parties, and in suits for nullity this court follows the practice of the ecclesiastical courts. Their jurisdiction, however, seems to have depended F on the residence of the respondent being within the jurisdiction of an ecclesiastical court in England, but BUCKNILL, J. in White (otherwise Bennett) v. White (1), following the decision in Roberts v. Brennan (2), extended this jurisdiction to include a case where the petitioner was domiciled and resident in England although the respondent was both domiciled and resident abroad. I respectfully agree with the decision of BUCKNILL, J.

G In the case now before me the wife was residing here at the time she filed her petition for nullity, she was subject to English law, and to the best of her belief the husband was still serving in England, though, in fact, she was wrong as to this. It seems to me that she was, therefore, entitled to know whether, by English law, she was married or not. Owing to the course of events she returned to Guernsey before her case came on for hearing, but I consider the material date to be the date on which she instituted the suit. Although in H White (otherwise Bennett) v. White (1), the petitioner was both domiciled and resident in England I think it is clear from the authorities that either domicile or residence would found jurisdiction. I have come to the conclusion that the wife being resident here at the time of the institution of her suit, this court has jurisdiction to entertain it. Therefore, it is not necessary for me to deal with the second point raised by counsel.

Non-consummation of a marriage owing to the wilful refusal of the husband to consummate the marriage was introduced as a new impediment to marriage by the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1937. A peculiar feature of this impediment consists in the voidability of the marriage being based on a post-nuptial fact. Ought I, in these circumstances, to apply the lex fori, which is the English law, or the lex loci celebrationis, or the lex domicilii, both of which are, in the case before me, the law of Guernsey? There is, however, evidence before me of a barrister-at-law practising in the Royal Courts of Justice, Guernsey, to the effect that wilful refusal of a respondent to consummate the marriage is a ground for a decree of nullity of marriage according to the law of Guernsey. I have come to the conclusion that I ought to apply the lex loci celebrationis, for the following reasons. Wilful refusal to consummate a marriage, in order to be justified on principle as a ground for annulment and not dissolution, must be considered as a defect in marriage, an error in the quality of the respondent. If this is right, then VISCOUNT DUNEDIN, in delivering the judgment of the Privy Council in Berthiaume v. Dastous (3), clearly states the law applicable to such a case in the following words ([1930] A.C. 83):

If there is one question better settled than any other in international law, it is that as regards marriage—putting aside the question of capacity—locus regit actum. If a marriage is good by the laws of the country where it is effected, it is good all the world over, no matter whether the proceeding or ceremony which constituted marriage according to the law of the place would or would not constitute marriage in the country of the domicile of one or other of the spouses. If the so-called marriage is no marriage in the place where it is celebrated, there is no marriage anywhere, although the ceremony or proceeding if conducted in the place of the parties' domicile would be considered a good marriage.

If I were wrong, and wilful refusal to consummate a marriage was to be considered as something affecting the capacity of one of the parties to contract marriage, then I am bound by the decision of the Court of Appeal in Sottomayor v. De Barros (4), to apply the lex domicilii. In the present case both the contracting parties were, at the time of their marriage, domiciled in Guernsey and their marriage was celebrated in Guernsey. Therefore, applying the law of Guernsey, the wife is entitled to the decree for which she asks.

Decree nisi of nullity.

Solicitors: Seton Pollock, Law Society's Service Department.

[Reported by R. HENDRY WHITE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

irmed. C.A. [1948] 1 All E.R. 564.

WILKINSON v. BARKING CORPORATION

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Morris, J.), April 15, May 5, 1947.]

Local Government—Superannuation of officers—Right to annual superannuation allowance on ceasing to be employed—Question to be decided by Minister—Claim after cessation of employment—Local Government Superannuation Act, 1937 (c. 68), s. 35.

Practice—Procedure—Preliminary point of law—Unconditional appearance by defendants—Right to plead that plaintiff has no cause of action—R.S.C., Ord. 25, r. 2.

W., who was employed by a local authority and was entitled, as an employee, to participate in the benefits of a superannuation fund, ceased to be so employed on Dec. 17, 1945, and the local authority decided that he was not entitled to an annual superannuation allowance under the Local Government Superannuation Act, 1937, s. 8 (1) (a). In an action by W., begun on July 31, 1946, claiming a declaration that he was so entitled, unconditional appearance to the writ was entered by the local authority, but it was pleaded by para. 6 of the defence that W. had no cause of action because, under s. 35 of the Act of 1937, the question whether or not he was entitled to an allowance was to be determined by the Minister of Health. The master ordered that the issue raised by this defence should be disposed of before the trial, under R.S.C., Ord. 25, r. 2. At the hearing W. contended (i) that, since the authority had entered an unconditional appearance, the plea in para. 6 of the defence was bad since it denied the jurisdiction of the court; (ii) that s. 35 of the Act of 1937 applied only to persons who were still in the employment of the authority and not to persons who had ceased to be employees:—

HELD: (i) the fact that the local authority had entered an unconditional appearance to the writ did not preclude them from raising the point that W. had no cause of action because his proper and only remedy was the exercise of a statutory right of appeal, and the procedure under R.S.C., Ord. 25, r. 2, was, therefore, not open to objection.

Wright v. Prescott Urban District Council (1916) (86 L.J.Ch. 221) considered.

(ii) although W. had ceased to be employed by the local authority before action brought, s. 35 of the Act of 1937 applied to him and he had no cause of action.

[AS TO PRELIMINARY POINT OF LAW, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 25, p. 251, para. 416; and Vol. 26, pp. 68, para. 110; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Pleading, pp. 49, 50, Nos. 394-398.

FOR THE LOCAL GOVERNMENT SUPERANNUATION ACT, 1937, see HASLBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 30, p. 385.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Re Orr Ewing, Orr Ewing v. Orr Ewing (1882), 22 Ch.D. 456; 52 L.J.Ch. 529; 48 L.T. 555; on appeal, sub nom. Ewing v. Orr Ewing (1883), 9 App. Cas. 34; Digest Practice 381, 888.
- (2) Western National Bank of City of New York v. Perez, Triana & Co., [1891] 1 Q.B. 304; 60 L.J.Q.B. 272; 64 L.T. 543; Digest Practice 381, 889.
- (3) Moore v. Gamgee (1890), 25 Q.B.D. 244; 59 L.J.Q.B. 505; 16 Digest 122, 202.
- (4) Preston v. Lamont (1876), 1 Ex.D. 361; 45 L.J.Q.B. 797; 35 L.T. 341; 40 J.P. 745; Digest Practice 372, 829.
- (5) Wright v. Prescott Urban District Council (1916), 86 L.J.Ch. 221; 115 L.T. 772; 81 J.P. 43; Digest Pleading 82, 694.
- (6) Pasmore v. Oswaldtwistle Urban Council, [1898] A.C. 387; 67 L.J.Q.B. 635; 78 L.T. 569; 62 J.P. 628; 16 Digest 302, 1150.
- (7) Doe d. Rochester (BP.) v. Bridges (1831), 1 B. & Ad. 847; 9 L.J.O.S.K.B. 113; 42 Digest 750, 1737.

PRELIMINARY ISSUE of law, under R.S.C., Ord. 25, r. 2, in an action by the plaintiff for a declaration that he was entitled to receive an annual superannuation allowance under the Local Government Superannuation Act, 1937, s. 8 (1) (a). The defendants (the local authority) entered unconditional appearance to the writ, but pleaded, by para. 6 of the defence, that the plaintiff had no cause of action because, under s. 35 of the Act, his only remedy against a decision of the local authority was by way of appeal to the Minister of Health. The facts appear in the judgment.

Herbert Malone for the plaintiff.

Harold Williams for the corporation.

Cur. adv. vult.

May 5. MORRIS, J., read the following judgment. In this action the plaintiff claims a declaration that, on his ceasing to be employed by the defendants on Dec. 17, 1945, he was entitled to receive from the defendants an annual superannuation allowance under the provisions of s. 8 (1) (a) of the Local Government Superannuation Act, 1937. He claims that he completed ten years' service with the defendants and that he was, by reason of permanent ill-health, incapable of discharging efficiently the duties of his employment as parks superintendent. For reasons which they allege in their defence, the defendants deny that the plaintiff is entitled to an annual superannuation allowance, and they allege that there is a case for the application of s. 24 of the Act, which is in these terms:

A contributory employee who is dismissed or resigns, or otherwise ceases to hold his employment, in consequence of an offence of a fraudulent character or of grave misconduct shall forfeit all claim to any rights under this part of this Act in respect of his previous service.

By para. 6 of their defence, the defendants pleaded as follows:

The defendants will rely on s. 35 of the Local Government Superannuation Act, 1937, and will contend that, by virtue of the said section, any question as to the plaintiff's right to an annual superannuation allowance under part I of the said Act is required to be determined by the Minister of Health and that the plaintiff has no cause of action.

Section 35 of the Local Government Superannuation Act, 1937, is in these terms:

Any question concerning the rights or liabilities of an employee of a local authority, or of a person claiming to be treated as such an employee, under any of the provisions of part I or this part of this Act, or any regulations made under this Act, shall be decided in the first instance by the authority concerned, and if the employee is dissatisfied with any such decision or with the authority's failure to come to a decision, shall be determined by the Minister, and the Minister's determination shall be final: Provided that the Minister may at any stage of the proceedings on the reference to him, and shall, if so directed by the High Court, state in the form of a Special Case for the opinion of the High Court any question of law arising in those proceedings.

The writ was issued on July 31, 1946, and was served on the same day, together with the statement of claim. Unconditional appearance was entered on Aug. 13, 1946. The defence was delivered on Nov. 5, 1946. There was no reply. On Feb. 21, 1947, an order was made by the master in the following terms:

Upon hearing counsel for the plaintiff and defendants, it is ordered by consent that the issue raised in para. 6 of the defence in this action be set down for hearing and disposed of before the trial, pursuant to R.S.C., Ord. 25, r. 2, and that the costs of this application be costs in the cause.

Order 25, r. 2, is in the following terms:

Any party shall be entitled to raise by his pleading any point of law and any point so raised shall be disposed of by the judge who tries the cause at or after the trial, provided that by consent of the parties, or by order of the court or a judge on the application of either party, the same may be set down for hearing and disposed of at any time before the trial.

The only matter which is now before me is, therefore, the issue raised in para. 6 of the defence. On behalf of the plaintiff, counsel addressed two main submissions to me. In the first place, he contended that, as the defendants had entered unconditional appearance, it was not open to them to plead as they do in para. 6 of their defence. Counsel urged that, having failed to move to set aside the writ, it was now too late for the defendants to take a point which, he contended, went to the question of the jurisdiction of the court. In the second place, he contended that s. 35 did not apply, for he submitted that the word "employee" in that section should be construed as denoting a person who is being employed and not to include a person who has been employed or one who, as the defendants contend, has been dismissed from their employment.

As to the first point, it is to be observed that the plaintiff, appearing by counsel before the master, agreed that the issue raised by para. 6 of the defence should be set down for hearing and disposed of before the trial, whereas the plaintiff now seeks to say that such issue is not open to the defendants. This first point taken on behalf of the plaintiff is, therefore, a point other than that agreed by counsel and ordered by the master to be set down for hearing. The plaintiff did not take any step to strike out para. 6 of the defence, nor did he ask leave to deliver a reply. It is doubtful, therefore, whether this point is now open to the plaintiff, but, as I am anxious not to deal with this matter on any narrow or rigid basis, and as I heard full arguments on the point, I will proceed to deal with it.

Counsel for the plaintiff submitted that, if the defendants proposed to rely on the matters pleaded in para. 6 of the defence, they should have entered conditional appearance or should have taken out a summons under Ord. 12, r. 30, to set aside service on them. He argued that when the defendants had entered unconditional appearance it became too late for them to rely on the matters raised in para. 6. He referred to and relied on Re Orr-Ewing; Orr-Ewing v. Orr-Ewing (1), Western National Bank of New York v. Perez Triana & Co. (2), Moore v. Gamgee (3), and Preston v. Lamont (4). No doubt, as a general rule, complaint as to any irregularity in the service or issue of a writ of which defendants have knowledge cannot be raised after unconditional appearance, but no such matter here arises, and, furthermore, the cases cited do not, in my judgment, establish that the defence raised in para. 6 is not open to the defendants. It is to be observed that in Wright v. Prescott Urban District Council (5), a plaintiff claimed a declaration that certain orders made by the defendants under the Housing, Town Planning, etc., Act, 1909, were bad in law. Before pleadings were delivered, the defendants moved for an order to stay all further proceedings in the action, on the grounds that, having regard to s. 39 of the Housing, Town Planning, etc., Act, 1909, the court had no jurisdiction to review and disturb the orders and that the plaintiff's remedy was to appeal to the Local Government Board. It was also said that the action was statute barred. NEVILLE, J., decided that the motion was premature because made before the delivery of the statement of claim. The defendants do not demur to the jurisdiction of the court and, indeed, if the point of law is decided in their favour, may then ask the court to give judgment in their favour, but they plead that the plaintiff's proper and only remedy is the exercise of a statutory right of appeal. The plaintiff contends that the submissions made by the defendants in regard to the construction of and the applicability of s. 35 are erroneous, but the defendants do not suggest that the court has not got jurisdiction to decide these matters, and, indeed, in conjunction with the plaintiff, have, as I have pointed out, agreed to an order for the trial of them as preliminary points of law. Whether some other procedure might or might not alternatively have been followed, as, for example, that of applying to stay the action, does not arise for decision, since, in my judgment, the procedure that has been adopted is not open to objection.

The defence raised in para. 6 is comparable with the defences pleaded in Pasmore v. Oswaldtwistle Urban District Council (6). The procedure adopted in that case was that the points of law were by agreement argued before the trial of the cause. It was in his speech in that case that the Earl of Halsbury said ([1898] A.C. 394):

The principle that where a specific remedy is given by a statute, it thereby deprives the person who insists upon a remedy of any other form of remedy than that given by the statute, is one which is very familiar and which runs through the law. I think LORD TENTERDEN accurately states that principle in the case of Doe d. Rochester v. Bridges (7). He says: "Where an Act creates an obligation and enforces the performance in a specified manner, we take it to be a general rule that performance cannot be enforced in any other manner." The words which the learned judge, LORD TENTERDEN, uses there appears to be strictly applicable to this case. The obligation which is created by this statute is an obligation which is created by the statute and by the statute alone. It is nothing to the purpose to say that there were other statutes which created similar obligations, because all those statutes are repealed; you must take your stand upon the statute in question, and the statute which creates the obligation is the statute to which one must look to see if there is a specified remedy contained in it. There is a specified remedy contained in it, which is an application to the proper government department.

In support of his second main contention, counsel for the plaintiff pointed to the definition in s. 40 of the Act of the word "employee." The definition is as follows:

"Employee" means an employee whether permanent or temporary, but does not include a person whose employment is of a casual nature.

Attention was specially directed to the word "is" in the phrase "whose employment is of a casual nature." Counsel further pointed to the provisions of s. 1 (3) (c) which reads:

In this Act . . . the local authority, or other body, in whose employment a contributory employee is, are in relation to him referred to as the "employing authority."

Attention was again directed to the word "is." It was submitted that the plaintiff should not be regarded as an employee within the meaning of s. 35 and it was urged that the section has no application where questions are being considered at a time when a person has ceased to be employed.

In my judgment, these arguments are fallacious. The plaintiff admits that he was an employee up to Dec. 17, 1945, and claims that as from that date he is entitled to receive an annual superannuation allowance. If on Dec. 17, 1945, he was entitled to participate in the benefits of a superannuation fund it was because he was an employee. Questions have arisen whether on Dec. 17, 1945, he was so entitled or whether there were reasons which disentitled him. Those questions seem to me to be clearly comprehended within the opening words of s. 35 of the Act, namely, the words: "Any question concerning the rights or liabilities of an employee of a local authority, or of a person claiming to be treated as such an employee, under any of the provisions of pt. I or this part of this Act . . ." If this is so, it follows that any such question is to be decided in the first place by the authority concerned, and, if the employee is dissatisfied with any such decision, then the question is to be decided by the Minister specified by the Act.

In the course of the submissions, it was urged that matters arise in this action, and may arise in other cases, which can best be investigated and disposed of by the machinery of a trial in court, with its full opportunities for the examination and cross-examination of witnesses. It is not shown that these opportunities will be denied in any proceedings which take place on a reference to the Minister, but, whether this is so or not, these are considerations which do not arise, for they are relevant only to questions as to the policy of the legislation in question and with such questions the court is not concerned. For the reasons which I have given, I decide the question of law raised in para. 6 of the defence in the defendants' favour. In those circumstances, there appears to be nothing left in the action to try, and I, therefore, give judgment for the defendants.

Judgment for defendants.

Solicitors: Hatten, Asplin, Jewers & Glenny, Barking (for the plaintiff); Sharpe, Pritchard & Co., agents for E. R. Farr, Town Clerk, Barking.

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

YEO v. STEWART AND OTHERS.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Sellers, J.), April 30, May 1, 1947.]

Contract—Agent of life assurance society—Rules of society incorporated in contract of employment—Amendment of rules—Whether binding on agent appointed before amendment—Validity of amendment.

Friendly Societies—Life assurance society—Amendment of rules—Machinery for amendment contained in two rules—Amendment of rule providing for election of rules revision committee but no corresponding amendment of rule providing for special general meeting to amend rules—Validity of amendments made by special general meeting.

By a written contract, dated Feb. 22, 1936, the plaintiff became an agent to a life assurance society on the terms (inter alia) that he would comply with all the rules and conditions applicable to agents as stated in the rules of the society. The rules in existence at that time were made in 1933, and r. 30 gave the agent the right to sell his "insurance book" on certain conditions. By rr. 39 and 40, provision was made for the alteration of the rules. By r. 39, amendments could only be made at a special general meeting called every 5 years, the relevant date for this case being 1943. Rule 40 provided for the election in 1942 and every fifth year thereafter (i.e., a year before the holding of the special general meeting) of a rules revision committee to consider what alterations were necessary and report thereon to the special general meeting. Owing to the difficulty of holding general meetings during the war, in each of the years 1940-1944 the society obtained from the Industrial Assurance Commissioner, under the Societies (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1940, s. 1, a direction that no annual or special general meeting should be held in that year, and in 1941 a direction under the Act was obtained to amend r. 40 so as to provide that, should there be no annual general meeting in 1942, the election of the rules revision committee should take place at the first annual general meeting to be held thereafter. The society proposed at the same time to amend r. 39, but the commissioner did not consider it necessary. At the general meeting held in 1945, a rules revision committee was duly set up under the amended r. 40, and it reported to a special general meeting held on July 2, 1946, where a majority of the members passed an amendment to r. 30. The plaintiff (who was also a member of the society) contended (i) that the society had no power to make an amendment to the rules on July 2, 1946, because, under r. 39, amendments could only be made in 1943 and every fifth year thereafter; (ii) that his contract with the society was on the basis of the rules in force at the date of the contract and that any subsequent amendment could not affect the terms of his employment:—

HELD: (i) on the true construction of the society's rules, rr. 39 and 40 must be read together and the essence of the rule with regard to the machinery for alteration was that there should be a quinquennial period in relation both to the setting up of the rules revision committee and to consideration by a special general meeting of any recommendation one year thereafter, and, therefore, the meeting held in 1946 to consider amendments was properly held under the rules and had authority to make amendments, and the amendment to r. 30 had been validly passed.

(ii) the terms of the plaintiff's contract incorporated all the rules of the society which were applicable to agents and, since such rules were subject to the application of rr. 39 and 40, these two rules were also included in the contract and any subsequent amendments were, therefore, binding on the plaintiff.

Page v. Liverpool Victoria Friendly Society ((1927), 43 T.L.R. 712) applied.

Southern Foundries (1926), Ltd. v. Shirlaw ([1940] 2 All E.R. 445) distinguished.

[AS TO AMENDMENT OF RULES, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 15, pp. 324-327, paras. 573-577; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 25, pp. 298-301, Nos. 73-93.

FOR THE SOCIETIES (MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS) ACT, 1940, s. 1, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 33, pp. 153, 154.]

Cases referred to :

- (1) Page v. Liverpool Victoria Friendly Society (1927), 43 T.L.R. 712; Digest Supp.
- (2) Southern Foundries (1926), Ltd. v. Shirlaw, [1940] 2 All E.R. 445; [1940] A.C. 701; 109 L.J.K.B. 461; 164 L.T. 251; Digest Supp.

ACTION by an agent of a life assurance society asking for declarations (i) that a resolution of the society made on July 2, 1946, was not binding on members of the society and was null and void; (ii) that the terms of his employment were not affected by the purported alteration of one of the society's rules by the resolution in question. The facts appear in the judgment.

J. Scott Henderson, K.C., and Cecil Binney for the plaintiff.

Sir David Maxwell Fyfe, K.C., and C. A. J. Bonner for the defendants.

SELLERS, J. : The plaintiff in this action is a member and agent of the Scottish Legal Life Assurance Society. The defendants are respectively the trustees of that society and the board of management. The plaintiff sues on his own behalf and on behalf of other members (other than the defendants) of that assurance society and he asks for two declarations and some incidental relief. The first declaration is that a resolution of the society is not binding on the members of the society and is null and void. Secondly, he asks for a declaration that he (the plaintiff) is employed as an agent of the society on the conditions contained in the rules of the society prior to July 2, 1946, and that the terms of his employment are not affected by the purported alteration of the rules which he has previously asked to be declared not binding on members of the society.

Two separate and distinct issues are raised on the pleadings in this case. The first is : Was the plaintiff's contract with the society—which was clearly subject to some extent, at any rate, to the rules of the society—on the basis of the rules in force at the time of the making of the contract so that, so far as the plaintiff was concerned, the rules were fixed and unalterable, or was the plaintiff's contract on the basis of the rules as they existed from time to time, if properly amended? The second issue to be decided is : Had the society power to make an amendment of the rules on July 2, 1946?

The plaintiff had been in the insurance business as an agent since he was 21 years of age, but he did not become associated with the Scottish Legal Life Assurance Society until 1936. He then applied on a printed form for appointment as an agent in the Brixton area and in that application he gave particulars of his previous service, references and so forth. That application was accepted and it was made so that the plaintiff could acquire from a man who was then an existing agent of the society his "insurance book," as it is called, the man in question being a Mr. Rainbow who had been what is known as a nominated agent of the society and who, under the existing rules of the society, could, on the termination of his agency, sell his book to a purchaser approved by the society. The plaintiff was approved and he entered into a written agreement with the society dated Feb. 22, 1936. As a consequence of that, the company thereby agreeing to appoint the plaintiff as an agent to the Brixton area under the terms and conditions there set out to which I shall refer, the plaintiff entered into an agreement to purchase Mr. Rainbow's book from Mr. Rainbow. The contract need not be more particularly referred to, but it did transfer to the plaintiff the whole of the collecting book of Mr. Rainbow for a sum of £298 8s. 2d. That sum was calculated on a basis which was well recognised and, by reason of the activities since that time of the plaintiff, it is said by him that that book is now worth something like £418 on the basis of a free sale of the book under the same sort of conditions as prevailed when the plaintiff acquired it. At the time of this contract the rules of the society then in force were the 1933 rules, but, the 1939 rules which have been produced before me are in the same terms, so far as they are relevant to this case, as those existing in 1933. The rule which dealt with the aspect of agency with which this case is concerned—i.e., the right of the nominated agent, who has acquired a book in the way that the plaintiff has acquired his book, to dispose of it, or the right of his personal representative to dispose of it—is r. 30. Quite generally, and without going into the detail of phraseology of r. 30, that rule gave the agent (i.e., the plaintiff in this case) a right to sell his book within a stated period provided that he fulfilled the preliminary conditions which that rule prescribes. It also included a right to transfer the business obtained by the agent, not directly by his own activities, but through the board of management.

The matter which has given rise to the conflict in this case is a proposed new rule. I need not read it, but it is clear that it is quite different from the existing r. 30 at the time when the plaintiff entered into his contract. In particular, it takes away that second right which the agent had because it provides that no agent shall have a right to transfer any business given to him by the board of management. On the facts of this case it is, in fact, conceded that the plaintiff had not up to the time of this action ever received any business from the board of management, but, notwithstanding that, it is, of course, clearly a proposed alteration in the rule with regard to nominated agents. The second material alteration is that the society are given power by the rule to purchase these books from nominated agents, whereas previously they had no such power. If, after a period of three months, the agent had not found a suitable purchaser, and the society continued through their own activities the collection of the premiums and then sought out a purchaser who was suitable to them, on the transaction of purchase going through, the society accounted to the agent for the purchase price. That innovation and this proposed amendment giving the society power to purchase the book very largely give rise to this present action. The plaintiff on behalf of himself and other agents objects to that rule, and it appears that the broad object of policy of the rule is that the society desires to terminate in due time the practice of nominated agents, and, in order to reduce costs, to have salaried agents working on a block system, which they think will prove an economy and of benefit to the members of the society as a whole.

In this case an allegation in the pleadings that this amendment was harsh and unfair to the nominated agents has (very properly, I think) not been pursued, and I have not had investigated before me the effect of this proposed amendment on the nominated agents. The proposed rule says :

No agent (unless he shall have acquired his book by nomination) appointed after the said date of the registration of amendments of rules, shall have any right of nomination.

It is said that, since the society have the power to purchase the book and are not going to employ nominated agents in the future, it will reduce or tend to reduce the purchase price of the book and also that, in the event of no agreement, the matter can go to arbitration, and that may be to the prejudice of the agent, one of the rules providing that he pays half the cost of the arbitration. Though I do not see very clearly the full effect of it, I will accept that this rule is a disadvantage to the nominated agents who have, so it is said, a vested right in the books which they have acquired and hope to sell when they cease to hold the agency.

The rules of the society in 1939 make provision, in the circumstances therein stated, for their own alteration, the relevant rules being rr. 39 and 40. Although the rules are dated in 1939, that is the time when the rules were registered, and they were, in fact, drawn up in 1938. Rule 39 is headed : " Making alterations in and rescinding rules," and is in these terms :

Save as provided in relation to standing orders under r. 38 no new rules shall be made, nor any rule amended, altered, or rescinded, unless with the consent of a majority of delegates present at a general meeting specially called for the purpose, in accordance with the Acts. No amendment of rules is valid until registered. No amendment, alteration or rescission and no addition to these rules shall be made except at special general meetings called for the consideration thereof to be held in 1943 and every fifth year thereafter.

There follows a proviso which is not relevant to this case. Thus, that rule made in 1938 provided for a revision or consideration of revision of the rules five years later in 1943, and then in every fifth year after that. Rule 40 is headed : " Rules Revision Committee " and as it stood in 1939 read as follows :

In 1937 and every fifth year thereafter the delegates shall appoint eleven of their number, four from Scotland, four from England, one from Wales, one from Northern Ireland, and one from Eire, as a rules revision committee, to consider along with the board of management and officials what alterations and amendments of rules are required, and to report thereon and recommend such alterations and amendments as they deem proper to the special general meeting to be held for the consideration of alterations and amendments of rules in the following year. The delegates so elected shall hold office for one year.

This rule complies, as far as date is concerned, with the quinquennial position —this being, no doubt, a rule in 1933. There was provision made for the appointment of this rules revision committee in 1937 to report in 1938, as they appear to have done, on any alteration and amendment of the rules, and then r. 39 comes into operation providing that every fifth year a special general meeting may be called to consider any of these alterations, and, if necessary, to make amendments.

This was the machinery adopted in the rules with regard to amendments, and it was pointed out that it contains what might be termed safeguards, in that, first, it provides for the revision committee as stipulated in r. 40, and then r. 39 provides that there shall be no amendment of the rules unless a majority of the delegates present at the general meeting specially called approve. There is statutory protection as well, because the rules thereafter have to be approved by the Registrar of Friendly Societies, and until they are registered they are of no effect.

Shortly after the rules of 1939 came into effect and operation, the recent war broke out and intervened, and as a consequence this society, in company with many others, found it difficult to carry on the routine of annual general meetings, and so forth, which their rules required. Under the Societies (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1940, certain dispensations were granted. Section 1 of the Act is in these terms :

(1) For the purpose of enabling the rules of societies and statutory requirements relating to societies to be relaxed in certain respects during the period of the emergency, the committee of management of any society may apply to the Chief Registrar to give a direction under this section and, if the Chief Registrar is satisfied that by reason of circumstances attributable to the emergency it is expedient to do so, he shall give the direction accordingly. (2) A direction given under this section may dispense with or vary any rule of the society or enactment requiring meetings of the society to be held at specified times or periods or at specified places and may, notwithstanding anything in the rules of the society or any enactment or any regulation, rule or order made under any enactment, authorise . . . (b) the making of amendments of the rules of the society, being amendments so specified, by a resolution of the committee of management or of a general meeting of the society.

The society duly availed themselves of that Act and the provisions therein contained. Application was made to the Industrial Assurance Commissioner and, as a consequence, certain directions were given. In June, 1940, the commissioner directed that there should be no annual general meeting and no special general meeting in 1940. Then, on further application to the commissioner, a similar dispensation was given with regard to 1941 and, indeed, right up to 1945. But, in addition to these applications, a letter was written by the society's solicitors on Mar. 8, 1941, in these terms :

Referring to our previous correspondence, we inclose herewith draft direction. We think it is necessary to have certain actual alterations of rules to provide for the retirement of the office bearers, delegates, etc., after the emergency is over, as well as the special emergency rule dispensing with annual general meetings and district meetings of the society during the emergency, and continuing everyone in office during that period, also authorising the board of management to exercise the functions of general meetings.

There appears to have been appended to that letter a draft direction which, as far as this case is concerned, proposed two amendments, one to r. 39 and one to r. 40. The answer of the commissioner to that letter on Mar. 21, 1941, was in these terms :

With reference to your letter of Mar. 8 I am directed to return the draft direction. This goes beyond the scope of application made to the board in your letter of Jan. 7 and has had to be modified as indicated in red ink. The commissioner is of opinion that an amendment of r. 39 is unnecessary at present and he is not prepared to dispense with the holding of more than one annual general meeting at a time. The draft has been amended to include dispensation with the 1941 meeting and the proposed new emergency provisions ; r. 51 has been adjusted to save the necessity for repeated consequential directions. A clause has also been added to enable the board to exercise the functions of district meetings.

As a result of that there was an amendment by direction of the commissioner, not to r. 39, but to r. 40, and that has subsisted up to the present time. There are two minor amendments in the early text of the rule, the first line of which reads as follows : " In 1937 and every fifth year thereafter, subject as hereinafter provided," and then it continues on the old basis until, as far as this case is concerned, the last paragraph, which is added as follows :

In the event of dispensation by the Industrial Assurance Commissioner with the holding of an annual general meeting in 1942, the election of the committee shall take place at the first annual general meeting held after the date of the registration of this partial amendment of rules, and every fifth year thereafter.

That was in 1941, and it was not then known whether there would be an annual general meeting in 1942 or 1943, because the dispensation was given only year by year, and it is quite understandable that in Mar., 1941, it would be considered unnecessary to amend r. 39 because, if the annual general meeting, when it was resumed after the termination of the war or when conditions made it possible, was held in 1942, r. 40 could then be invoked and they could then have appointed the rules revision committee which could have reported in 1943, if there had then been allowed to be held a special general meeting in that year. If the members in general meeting, had met in 1942, they could have dealt with any proposed amendment in 1943. There was, however, no general meeting or special meeting in 1943 or in 1944. The first general meeting after this gap was in 1945 and on that occasion r. 40 was followed. A rules revision committee was set up which reported to the special general meeting held at Blackpool on July 2, 1946, when a majority of the members passed the amendment to r. 30 of which complaint is now made. That amendment was submitted for registration, but its registration has been held in abeyance pending the decision of the court in this action. Those seem to be the facts giving rise to the issues which I indicated at the outset of this judgment.

The submission made on behalf of the plaintiff is that the contract into which he entered with the society is one which is fixed as regards its terms, or, at any rate, that all the rules which were to be implied in his contract were expressly fixed as at the date of the contract—the rules are dated in 1933 and the contract in 1936—and two clauses in the contract are particularly referred to in that respect. Reliance is placed on cl. 3, which is contained in the conditions of appointment on the printed form which is the contract between the parties. Clause 3 is in these terms :

That I will comply with all the duties and conditions applicable to agents as stated in the rules of the society, and strictly adhere to all the instructions contained in the collecting book.

The other clause in the contract on which some reliance is placed by the plaintiff is the second half of cl. 5 :

... should I be entitled to nominate to my book, and a suitable nominee be obtained earlier, the business must at once be shown up.

Clause 3 of the contract clearly makes reference to the rules of the society, and it is said by the society that this contract is one whereby the plaintiff was employed on the terms (amongst others) of the rules of the society by which he was bound, and that those rules must be construed as the rules existing from time to time and not as just the rules existing at the time when this particular agent's contract was made with the company. On behalf of the plaintiff it is argued that in any event that clause only brings in the rules which are applicable to the duties and conditions of an agent, and that it does not include all the rules and, in particular, does not include rr. 39 and 40 which provide for amendment and alteration in certain events. Following that, the plaintiff contends that the rules which are applicable to this contract in regard to duties and conditions are those which existed in 1936 at the time of the making of the bargain.

In my view, cl. 3 of the document incorporates, as part of the terms of the contract, all the rules of the society, in so far as they are applicable to agents and to the duties and conditions of agents, but that does not, to my mind, exclude the two rules, 39 and 40, which make provision for alteration. There is a number of rules dealing with agents, but the one in question here is r. 30 and that is one of the rules which became a term of the plaintiff's contract and which is subject, like the other rules, to the application of rr. 39 and 40. I feel no difficulty in holding that this clause has to be construed so as to include rr. 39 and 40 as well as r. 30. In reference to the issue whether there can be any amendment of those rules, it is apparent that the rules themselves—if rr. 39 and 40 are to be regarded as rules binding on the plaintiff, as I think they are—provided for a quinquennial consideration, and, if thought fit, an amendment of the rules as they stand, and the view which I should have taken of that is that the rules themselves, having their own machinery and provisions for amendment, could from time to time be amended in accordance with those rules as the members of the society thought fit, and that any such amendments would be binding on the plaintiff.

I think that view is supported by Page v. Liverpool Victoria Friendly Society (1), which was also the case of a friendly society and the headnote of which is in these terms :

The plaintiff was appointed an agent of the defendants, a friendly society, whose rules, though subject to alteration, provided at that time for the retention of agents in office so long as their conduct was satisfactory. After the plaintiff reached the age of 65 the defendants altered their rules by providing that agents should be compulsorily retired at the age of 65, and in accordance with the amended rules the defendants terminated the plaintiff's employment. In an action for a declaration that the defendants were not entitled to do so, Held, that as the rules, on the face of them, were alterable, the plaintiff was not entitled to the declaration claimed, and the action failed.

In his judgment ROWLATT, J., said (43 T.L.R. 712) that :

... the plaintiff took office under a rule of the society, but the rules, on the face of them, were subject to alteration. The rule under which the plaintiff claimed what was equivalent to a freehold tenure was alterable, and it was duly altered, and the plaintiff was retired in accordance with the rule as altered.

I think that decision supports the view that I have taken in regard to this contract—indeed, it is, I think, indistinguishable—that the rules here incorporated into this contract do provide their own terms for amendment and alteration, and, therefore, the plaintiff fails on his contention with regard to the contract, assuming, of course, that the rules have been properly amended as required by the rules themselves. I should add that the decision of ROWLATT, J., in Page v. Liverpool Victoria Friendly Society (1) was affirmed by the Court of Appeal.

Reliance was placed by counsel for the plaintiff on Southern Foundries (1926), Ltd. v. Shirlaw (2), a decision in the House of Lords, but, in my view, the majority decision of their Lordships in that case turned essentially on the construction of the particular contract under consideration. By cl. 2 of the contract, which is set out in the speech of LORD WRIGHT, it was provided : "Mr. Shirlaw shall hold the said office for the term of 10 years from Dec. 1, 1933," and that is really the governing factor in that case. It was argued there that the alteration of the articles—which could not be precluded by reason of that contract—only amounted to a breach of the contract and did not affect the contract itself. I think that that case is distinguishable from the present one and that Page v. Liverpool Victoria Friendly Society (1) is much more in point. I, therefore, hold that the plaintiff's contract was one which was subject to the rules, including rr. 39 and 40.

On that issue both parties advanced various arguments as to the impracticability or unreasonableness of the opposing contentions. On the one hand, it was argued that it was impracticable to treat the contract as one which was fixed, because it was said that agents would be employed from time to time and have many contracts on varying terms. On the other hand, it was contended on behalf of the plaintiff that the rights of the agent with regard to the book which he was purchasing might at any time be affected if the contention which was advanced by the society was upheld. I think that one has to look at the matter as one of construction, and those are only incidental submissions. On behalf of the plaintiff the argument went further and it was submitted that, even assuming the construction which I have put on the contract to be correct, there ought to be implied into it a term that a condition with regard to the right to nominate would be unalterable, and in that connection some reliance was placed on a circular letter of September, 1934, which was apparently a publication by the society to the delegates attending the annual general meeting in that year. In that letter a statement was made about what is called the "book interest" in these terms :

Whilst book interest is not the subject of any specific recommendation, the committee evidently assume that lowering of commission would either extinguish, or much reduce, its value. They realise that to directly attack book interest would involve the consideration of compensation, and it is perhaps for this reason that the attack is made indirectly.

I do not think there is any evidence to show that the plaintiff had seen that letter prior to entering into the contract. It is certainly not a letter in terms addressed to agents. It is addressed to delegates, but the plaintiff is a member and no doubt many other members are agents of the society. But when one looks at this from the point of view of implying a term which is necessary to give efficacy and proper effect to the contract, looking at it through the eyes of the other contracting party, the society, I cannot think that there is any ground whatsoever for implying a term that the rules as they then stood in relation to this matter are unalterable, and I do not accept that contention put forward on behalf of the plaintiff.

If the rules, as I find, are of effect in respect of the plaintiff and his contract, then I have to turn to consideration of the question whether r. 30, as it existed in 1939, has been, subject to ultimate registration by the registrar, properly amended, and whether its proposed amendment is in accordance with the rules and procedure laid down in the rules of the society. That involves consideration of rr. 39 and 40, r. 40 being the amended one, and the question is : Have the rules been validly amended by the majority decision of the society at this special general meeting of July, 1946 ? It is said on behalf of the plaintiff that there was no power in the society, applying their rules, to make any such amendment because r. 39 stipulates that such amendment (if any) to the rules shall be made in 1943, and every fifth year thereafter, and the rule relied on was made on July 2, 1946. In relation to r. 40 I do not think it is now contested that that was validly amended, and my view is that that is so. Its amendment came about in the way I have indicated, arising out of the application to the commissioner under the Act of 1940 and was the direct result of his direction. On May 21, 1941, the commissioner directed that r. 40 should be amended in the way in which it is now framed and that direction appears to me to have statutory and mandatory force and has resulted in a valid alteration of r. 40.

The effect of that is this. Applying the rule, a dispensation was given in respect of the annual general meeting of 1942, and similarly up to 1944. The first general meeting after this cessation of meetings was in 1945. The amended r. 40 provides for the election of a committee—i.e., the rules revision committee—at the first annual general meeting held after the date of the registration of the partial amendment of rules and every fifth year thereafter. The committee met and r. 40 provides that they had :

... to consider along with the board of management and officials what alterations and amendments of rules are required, and to report thereon and recommend such alterations and amendments as they may deem proper to the special general meeting to be held for the consideration of alterations and amendments of rules in the following year.

Therefore, so far as 1945 is concerned, the rule provides for consideration of that report and it would come up for consideration at the special general meeting to be held in the following year. Having regard to the substituted date of the annual general meeting (i.e., "substituted" by reason of the special war conditions) the first annual general meeting after the war is to be held in the following year, i.e., in 1946, and by that time the delegates elected for this purpose to the rules revision committee shall cease to hold office.

A I think that these two rules clearly must be read together in order to find the machinery for any alteration. Rule 40, of course, only provides, as counsel for the plaintiff pointed out, for the rules revision committee, and it might well be that r. 39 could operate without it, but I think that the two rules must be read together—at any rate, to some extent—and r. 39 does make provision for a special general meeting. It provides :

B No amendment, alteration or rescission and no addition to these rules shall be made except at special general meetings called for the consideration thereof to be held in 1943 and every fifth year thereafter.

It is that provision on which the plaintiff here relies. It is because that rule was not altered to meet what was really involved in the alteration of r. 40, in the light of events which happened, that gives rise to this contention advanced on behalf of the plaintiff.

C The commissioner who had the duty of directing the alteration of the rules did, in fact, as pointed out in the letter of Mar. 21, 1941, express the opinion then that no amendment of r. 39 was necessary at that time, as indeed was the position, because in 1941 the date 1943 might easily have been applicable. But in the light of events, when the first annual general meeting was held in 1945, and then this special general meeting under r. 40 was required for the consideration of alterations and amendments of the rules in the following year,

D 1943 was inapplicable—so, indeed, was five years from then, 1948. I have come to the conclusion that the essence of the rule with regard to the machinery for alteration is that there should be a quinquennial period in relation both to the setting up of the rules revision committee and to consideration of any recommendation by a special general meeting one year thereafter, and it is really involved in r. 40, in the circumstances which arose, that that consideration should take place in order to keep to the quinquennial arrangement, as necessarily

E modified by war conditions, which the rules stipulate. Therefore, the meeting held in 1946 to consider these rules was, in my view, a meeting properly held under the rules and was one which had authority to consider and (if they so thought fit) to amend the rules. The special general meeting did by authority amend r. 30, and all I need say is that I think that amendment was validly passed by the society at that meeting on July 2, 1946.

F In those circumstances, in my view, the declarations asked for by the plaintiff are misconceived. In my judgment, the plaintiff has not shown that he is entitled to a declaration on behalf of the other members of the society to the effect that the resolution of July 2, 1946, altering r. 30, is not binding on the members and is null and void, neither is he entitled to a declaration that his employment as an agent is on the conditions contained in the rules of the society prior to July 2, 1946, and that his terms of employment are not affected by the G alteration of r. 30. I think that r. 30, as amended and substituted, when it is registered with the Industrial Assurance Commissioner, will be of full effect and that the plaintiff's contract will be affected thereby. In those circumstances there must be judgment for the defendants.

Judgment for the defendants with costs.

H Solicitors : Seaton Taylor & Co. (for the plaintiff) ; Kingsley Wood, Williams & Murphy, agents for Maclay Murray & Spens, Glasgow (for the defendants).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

LEWISHAM BOROUGH COUNCIL v. MALONEY.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Somervell, Cohen and Evershed, L.JJ.), May 7, 8, 9, 23, 1947.]

Emergency Legislation—Requisition—Land—Land charges—Need for registration of interest of requisitioning authority—“Right or privilege over or affecting land”—Defence (General) Regulations, 1939, reg. 51 (1)—Land Charges Act, 1925 (c. 22), s. 10 (1), Class D (iii).

A dwelling-house owned by Mrs. M. was requisitioned under reg. 51 (1) of the Defence (General) Regulations, 1939, by the town clerk of L. under powers delegated to him by the Minister of Health under reg. 51 (5). The house was adapted so as to constitute two living units, the lower of which was subsequently released to Mrs. M. who thereupon occupied that part. The son of Mrs. M. purchased the whole property, and, despite a refusal of the plaintiffs to release the upper portion he took possession of it.

HELD: the words “right or privilege over or affecting land” in the Land Charges Act, 1925, s. 10 (1), Class D. (iii), have a restricted meaning ejusdem generis with the word “easement,” and do not extend to include the rights of possession and user arising on the exercise of powers of requisitioning under Defence Regulation 51, and, therefore, those rights do not require to be registered as a land charge to prevent their being void as against a purchaser of the land.

[AS TO CLASS D LAND CHARGES, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 19, pp. 359-360, paras. 753-756. FOR THE LAND CHARGES ACT, 1925, s. 10 (1) CLASS D (iii), see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 15, p. 535.]

Case referred to:

(1) Taff Vale Railway Co. v. Cardiff Railway Co., [1917] 1 Ch. 299; 86 L.J. Ch. 129; 115 L.T. 800; 11 Digest 111, 68.

APPEAL by the plaintiffs, Lewisham Corporation, from an order of His Honour JUDGE SIR GERALD HURST, K.C., made at Bromley County Court, and dated Feb. 17, 1947.

The county court judge held that the rights of possession and user arising on the exercise by a local authority of powers of requisitioning delegated to it by the Minister of Health were land charges within the Land Charges Act, 1925, s. 10 (1), Class D (iii), and, accordingly, were not binding on the second defendant as a purchaser for value of the property from the first defendant unless they were registered. The facts appear in the judgment and are summarised in the headnote.

Danckwerts and S. I. R. Craig for the plaintiffs.

Jukes for the defendants.

Cur. adv. vult.

May 23. SOMERVELL, L.J., read the following judgment of the court. In this case certain premises were requisitioned on July 2, 1943, by the town clerk of Lewisham. The town clerk was acting under the powers conferred by the Defence Regulations, 1939, reg. 51, and delegated to him by the “competent authority,” in this case the Minister of Health, under reg. 51 (5). Possession was taken of the premises for the purpose of housing persons rendered homeless by enemy action. The validity of this action (otherwise than as regards non-registration under the Land Charges Act, 1925) was not challenged before us. The owner of the premises was Mrs. Maloney, the first defendant. On June 14, 1946, the lower portion of the premises was released, but not the upper. On Oct. 15, the second defendant, the son of the first defendant, entered the upper part of the premises which were at that time vacant. The plaintiffs claim as against both defendants possession, an injunction, and damages for trespass.

The first point argued before us was that the right and interest of the plaintiffs should have been registered under the Land Charges Act, 1925, s. 10 (1) Class D. (ii); that the second defendant is a purchaser of the legal estate for money or money's worth; and that the plaintiffs' right to possession is void as against him under s. 13 (2) of the Act cited. The judge decided this point in the defendants' favour. That the second defendant had purchased the estate from the first defendant was not disputed.

So far as relevant, s. 10 (1), provides :

Class D :—A charge or obligation affecting land of any of the following kinds, namely . . . (iii) Any easement right or privilege over or affecting land created or arising after the commencement of this Act, and being merely an equitable interest (in this Act referred to as an “equitable easement”)

A The first question is whether the right to possession or the taking of possession with the other rights conferred on the competent authority under the regulation are within the words of s. 10 (1), Class D (iii). Those rights may be summarised in the following words. The competent authority for the purposes set out in the regulation can take possession of any land. The land may be used in such manner as the competent authority thinks expedient for the purposes aforesaid notwithstanding any restriction imposed by Act of Parliament or otherwise. The competent authority may do or authorise persons using the land to do anything which any person having an interest in the land would be entitled to do by virtue of that interest. The competent authority may, by order, provide for prohibiting the exercise of rights of way and of other rights.

B Before coming to the actual question of construction it is worth while to consider what is the entry that it is suggested should be made in the registry. The right to take possession for the purposes as set out in the regulation is exercisable over all land. It is not suggested that the mere existence of this right has to be registered in respect of all land. The entry has only to be made when the right is exercised in respect of some particular land. What one expects to find in the registry are rights, rather than the fact of their exercise. This is not, of course, conclusive, but we think there would be some difficulty in framing the appropriate form of entry.

C We add the following further general observations. The object of the Land Charges Act, 1925, in conjunction with the other property statutes of the same year was to simplify the title to and the transfer of land. It must, we think, be at least conceded that “charges or obligations” (if such they be) of the kind we have described, arising under the Defence Regulations, bear no obvious analogy to the kinds of rights or interests which might, apart from the Property Acts, have burdened the title to land. It is true that such effects of the Defence Regulations show a greater resemblance to “charges” arising, E e.g., under town planning legislation, but it is to be noted that these latter are separately treated under the Land Charges Act, 1925, s. 15, as “local land charges” and that, although it was thought appropriate to make an express exception of local land charges from Class B in s. 10 (1) of the Act, it was not thought necessary to except local land charges from what is said by counsel for the defendants to be the wide language of Class D (iii).

F With these general observations we turn to the interpretation of the material part of s. 10 (1) of the Act. No doubt the words “right . . . over or affecting land” without a context might, and, indeed, would, have a very wide meaning—a meaning capable of covering rights which could not be described in ordinary language as “charges or obligations.” Thus, it might be said that a person entitled to the benefit of a contract to create a legal estate had a “right . . . over or affecting land,” but it is clear from Class C (iv) that

G such a right is not intended to fall within Class D (iii). We note also the separate treatment of local land charges in s. 15, their exclusion from Class B, and the absence of any such exclusion from Class D (iii), to which we have already referred. The words in question, therefore, on which counsel relies for the defendants, in our view, have in their context a restricted meaning. They follow the word “easement” and the kind of charge and obligation comprised in the whole phrase is in the Act to be referred to as an “equitable easement.”

H An Act of Parliament, if clear words are used, may provide that a word or words of narrow import may comprise matters which would normally be regarded as outside their scope, and in this connection the learned judge referred to what was said by SCRUTTON, L.J., in Taff Vale Railway v. Cardiff Railway (1). We fully accept this principle, but there is, in our judgment, sufficient in the context of the material words in s. 10 (1) of the Act to prevent their extension to cover the possessory rights of a competent authority under the Defence Regulations and to prevent those words having a significance wider than appears to us, in the context, to be their natural meaning.

Counsel for the plaintiffs submitted that the words are apt, and only apt, to cover incorporeal rights or rights similar in their general incidents to incorporeal rights. The argument is, we think, attractive, but we desire to avoid deciding anything beyond the particular point before us. We think it, therefore, sufficient for us to say that, in our judgment, it would, in the light of the whole context in which the words are used, be an unnatural extension of their meaning to construe them as including such statutory rights of possession and user of the land possessed as are conferred by reg. 51. The judge, we think, may have been inclined to take the view he did, looking at the words by themselves. He gave them a wide construction because he considered that the taking of possession under reg. 51 was a right to which, having regard to the purpose of the Land Charges Act to be gathered from its terms, its machinery ought to apply and that the words were capable of a construction covering the rights in question. With respect to the judge, we do not think that the words are capable of so wide a meaning. We are also not altogether in agreement with the reasoning which led him to his conclusion. This court was pressed, as was the judge, with the possibility of requisitioned premises being left for a time unused or unoccupied, as happened in the present case, there being no visible indication, therefore, to an intending purchaser, of the fact that the land was requisitioned. This is, of course, a possible case. It may have occurred many times. The case contemplated by reg. 51 is, however, the taking possession of land for one of the purposes set out and its user for that purpose, such user being apparent. Another point which has some substance was made by counsel for the plaintiffs. Assuming a purchaser succeeds in making the requisition void, the competent authority could at once retake possession. This goes to negative the view that the general purpose of the Land Charges Act can be relied on as extending the words of Class D (iii) to cover requisitions.

This is enough to dispose of this point, though we thought there was considerable force in the argument that reg. 51, on its true construction, conferred a right of taking possession good as against all the world and not liable to be voided by a failure to take a step—namely, registration—not referred to in the regulation. It is unnecessary to deal with this and with the other points which were argued. We only desire to add this. Where statutory rights affecting land are given which might be held or reasonably argued to be within the words of s. 10 (1), Class D (iii), although not clearly within them, it is desirable that the statute should deal expressly with the matter.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors: Sharpe, Pritchard & Co., agents for Allen Milner Smith, Town Clerk, Lewisham (for the plaintiffs); J. H. Milner & Son (for the defendants).

[Reported by R. L. ZIAR, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

GALLAGHER v. DORMAN, LONG & CO., LTD.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Lord Greene, M.R., Wrottesley, L.J., and Lynskey, J.), April 28, 29, May 23, 1947.]

Factories and Shops—Dangerous machinery—Safety provisions—Statutory duty by employers—Delegation—Liability to employee in civil action—Breach of duty caused by act of injured employee—"Delegation"—Factories Act, 1937 (c. 67), ss. 24 (4) (5), 137 (1).

Where statutory duties are laid on an employer such as those contained in s. 24 of the Factories Act, 1937, (which provides that no crane or other lifting machine shall be loaded beyond the safe working load marked thereon) he is liable in civil proceedings for damage caused to his employees by breach of them, notwithstanding that he may have taken the steps indicated in s. 137 of the Act to have those duties carried out by properly instructed and competent subordinates. That which will enable him to escape from being found guilty of an offence under the Act will not afford a shield of defence in civil proceedings against a plaintiff who is injured through the neglect of the subordinate. Where, however, the person injured as a result of the breach of the statutory duty is the employee to whom the employer has properly delegated the performance of that duty, and the breach of duty is caused by the act or omission of such employee, such employee cannot be heard to say that his injury was caused by the breach of statutory duty and not caused by his own act or omission.

Per curiam: The word "delegation" when used in connection with the statutory duty of the employer does not mean the same thing as "employment." An employer does not, merely by employing his servant to work a crane, delegate to him the statutory duty of seeing that the crane is not overloaded. The theory of delegation of a statutory duty is intelligible where the duty is a positive duty such as to keep the guard of a power saw in adjustment. In the case of a negative duty, such as not to overload a crane, the conception of delegation presents considerable difficulty. The question which arises is whether it can be inferred from the evidence.

[FOR THE FACTORIES ACT, 1937, s. 24, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 30, p. 220.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Lotinga v. North Eastern Marine Engineering Co. (1938), Ltd., [1941] 3 All E.R. 1; [1941] 2 K.B. 399; 111 L.J.K.B. 65; 106 J.P. 1; Digest Supp.
- (2) Vyner v. Waldenburgh Bros., Ltd., [1945] 2 All E.R. 547; [1946] 1 K.B. 50; 115 L.J.K.B. 119; 173 L.T. 330; Digest Supp.
- (3) Smith v. Baveystock & Co., Ltd., [1945] 1 All E.R. 531; Digest Supp.

APPEAL from an order of Mr. Commissioner TRISTRAM BERESFORD, K.C., at Durham Assizes, in an action by the plaintiff against the defendants for negligence and for breach of statutory duty, through which the plaintiff suffered injury. The commissioner held that the defendants had delegated (as they were entitled to do), to the plaintiff and another employee, P., the duty of seeing that a crane on which they were engaged as slingers was not overloaded, and that, therefore, they (the defendants) had provided a safe and proper system of working; and, further, that the plaintiff and P. were the persons whose duty it was to see that the crane was not overloaded, and, as the accident to the plaintiff was due, in his judgment, if not to the carelessness, at any rate to the inadvertence, of the plaintiff and P., the plaintiff had failed to establish that the defendants had been guilty of breaches of statutory duty under s. 24 (4) and (5) of the Factories Act, 1937. The plaintiff appealed.

Paley Scott, K.C., and Norman Black for the plaintiff.

Fenwick, K.C., and Victor Coen for the defendants.

Cur. adv. vult.

May 23. WROTTESELEY, L.J., read the following judgment of the court. On June 18, 1946, the plaintiff was engaged in unloading iron angles about 30 ft. long from a railway truck, by means of a travelling crane along a parallel line of railway. He and another man named Pearce were acting as slingers, bundling the lengths of iron and slinging them on to the hook of the crane, which was then operated by the crane driver so as to lift them clear of the truck and any other obstruction and swing them round and deposit them on the ground. After at least two and perhaps three loads had been lifted in this way and deposited safely, the load which caused the accident was in process of being hoisted when the crane toppled over, causing the bundle of iron to fall back on to the plaintiff, and so inflicting the serious injury for which he brought his action.

The action was brought under two heads. First, at common law, the plaintiff charged the defendants, who were the employers of the plaintiff, with negligence in failing to provide a proper or safe system of working, that is to say, in providing no means of ascertaining that the lift was one within the capacity of the crane, but leaving it to the workmen to guess the weight of the load as best they could. He also claimed that the defendants did not provide an efficient dial on the crane to act as an indicator as to what was a safe load for the crane to lift, having regard to the angle of the jib. Secondly, the plaintiff set up breaches of statutory duty on the part of the defendants, such as that the rails on which the crane moved were not properly maintained, contrary to s. 24 (3) of the Factories Act, 1937; that the defendants did not comply with s. 24 (4) under which there should have been an automatic indicator or table of safe working loads; and that they permitted the crane to be loaded beyond the safe working load, contrary to s. 24 (5) of the same Act. In their defence the defendants alleged contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff in that: (i) he did not take proper precautions for his own safety, (ii) he kept no proper look-out, and (iii) he under-estimated the weight of the sling. Although there was no very clear evidence on the matter, it is clear that the whole case was conducted by both sides on the basis that the crane toppled over and injured the plaintiff because it was, in fact, overloaded, i.e., that when the angle irons were attached by the plaintiff and the other slinger, Pearce, to the crane, the result was that it was loaded beyond the safe working load as indicated by the table attached to a plate on the crane, and that on this account the crane overbalanced and the plaintiff was hurt. In fact, the whole matter in issue at the trial was whether this overloading was brought about by the negligence of the plaintiff himself, it being conceded that there was a breach of s. 24 (5) of the Factories Act, 1937. A B

The relevant facts established in the course of the hearing were as follows. The plaintiff had been engaged in this work as a slinger for 14 months, and the other slinger, Pearce, for 40 years. They were expected to judge what was a safe load, and they knew and accepted that obligation as part of their employment. On the crane was a notice which read as follows: C

Crane to lift the following loads on 4 ft. 8 ins. gauge. 3 tons at 24 ft. radius; 5 tons at 16 ft. radius. Blocked up: 5 tons at 23 ft. radius; 6 tons at 19 ft. radius.

Section 24 (4) and (5) of the Act are as follows:

(4) There shall be plainly marked on every lifting machine the safe working load or loads thereof, except that in the case of a jib crane so constructed that the safe working load may be varied by the raising or lowering of the jib, there shall be attached thereto either an automatic indicator of safe working loads or a table indicating the safe working loads at corresponding inclinations of the jib or corresponding radii of the load. (5) No lifting machine shall, except for the purpose of a test, be loaded beyond the safe working load as marked or indicated under the last foregoing subsection. D

It will be seen, therefore, that once the radius of 16 ft. was exceeded, the only safe working load up to 24 ft. was 3 tons, under the express provision of the Act. In addition, the crane had an automatic indicator which, had it been in order, would have indicated by a pointer the load which the crane could carry, having regard to the angle of the jib. It can be seen from the photograph which was in evidence that it would have pointed to 3 tons or 5 tons, but not to any intermediate weight. No weight was indicated on the dial between 3 tons and 5 tons, and in this respect the figures on the indicator corresponded with those on the notice. This indicator was not in working order, but moved sluggishly because it was corroded or had been damaged. It was, therefore, an unreliable guide, and was not, in fact, relied on. In fact, the lift which led to the accident was at a radius of 20 ft. The plaintiff, acting in consultation with Pearce, judged the weight of the lift which caused the accident at 4 tons. E F

It was sought on behalf of the defendants in argument before us to establish that the plaintiff was deliberately working on the footing that at a 20 ft. radius 4 tons was a safe load, but that for some reason the plaintiff chose to take a chance and put on a load of nearly 6 tons. There was, however, no evidence that at 20 ft. radius a 4 ton load was a safe load. Such a load was, in any event, not a safe load in law, as it exceeded the load mentioned in the notice, nor was there evidence that the load which caused the accident was nearly 6 tons. Indeed, no evidence was given of what, in fact, the load was which caused the accident, beyond the estimate of the plaintiff and Pearce that it was 4 tons. All the court can say is that it was, in fact, more than 3 tons, and an overload such as to cause the crane to topple over. On these facts the defendants claimed that they had delegated, and that they were entitled to delegate, to the plaintiff and Pearce, both men of great experience, and so capable of judging the sort of weights which in fact this crane could lift, the duty of seeing that the crane was not overloaded. This was, the defendants said, a safe and proper system of working. The commissioner upheld this contention. G H

As to the dial on the crane, since neither the slingers nor the crane driver consulted it, and its lack of repair was not brought to the notice of the defendants, the commissioner held that the lack of repair could not be held to be negligence on the part of the defendants. As regards the duties laid on the defendants by statute, the commissioner found that the lack of repair of the rails on which the crane ran was not established. This finding of the commissioner is not challenged. As regards the duty to see that the crane was not loaded beyond the safe working load as shown by the table, the commissioner, having found this was 3 tons, decided that the plaintiff and Pearce, since they were experienced people who had been doing this work for a number of years, were the persons whose duty it was to see that the crane was not overloaded, and were, indeed, the only people in a position to judge. The accident was due, in his judgment, if not to their carelessness, at any rate to their inadvertence, and, therefore, the plaintiff failed to establish that the defendants had been guilty of breaches of statutory duty. Accordingly, he refrained from considering whether the plaintiff had been guilty of contributory negligence. Before us it was argued on behalf of the plaintiff that on the evidence there had been a breach of the statutory duty imposed by s. 24 (5) of the Factories Act, 1937, on the defendants as employers, inasmuch as the crane had been overloaded. This duty, it was said, was one which the defendants neither did, in fact, nor could in law, delegate to the plaintiff and Pearce, so as to discharge the liability from their own shoulders. In any event, there was not such instruction as was necessary if the plaintiff (with only 14 months' experience) was to appreciate the dangers against which he was supposed to guard. Section 137 of the Act which, in certain circumstances, enables the occupier of a factory to excuse himself by alleging and proving (a) that he has used all due diligence to enforce the execution of the Act and of any relevant order or regulation made thereunder, and (b) that another person (in this case the plaintiff) had committed the offence in question without his consent, connivance, or wilful default, does not, it was said, apply so as to defeat a claim in a civil court for damages flowing from a breach of a statutory duty. There was not, and there was not found by the commissioner to be, any contributory negligence in the proper meaning of that phrase.

We think that there can be no doubt that where statutory duties are laid on an employer, such as those contained in s. 24 of the Factories Act, 1937, he remains liable in civil proceedings for damage caused to his employees generally by the breach of them, notwithstanding that he may have taken the steps indicated in s. 137 to have those duties carried out by properly instructed and competent subordinates. In other words, that which will enable him to escape from being found guilty of an offence under the Act will not afford a shield of defence in civil proceedings against a plaintiff who is damaged through the neglect of the subordinate: Lotinga v. N.E. Marine Engineering Co. (1), Vyner v. Waldenbury Bros., Ltd. (2). Where, however, the person injured as a result of the breach of the statutory duty is the employee to whom the employer has properly delegated the performance of that duty, and the breach of duty is caused by the act or omission of such employee, such employee cannot be heard to say that his injury was caused by the breach of the statutory duty and not caused by his own act or omission: Smith v. Baveystock & Co., Ltd. (3).

The first question which arises in this case is: Was there any delegation by the defendants to the plaintiff, either alone or jointly with Pearce, of the performance of the statutory duty imposed by s. 24 (4) and (5) of the Factories Act, 1937? The duty imposed on the defendants by the joint effects of sub-ss. (4) and (5), so far as this crane was concerned, was not to load the crane with more than 3 tons when the radius of the jib exceeded 16 ft. There was no evidence of any express delegation of this duty to either the plaintiff or Pearce. It is true that they were given the duty to load the crane, and in this was implied the duty to perform that task carefully and with such skill as they possessed, but this is not the same thing as to say that the statutory duty not to overload the crane was delegated to them. The word "delegation" when used in connection with the statutory duty of the employer does not mean the same thing as "employment." An employer does not, merely by employing his servant to work a crane, delegate to him the statutory duty of seeing that the crane is not overloaded. The theory of delegation of a statutory duty is intelligible where the duty is a positive duty such as to keep the guard of a power saw in adjustment. In the case of a negative duty such as not to overload a crane, the conception of delegation presents considerable difficulty. We have then to consider whether any such delegation can be inferred from the evidence. According to the plaintiff and Pearce, neither had been informed of the safe load of the crane. All that they knew was that it was a 5 ton crane. No evidence was called by the defendants to contradict this evidence. Apparently, the plaintiff and Pearce believed that a 4 ton load was a safe load at 20 ft. radius, and loaded the crane on this basis. If any inference can be drawn from these facts it would be that neither of them had ever been instructed not to load more than 3 tons with the jib over a 16 ft. radius, and so that there had been no delegation by the defendants of their duty under s. 24 (4) and (5) to either of these men. The question whether such a delegation could properly be made to two men jointly (and if so what the effect of this would be in law), or whether the plaintiff was a person properly qualified to perform such delegated duty, does not, therefore, arise. A B

There remains to be considered the question whether the plaintiff, by his own negligence, caused or contributed to the accident. So far as can be gathered from the evidence, the duty, so far as the crane was concerned, owed by the plaintiff to the defendants, was to use the best of his skill and knowledge to estimate the weight of each load and to keep it within what he believed to be the safe weight, which, with the jib at a 20 ft. radius, was, as he thought, 4 tons. The case sought to be made in cross-examination by the defendants was that the weight of the load at the time of the accident was 5 tons, 18 cwts. They did not, however, succeed in establishing this in cross-examination, and called no evidence to support this view. All that the evidence shows is that the plaintiff thought they had a load of only 4 tons, and that the crane toppled over. No deliberate overloading is established by the evidence, and the onus of showing this is on the defendants. Whether the accident was due to a mistake of judgment as to the weight of the lift, or to a mistake as to the capacity of the crane at this radius, was not cleared up. The highest it can be put against the plaintiff and Pearce is that, by an honest mistake or inadvertence, they were wrong in their estimate of the weight of the lift. This, in our view, would not constitute a breach of the duty which they owed to their employer. C D E

There was, however, a common law duty on the plaintiff to exercise reasonable care for his own safety. On the facts of this case can it be said that he failed in that duty? It is not every mistake or inadvertence that amounts to contributory negligence. If a man exercising his skill and knowledge to the best of his ability makes a mistake, particularly, as in this case, in estimating what would be a safe lift, it does not, in our view, amount to contributory negligence. The defendants, therefore, have failed to establish that there was any negligence on the part of the plaintiff which contributed to his accident. F

We have not, so far, dealt with the allegation of breach of the common law duty to provide a safe system of working. From the conclusions to which we have come it follows, in our opinion, that a breach has been established in that the defendants took no proper steps to ensure that the men were properly instructed as to the limit of the capacity of the crane. The appeal, therefore, will be allowed with costs. G

Appeal allowed with costs.

Solicitors: Russell Jones & Co. (for the plaintiff); Tarry, Sherlock & King, agents for Cohen, Jackson & Scott, Stockton-on-Tees (for the defendants).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

J. (otherwise S.) v. J.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Somervell and Cohen, L.J.J., and Lynskey, J.), May 15, 16, 23, 1947.]

Divorce—Nullity—Wilful refusal to consummate marriage—Husband sterilised before marriage by medical operation—Avoidance of procreation of children—Wife's knowledge of operation at time of marriage—Whether bar to decree—“Lack of sincerity”—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1937 (c. 57), s. 7 (1) (a).

A The parties went through a form of marriage on June 16, 1934. Before that date and when the parties had been engaged for some months the husband consulted a doctor with a view to having an operation performed on himself which, while leaving him able to achieve penetration and emission, made it impossible for sexual intercourse to result in the conception of a child. On Apr. 30, 1934, the husband, at the request of the doctor, put before the wife for signature a statement acknowledging the understanding of both parties of the effect of the operation. The wife at first refused to sign it as she wanted to have children, but finally, in the hope that she would be able later to persuade the husband to take a different view, she agreed to sign if the husband promised not to have the operation performed until after the marriage. The husband promised, but the operation was performed before the marriage and this came to the knowledge of the wife on May 6, 1934. For the first two or three years of the marriage intercourse took place regularly, thereafter rarely, and the marriage became increasingly unhappy. The wife was not aware until 1945 that she might have grounds for nullity, whereupon she left the husband and commenced proceedings. The wife declared that she had had no material or other benefits from the marriage.

D HELD: (i) applying Cowen v. Cowen ([1945] 2 All E.R. 197), the husband, by his act in having the operation performed, rendered himself incapable of effecting consummation by reason of a structural defect which he had himself brought about in his organs of generation.

E (ii) the wife's knowledge of the husband's impotence before marriage was not an absolute bar in law to a decree of nullity, (dictum of LANGTON, J., in Nash v. Nash ([1940] 1 All E.R. 209) approved), and, in all the circumstances, including her knowledge, and applying the principles in G. v. M. (1885) (10 App. Cas. 171), the petition should not fail for “insincerity.”

Decision of JONES, J. ([1946] 2 All E.R. 760) reversed.

[AS TO LACK OF SINCERITY IN SUITS FOR NULLITY FOR IMPOTENCE, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 10, p. 643, para. 942; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 27, pp. 350-352, Nos. 3338-3353.]

F Cases referred to:

(1) Cowen v. Cowen, [1945] 2 All E.R. 197; [1946] P. 36; 114 L.J.P. 57; 173 L.T. 176; Digest Supp.

(2) Nash v. Nash, [1940] 1 All E.R. 206; [1940] P. 60; 109 L.J.P. 60; 164 L.T. 48; Digest Supp.

(3) G. v. M. (1885), 10 App. Cas. 171; 53 L.T. 398; 27 Digest 351, 3339.

(4) L. v. L., 1931 S.C. 477; [1931] S.L.T. 256; Digest Supp.

G APPEAL by the wife from a decision of JONES, J., dated Nov. 22, 1946, and reported [1946] 2 All E.R. 760. The learned judge held that the act of the husband in undergoing an operation before marriage which prevented his wife from having a child by him amounted to wilful refusal to consummate the marriage, but that the wife, by marrying with knowledge of the operation, had acquiesced in the circumstances of the marriage and it would, therefore, be inequitable and contrary to public policy to grant her a decree of nullity.

H Richard O'Sullivan, K.C., and R. J. A. Temple for the wife.

The husband was not represented.

Cur. adv. vult.

May 23. SOMERVELL, L.J., read this judgment of the court. In this case the judge dismissed a wife's petition for nullity of marriage. The case was undefended. The wife alleged that the marriage had never been consummated and that the non-consummation was due either to incapacity or a wilful refusal to consummate.

The parties were married on June 16, 1934. Just before the marriage the husband had an operation which, while leaving him able to achieve penetration and emission, made it impossible for sexual intercourse to result in the conception of a child. He told the doctor who performed the operation that he was getting married and that there was insanity in his future wife's family. It seems that this was untrue. In Cowen v. Cowen (1), this court decided that a husband had wilfully refused to consummate a marriage where he had insisted on using a contraceptive when intercourse took place. In other words, A a marriage is not consummated if a husband, by his own act, prevents "intercourse" from having its natural consequence in "the passage of the male seed into the body of the woman" ([1945] 2 All E.R. 199). The husband in the present case effected by the operation the same result which could have been effected by the use of a contraceptive on each successive occasion. There is no question of natural sterility. Applying Cowen v. Cowen (1), it seems to us that, by his act in having the operation, he rendered himself incapable of effecting consummation by reason of a structural defect which he had himself brought about in his organs of generation. B

This, however, does not dispose of the case. The doctor who performed the operation required a statement to be signed by the wife as well as by the husband setting out their understanding of the effect of the operation. This form was presented by the husband to the wife on Apr. 30, 1934. They had at this date been engaged to be married for some months. She refused to sign it, as she wanted to have children. There was an argument. Finally, she said she would sign it if he promised he would wait and not have the operation until after the marriage. She hoped she would be able to persuade him to take a different view after the marriage. He so promised, but, in fact, had the operation and this came to her knowledge on May 6, 1934, some six weeks before the marriage. The question is whether this knowledge of hers is in law an absolute bar to her petition. It is clearly of great importance, as LANGTON, J., said in Nash v. Nash (2) ([1940] 1 All E.R. 209), as shedding light on the issue of "sincerity." LANGTON, J., in that case (ibid) expressed the view obiter that the petitioner's knowledge of impotence before marriage is not an absolute bar in law. C D

Counsel for the wife referred us to a passage in ESMEIN'S LE MARIAGE EN DROIT CANONIQUE, p. 268, as showing that in mediaeval canon law knowledge of impotency before marriage was not a bar to subsequent proceedings for nullity on the ground of impotency. A passage to the same effect is to be found in SANCHEZ DE MATRIMONIO, Lyons ed., 1654, vol. 2, p. 376. In G. v. M. (3) (10 App. Cas. 184) the EARL OF SELBORNE, L.C., stated that on this general subject the law of Scotland differed from the law of England. We were, however, quite rightly referred by counsel to L. v. L. (4). On the point under consideration the court was divided. The LORD PRESIDENT (CLYDE) regarded knowledge before marriage as a bar. LORD MORISON held it was no bar and LORD BLACKBURN reserved the point though inclined to LORD MORISON's view. We have come to the conclusion that the opinion expressed by LANGTON, J., to which we have referred is a correct statement of the law. E F

The next question is whether the petition should be dismissed in all the circumstances, including the wife's knowledge, for lack of what is called "sincerity." It is necessary to state further facts. Intercourse took place regularly for the first two or three years of the marriage, thereafter rarely. The marriage became increasingly unhappy. Before the marriage when the fact of the operation became known to the wife, the husband had said she could adopt children. When she suggested this later he would have nothing to do with it. She did not know that she had or might have grounds for nullity until late in 1945. She then left the husband and started these proceedings. She said she had had no material or other benefits from the marriage. Counsel submitted, first, that mere lapse of time is not by itself a bar, though of course a material circumstance in considering "sincerity." This is in accordance with what was stated by the EARL OF SELBORNE, L.C., in G. v. M. (3) (10 App. Cas. 189). Secondly, he submitted that the material date is when the petitioner, not only knows the facts, but is also aware of his or her legal rights. This is again, in accordance with what was stated by the EARL OF SELBORNE, L.C., in G. v. M. (3) (ibid, 185), and by LANGTON, J., in G H

Nash v. Nash (2) ([1940] 1 All E.R. 210). The opinions on this branch of the law of the EARL OF SELBORNE, L.C., LORD WATSON and LORD BRAMWELL in G. v. M. (3), although obiter, are the most authoritative guidance on this subject. We feel no difficulty with regard to the period after the marriage, as the wife sought to exercise her rights or what may be her rights as soon as she was aware of them.

The judge, in dismissing the petition, did so by reason of the wife's knowledge before marriage. He came to the conclusion that in view of this it was "inequitable and contrary to public policy," that the wife should now be entitled to relief. The matter was not so fully argued before him as before us and we have come to a different conclusion. It is important to note that this is not a case where the knowledge existed at the time of the engagement. The parties had been engaged for some time. It was sprung on the wife a few weeks before the date for the marriage. She had protested against the idea. The husband had previously made her swear to say nothing about this operation to anyone. In any case it would not have been an easy reason for her to give for breaking off her engagement. The natural inference from her evidence we think is that she felt it was too late to draw back. We do not think that, in these and the other circumstances and doing our best to apply the principles of the EARL OF SELBORNE and LORD WATSON, this petition should fail for "insincerity." We do not think the question of wilful refusal to consummate the marriage arises. In the result, the order of the learned judge will be set aside and a decree nisi pronounced with costs of this appeal.

Appeal allowed with costs.

Solicitors: Preston, Lane-Claypon & O'Kelly, agents for R. M. Wood, Johnson & Sons, Birmingham (for the wife).

[Reported by R. L. ZIAR, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

CRATE v. MILLER.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Somervell and Evershed, L.JJ., and Wynn-Parry, J.), April 28, May 16, 1947.]

Landlord and Tenant—Notice to quit—Validity—Date of expiration—Periodic tenancy—Termination at end of current period—Date of last day of period.

A tenant occupied a furnished room on a weekly tenancy commencing on a Saturday. A notice to quit dated July 5, 1946, (which was a Friday) from the landlord's solicitors, was in the following terms: "We hereby give you notice that the landlord will terminate your tenancy on Friday, July 19, 1946, or at the end of the next complete week of your tenancy from the date hereof, on which date you are hereby required to quit and deliver up possession":—

HELD: (i) in all cases of periodical tenancy, whether yearly, quarterly, monthly or weekly, the same principle is to be applied, and a valid notice to quit must be expressed so as to terminate the tenancy at the end of a current period; a notice to quit on either the "anniversary" of the date of commencement of the tenancy or on the day before can be construed as a notice to quit when the current period in question is ended; and, therefore, the notice to quit on Friday, July 19, 1946, was effectual to terminate the tenancy.

Sidebotham v. Holland ([1895] 1 Q.B. 378) applied.

Queen's Club Gardens Estate, Ltd. v. Bignell ([1924] 1 K.B. 117) approved.

[AS TO DATE OF EXPIRATION OF NOTICE TO QUIT, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 20, p. 133, para. 142; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 31, pp. 440-445, Nos. 5858-5918.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Sidebotham v. Holland, [1895] 1 Q.B. 378; 64 L.J.Q.B. 200; 72 L.T. 62; 31 Digest 440, 5866.
- (2) Queen's Club Gardens Estates, Ltd. v. Bignell, [1924] 1 K.B. 117; 93 L.J.K.B. 107; 130 L.T. 26; 31 Digest 447, 5932.

APPEAL by the tenant from an order of possession made by His Honour JUDGE DALE at Lambeth County Court on Oct. 15, 1946. The facts appear in the judgment of the court delivered by SOMERVELL, L.J.

The tenant appeared in person.
The landlord did not appear.

Cur. adv. vult.

May 16. SOMERVELL, L.J., read the following judgment of the court. In this appeal the landlord sought an order against the tenant for possession of furnished premises. It was admitted that the premises were furnished, and no question, therefore, arose under the Rent Restrictions Acts. The county court judge made an order for possession. The tenant appealed and appeared before us in person. The landlord did not appear. A

It was argued in the court below, and before us, that the notice to quit was invalid in that it expired on a Friday instead of on a Saturday. The notice to quit reads as follows :

To Mr. Percy Miller, 67, Kennington Oval, S.E.11. As solicitors for your landlord, Mrs. Crate, of the furnished room occupied by you and being let to you together with board at £1 15s. 0d. per week, we hereby give you notice that the landlord will terminate your tenancy on Friday, July 19, 1946, or at the end of the next complete week of your tenancy from the date hereof, on which date you are hereby required to quit and deliver up possession. Dated July 5, 1946. Reid Sharman & Co. Solicitors for the landlord. B

The judge found that the tenancy was a weekly tenancy commencing on a Saturday, which he described as a "Saturday to Saturday tenancy," and there was clear evidence on which he could so find. He referred in the note of his findings to Sidebotham v. Holland (1) a decision of this court. That case dealt with a yearly tenancy which began on May 19. The question was whether a notice to quit and deliver up possession on May 19, being an anniversary of the day on which the tenancy commenced, was a good notice. It seems to us clear that all the members of the court were of opinion that a notice to quit on the 18th would have been a good notice. A. L. SMITH, L.J., doubted whether the notice to quit on the 19th was a good notice, because, as he said ([1895] 1 Q.B. 387) : C

... it is not a notice expiring upon the last day of the year of the tenancy, but upon the day after.

The majority decided that it was a good notice, and we will quote one sentence from their judgment, which was delivered by LINDLEY, L.J. : D

But, although a half year's notice to quit on the 18th would be correct, it does not follow that notice to quit on the 19th, which is the anniversary of the day on which the tenancy commenced, is bad, and I am clearly of the opinion that it is not. E

In support of this view a number of authorities were considered.

As we read that decision, it is based, first, on the view that, on the dates in question there, the tenant had to quit and deliver up possession by midnight at the end of May 18 ; secondly, that a notice to quit and deliver up possession either on the 18th or on the 19th could be construed as a notice to quit at that moment of time, being the end of the period, in that case a year, which began on the previous May 19. LINDLEY, L.J. says (ibid) : F

... a notice to quit at the first moment of the anniversary ought to be just as good as a notice to quit on the last moment of the day before.

In other words, a notice to quit on either day could be construed as a notice to quit when the current period in question ended. As a matter of language a notice "terminating a tenancy" on the last day of a current period (which was the form used in the present case) may, apart from Sidebotham v. Holland (1), fairly be said to mean the same thing as a notice to quit and deliver up possession on the following day, for in both cases the landlord is intimating that the last day of the current period is to be the last day of the tenancy. G

In Queen's Club Gardens Estates, Ltd. v. Bignell (2), the question of weekly tenancies was considered by a Divisional Court and the principles applicable were stated very fully by LUSH, J. He held, and SALTER, J. agreed with his judgment, that in all cases of periodical tenancy, whether yearly, quarterly, monthly, or weekly, the same principle is to be applied and a valid notice to quit must be expressed so as to terminate the tenancy at the end of a current period. In our view, this is right, and Sidebotham v. Holland (1), therefore, applies to the present case and was rightly accepted by the county court judge H as authority for the view that the notice given by the landlord was effectual to terminate the tenancy.

We would like to add that the expression "Saturday to Saturday tenancy," which was used by the county court judge in this case and by SALTER, J. in the case cited, is, or may be, misleading. If a tenancy for a week begins on a Saturday it expires at midnight on the following Friday. We think that SALTER, J. was wrong when he treated the Monday as the second of the seven days forming a current week of the tenancy. If a tenancy commences on a Saturday we think Monday is the third of the seven days forming a current week.

The present notice to quit, as will be seen, contains an alternative. Presumably, this was inserted on grounds which are referred to by A. L. SMITH, L.J., in Sidebotham v. Holland (1) ([1895] 1 Q.B. 389). He there says that the landlord would have avoided the difficulties which had arisen if he had added the words which are very ordinarily inserted in a notice to quit "or at the expiration of the year of your tenancy which shall expire next after the end of one half year from the service of this notice." It will be seen that in the present notice the alternative purports to run from the date of the notice and not of its service, which was, in fact, three days later, so that, if the landlord had had to rely on the alternative, the length of the notice would have been insufficient. In the course of the argument the court felt that a possible point might have been taken with regard to this alternative, and also possibly with regard to the validity of the use of this suggested alternative form, which may be said to leave it in doubt on which day the landlord claimed to re-enter. There is, however, no suggestion in the judge's note that any such point was taken below, and it did not seem to us, therefore, open to the court to consider it on the present appeal. In saying this, we do not desire to be thought to be expressing any opinion one way or the other on either point. The appeal will be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

[Reported by R. L. ZIAR, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

med. C.A. [1948] 1 All E.R. 713.

Re A DECISION OF A DISTRICT AUDITOR.

APPEAL OF V. R. DICKSON.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., Atkinson and Oliver, JJ.), May 2, 12, 1947.]

Local Government—Audit—Powers of district auditor—Fraud by company—Surcharge on managing director—Local Government Act, 1933 (c. 51), s. 228.

A company overstated the time it had spent on work for a local authority, and, as a result, large overpayments were made by the authority. The district auditor estimated the amount of loss to the authority, and purported to surcharge therewith the managing director of the company.

HELD: the district auditor had no power to surcharge anyone who was not a member, officer or servant of the authority whose accounts were being audited.

[AS TO POWERS AND DUTIES OF AUDITOR, see HALSBURY, Halsbury's Laws, Vol. 21, pp. 223, 224, para. 415; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 33, pp. 19-21, Nos. 76-86.]

Case referred to:

(1) R. v. Roberts, [1908] 1 K.B. 407; 77 L.J.K.B. 281; 98 L.T. 154; 72 J.P. 81; 33 Digest 40, 217.

APPEAL by notice of motion under the Local Government Act, 1933, s. 229 (1), against a surcharge made by a district auditor. The facts appear in the judgment of ATKINSON, J.

J. Scott Henderson, K.C., and H. G. Garland for the appellant.

Pritt, K.C., and H. B. Williams for the respondent, the district auditor.

Sir Valentine Holmes, K.C., and H. V. Lloyd-Jones for the London County Council.

Cur. adv. vult.

May 12. ATKINSON, J., read the following judgment of the court. On Jan. 18, 1941, the London County Council entered into a contract with Hortensia Garages, Ltd., for the repair and maintenance of vehicles used for civil defence purposes. The price to be paid for services rendered by the company included wages actually paid, plus 157½ per cent., plus the net cost of materials. The contract provided the fullest opportunities for inspection of work cards, time sheets, books and wages records. After somewhat more than 3 years it was discovered that certain of the accounts sent in by the company were wrong in that the time alleged to have been spent was grossly overstated. The appellant, Dickson, was the managing director of the company. He was prosecuted for obtaining money by fraud and convicted. A The sums, the subject of the charges on which he was convicted, amounted to £103 3s. 1d.

The respondent, the district auditor, then proceeded to estimate as best he could the loss suffered by the London County Council on the basis that the invoices sent in by the company were fraudulently exaggerated throughout the whole period. He came to the conclusion that the London County Council had been defrauded to the extent of at least £20,000. Thereupon, he caused to be served on Dickson this notice : B

In auditing the accounts for the three years ended Mar. 31, 1944, of the London County Council, it appears to me that the funds of the said council have incurred a deficiency or loss, particulars of which are given on the back hereof. Upon the evidence before me, I am inclined to the view that you are responsible either wholly or in part for the said deficiency or loss. In order to afford you an opportunity of being heard on the subject, before I decide whether it is my duty to surcharge you with the said amount or some portion thereof, I beg to inform you that I have adjourned the audit so far as relates to this matter to Wednesday, June 19, 1946. Particulars : Loss occasioned to the London County Council by your misconduct in improperly making inflated claims upon the said council and obtaining payment thereon in excess of that lawfully due to you to the extent of at least £20,000. C

This notice was followed by requests by Dickson's solicitors for particulars and of the evidence on which the surcharge was made. The auditor declined to accede to either request and fixed June 26, 1946, for hearing anything Dickson might have to say in answer to the surcharge. Counsel attended on behalf of Dickson. The auditor explained that he was satisfied on the evidence before him that there had been a very serious overstatement by the firm of the hours expended, and that he had endeavoured to make a correct estimate of the probable amount of the loss and the cost in relation to repairs. He explained how he had done it and referred to the evidence of five witnesses. "It was open" he said "to Mr. Dickson, if he wished, to show quite conclusively that his figures were wrong." Counsel explained that he was not in a position to deal with it, as he had neither seen nor heard the evidence relied on and had no opportunity of hearing or cross-examining the witnesses. A further opportunity of being heard was offered and declined and thereupon the surcharge was certified on Sept. 20, 1946. Dickson now appeals. D E F

The first point of counsel for the appellant was that the surcharge is wholly misconceived as a district auditor has no power to surcharge anyone other than members, officers and servants of the authority whose accounts he has to audit. The claim by the auditor is certainly startling. Apparently, he considers that, if the London County Council has a cause of action against any person, the council need not bring an action to enforce the claim (when, of course, the claim would have to be proved), but he (the auditor) can deal with it by the simple process of surcharging the person with the amount of the claim, leaving it to him to come to the court to disprove the liability so imposed. The objectionable nature of such a proceeding is made plain by one of the remarks of the auditor to counsel for Dickson. He said : G

I do appreciate that there is always some difficulty about audit procedure, because, of course, the auditor is in the unenviable position of being, so to speak, the judge and the prosecutor. H

The auditor bases his claim to be entitled to surcharge Dickson on the Local Government Act, 1933, s. 228, which provides :

(1) It shall be the duty of the district auditor at every audit held by him (a) to disallow every item of account which is contrary to law ; (b) to surcharge the amount of any expenditure disallowed upon the person responsible for incurring or authorising the expenditure ; (c) to surcharge any sum which has not been duly brought into account upon the person by whom that sum ought to have been brought into account ; (d) [and this is the more relevant part] to surcharge the amount of any loss or deficiency upon any person by whose negligence or misconduct the loss or deficiency has been incurred ; (e) to certify the amount due from any person upon whom he has made a surcharge . . .

A It is the auditor's contention that " any person " means any person, whether a member, officer or servant of the council or not, and that everybody is subject to his jurisdiction in just the same way as those whose accounts he is there to audit.

B Counsel for the auditor felt the difficulty of contending for a power to surcharge unrestricted as to the class of persons who could be so dealt with. He was asked this question : If the auditor came across an expenditure on the repair of a vehicle belonging to the London County Council and was told that that repair was rendered necessary by a collision with a van belonging to, say, Carter Paterson, did he contend that the auditor could forthwith surcharge the company for the expense so incurred ? The answer was " No," and the claim was then put in these words, " that ' any person ' meant any person who stands in a relation to the local authority which calls on him for diligence or good conduct on some special ground other than the general duty resting on all members of the community." There is nothing in the section on which C to found such a definition of " person." Contract would seem, at any rate generally, to be the basis of special relationships, yet loss due to breach of contract is not mentioned in s. 228 as a loss which can be surcharged.

The power of a district auditor to surcharge was, I think, first conferred by the Poor Law Amendment Act, 1844, s. 32, and the relevant words were :

D . . . and such auditor shall charge in every account audited by him the amount of any deficiency or loss incurred by negligence or misconduct of any person accounting, or of any sum for which such person is accountable, but not brought by him into account against such person, and shall certify . . .

This was replaced by the Public Health Act, 1875, s. 247, the relevant words being :

E . . . shall charge against any person accounting the amount of any deficiency or loss incurred by the negligence or misconduct of that person, or of any sum which ought to have been but is not brought into account by that person.

Section 228 of the Act of 1933 omits the word " accounting." The auditor's claim is based on that omission. It certainly was never suggested that under the 1844 Act or the Act of 1875 the words " persons accounting " could include persons accounting to, or liable to account to, the local authority. Clearly the words referred to accounting which fell to be audited.

F The meaning of the words was considered in R. v. Roberts (1), where the auditor had surcharged certain members of the highway committee of the council with several sums representing losses incurred by the council in respect of contracts for horse forage and crushed ballast because the highest instead of the lowest of several tenders had been accepted. The assistant engineer had been included for a sum representing the price of 410 yards of material in excess of the quantity actually delivered and also in respect of the crushed ballast. The persons surcharged obtained rules nisi for a certiorari to bring up and quash the surcharges, and this court made the rules absolute. The G auditor appealed without success. The interest of the case lies in the views expressed as to the meaning of the words " person accounting," whether they were wide enough to include any member or officer of the local authority whose accounts were being audited or whether the words covered only those officers actually bringing in an account for audit. The court were divided in H their views. LORD COZENS-HARDY took the view that the words were wide enough to enable any officer or servant of the local authority to be surcharged. He said ([1908] 1 K.B. 418) :

Strictly speaking, such a person would not be a person bringing in an account subject to audit and therefore liable to be surcharged in such account. But I think " surcharge " is used in a less technical sense and is equivalent to " charge " ; and this enables me to reach the conclusion that the words " any person accounting " in the second limb of the sub-section are wide enough to include any member of the local authority whose accounts are before the auditor.

FARWELL, L.J., took the same view, although he arrived at it in a slightly different way. He said (ibid. p. 440) :

"The person accounting" refers back to the line before, "the person making or authorising the making of" the payment, showing that "accounting" is not confined to figures submitted to audit, but extends to conduct for which any committee or officer is liable to be called to account.

FLETCHER MOULTON, L.J., took a different view. His view, as expressed in the headnote (ibid. p. 407), was :

The powers and duties of the auditor under s. 247 (7) are strictly confined to auditing and the words "person accounting" in that latter part of that sub-section, which requires the auditor to "charge against any person accounting the amount of any deficiency or loss incurred by the negligence or misconduct of that person," mean the person who brings in accounts for audit. Therefore, where the accounts submitted for audit are the accounts of a metropolitan borough council, the person accounting is the council, and the auditor has no power to inquire into the negligence or misconduct of the individual members or servants of the council.

In our view, in all probability the word "accounting" was omitted from the 1933 Act to negative the strict interpretation put on the words by FLETCHER MOULTON, L.J., and to make it clear that the interpretation of the MASTER OF THE ROLLS and FARWELL, L.J., was intended by Parliament. It is unthinkable that Parliament intended by the omission of a single word to make so startling and drastic a change in the law as to give a district auditor the power to make and adjudicate on claims by the local authority of which he is auditor against third parties who have nothing whatever to do with the accounts he is auditing, and to do that by a procedure which gives the third party no right to hear and challenge the evidence against him, and no right to subpoena witnesses. The words must be interpreted in the light of ss. 219 and 241. The auditor is there to audit accounts. He is there to be a watchdog on the local authority, its officers and servants. He is there to check their accounts and saddle the appropriate members and officers with loss for which they are responsible. The words "negligence or misconduct" are very apt to describe and cover the grounds on which members and servants of an authority can become indebted to the authority. Misconduct is not a word normally applied to any claim against a third party. If claims against third parties were intended to be covered, surely breach of contract would find a place in the section.

In the view of this court, the district auditor has no power to surcharge anyone who is not a member, officer or servant of the authority whose accounts are being audited. We are told that this is not the first time that the district auditor has surcharged persons other than those I have indicated. We think he would be well-advised if he stuck to his auditing and ceased to make claims on members of the public and thereupon to adjudicate upon them, thereby usurping the functions of the courts.

Appeal allowed with costs.

Solicitors: Alfred C. Warwick & Co. (for the appellant); Sharpe Pritchard & Co. (for the respondent district auditor); J. H. Pawlyn (for the London County Council).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

C. v. C.

[PROBATE, DIVORCE AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION (Lord Merriman, P., and Jones, J.), January 29, April 27, 28, 29, May 20, 1947.]

Husband and Wife—Summary jurisdiction—Custody—Legitimated child—"Child of the marriage"—No formal declaration of legitimacy—Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895 (c. 39), s. 5 (b)—Married Women (Maintenance) Act, 1920 (c. 63), s. 1 (1)—Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925 (c. 49), ss. 188 (1), 193 (1)—Legitimacy Act, 1926 (c. 60), s. 1 (1).

On June 19, 1944, the wife, then a single woman, gave birth to a child, the husband, who was a single man at that time, being the father. On Mar. 16, 1946, the parties were married. By that marriage the child was legitimated by virtue of the provisions of s. 1 (1) of the Legitimacy Act, 1926, but no petition had been presented on behalf of the child under s. 2 of that Act, and no declaration had been made under s. 188 of the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925, that the child was the legitimate child of the parties. On a complaint by the wife before justices that the husband had deserted her and neglected to maintain her and the child, the justices made an order giving the custody of the child to the mother.

HELD : the order was within the jurisdiction of the justices.

Semble : Section 193 of the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925, gives the Divorce Court jurisdiction to deal with the custody of a child legitimated per subsequens matrimonium under s. 1 (1) of the Legitimacy Act, 1926, "the marriage of whose parents is the subject of the proceedings," and a decree of legitimacy under s. 188 of the Act is not a condition precedent to the exercise of that jurisdiction.

Bednall v. Bednall and Shivussawa (1), [1927] P. 225; Green v. Green (2), [1929] P. 101; Jones v. Jones (3) (1929), 98 L.J.P. 74 not followed. M. v. M. (4), [1945] 2 All E.R. 525 approved.

[EDITORIAL NOTE.] It should be noted that, so long as the above expression of opinion stands, the passage in Halsbury referred to below, which was based on the three cases now disapproved of, can no longer be regarded as good law.

AS TO ORDER FOR CUSTODY OF ILLEGITIMATE CHILD, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 10, p. 754, para. 1188; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST SUPP.]

Cases referred to :

- (1) Bednall v. Bednall and Shivussawa, [1927] P. 225; 96 L.J.P. 150; 137 L.T. 632; Digest Supp.
- (2) Green v. Green, [1929] P. 101; 98 L.J.P. 58; 140 L.T. 93; Digest Supp.
- (3) Jones v. Jones (1929), 98 L.J.P. 74; 140 L.T. 647; Digest Supp.
- (4) M. v. M., [1945] 2 All E.R. 525; [1946] P. 31; 115 L.J.P. 29; 173 L.T. 305; Digest Supp.
- (5) Evans v. Evans and Blyth, [1904] P. 274; 73 L.J.P. 87; 91 L.T. 356; 27 Digest 532, 5762.
- (6) Langworthy v. Langworthy (1886), 11 P.D. 85; 55 L.J.P. 33; 54 L.T. 776; 27 Digest 552, 6057.
- (7) Thomasset v. Thomasset, [1894] P. 295; 63 L.J.P. 140; 71 L.T. 148; 27 Digest 533, 5780.
- (8) Re Wicks' Marriage Settlement, Public Trustee v. Wicks, [1940] Ch. 475; 109 L.J.Ch. 163; 163 L.T. 31; Digest Supp.

APPEAL by the husband from an order of Bolton (Lancashire) justices, made on Dec. 10, 1946, awarding custody to the wife of a legitimated child in respect of whom no declaration of legitimacy had been made under s. 188 of the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925.

Duveen for the husband.

E. Holroyd Pearce, K.C., and Stuart Horner for the child.

The wife was not represented.

Cur. adv. vult.

May 20. LORD MERRIMAN, P., read the following judgment of the court. This is an appeal by a husband against an order of the justices for the county borough of Bolton, in the county of Lancaster, made on Dec. 10, 1946. Before the justices the wife complained that the husband had deserted her on Nov. 27, 1946, and had thereafter wilfully neglected to maintain her and their child, and she asked also that she be given the custody of the child. The justices found that the husband had deserted the wife as she alleged, and they ordered him to pay her the nominal sum of 1s. a week for her maintenance, and the sum of 6s. a week for the maintenance of the child. They also gave her the custody of the child. The husband does not appeal against the findings of the justices as to his desertion or as to maintenance, but he appeals against the provision in the order giving custody of the child to the wife on the grounds (1) that the justices had no jurisdiction to make any order with regard to the child, and (2) that the wife in any event was and is not entitled to the custody of the child. The wife was not represented. When the appeal first came before this court on Jan. 29, 1947, it appeared that the allegation of want of jurisdiction in the justices was based on the fact that the child, Isobel, was born before the marriage of the parties, and had been legitimated by their subsequent marriage by virtue of the provisions of the Legitimacy Act, 1926. It seemed to us to be desirable in these circumstances that the hearing of the appeal should be adjourned so that the child should be represented. At our request the Official Solicitor agreed to appear for the child, and on the adjourned hearing on Apr. 28 and 29, 1947, he was represented by counsel. The court is indebted to counsel on both sides for their assistance. In the meanwhile the Official Solicitor had made certain enquiries as to the parties and their respective homes, and has sworn an affidavit verifying a report by a member of his staff. In consequence of this report counsel for the husband did not contend that the justices were wrong in giving the custody of the child to the wife, if they had jurisdiction to do so. We have considered the report, and agree with the view taken by the justices. That being so, there remains only the ground of want of jurisdiction.

There is no dispute about the facts. The justices found that the wife was a single woman when she gave birth to the child on June 19, 1944, and that the husband, who was a single man at the time of the birth, is the father of the child. The parties were married on Mar. 16, 1946, and by that marriage the child was legitimated by virtue of the provisions of the Legitimacy Act, 1926, but no petition has been presented on behalf of the child under s. 2 of that Act, and no declaration has been made under s. 188 of the Judicature Act, 1925, that she is the legitimate child of the parties.

We are confronted here with two separate points, one of which is of importance both to the jurisdiction of this Division and to the jurisdiction of magistrates' courts with regard to custody, while the other affects only the jurisdiction of magistrates' courts. The first point is whether Bednall v. Bednall (1), Green v. Green (2), and Jones v. Jones (3), were rightly decided. It was held in these cases that the Divorce Court has no jurisdiction under s. 193 of the Judicature Act, 1925, to deal with the custody of a legitimated child as being "a child, the marriage of whose parents is the subject of the proceedings," unless and until a formal declaration of legitimacy by virtue of the Act of 1926 has been obtained. Manifestly, if these cases were rightly decided in relation to the words used in s. 193 of the Judicature Act, 1925, the absence of such a declaration of legitimacy would be equally fatal to the jurisdiction to treat a legitimated child as "a child of the marriage" within the meaning of the Summary Jurisdiction (Separation and Maintenance) Acts, 1895 to 1925. This point, therefore, affects both jurisdictions. The second point is whether, even if these cases are held to be wrongly decided and the decision of DENNING, J., in M. v. M. (4), is held to be right, it would still be impossible to hold that a legitimated child is "a child of the marriage" within the meaning of the Summary Jurisdiction (Separation and Maintenance) Acts, although he is "a child the marriage of whose parents is the subject of the proceedings" within the meaning of s. 193 of the Judicature Act, 1925.

This brings us to the question whether Bednall v. Bednall (1), and the cases following it, or M. v. M. (2), were rightly decided. We do not think it necessary to examine the cases referred to by DENNING, J., in which legitimacy was in issue otherwise than in connection with divorce proceedings, but some assistance may, perhaps, be derived from Evans v. Evans (5). This was a petition for variation of settlements after a decree of dissolution of marriage where a child had been born between the date of the decree nisi and the date of the decree absolute, and its paternity was hotly contested by the petitioner. Before deciding the question of the variation of settlements GORELL BARNES, J., directed an issue to be tried to ascertain the status of the child. It is true that this was a decision, not on the question of custody, but on a separate petition for what is now dealt with as ancillary relief on the main petition, and that the child was made a party to the proceedings, but it is clear that the learned judge did not think it necessary to invoke the procedure under the Legitimacy Declaration Act, 1858, and the Attorney-General was not made a respondent as is prescribed by s. 6 of that Act (now s. 188 (4) of the Judicature Act, 1925), as a condition precedent to dealing with the matter. In M. v. M. ([1945] 2 All E.R. 528), DENNING, J., placed great reliance on the decision of the Court of Appeal in Langworthy v. Langworthy (6), which is referred to as showing that the test under s. 193 of the Judicature Act, 1925, [which is in the same terms as s. 35 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857, the section there under discussion], is "parenthood not legitimacy." That case established that a child of the union who is rendered illegitimate by the annulment of the marriage can be dealt with under s. 193, for the very reason, as is pointed out by COTTON and FRY, L.J.J., (11 P.D. 89), that the section expressly refers to nullity proceedings, but in relation to proceedings for divorce, at any rate, we think that to say that parenthood, not legitimacy, is the test, goes too far. It cannot, in our opinion, be suggested that, although the parenthood is undisputed, an illegitimate child who cannot be legitimated is the subject of custody proceedings under s. 193, on the divorce of the spouses who are, in fact, his parents, but we agree with DENNING, J., that the fact that the wording of s. 193 is wide enough to cover the case of a child of the union rendered illegitimate by the annulment of the marriage of his parents, tends to support the view that in divorce proceedings it is also wide enough to include a child who has been rendered legitimate.

We recognise the inconvenience of upsetting the practice of this Division in regard to legitimated children which has prevailed for nearly 20 years and is based on the authority of cases in two of which the Attorney-General appeared to assist the court, but this court is not bound by these decisions, and if we think that they were wrongly decided we are bound to say so. In our opinion, they were wrongly decided, and the decision of DENNING, J., in M. v. M. (4), was right. Our reasons, which are substantially those which prevailed with DENNING, J., can be stated quite shortly. In a divorce suit, although the welfare of the child is the paramount consideration, the question of custody is an issue between the parents: Thomasset v. Thomasset (7), [1894] P. 301, per LINDLEY, L.J. Provided the other conditions are fulfilled, it is the subsequent marriage of his parents which renders the child legitimate by virtue of the Legitimacy Act, 1926, and it is that same marriage of those parents which is the subject of the proceedings in which the custody order is sought to be made. In our opinion, s. 193 of the Judicature Act, 1925, gives the court jurisdiction in such a case, and a decree of legitimacy under s. 188 of the Judicature Act, 1925, is not a condition precedent to the exercise of that jurisdiction.

As regards the second point, the most formidable argument in support of the contention that a legitimated child should not be regarded as "a child of the marriage" is derived from the judgment of FARWELL, J., in Re Wicks' Marriage Settlement (8). This was a case of a special character arising on the construction of a particular ante-nuptial settlement. In 1893 when the marriage settlement was executed and the marriage took place, there was in existence an illegitimate child of the spouses. The settlement contained power to appoint, after the life interest of the wife, to any one or more of the issue of the spouses as the husband should by deed, will or codicil appoint. It goes without saying that there was at that time no question in this country of the legitimation of the illegitimate child by the marriage, and he would not be included in the accepted interpretation of the word "issue" when the settlement was made. After the death of the wife, and at a time when the question whether the child born before the date of the marriage was a permissible object of the power of appointment given to the husband, or was entitled to a share of the trust fund in default of appointment, was still sub judice, the husband by deed appointed the whole of the trust fund to that child, although there were alive legitimate issue of the marriage who had a vested interest in the trusts subject to the divesting of any one or more of them by a permissible exercise of the power of appointment. In these circumstances FARWELL, J., held, on the construction of this instrument, that the legitimated child was not a proper object of the power of appointment under this deed, notwithstanding the effect of the Legitimacy Act, 1926, and that, although he was "legitimate" by virtue of the use of that word in the Legitimacy Act, he was not a child of the marriage. At the outset of his judgment the learned judge said ([1940] Ch. 477) :

It cannot, in my judgment, be true to say that the defendant Lionel Arthur Wicks was a child of the marriage; he is a legitimate child of the spouses, but he is not a child of the marriage because in fact he was born before his parents were married.

Now, in common parlance it is difficult to draw any distinction between such phrases as "a legitimate child," "a legitimate child of the spouses," "a child born in lawful wedlock," or "a child of the marriage." It seems to us that they are synonymous terms. Parliament can alter the status of a child, but it cannot alter the chronological order of events, i.e., legitimation by virtue of the Act of 1926 can, as a matter of history, merely be notional. It is not to be expected that Parliament will employ more than one of several synonymous terms, in the alternative, to express its meaning. When, therefore, in s. 1 of the Legitimacy Act, 1926, Parliament enacts that in the case of a living illegitimate person whose parents marry or have married one another either before or after the commencement of the Act, the father being at the time of the marriage domiciled in England or Wales, the marriage shall render that person legitimate from whichever is the later of the two dates [the commencement of the Act or the date of the marriage], it is difficult to see why, by the same process, that person is not also "rendered" a child born in lawful wedlock, or a child of the marriage. Parliament, by the very use of the words "rendered legitimate" recognises that it is a notional process, and it seems to us that there is no reason, except the fact that Parliament has used one synonym rather than another to express the same notion, for holding that the historical fact that the person was born before his parents were married prevents him from acquiring the same status in whatever form of words it is described. It may be that the decision in Re Wicks (8), can be supported on the construction of the particular instrument, but, in our opinion, it does not oblige us to hold that a legitimated child is not a child of the marriage within the meaning of the Summary Jurisdiction (Separation and Maintenance) Acts.

Another argument was based on the operation of s. 6 (2) of the Legitimacy Act, 1926, on the Widows', Orphans' and Old Age Contributory Pensions Act, 1925. Under the latter Act the pensionable rights of widows becoming such after the coming into force of the Act depend, by s. 3, among other things, on there having been at least one child of the marriage, and the same applies by virtue of s. 18 (c) to the entitlement of widows existing when the Act came into force. By s. 44 (1) of the Act, a child includes, in certain conditions, an illegitimate child. It was necessary, therefore, to make clear the position of a legitimated child. Accordingly, sub-s. 4 of the same section enacts that where a child born before the marriage of his parents has been legitimated by virtue of the subsequent marriage of his parents, the child shall, for the purposes of this Act, be "deemed" to be a child born of the marriage. Now at that time the Legitimacy Act, 1926, had not come into existence, but the Widows', Orphans' and Old Age Contributory Pensions Act applied to Scotland. It is reasonably clear, therefore, that this last sub-section was intended to deal with the established law of Scotland on this subject, but similar wording is used in this connection in s. 6 (2) of the Legitimacy Act, 1926, and it is argued that by specifically enacting that for certain purposes a legitimated child should be "deemed" to be a child of the marriage, Parliament was recognising that the child was not, in fact, "a child of the marriage." This argument, no doubt, has force in relation to the combined effect of the Widows', Orphans' and Old Age Contributory Pensions Act, 1925, and the Legitimacy Act, 1926, but, again, we find it difficult to distinguish between the process of "rendering legitimate" contrary to historical fact, and "deeming" the child to be legitimate. Both alike seem to us to be notional processes. However that may be, we are of opinion that it would be wrong to infer from the absence in the Legitimacy Act, 1926, of any similar provision in relation to the Summary Jurisdiction (Separation and Maintenance) Acts, that Parliament intended to declare that, for the purposes of those Acts, a legitimated child was not a child of the marriage.

For these reasons we are of opinion that the appeal fails and must be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: J. A. H. Powell (for the husband); Official Solicitor (for the child).

[Reported by R. HENDRY WHITE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re EASTEX MANUFACTURING CO., LTD.'S APPLICATION.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Wynn-Parry, J.), May 1, 2, 5, 6, 7, 8, 21, 1947.]

Trade Marks—Application to register—Mark “likely to deceive or cause confusion” with mark already on register—Defensive registration—Notional user—Trade Marks Act, 1938 (c. 22), s. 12, 27 (1) (6).

In determining whether registration of a trade mark would be contrary to the Trade Marks Act, 1938, s. 12, defensive registration must be treated on the same basis as ordinary registration, because, by s. 27 (6) of the Act, s. 12 applies to defensive registration. The primary consideration under s. 12 is, not the proved user, in fact, of the trade mark already registered, but the extent of the monopoly given by the existing registrations held by the proprietors thereof, and the risk to that monopoly if the new mark applied for is registered, that risk being assessed by the notional user postulated by the formula laid down by EVERSHED, J., in Re Smith Hayden's Application (63 R.P.C. 97, at p. 101) which is to the following effect: Assuming user by the proprietors of the mark already registered of their mark in a normal and fair manner for any of the goods covered by the registration of that mark, is the court satisfied that there will be no reasonable likelihood of deception or confusion among a substantial number of persons if the proprietors of the mark now sought to be registered also use their mark normally and fairly in respect of any goods covered by their proposed registrations? It is to test the rights of the proprietor of a registered mark when application is made to register another mark that the notional user is postulated. In such a case, while actual user does not form the test, it may well be referred to when considering what is the proper extent of a notional user in a normal and fair manner. The notional user will usually be found to be wider and more extensive than the actual user. The onus is on the applicants for registration to establish that there is no real, tangible danger of confusion if the mark applied for is used in a normal and fair manner. On the other hand, the objections put forward by the opponents of the registration must be real and not fanciful.

[AS TO DEFENSIVE TRADE MARKS, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 32, pp. 555, 556, para. 860. FOR THE TRADE MARKS ACT, 1938, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 31, p. 753.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Re Smith Hayden's Application (1946), 63 R.P.C. 97.
- (2) Re Pianotist Co.'s Application (1906), 23 R.P.C. 774; 43 Digest 170, 257.
- (3) Re Rysta, Ltd.'s Application, Re Aristoc, Ltd.'s Opposition, [1943] 1 All E.R. 400; reversd. sub nom. Aristoc, Ltd. v. Rysta, Ltd., [1945] 1 All E.R. 34; [1945] A.C. 68; 114 L.J. Ch. 52; 172 L.T. 69; 62 R.P.C. 65; Digest Supp.

APPEAL by motion from a decision of the Assistant Comptroller of Trade Marks, dated July 11, 1946, allowing the registration of three trade marks applied for by the respondents, Eastex Manufacturing Co., Ltd. The application was opposed by the appellants, Lastex Yarn and Lactron Thread, Ltd. The facts appear in the judgment.

Lloyd-Jacob, K.C., and P. Stuart Bevan for the appellants.
Burrell, K.C., and S. I. Levy for the respondents.

Cur. adv. vult.

May 21. WYNN-PARRY, J., read the following judgment. This is an appeal from the decision of the Assistant Comptroller of Trade Marks, dated July 11, 1946, in favour of Eastex Manufacturing Co., Ltd., the respondents to the appeal, allowing the registration in class 25 (in respect of coats and costumes, all for women, not being waterproof or rainproof) of three marks applied for by them. In the first application (No. 620,685, dated Oct. 22, 1942), the mark consists of the word “Eastex” printed in block letters. In the second application, the mark consists of the word “Eastex” printed in script form, and, in addition, below it a relatively small device consisting of the figure of some animal, probably a lion or a unicorn, holding a crown. In the third application (No. 620,812, dated Nov. 2, 1942), the mark consists of the word “Eastex” written in the same script form as in the case of the second mark applied for, together with the words, also in script form: “Full figure fashions,” written below in smaller type. The registration of these marks is opposed by Lastex Yarn and Latron Thread, Ltd., on the grounds that they are the proprietors of seventeen trade marks each consisting of the word "Lastex" registered in respect of various specifications of goods in the textile classes, that they have extensively used the word "Lastex" as a trade mark in their business, and that registration of the marks applied for would be contrary to the Trade Marks Act, 1938, ss. 11 and 12. The Assistant Comptroller, in his decision, took the view that so much of the evidence had to be considered under both sections that it would be convenient, not to endeavour to deal separately with the two sections, but to deal comprehensively with the question of the likelihood of deception or confusion arising. Before me, however, counsel for the respondents, in his able and exhaustive argument, dealt with the two sections separately, and I have come to the conclusion, particularly as there is no express finding by the Assistant Comptroller under s. 11, that, having regard to the way in which the matter developed before me, it would be preferable that I should follow this course.

It will, first, be convenient to state the scope of the inquiries under the respective sections, for which purpose I cannot do better than adapt to the present case the formula evolved by EVERSHED, J., in Re Smith Hayden's Application (1): (A) Under s. 11: Having regard to the reputation acquired by the name "Lastex," is the court satisfied that the mark applied for, if used in a normal and fair manner in connection with any goods covered by the registration proposed, will not be reasonably likely to cause deception and confusion among a substantial number of persons? (B) Under s. 12: Assuming user by the appellants of their mark "Lastex" in a normal and fair manner for any of the goods covered by the registrations of those marks, is the court satisfied that there will be no reasonable likelihood of deception or confusion among a substantial number of persons if the respondents also use their mark "Eastex" normally and fairly in respect of any goods covered by their proposed registrations? In the case of each section the onus is on the respondents, as applicants, to establish to the satisfaction of the court that there is no real, tangible danger of confusion. On the other hand, the objections put forward by the appellants must, equally, be real and not fanciful.

Under s. 11 the existence of registration of the appellants' mark "Lastex" is nihil ad rem. The vital consideration is the extent and also the nature of the reputation which they have acquired and enjoyed in the word "Lastex" at the dates of the respondents' applications. This is purely a question of fact. [HIS LORDSHIP reviewed the evidence and continued:—] On the evidence, I cannot see any risk of confusion in practice. So far as ordering is concerned, the persons who will order from the appellants are manufacturers who know what they want, namely, the Lastex yarn, to be incorporated in their garments. So far as the retailers are concerned, they will order from the manufacturers garments containing Lastex yarn, on the one hand, and from the respondents coats and costumes under the brand name of "Eastex," on the other hand. So far as the public is concerned, on the assumption that the appellants' advertising campaign and their method of identifying their yarn by labels have succeeded, which I see no reason to doubt, I can see no real, tangible danger that they will confuse articles containing "Lastex" yarn, on the one hand, with articles sold under the brand name of "Eastex," on the other hand. I, therefore, come to the conclusion that, as regards s. 11 of the Act, the respondents have discharged the onus which lies on them.

I turn now to s. 12. Here, of course, different considerations arise. The Assistant Comptroller has found that the goods of the respondents' specifications and the specification of the appellants' defensive registration No. 604,297 include goods of the same description within the meaning of s. 12 of the Act. Counsel for the respondents accepted this conclusion at the hearing before me, and, having considered the Assistant Comptroller's reasoning, I would say that, with respect, I entirely agree with him. Apart from this defensive registration which is in respect of articles of clothing made wholly or partly of material in which india rubber is incorporated, and apart from registration No. 143,299, which is in respect of "Binding, boot laces, shoe laces, braid, trimmings, cord for trimming, galloons, lace, dress shields for sewing inside garments, ribbons, and webbing, all being goods not in the piece composed wholly or mainly of cotton" and is not restricted to articles in which india rubber is an essential component, the goods covered by the registrations on which the appellants rely broadly consist of yarns and threads, textile piece goods, and certain other textile goods, in all of which india rubber is incorporated to a greater or lesser degree, and do not include articles of clothing. The Assistant Comptroller expressed the view that the specifications of the registrations (other than the defensive registration No. 604,297), which relate to piece goods, also cover goods of the same description as those in respect of which the respondents seek registration, but that in this instance the conflict as to goods is somewhat slight. Again I entirely agree with him.

It will thus be seen that, as regards s. 12, the appellants must rely, and they did, in fact, rely, on the defensive registration No. 604,297, the scope of which I have already stated. As regards this aspect of the matter, the Assistant Comptroller held (i) that, having regard to the provisions of s. 27 (6), a defensive registration, so far as s. 12 is concerned, must be treated as if it were an ordinary registration; and (ii) that, taking into account all the relevant considerations, it was scarcely possible to envisage conditions under which, assuming use of the respondents' and appellants' marks in a fair and normal manner, no real, tangible danger of visual confusion of the marks would arise, and that, therefore, the respondents had just succeeded in discharging the onus which lay on them.

Counsel for the respondents although, of course, accepting the conclusion of the Assistant Comptroller, which was in his favour, submitted that the Assistant Comptroller had misdirected himself in law as to the effect of s. 12 on a defensive registration, and submitted that, on the view of the section which he puts forward, the Assistant Comptroller should have come more easily to a decision in the respondents' favour.

Section 27, (1) and (6), read as follows:—

(1) Where a trade mark consisting of an invented word or invented words has become so well known as respects any goods in respect of which it is registered and in relation to which it has been used that the use thereof in relation to other goods would be likely to be taken as indicating a connection in the course of trade between those goods and a person entitled to use the trade mark in relation to the first-mentioned goods, then, notwithstanding that the proprietor registered in respect of the first-mentioned goods does not use or propose to use the trade mark in relation to those other goods and notwithstanding anything in the last foregoing section, the trade mark may, on the application in the prescribed manner of the proprietor registered in respect of the first-mentioned goods, be registered in his name in respect of those other goods as a defensive trade mark and, while so registered, shall not be liable to be taken off the register in respect of those goods under the last foregoing section. . . . (6) Except as otherwise expressly provided in this section, the provisions of this Act shall apply in respect of the registration of trade marks as defensive trade marks and of trade marks so registered as they apply in other cases.

In my view, the effect of the language of s. 27 (6) is that the provisions of s. 12 apply to defensive registrations. Indeed, with this conclusion counsel for the respondents does not quarrel. But, he says, the question is how far it applies. His argument can, I think, be put thus. Section 12 proceeds on the assumption that the trade mark of the opponent is a valid trade mark and, therefore, having regard to the definition of "trade mark" in s. 68, that it is one which the proprietor uses or proposes to use. Where, as in the present case, the two marks are not identical, the question arises under s. 12 whether the mark of the applicant so nearly resembles the mark of the registered proprietor as to be likely to deceive or cause confusion. This is a question of fact for the court on the evidence. It cannot, however, be answered without postulating user, as is shown in the formula enunciated by EVERSHED, J., to which I have referred. But to postulate user of a defensive trade mark is not possible, because, as is made clear by s. 27 (1), it is of the essence of a defensive registration that the proprietor does not use or propose to use it. Therefore, counsel for the respondents propounded the following test as applicable in the present case: "Assuming that the use by any person other than the Lastex company of the trade mark 'Lastex' in relation to the goods covered by the defensive registration would, by reason of the user of that mark on Lastex yarn, be calculated to deceive, would the use of the mark 'Eastex' be calculated to deceive if used for the goods for which protection is applied?"

This is an ingenious, and at first sight attractive, argument, but, in my view, it is not sound. When once it is conceded that s. 12 applies to defensive trade marks, there must be found in s. 27 language of great strength before the application of s. 12, which by s. 27 (6) is apparently complete, is to be cut down and limited. It must be remembered that s. 12 applies to all marks on the register, whether they are used or not. Non-user may in given circumstances endanger continued registration, but, while a mark remains on the register, the proprietor continues to be entitled to the monopoly which that registration gives him under the Act, and to protection in respect of that monopoly. It is for the purpose of testing his rights when application is made to register another mark that there is postulated the notional user contemplated by the formula of EVERSHED, J. In such a case, actual user does not form the test, though it may well be referred to for the purpose of considering what is the proper extent of a notional user in a normal and fair manner. The notional user may well be, and will usually be, found to be wider and more extensive than the actual user. Again, in my view, on its language, s. 27 postulates a notional user. The words "that the use thereof" [in sub-s. (1)] mean "if it were used." I can see, therefore, no grounds for saying that the test to be applied under s. 12 in the case of a defensive trade mark is any different from the test to be applied in the case of an ordinary trade mark.

I, therefore, proceed to consider this case under s. 12, treating the defensive registration No. 604,297 on the same basis as if it were an ordinary registration. Under this section the proved user, in fact, of the name "Lastex" is not the primary consideration. The primary consideration is the extent of the monopoly given by the existing registrations held by the appellants, and the risk to that monopoly if the marks applied for are registered, that risk being assessed by the notional user postulated by the formula to which I have referred.

In this connection I have to bear in mind the particular considerations adumbrated by PARKER, J. (23 R.P.C. 777) in Re Pianotist Co.'s Application (2), and all other relevant considerations, including the element of imperfect recollection referred to by LUXMORE, L.J. ([1943] 1 All E.R. 407) in Re Rysta, Ltd.'s Application (3). It appears to me that, on the facts of the present case, one of the matters which I must take into consideration under s. 12 is the type of user by the appellants of the name "Lastex," which I have had to consider in discussing the matter under s. 11. It was urged that, in considering the matter under s. 12, actual user was nihil ad rem. This appears to go too far. It has been shown that, by the method of attaching labels to the garments and articles incorporating Lastex yarn and in the advertising campaign which they have conducted, the appellants have deliberately purposed to educate the public to accept the word "Lastex," not as showing the commercial origin of the article to which it is attached, but as showing that Lastex yarn is incorporated in the article. That is, they have been at pains to create an accurate impression. Now I must assume for the purposes of the notional user under s. 12 that the Lastex yarn will be incorporated in women's coats and costumes, a use which is covered by the defensive registration No. 604,297, but I must also assume that in respect of those coats and costumes the mark "Lastex" will be used in the same way as it has hitherto been used on such articles as swim-suits, corsets, belts, brassieres and surgical hose, namely, in such a way as to identify it, not with the garment as a brand name, but as indicating that "Lastex" yarn of the appellants' manufacture is incorporated therein. Otherwise, in the circumstances, I should not be assuming use by the appellants in a fair and normal manner. This appears to me to be the crux of the matter. Postulating such user of the appellants' mark in relation to women's coats and costumes, and postulating the use of the mark "Eastex" as a brand name on women's coats and skirts, indicating that they are the manufacture of the proprietor of the mark, and taking all relevant circumstances into consideration, is real, tangible confusion likely to result?

It is obvious from the wording of his decision that the Assistant Comptroller regarded this as a borderline case. I agree with him. I have most carefully considered his decision and I cannot find that he has anywhere misdirected himself. It was argued that he was wrong in taking the view that different considerations apply between cases where the goods are identical and where they are goods of the same description, and that, having come to the conclusion that, if the respondents had proposed to use their marks on identical goods, the visual resemblance between the marks was so close that he would have been bound to refuse the registration, the Assistant Comptroller should have regarded the question as closed in favour of the appellants. I do not so read the section. It appears to me that quite different considerations may apply when one is considering a case involving identical goods from a case involving goods of the same description, and that the onus placed on an applicant may well be less onerous in the latter case. This appears to me to be one of those cases where the court should not lightly differ from the conclusions of fact of the very experienced Assistant Comptroller. I have, however, accepted the responsibility which is mine as the judge hearing the appeal, and I have come to my own conclusion. In my judgment, taking into account all the circumstances to which I have referred, I conclude, as did the Assistant Comptroller, that the respondents have discharged the onus cast on them under s. 12. The appeal will, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors: Clifford-Turner & Co. (for the appellants); Bennett & Bennett (for the respondents).

[Reported by R. D. H. OSBORNE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

BIONDI v. KIRKLINGTON & PICCADILLY ESTATES, LTD.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Roxburgh, J.), May 12, 13, 19, 1947.]

Landlord and Tenant—Lease—Renewal—Lease for 35 years—Covenant to renew on request of lessees “made 6 months before the expiration of the term”—Request to renew made within 10 days of date of lease.

By a lease dated Mar. 1, 1911, a house was demised for 35 years from Feb. 8, 1911, and the lessor covenanted with the lessees that, “on the written request of the lessees made 6 calendar months before the expiration of the term hereby granted, and if there shall not at the time of such request be any existing breach or non-observance” of any of the lessees’ covenants, he would grant them a lease for the further term of 14 years from the expiration of the term granted. On Mar. 10, 1911, the lessees served a notice on the lessor stating that they elected to exercise the option for renewal contained in the lease:—

HELD: on the true construction of the covenant for renewal, the phrase “on the written request of the lessees made 6 calendar months before the expiration of the term hereby granted” was not capable of meaning “at any time before Aug. 8, 1945,” because (a) no long interval of time was contemplated between the making of the request and the granting of the further lease, and (b) the further lease was not to be granted until towards the end of the term, and, therefore, the assignee of the lease was not entitled to a further lease by reason of the notice of Mar. 10, 1911.

[AS TO COVENANTS FOR RENEWAL, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 20, pp. 152-157, paras. 165-169; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 31, pp. 69, 70, Nos. 2167-2169, and pp. 73-75, Nos. 2202-2209.]

ACTION by the assignee of a lease claiming specific performance of a covenant for renewal contained in the lease. The facts appear in the judgment.

Andrew Clark, K.C., and Donald H. Cohen for the plaintiff.

Holroyd Pearce, K.C., and Rawlence for the defendants.

Cur. adv. vult.

May 19. ROXBURGH, J., read the following judgment. By a lease dated Mar. 1, 1911, Emil Danziger demised Brunswick House, Jermyn Street, to Brunswick House, Ltd., for 35 years from Feb. 8, 1911. The lease contained a covenant for renewal in the following terms:

The lessor hereby covenants with the lessees that the lessor will on the written request of the lessees made 6 calendar months before the expiration of the term hereby granted, and if there shall not at the time of such request be any existing breach or non-observance of any of the covenants on the part of the lessees hereinbefore contained at the expense of the lessees grant to them a lease of the demised premises for the further term of 14 years from the expiration of the said term at the same rent and containing the like covenants and provisos as are herein contained with the exception of the present covenant for renewal, the lessees on the execution of such renewed lease to execute a counterpart thereof.

On Mar. 10, 1911, the original lessees served on the original lessor a notice in the following terms :

To Emil Danziger, Esq. Brunswick House, Ltd. hereby give you notice that, in pursuance of the option in that behalf contained in an indenture of lease dated Mar. 1, 1911, and made between yourself on the one part and themselves on the other part, being a lease of Brunswick House aforesaid for 35 years from Feb. 8, 1911, they elect to exercise the said option to obtain a further lease for a term of 14 years of the premises, Brunswick House, aforesaid, demised to them by the said indenture on the terms specified in such indenture.

On Dec. 22, 1913, the original lessor gave to the original lessees a licence to assign the lease. The recitals in that document refer to the notice of Mar. 10, 1911, but the operative words did not. In the course of time the lease and the benefit of the notice, whatever that may be, were assigned to the plaintiff. The reversion expectant on the determination of the lease became vested in the defendants, and the document of Mar. 10, 1911 came into their possession accordingly. The premises had become known as the Felix Hotel.

In July, 1945, the plaintiff desired to avail herself of the covenant for renewal, and her solicitors, on making inquiries of the defendants' solicitors, were surprised to learn of the existence of the notice of Mar. 10, 1911. As no question of estoppel falls to be decided, I will only add that the plaintiff's solicitors did try by way of precaution to give a confirmatory notice in writing of her desire to avail herself of the covenant for renewal, but their attempt was abortive because her non-observance of covenants in the lease precluded them from doing so. This was admitted before me. Accordingly, the plaintiff is bound to stand or fall by the notice of Mar. 10, 1911. She issued her writ on Nov. 4, 1946, claiming specific performance of the covenant for renewal and damages.

The phrase : "On the written request of the lessees made 6 calendar months before the expiration of the term hereby granted"—i.e., Feb. 8, 1946—is capable of at least four different meanings: (i) made on Aug. 8, 1945; (ii) made at any time before Aug. 8, 1945; (iii) made on or a reasonable time before Aug. 8, 1945; and (iv) given so as to take effect on Aug. 8, 1945. Of these four, the second alone would avail the plaintiff and is the meaning for which she contends.

Close inspection of the clause leads me to one clear conclusion, that is to say, that no long interval of time was contemplated between the making of the request and the granting of the further lease. In the first place, it is to be granted "on" the written request. Secondly, apart from the word "on," as no exact timetable is laid down, it must be assumed that the lessors were to perform their part of the covenant within a reasonable time after the receipt of the request. Thirdly, I cannot believe that the parties contemplated as possible that a notice might be given to the lessor in 1911, lie dormant until 1945, and then rise up to confront an unsuspecting assignee of the reversion at the end of the term. It is beside the point that, in the events that actually happened, the assignee of the lease, and not the assignee of the reversion, was the unsuspecting party. Fourthly, although the proviso relating to breach or non-observance of covenants is, as a matter of grammatical construction, attached to the making of the request, and, accordingly, requires to be complied with only at the date of the request, its practical importance is in relation to the granting of the further lease, and, if any considerable interval of time had been in contemplation, the time for compliance would, I feel sure, have been correlated to the granting of the further lease and not to the making of the request. These are my grounds for holding that no long interval was contemplated between the two.

I am also impelled towards another conclusion, namely, that the further lease was not to be granted until towards the end of the term. The covenant describes itself as a "covenant for renewal," and refers to the further lease

A as a "renewed lease," but any further lease to be granted in or about 1911 could not reasonably be described as a "renewed lease" and a covenant which envisaged the grant of a reversionary lease to take effect in 35 years' time could hardly fall within the category of "covenants for renewal." Again the phrase "expiration of the term" in this covenant must mean "expiration by effluxion of time," and, accordingly, if the term came to an end owing to a re-entry, the reversionary lease would be without a starting point, and, accordingly, could not take effect. I find it difficult to believe that the covenant contemplated the possibility of the grant of a reversionary lease in 1911 which would take effect if, but only if, the lease expired by effluxion of time in 1946. Lastly, the proviso relating to breach or non-observance of the covenants, to which I have already referred would be of very little value to the lessor, if the lessee, provided that he was not in default on the day after the lease was granted, could ensure for his successors in title a further lease even though (as happened) they were in default at the expiration of the term.

B These two conclusions, if well founded, compel the rejection of the only construction of the words "on the written request made 6 months before the expiration of the term" which would avail the plaintiff. I admit that the other three constructions also involve difficulties. It would not be easy to hold that the notice had to be given on one particular day and no other, and the remaining two constructions cannot readily be extracted from the language used. But, C in my judgment, any one of these three is to be preferred to that for which the plaintiff contends as doing less violence to good sense and language. Having reached this conclusion, I need not go on to consider whether the notice which was in fact given in 1911 amounted to such a written request as the covenant requires, or whether a notice given so long ago by a predecessor in title can avail a lessee who, while in breach of covenant, seeks to make it D the foundation 35 years afterwards of an action for specific performance or damages. The action must be dismissed.

Action dismissed with costs.

Solicitors: Gamlen, Bowerman & Forward (for the plaintiff); Burton & Ramsden (for the defendants).

[Reported by R. D. H. OSBORNE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

WRIGHT v. BENNETT AND ANOTHER.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Denning, J.), April 16, May 9, 1947.]

Practice—Costs—Taxation—Refresher fees—"Total time occupied by trial"—Midday adjournment—R.S.C. Ord. 65, r. 27 (48).

F In calculating "the total time occupied by the trial" for the purposes of R.S.C. Ord. 65, r. 27 (48), the time occupied by the midday adjournment during the hearing of a case should be excluded.

Collins v. Worley (1889), 60 L.T. 748, "no longer law."

G [AS TO COSTS ON TAXATION (REFRESHER FEES), see HALSBURY, Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. 26, pp. 102, 103, paras. 192, 193; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Title Practice, pp. 934-937, Nos. 4740-4760.]

Cases referred to:

(1) Collins v. Worley (1889), 60 L.T. 1748.

(2) Masson Templier & Co. v. De Fries, [1910] 1 K.B. 535; 79 L.J.K.B. 392; 102 L.T. 155.

H SUMMONS on a review of taxation adjourned into court for judgment. The facts appear in the judgment.

Dare for the plaintiff.

Fletcher-Cooke for the first defendant.

R. T. Paget and Silkin for the second defendant.

May 9. DENNING, J., read the following judgment. In this case the first point is whether or not the midday adjournment is to be included for the purpose of refresher fees to counsel. The case was heard on 20 days. The associate, in accordance with R.S.C. Ord. 36, r. 40, made a note of "the time actually occupied" by the trial on each day. He has recorded the very minute on which the case started on each day, the time at which the case was adjourned for the midday adjournment, the time at which it was resumed, and the time at which it ended on each day. His note shows that on four of the days the court sat only in the morning. On the remaining 16 days the case was adjourned at midday for a time which varied from 50 to 70 minutes. These midday adjournments add up to a total of 15 hours, 43 minutes. I am told that on some of the days the judge during the interval heard pressing applications in other cases, but there is no record of the time occupied by those applications. The associate was concerned only with the precise time actually occupied by this case. The taxing master has included the midday adjournments totalling 15 hours, 43 minutes, for the purpose of refreshers, i.e., taking one refresher for every five hours, it makes three refreshers more than would have been allowed if that time had been excluded. He thought that there was considerable justification for the objection to it, but felt bound to follow the rule laid down in Collins v. Worley (1). That case was decided in 1889 at a time when the relevant rules were different from what they are now, and when the practice as to midday adjournments was very different. The report of that case discloses that in those days an adjournment for 30 minutes was considered to be a prolonged one, and that counsel could not do other work in the interval, but had to be on hand because they did not know when the judge would return. Nowadays a judge always announces the time at which he will resume and occasionally extends the time so as to enable counsel to do other work.

The senior taxing master was good enough to come at my request and tell me in the presence of the parties what is the practice of the taxing office for the purpose of refreshers. The practice is to include the time occupied by the midday adjournment as part of the trial, including short applications in other cases, but that when a long application taking, say, 20 minutes or 30 minutes is taken in the interval, the whole of the midday adjournment is excluded, as well as the time of the application.

In my opinion, the amendments in the rules since 1889 render Collins v. Worley (1), no longer of authority. The relevant rules are Ord. 65, r. 27 (48), and Ord. 36, r. 40. The latest amendment was made in 1937. Previously, a refresher was payable for "every clear day," but now: "If the total time occupied by the trial shall exceed the period of five hours, the taxing master may allow a refresher for "every complete period of five hours" in excess of the first five hours, and the associate has to make a note of "the time actually occupied" on each day. That wording is plain. In calculating the total time occupied by the trial the times of the actual hearing of the case in court should be taken and added together, all midday adjournments being excluded. This means that the practice as to refreshers is brought into line with the practice as to court fees (see fee 29). No distinction can be drawn in the relevant rules and none should exist in practice. It was suggested that I should not disturb the existing practice as to refreshers, but that practice is only that which has existed since 1937, and it has never been sanctioned by judicial authority. It has not continued so long as to become authoritative and I allow the objection.

Order accordingly.

Solicitors: H. S. Wright & Webb (for the plaintiff); George C. Carter & Co. (for the first defendant); Wilkinson, Howlett & Moorhouse (for the second defendant).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

ECCLES v. BRYANT AND ANOTHER.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Vaisey, J.), April 22, May 19, 1947.]

Sale of Land—Contract—Duplicate contracts—Need of actual physical exchange.

The vendors agreed to sell freehold property to a purchaser and a draft contract was agreed by the parties. On June 11, 1946, the vendors' solicitors wrote to the purchaser's solicitors stating that the vendors had signed their part of the contract and that they were ready to exchange contracts, but they did not suggest any appointment for a formal exchange, nor did they offer to post their part of the contract. On June 14 the purchaser's solicitors replied that they would obtain the purchaser's signature to his part of the contract and "forward" it to the vendors. On June 17 the purchaser's solicitors informed the vendors' solicitors on the telephone that the contract had been signed by the purchaser, and a letter containing the duplicate contract signed by him was posted to the vendors' solicitors on June 18, reaching them on June 19. This letter crossed in the post a letter from the vendors' solicitors (also dated June 18, and received by the purchaser's solicitors on June 19) repudiating the contract. In an action by the purchaser for specific performance of the contract, the vendors contended that there had been no completed contract because there had been no exchange of duplicate contracts:—

HELD: (i) although an exchange of the two parts of a contract was usual, it was not essential, and the contract might be made binding, not necessarily by a physical exchange, but by any method which the parties might decide to adopt, the phrase "signed and exchanged" merely meaning "signed and made binding."

Phillips v. Edwards (33 Beav. 440) and Spottiswoode, Ballantyne & Co., Ltd. v. Doreen Appliances, Ltd. ([1942] 2 All E.R. 65) distinguished. Keppel v. Wheeler ([1927] 1 K.B. 577) and Chillingworth v. Esche ([1924] 1 Ch. 97) considered.

(ii) the purchaser's signature, together with the letter from his solicitors of June 18 was an acceptance on June 18 of the offer made by the vendors by their signature and the letter of their solicitors of June 11, and the vendors' repudiation, which took effect when it was communicated to the purchaser on June 19, was, therefore, too late.

Re Imperial Land Co. of Marseilles, Harris' Case (1872), (7 Ch. App. 578) and Henthorn v. Fraser ([1892] 2 Ch. 27) applied.

Per curiam: there was no real analogy between the delivery of a deed, as a sequel to its being signed and sealed, and the exchange of the two parts of a contract.

[AS TO OFFER AND ACCEPTANCE, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 7, pp. 83-95, paras. 116-133; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 12, pp. 63-67, Nos. 366-388, and pp. 75-79, Nos. 434-468.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Re Imperial Land Co. of Marseilles, Harris' Case (1872), 7 Ch. App. 587; 41 L.J.Ch. 621; 26 L.T. 781; 12 Digest 76, 440.
- (2) Henthorn v. Fraser, [1892] 2 Ch. 27; 61 L.J.Ch. 373; 66 L.T. 439; 12 Digest 61, 349.
- (3) Phillips v. Edwards (1864), 33 Beav. 440; 3 New Rep. 658; 12 Digest 170, 1246.
- (4) Keppel v. Wheeler, [1927] 1 K.B. 577; 96 L.J.K.B. 433; 136 L.T. 203; Digest Supp.
- (5) Chillingworth v. Esche, [1924] 1 Ch. 97; 93 L.J.Ch. 129; 129 L.T. 808; Digest Supp.
- (6) Lockett v. Norman-Wright, [1925] Ch. 56; 94 L.J.Ch. 123; 132 L.T. 532; Digest Supp.
- (7) Wilson v. Balfour (1929), 45 T.L.R. 625; Digest Supp.
- (8) Spottiswoode, Ballantyne & Co., Ltd. v. Doreen Appliances, Ltd., [1942] 2 All E.R. 65; [1942] 2 K.B. 32; 111 L.J.K.B. 569; 167 L.T. 33; Digest Supp.
- (9) Brogden v. Metropolitan Ry. Co. (1877), 2 App. Cas. 666; 12 Digest 52, 289.

ACTION by the purchaser for specific performance of a contract for the sale of land. The defence was that there was no binding contract because there had been no exchange of duplicate contracts by the parties. The facts appear in the judgment.

Fox-Andrews, K.C., and Ronald E. Hopkins for the purchaser.

Neville Gray, K.C., and Hubert A. Rose for the vendors. Cur. adv. vult.

May 19. VAISEY, J., read the following judgment. This is a purchaser's action for the specific performance of a contract, or alleged contract, and, alternatively, for damages for the breach thereof. The contract, if contract there be, is for the sale by the defendants to the plaintiff at the price of £6,000 of a freehold house and some 11 acres of land known as Barns Branford at Horne in the county of Surrey. Stated briefly, the point which I have to decide is whether, in the circumstances of this particular case, a document signed in duplicate by the plaintiff and the defendants (the fact that it had been so signed having been communicated by the parties to each other) has become binding on them as a contract notwithstanding that there has been no physical exchange of the two duplicates between them. A

Before I come to the facts of the case, I desire to make a few general observations on this matter of "exchanging" contracts. Plainly there is no real analogy between the delivery of a deed, as a sequel to its being signed and sealed, and the exchange of the two parts of a contract, for a deed never becomes operative until it is delivered, whereas in regard to many contracts or memoranda of contracts no question of any exchange can arise—where, for example, there is but one writing signed by both parties, or where both are represented by the same solicitor. The practice of a physical exchange of contracts at a prearranged time and place is, no doubt, a very common and convenient one, though probably this ceremonial proceeding is less frequent in these days of short staffs than it formerly was. When it is adopted, the intention of the parties may usually be inferred to be to make the critical moment of the actual formation of the contract the moment when the two documents are passed across the table. It is more difficult, I think, to discover such critical moment when the exchange is effected by post. In that, and, indeed, in every case, the intention has to be ascertained from the words or conduct of the parties. Suppose, for example, one of the parties says to the other: "I have signed my part of the contract. Will you please now sign your part and post it to me?" Suppose the other party does so, and the first mentioned party, having received the other's part signed, repents him of his bargain and repudiates the transaction, is it too late for him to do so? That is not unlike what has happened in the present case. B
C
D

The negotiations between the parties here began in Apr., 1946, and were considerably protracted by reason chiefly of the plaintiff's misgivings on a number of points. They were conducted throughout on the basis of being "subject to contract." A draft contract was prepared, and by June 11, at the latest, the draft, as a draft, had been agreed and finally settled between the parties. I now turn to the correspondence. On June 11 the defendants' solicitors, who practise at East Grinstead, wrote to the plaintiff's solicitors, who practise in London, as follows: E

Bryant & Pollock to Eccles: re Barns Branford. Our clients have now signed their part of the contract herein and we are ready to exchange and shall be glad to hear from you. F

The part of the contract so signed was certainly in the form agreed and settled as above mentioned. The reply to that letter is dated June 14, and says:

We thank you for your letter of June 11, and are obtaining our client's signature to the contract herein . . . We will forward you our client's part of the contract in due course. G

I pause to observe that the proposal for "forwarding" the plaintiff's part of the contract was in no way objected to, or dissented from, in the letters which follow. On the next day, June 15, the defendants' solicitors wrote to the plaintiff's solicitors:

We have your letter of the 14th instant . . . We must repeat that if the matter is to go through contracts must be exchanged immediately, and it must be completed by the 24th instant which means that it has to be dealt with quickly. H

That letter reached the plaintiff's solicitors on June 17, which was a Monday, and on the morning of that day a conversation took place on the telephone between representatives of the two firms of solicitors which appears to me to have a very vital bearing on the question which I have to decide. I have the evidence of the plaintiff's solicitors' managing clerk, Mr. Smith, but not the evidence of the other party to the conversation. Mr. Smith said :

I informed them [i.e., the defendants' solicitors] on June 17 on the telephone that the contract had been signed by Mr. Eccles.

He later read out from his diary a note made at the time as follows :

On receipt of the letter from [the defendants' solicitors] attending them on the telephone with regard to their suggestion that the matter must be completed by June 24, pointing out that this was clearly impracticable and informing them that we had the contract signed.

He was then asked in cross-examination this question : " They were pressing to have the contract, were they not ? " to which he answered " Yes." And in re-examination he was asked : " In the course of the conversation nothing was said about any withdrawal on the part of the defendants ? " to which he answered " No." On the following day, June 18, the plaintiff's solicitors, after referring to the Monday's telephone conversation, and to a question about the reinstatement of certain damage as to which there had been discussions, wrote as follows to the defendants' solicitors :

We inclose herewith the contract signed by our client, and shall be glad to receive in exchange the part signed by your clients.

This letter was posted in London before 5.30 on the Tuesday afternoon, and reached the defendants' solicitors in course of post on the morning of June 19. It crossed in the post a letter from the defendants' solicitors, dated the same June 18, in the following terms :

With reference to your telephone call yesterday we are instructed to inform you that our clients have decided not to proceed with the sale to your client, owing to the delay which has occurred on your client's part in dealing with the matter. They have accordingly disposed of the property elsewhere.

In fact, the defendants, five days later, i.e., on June 24, entered into a contract to sell the property at an enhanced price to a Miss Edmonds, and I am told that it was subsequently conveyed to her. In the meantime, however, the plaintiff had caused his contract, or alleged contract, to be registered as an " estate contract," thereby giving Miss Edmonds notice of it. It is to be observed that the defendants' solicitors, though apparently willing, if not anxious, to receive the plaintiff's part of the contract by post, never offer to send their own part, and never suggest any appointment for a formal exchange.

What intention has to be imputed to the parties in regard to the question of the means by which, and the moment at which, they were to pass from negotiation and to become finally and irrevocably bound in contract ? It was suggested to me that the solicitors had no authority to arrange for anything except an " exchange," but whether it is suggested that the exchange must be what I have called " ceremonial," or could be effected by post, I am not sure. In my view, the solicitors had ample authority to arrange for any reasonable procedure, i.e., either a ceremonial exchange, or an exchange by post, or an exchange such as, in my opinion, was in point of fact carried out. Reading the letters, and considering the telephonic conversation to which I have called attention, I think that what the defendants' solicitors in fact said was : " We have signed our part of the contract, so that if you sign your part and post it to us the matter will be in order." Or the matter may be put thus. As every contract must be resolved into an offer and acceptance, the defendants' signature plus the letter of June 11 was an offer, and the plaintiff's signature plus the letter (from his solicitors) of June 18 was an acceptance. If so, such acceptance took effect on the evening of June 18 (see Re Imperial Land Co. of Marseilles, Harris' Case (1), and Henthorn v. Fraser (2)), and the defendants' repudiation, which took effect when it was communicated to the plaintiff on the morning of June 19 (see Henthorn v. Fraser (2)), was too late. On these grounds, I think the plaintiff must succeed.

I must, however, refer to certain reported cases to which my attention was drawn. Speaking generally of those authorities, I would say that most, if not all, of the references which they contain to a contract being " signed and exchanged " only mean that it is, or has to be, " signed and made binding," that is, not necessarily by a physical exchange, but by any other method which the parties may decide to adopt. Of such alternative methods examples could be given. The parties might, for instance, arrange to have the two parts of the contract deposited with a third party, for example, at a bank; or there might be a mutual undertaking to exchange; or they might agree to dispense with the ceremony altogether, for example, where the same solicitor is acting for both or where they have agreed that they are to be effectively bound by their mere signatures. While an exchange of contracts is usual, it is in no sense essential, and there is nothing in the authorities to say that it is.

I will now refer shortly to the cases. In Phillips v. Edwards (3), the headnote is as follows:

The doctrine of part performance of a parol agreement is not to be extended by the court, and it is inapplicable to a case where a trustee has a power to lease, at the request in writing of a married woman, which has not been made. Land was vested in a trustee for the separate use of Mrs. E., a married woman, and the deed gave the trustee a power to lease at the request in writing of Mrs. E. The trustee and Mrs. E. agreed, by parol, to let the property to the plaintiffs, and a lease was prepared, approved of and executed by the trustee and by Mrs. E.; but before their solicitor had parted with it and before the plaintiffs had executed it, Mrs. E. recalled her assent to it. She had made no request to the trustee "in writing": Held, that there was no contract binding on Mrs. E. and no part performance, and that the plaintiffs could not enforce the agreement.

ROMILLY, M.R., said (33 Beav. 445, 446):

The consequence is, that in every way of looking at it it comes round to the same question, and the full extent of it is this: What is the effect of a parol agreement to lease a plot of land, followed by the approval, on both sides, of the draft lease, and by the execution of the indenture of demise itself by the lessor, but countermanded by him before the delivery of it to the intended lessee, and before the lessee executed the counterpart. I am of opinion that there exists a locus penitentiae in the lessor, and that he may, at any time before the solicitor or his agent has delivered over the lease to the lessee, countermand the delivery of it and refuse to be bound by it. I am of opinion that such execution does not constitute a contract. It is argued with perfect truth, that a contract need not be signed by both parties, and that if A. sign a contract offering to sell certain lands to B., and send it to him, B. may accept it and thereupon enforce the performance of it. But, for the purpose of making it binding on the signer, the contract must be sent to B., either by A. or his agent duly constituted for that purpose. But what is more germane to the present question is this: in the case of a contract, A. may countermand it and refuse to perform it at any time before B. has accepted it and before B. has also thereby bound himself to perform it. But nothing of that sort occurred here; and if the most formal contract had been prepared and signed by the defendants, and given to their agent to be delivered to the plaintiffs, they or either of them might have stopped the whole thing before the document left their agents' hands.

This, of course, was a case of a deed, delivery of which was essential, and there was the further point that the power to lease was only to arise on a written request which had not been given. I cannot find anything to help me in that case.

Keppel v. Wheeler (4), contains many references to exchange. I will mention them, premising, however, that the word in its contexts means "become binding" and is not to be read as indicating the necessity for an exchange in every case, irrespective of any arrangements the parties may make to suit their own convenience. The headnote of Keppel v. Wheeler (4), is as follows:

Agents employed to sell land are generally employed to obtain the best purchase price reasonably obtainable. Their duty to their principal does not cease when they have procured an offer to purchase which he accepts subject to contract. It is still their duty to inform him of any offer which they receive at a higher price than that so accepted, and they remain subject to this duty until final contracts of sale and purchase have been signed and exchanged. The owner of house property employed a firm of house agents to sell the property. They gave particulars to a tenant of the property, among other persons, and procured an offer from a prospective purchaser. They communicated this offer to the owner, and he accepted it subject to contract. The tenant then made an offer to the agents to purchase the property from the prospective purchaser at an increased price. In the bona fide belief that they had performed their duty as agents to the owner when he had accepted the offer of the prospective purchaser subject to contract, they omitted to inform the owner of the offer of the tenant. Afterwards final contracts for the sale and purchase of the property were signed and exchanged by and between the owner and the prospective purchaser. The owner then brought an action against the agents for damages for breach of duty in not disclosing to him the offer of the tenant before the contracts were signed and exchanged. The agents counterclaimed for commission on the sale of the property:—Held, that the obligation of the agents to the owner was not fully performed when he had accepted the offer subject to contract but continued until final contracts were exchanged; that this obligation involved a duty to communicate to him the offer of the tenant; that having committed a breach of this duty they were liable in an action for damages, and that the measure of damages was the difference between the price named in the contracts and the price offered by the tenant. Held also that in the circumstances the agents were entitled to their commission.

BANKES, L.J., said ([1927] 1 K.B. 584) :

I pause here to state plainly what is now well established, that where a person accepts an offer subject to contract, it means that the matter remains in negotiation until a formal contract is settled and the formal contracts are exchanged; so that although those instructions were given by the appellant to the respondent Atkins, the matter remained in negotiation in the eye of the law until June 11, that being the date on which the contracts were exchanged, though they were apparently signed on June 8. So between May 29, when the authority was given to close with Mr. Essam's offer subject to contract, and June 11 or possibly June 12, the matter, as between the plaintiff and Mr. Essam, remained in negotiation.

SARGANT, L.J., said (ibid, 593) :

To my mind it is quite clear as regards time, that when agents are employed to find a purchaser for a property, their position as agents cannot definitely end at any time short (at the earliest) of the time when a definite binding contract is entered into and exchanged: and that if in the interval they receive information—whether, as in this case, from some one with whom they had originally communicated on behalf of their principal, or from some outside source, which tends to show that the value of the property was greater than had been supposed, or is otherwise of a nature to influence materially the judgment of their principal in going on with, or ceasing to go on with, the contract which was being originally negotiated, they are bound to communicate that information to their principal; and if they do not do so, they are guilty of a breach of their duty as agents.

In Chillingworth v. Esche (5), my attention was drawn to a reference by SARGANT, L.J. ([1924] 1 Ch. 114) to a contract being “signed and exchanged,” as against which I find corresponding references by SIR ERNEST POLOCK, M.R., to a contract being “executed” (ibid, 105) and “prepared concluded and executed” (ibid, 106), and by WARRINGTON, L.J., to a formal document being “signed” (ibid, 111)—all alluding to the same eventuality. No emphasis is to be laid on the word “exchange” as used by SARGANT, L.J. I find nothing to help me in Lockett v. Norman-Wright (6), or in Wilson v. Balfour (7), and the only other case cited to me was Spottiswoode, Ballantyne & Co., Ltd. v. Doreen Appliances, Ltd. (8), the headnote of which is :

The plaintiffs, who were owners of a lease of premises, by a letter written by their agents, agreed to let the premises to the defendants “subject in the usual way to your references being satisfactory, and to the terms of a formal agreement to be prepared by their [the plaintiffs’] solicitors.” They also said that, if the references were approved, and the defendants paid a quarter’s rent in advance, they would do certain work to the premises and would allow the defendants to enter into possession, provided that the defendants gave an undertaking to vacate the premises if no agreement was entered into. The defendants paid the quarter’s rent in advance and entered into possession of the premises. The plaintiffs’ solicitors drew up a draft lease, which was sent to the defendants, who agreed the terms with the plaintiffs’ agents. A few days later the plaintiffs refused to proceed with the agreement to let the premises to the defendants and called on them to remove their machinery and to vacate the premises. As the defendants refused to do so, the plaintiffs brought an action to recover possession, and the defendants counterclaimed for specific performance of the agreement by the plaintiffs to give a lease of the premises to them:—Held, that the letter of the plaintiffs’ agents did not serve to complete a binding contract, and that the true meaning of the words “subject to the terms of a formal agreement to be prepared” was that no contract was to exist between the parties unless and until a formal agreement had been entered into. Decision of ATKINSON, J., reversed.

LORD GREENE, M.R., said ([1942] 2 K.B. 34, 35) :

The question for our determination is very short, and one, which, to my mind, with all respect to the learned judge, has a clear answer. It turns on the meaning of the letter of Aug. 1, 1941, the crucial words being those which refer to a formal agreement being entered into. It is said by the defendants that the words in the letter mean nothing more than that, as soon as the solicitors for the plaintiffs had put into formal shape the matters on which the parties were in agreement, a binding, unconditional contract would come into existence, notwithstanding that the formal document in which those terms were to be set out was never signed and exchanged by the parties. On the other hand, the plaintiffs contend that the language means that no contract was to exist between the parties unless and until a formal agreement had been entered into. In my opinion, the second construction is unquestionably right. I am quite unable to construe the words "subject to the terms of a formal agreement to be prepared by their solicitors" as meaning that the "formal agreement" referred to is not one which is to be executed by the parties in the usual way. An unexecuted document would not be a formal agreement. If any doubt could remain as to the true construction of the phrase, the matter is entirely settled, in my judgment, by the words referring to the undertaking to vacate when called on if no agreement is entered into. It is manifest that the agreement there referred to is the same as the formal agreement mentioned in the earlier passage, and how a formal agreement is to be entered into unless it is executed and exchanged in the usual way I am unable to discover. The real fact of the matter is that the language used here is equivalent to the common and more concise phrase "subject to contract" and it is well settled that that phrase makes it clear that the intention of the parties is that neither of them is to be contractually bound until a contract is signed in the usual way.

In the judgment of GODDARD, L.J. (ibid, 37) the passage I have already quoted from the judgment of BANKES, L.J., in Keppel v. Wheeler (4), was cited with approval.

The question here, as in all the cases cited, is not whether the contract was signed and exchanged in the usual or any other way, but whether, having been signed, it became by exchange or otherwise binding as a contract between the parties. The circumstances of the case are unusual, but, on the whole, I think that it did become binding when the plaintiff, in response to the defendants' invitation, put his signed part of the contract into the post on the afternoon of June 18, 1946. I may refer to the passage in LORD BLACKBURN'S speech in Brogden v. Metropolitan Ry. Co. (9), where he said (2 App. Cas. 691) :

But I have always believed the law to be this, that when an offer is made to another party, and in that offer there is a request express or implied that he must signify his acceptance by doing some particular thing, then as soon as he does that thing, he is bound. If a man sent an offer abroad saying: I wish to know whether you will supply me with goods at such and such a price, and, if you agree to that, you must ship the first cargo as soon as you get this letter, there can be no doubt that as soon as the cargo was shipped the contract would be complete, and if the cargo went to the bottom of the sea, it would go to the bottom of the sea at the risk of the orderer. So again, where, as in the case of Ex parte Harris (1), a person writes a letter and says, I offer to take an allotment of shares, and he expressly or impliedly says: If you agree with me send an answer by the post, there, as soon as he has sent that answer by the post, and put it out of his control, and done an extraneous act which clenches the matter, and shews beyond all doubt that each side is bound, I agree the contract is perfectly plain and clear.

Accordingly, there must be the usual decree for specific performance in a purchaser's action, with costs.

Judgment for plaintiff with costs.

Solicitors: Godfrey Warr & Co. (for the purchaser); Nisbet, Drew & Loughborough, agents for Pearless, de Rougemont & Co., East Grinstead (for the defendants).

[Reported by R. D. H. OSBORNE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

COHEN v. COHEN.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Somervell, L.J., Hodson and Lynskey, JJ.), May 22, 1947.]

Divorce — Desertion — Continuance of desertion — Maintenance order — Non-cohabitation clause—Clause inserted through inadvertence—Effect of subsequent striking out.

A In 1937 a wife obtained a maintenance order against her husband and per incuriam the non-cohabitation clause in the printed form of order was not struck out. In Oct., 1944, the husband applied to have this clause struck out and this was done in the wife's presence. In Mar., 1946, the husband presented a petition for divorce on the ground of his wife's desertion for at least 3 years immediately preceding the presentation of the petition. The commissioner held that the existence of the non-cohabitation clause in the order, although left in per incuriam, prevented any desertion during the time the clause was in the order and that the subsequent striking out of the clause did not entitle the husband to rely on desertion during the period prior to the striking out. On appeal:—

B HELD: the correct order was the one orally pronounced in court by the magistrate, of which the written document was only evidence, and when the faulty written document had been corrected, provided neither party had relied on the mistake, the order took effect as originally orally pronounced, and consequently the husband could rely on desertion although the correction of the written document had been made less than 3 years before the presentation of the petition.

C [EDITORIAL NOTE. This case decides the point left undecided by the Court of Appeal in Mackenzie v. Mackenzie (3) ([1940] P. 81 at p. 88), namely, whether, when a non-cohabitation clause is left by mistake in an order of a magistrate's court and the order is corrected by striking out the offending clause, neither side having relied upon the clause, such striking out operates nunc pro tunc.

D AS TO NON-CO-HABITATION CLAUSE IN MAGISTRATE'S ORDER, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 10, p. 659, para. 969; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 27, pp. 320, 321, Nos. 2989-2999.]

Cases referred to:

- E (1) Cooper v. Cooper, [1940] 3 All E.R. 579; [1940] P. 204; 109 L.J.P. 126; 162 L.T. 228; Digest Supp.
 (2) R. v. Lanyon (1872), 27 L.T. 355; 3 Digest 403, 364.
 (3) Mackenzie v. Mackenzie, [1940] 1 All E.R. 256; [1940] P. 81; 109 L.J.P. 9; 162 L.T. 228; 104 J.P. 126; Digest Supp.
 (4) Harriman v. Harriman, [1909] P. 123; 78 L.J.P. 62; 100 L.T. 557; 73 J.P. 193; 27 Digest 321, 2995.
 (5) Aron v. Aron (unreported but noted at [1939] W.N. 402).

F APPEAL by the husband from a decision of Mr. Commissioner Grazebrook, K.C., dated Dec. 19, 1946, dismissing an undefended petition for dissolution of marriage on the grounds of desertion. The commissioner held that the existence of a non-cohabitation clause in a maintenance order, although left in per incuriam, prevented the period of desertion from running during the period the order remained uncorrected. The petition was presented on Mar. 11, 1946. The evidence showed that when the husband applied on Oct. 4, 1944, to have the non-cohabitation clause struck out, the wife's solicitor in her presence stated that it was "immaterial to her either way." Counsel for the husband, besides the cases quoted in the judgment (which set out the remaining relevant facts), also relied on Cooper v. Cooper (1).

Frank Whitworth for the husband.

H The wife did not appear.

SOMERVELL, L.J.: This is an appeal by the husband from a decision of Mr. Commissioner Grazebrook in an undefended case. The petition was based on desertion. The parties, both of whom are of the Jewish faith, were married in 1925. In 1937 trouble arose and the husband made complaints against his wife to a Jewish court, the Beth Din. At the same time, or shortly afterwards, the wife issued a summons in Old Street Police Court, alleging cruelty and neglect to maintain, but, according to the evidence, the cruelty charge was dropped. The document that was signed by the magistrate as a result of these proceedings, which took place on Sept. 10, 1937, contained a non-cohabitation clause. There is more than one case in the reports in which that clause had been left in per incuriam. Here the magistrate did not intend to make a separation order, but the words were left in by the clerk. In 1944 the husband went back to the magistrate's court and applied to have the document altered by striking out the words of the separation order. The wife was present and was represented. There is an endorsement made on the order by the late Mr. Langley, a magistrate of that court, though not the magistrate who made the original order: "This formal order corrected by striking out the non-cohabitation clause which had been inadvertently left in." When this order was put in during the hearing in the court below there was handed in with it the court record of what took place on Sept. 10, 1937, and it is clear from the minutes of adjudication that all the magistrate did was to make a maintenance order for the wife and children.

It was laid down in R. v. Lanyon (2), a case dealing with a bastardy order, that what is effective is what the justices say and the order they announce at the conclusion of the proceedings. The written document subsequently drawn up is evidence, and normally accurate evidence, of what was said, but in that case by mistake an order was drawn up which was not accurate. It was held that the justices were entitled to draw up a second order embodying the correct terms of the original adjudication, and that the first order was a nullity.

It seems to me applying that principle that in the present case the non-cohabitation clause in the order was a nullity and that no separation order had been made. There is no evidence that anyone relied or acted on the order as at first drawn up. I must reserve my judgment as to what the result would have been if that had been the case. The commissioner took the view that the words were effective until they were struck out to prevent the necessary period of desertion from running, but for the reasons I have given I do not think that is right. I would add that the line which we are taking in this matter is that which HODSON, J. took in Aron v. Aron (5).

With regard to the question of desertion, there is no finding by the commissioner on this point and there is no satisfactory evidence of when or in what circumstances the wife left. I think it would be right in the circumstances to order a new trial and give the husband a chance of tendering evidence as to the desertion.

HODSON, J. : The commissioner, relying on Mackenzie v. Mackenzie (3), and applying Harriman v. Harriman (4), held that a non-cohabitation clause in a magistrate's order was sufficient to prevent desertion running as from the date of the order, although here it was subsequently struck out. In giving his decision the commissioner said :

It is said that a separation order was not asked for, but, whether it was or not, it is quite clear from the decision of the Court of Appeal in Mackenzie v. Mackenzie (3), that there can be no desertion while such an order exists.

He did not apply his mind to the vital question: "Was there a separation order at all?" On investigation, it is clear that no such order was made and that the clause in the printed form was included by mistake. In the circumstances, in my view, there never was a separation order, and the commissioner put an obstacle in the way of the husband which ought not to have been there. The commissioner, however, did not make any express finding as to desertion. We have been asked to make such a finding on the evidence of the husband. That evidence is entirely uncorroborated although there are signs that corroboration could have been obtained from members of the family. All the court knows is that in litigation undertaken at the time the wife was the successful party. It, therefore, seems fair that, since the commissioner has decided the case on the short point without considering the evidence in detail, there should be a rehearing.

LYNSKEY, J. : I agree. On Sept. 10, 1937, the magistrate made an order for maintenance. His order was not the order contained in the formal order, but the order in the court records which have been produced to us. That was the effective order, but when it came to be drawn up, by mistake there was included in the formal order a non-cohabitation clause. This was brought to the notice of the magistrate's court in 1944, when the formal order was amended by striking out the non-cohabitation clause which ought never to have been in. The commissioner did not address his mind to this aspect of the matter, but took the view, based on Mackenzie v. Mackenzie (3), that the non-cohabitation clause would be a bar to proceedings for desertion so long as it was left in the order, even if it were rectified before the petition was brought.

A I desire not to be understood as saying that in every case where an order is amended by striking out a non-cohabitation clause the result will be the same, but only where the original order is included per incuriam. If the original order had been a separation order and subsequently the non-cohabitation clause had been struck out as a result of another application, then it may be that the original order would remain a good order until amended. The commissioner did not reach a conclusion on the question of desertion, and the court, therefore, orders a new trial at which it will be open to the husband to bring such further
B evidence as he can in support of his plea of desertion.

Order for new trial.

Solicitors: Mackover & Co. (for the husband).

[Reported by D. H. STANSFELD, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

FINDLAY v. FINDLAY.

C [COURT OF APPEAL (Somervell, L.J., Hodson and Lynskey, JJ.), April 15, May 20, 1947.]

Divorce—Alimony—Arrears—Enforcement—Judgment summons—Debtors Act, 1869 (c. 62), s. 5—R.S.C. Ord. 41, r. 5—Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1947 (S.R. & O., 1947, No. 523/L.9), r. 62 (2).

D An order for alimony was in the form that the husband was to "pay or cause to be paid to the wife alimony pending suit at or after the rate of £118 less tax per annum to commence from the date of service of the petition," giving the date, and concluding "the said sums to be payable monthly." All preliminary steps having been taken, the wife sought to issue a judgment summons in respect of arrears under the order:—

E HELD: (i) to fall within s. 5 of the Debtors Act, 1869, an order must, on the face of it, show with sufficient clarity that certain sums which are either set out or which can be readily calculated from what is in the order are payable within certain dates;

(ii) the order in question fixed the time at which the various instalments were to be paid, and was, therefore, enforceable under the section without the necessity for any further steps being taken to obtain something in the nature of a four-day order to perfect the original order.

F [AS TO ENFORCEMENT OF ORDERS FOR ALIMONY BY JUDGMENT SUMMONSES, see HALSBURY, Halsham Edn., Vol. 10, pp. 820, 821, paras. 1312-1314; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 27, pp. 541, 542, Nos. 5911-5915.]

Cases referred to:

(1) Kerr v. Kerr, [1897] 2 Q.B. 439; 66 L.J.Q.B. 838; 77 L.T. 29; 4 Digest 300, 2811.

G (2) Re Linton, Linton v. Linton (1885), 15 Q.B.D. 239; 54 L.J.Q.B. 529; 52 L.T. 782; 49 J.P. 597; 4 Digest 300, 2815.

(3) Re Hedderwick, Morten v. Brinsley, [1933] 1 Ch. 669; 102 L.J.Ch. 193; 149 L.T. 188; Digest Supp.

(4) Capron v. Capron, [1927] P. 243; 96 L.J.P. 151; 137 L.T. 568; Digest Supp.

H APPEAL by the wife from an order of WALLINGTON, J., dated Dec. 10, 1946, dismissing an application for leave to issue a judgment summons which the wife had applied to issue in respect of arrears on an order for alimony pendente lite.

J. E. N. Russell for the wife.

Colin Duncan for the King's Proctor.

The husband appeared in person.

SOMERVELL, L.J.: This is an appeal from an order of WALLINGTON, J., given on Dec. 10, 1946, dismissing an application for leave to issue a judgment summons which the wife had applied to issue. We have no note of the reasons why the learned judge dismissed the application, but counsel for the wife told us he understood that the learned judge either did not regard the procedure as appropriate, or, as I think more probable, took the view that something in the nature of a four day order ought to have been served before the wife was entitled to make the application to the court. The husband, who appeared in person before us and was also before the learned judge, understood that the judge was dismissing the application on the ground that the procedure was not appropriate. The appeal came before this court on Apr. 15 last and after some argument on behalf of the wife, was adjourned that the King's Proctor might instruct counsel to appear and assist the court. A

The wife sought to issue a judgment summons in respect of arrears on an order for alimony pending suit dated Apr. 18, 1944. Leave had been obtained under the Courts Emergency Powers Act, and the other preliminary steps had been taken. The order for alimony provided that the husband should "pay or cause to be paid to the [wife] alimony pending suit at or after the rate of £118 less tax per annum to commence from the date of the service of the petition in this cause," and then the date was given. The concluding words were: "the said sums to be payable monthly." There is also provision for maintenance of the two children. That is a usual form. We were referred to Kerr v. Kerr (1), where a form of order is set out which, like this one, provides for payment at an annual rate, the payments to be made monthly. B

There is authority on the question whether a judgment summons such as this, issued under s. 5 of the Debtors Act, 1869, is appropriate for sums claimed to be due under an order for alimony pendente lite. In Linton v. Linton (2), the matter came before the court. The main point there argued was a different one (the point being the position of sums due or to become due under an order of this court when the person against whom the order had been made was bankrupt), but, in the course of his judgment, BOWEN, L.J., said (15 Q.B.D. 246): C

It appears to me that arrears of alimony are, within the meaning of s. 5 of the Debtors Act, 1869, "a debt due in pursuance of an order or judgment of a competent court." D

BOWEN, L.J., then referred to the history of the matter and s. 5 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857. He continues:

Since the Debtors Act was passed the proceeding by attachment has fallen into disuse, and, unless the payment of alimony can be enforced under s. 5 of the Debtors Act, there seems to be no way of enforcing it. E

The matter again came before the court in Morten v. Brinsley (3). In that case the husband, against whom the order had been made, had died, and the question was whether it could be enforced against his estate. In the course of deciding that matter (indeed, I think, it was the basis of their decision) the court held, following Linton v. Linton (2) that the only means by which a wife could enforce payment of arrears of alimony was under s. 5 of the Debtors Act, 1869. In the course of the judgment, LUXMOORE, J., said ([1933] 1 Ch. 675): F

In my reading of the cases the order for alimony does not create a legal debt, but a liability to pay which can only be enforced in one way, i.e., by attachment under the Debtors Act.

Those cases seem to me to be authority for the proposition that arrears under an order of this kind are enforceable, when appropriate steps are taken, under s. 5 of the Debtors Act, 1869. It is unnecessary for us to consider the question whether, as is stated in the passages to which I have referred, that is the only means by which they can be enforced. Our attention has been drawn by counsel for the King's Proctor to some observations of BATESON, J., in Capron v. Capron (4) ([1927] P. 246, 247), where the learned judge expressed the view that an order of this kind fell within the rule which provided for action by sequestration. A possible conflict, if that ever arises, seems to me to exist between what was said in the first two cases and what was said by BATESON, J. G

It being clear, in my view, that the arrears in question in this case were enforceable within s. 5 of the Debtors Act, 1869, the only question that remains is whether some further step ought to have been taken such as the issue of what is generally called a four day order. Counsel for the King's Proctor, having investigated the authorities on this matter and the other material to which the King's Proctor has access, informed the court that in the past no such further steps have been required either when the matter was dealt with by the judges H in bankruptcy or, thereafter, when the matter was transferred to the jurisdiction of the Probate, Divorce and Admiralty Division by the Debtors Act (Matrimonial Causes) Jurisdiction Order, 1932. Apart from that fact, it is necessary to see how the matter arises. What is called a four day order is usually issued in connection with R.S.C. Ord. 41, r. 5, which provides :

A Every judgment or order made in any cause or matter requiring any person to do an act thereby ordered shall state the time, or the time after service of the judgment or order, within which the act is to be done, and upon the copy of the judgment or order which shall be served upon the person required to obey the same there shall be endorsed a memorandum in the words or to the effect following . . .

The four day order is the order which it is necessary to serve when the judgment or order omits to fix a time. The court makes a supplemental order and so regularises the matter.

B Rule 62 (2) of the Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1947, is in somewhat similar terms :

A decree or order requiring a person to do an act thereby ordered shall state the time within which the act is to be done, and the copy to be served upon the person required to obey the same shall be endorsed with a notice in accordance with Form 18 . . .

C In the view I take, the order in question here fixes the time at which the various instalments are to be paid. I think that that is involved in the decisions to which I have referred, deciding that these orders are enforceable under s. 5 of the Debtors Act, 1869. The relevant words of the section are :

D Subject to the provisions hereinafter mentioned, and to the prescribed rules, any court may commit to prison for a term not exceeding six weeks, or until payment of the sum due, any person who makes default in payment of any debt or instalment of any debt due from him in pursuance of any order or judgment of that or any other competent court . . .

I think that, for an order to come within that section, it must, on the face of it, show with sufficient clarity that certain sums which are either set out or which can be readily calculated from what is in the order are payable within certain successive dates.

E That is the decision which I should have come to on the terms of the order, and it is also in accordance with what was said by BATESON, J., in Capron v. Capron (4).

For these reasons I think the learned judge was wrong here in dismissing this summons on the ground either that the procedure was inappropriate or that some further step ought to have been taken before the procedure under s. 5 of the Debtors Act, 1869, could be invoked. In my opinion, the appeal must be allowed.

F HODSON, J. : I agree. I would only add that it appears to me that the learned judge took the view, not that the procedure was wrong, but that, in view of the terms of the order for alimony, it was necessary, before the order could be enforced by this procedure, that some further order should be made to perfect the original order for alimony—something in the nature of a four day order. In that connection it is important to observe that in Linton v. Linton (2), a decision of this court, the court decided that the procedure under the Debtors Act was appropriate. It is noticeable that the form of order in Linton's case (2) was in terms similar to those of the order in this case, the material words being "permanent alimony at £1 15s. per week, payable monthly": see 15 Q.B.D. 240. No doubt seems to have been entertained by the members of the court that that order was capable of being enforced under the procedure of the Debtors Act.

H LYNKEY, J. : I agree.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors : Robbins, Olivey & Lake (for the wife) ; Treasury Solicitor (for the King's Proctor).

[Reported by R. L. ZIAR, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re WAKEMAN, WAKEMAN v. WAKEMAN.[CHANCERY DIVISION (Jenkins, J.), May 9, 22, 1947.]

Infants and Children—Maintenance—Discharge of order—Need of “fresh evidence”—Evidence not available when order made—Question for court—Confirmation of wife’s adultery—Guardianship of Infants Act, 1925 (c. 45), s. 3 (4).

Fresh evidence (i.e., evidence which could not reasonably have been made available at the date of the making of an order for the maintenance of an infant under the Guardianship of Infants Act, 1925, s. 3 (2)—Johnson v. Johnson ([1900] P. 19) applied—although its existence was then known to the party subsequently seeking to adduce it) is, as a general proposition, necessary to support an application under the Guardianship of Infants Act, 1925, s. 3 (4), to vary or discharge the order made under s. 3 (2): observations of SCRUTTON, L.J., in R. v. Middlesex Justices, Ex parte Bond ([1933] 2 K.B. 9) considered. But the stringency of the test to be applied in determining whether further evidence adduced in support of the application under s. 3 (4) should be treated as evidence which could not reasonably have been made available at the date of the order sought to be varied or discharged, and should, therefore, be admitted as fresh evidence, must vary greatly according to the circumstances of each case, and it is essentially a question of fact and degree for the justices who hear the application. The absence of any express reference to “fresh evidence” in s. 3 (4) suggests that the court is intended to have greater latitude in dealing with applications under this sub-section than it has under analagous statutory provisions which expressly require the production of fresh evidence as a condition of the variation or discharge of an order previously made.

In any case in which the hearing of an application under s. 3 (4) would involve the re-opening of a disputed issue of fact which was contested and decided on the previous occasion, justice to the previously successful party demands that the applicant should be required to satisfy the court with some strictness that it was not reasonably possible for him to adduce at the time of the previous hearing the further evidence on which he relies. Where, however, advantage of the legal presumption of legitimacy has been taken by the mother of the infant to obtain an order under s. 3 (2) which would never have been made if the undisputed facts relating to the paternity of the child, as known to both parties, had been brought to the notice of the court by admissible evidence, justice to the party against whom the presumption has been used demands that the court should view with relative indulgence a subsequent application by that party to adduce admissible evidence not previously before the court on what, after all, resolves itself into a mere matter of technical proof in which he has been outmanoeuvred by the opposite party.

The fact that a husband had condoned his wife’s adultery and allowed a child of hers, the father of whom was another man, to be registered as his, held, not to prevent him from applying to have discharged an order made under s. 3 (2).

[AS TO DISCHARGE AND VARIATION OF ORDERS, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 10, p. 843, para. 1345; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 27, pp. 565-568, Nos. 6237-6256.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Johnson v. Johnson, [1900] P. 19; 69 L.J.P. 13; 81 L.T. 791; 64 J.P. 72; 27 Digest 567, 6252.
- (2) Colchester v. Peck, [1926] 2 K.B. 366; 95 L.J.K.B. 1038; 135 L.T. 32; 90 J.P. 130; Digest Supp.
- (3) Underwood v. Underwood, [1945] 2 All E.R. 561; [1946] P. 84; 115 L.J.P. 49; 173 L.T. 274.
- (4) Timmins v. Timmins, [1919] P. 75; 88 L.J.P. 78; 120 L.T. 544; 27 Digest 567, 6255.
- (5) R. v. Middlesex JJ., Ex p. Bond, [1933] 2 K.B. 1; 102 L.J.K.B. 432; 148 L.T. 544; 97 J.P. 130; Digest Supp.

APPEAL, under the Guardianship of Infants Act, 1925, s. 7 (3), from an order of Willesden justices, made on Mar. 27, 1947.

On June 20, 1946, on an application by the wife, the justices made an order, under s. 3 (2) of the Act, for custody and the payment by the husband to the wife of a weekly sum for the maintenance of the wife's infant child. On Mar. 27, 1947, this order was discharged by the justices on an application by the husband under s. 3 (4) of the Act, evidence being tendered on his behalf which could not have been made available at the previous hearing. The wife appealed to the High Court on the ground (inter alia) that this evidence was not admissible because it was not "fresh evidence." The facts appear in the judgment.

J. A. Brightman for the wife.

Seuffert for the husband.

Cur. adv. vult.

May 22. JENKINS, J., read the following judgment. This is an appeal from an order of the Willesden justices made on Mar. 27, 1947, discharging an order made by them on June 20, 1946, under the Guardianship of Infants Acts, 1886 and 1925, for the payment by the respondent to his wife, the appellant, of the weekly sum of 10s. for the maintenance of the infant child of the wife while under the age of 16 years.

The undisputed facts of the case can be quite shortly stated. The wife and the husband were married on May 19, 1934. On Jan. 23, 1943, the husband (who was then in the army) left this country on foreign service and was thereafter continuously abroad until his arrival back in England on Oct. 5, 1945. During his absence abroad, the wife, by another man, had a son, born on Feb. 14, 1945. It appears that the husband forgave the wife for this lapse, and that they became reconciled and lived together from the husband's return to this country on Oct. 5, 1945, until Feb. 24, 1946, apart from a further brief absence of the husband during this period on foreign service with the army, from which he seems finally to have returned on Dec. 15, 1945. It further appears that the husband consented (though whether by correspondence during his absence or retrospectively on his return is not clear) to the entry of his own name as that of the father in the registration of the birth of the child. On or about Feb. 24, 1946, the husband, having, or believing himself to have, further grounds of complaint as to the wife's conduct, into the merits of which I need not enter, left her, and he has since that time remained separate from her.

The Guardianship of Infants Act, 1925, s. 3, provides :

(1) The power of the court under the Guardianship of Infants Act, 1886, s. 5, to make an order as to the custody of an infant and the right of access thereto may be exercised notwithstanding that the mother of the infant is then residing with the father of the infant. (2) Where the court under the said section as so amended makes an order giving the custody of the infant to the mother, then, whether or not the mother is then residing with the father, the court may further order that the father shall pay to the mother towards the maintenance of the infant such weekly or other periodical sum as the court, having regard to the means of the father, may think reasonable. (3) No such order, whether for custody or maintenance, shall be enforceable and no liability thereunder shall accrue while the mother resides with the father, and any such order shall cease to have effect if for a period of 3 months after it is made the mother of the infant continues to reside with the father. (4) Any order so made may, on the application either of the father or the mother of the infant, be varied or discharged by a subsequent order.

By s. 7 of the same Act :

(1) For the purposes of the Guardianship of Infants Act, 1886, as amended by this Act, the expression "the court" shall include a court of summary jurisdiction . . . (3) Where on an application to a court of summary jurisdiction under the Guardianship of Infants Act, 1886, as amended by this Act, the court makes or refuses to make an order, an appeal shall, in accordance with rules of court, lie to the High Court . . .

It is obvious from the undisputed facts to which I have referred that no application by the wife for an order under s. 3 (2) of the Act of 1925 for the payment of maintenance by the husband, as the father of the child, could possibly have succeeded in the event of those facts being brought to the notice of the court by admissible evidence. In view, however, of the presumption of the legitimacy of a child born to a married woman and the inadmissibility of the evidence of either spouse to rebut that presumption, it was, nevertheless, possible that such an application might succeed merely on the strength of that presumption in the event of the husband failing to provide himself at the hearing with sufficient admissible evidence to rebut it, and this appears to have been the course the matter actually took.

On June 20, 1946, the justices had before them two applications by the wife against the husband, the first in respect of his alleged desertion of the wife, and the second for the custody of the child and payment of maintenance under s. 3 (2) of the Act of 1925. The only evidence tendered was that of the wife, in the course of which she frankly (but inadmissibly) stated that another man was the father of the child. The justices held desertion not proved and dismissed the wife's summons in respect of that matter. They then proceeded to deal with the summons for custody and maintenance. This application was unopposed by the husband, who tendered no evidence. The order of June 20, 1946, was, accordingly, made. On Feb. 27, 1947, the justices had before them an application by the husband for the discharge of the order of June 20, 1946, on the ground that he was not the father of the child. On this occasion the husband tendered in support of his application the evidence of a man named Adcock, a friend of his who had served with him overseas. This evidence appears to have been sufficient to prove that the husband was abroad at all times material to the conception of the child, and, therefore, could not have been the father. It was not in any way challenged on behalf of the wife, whose solicitor, in the course of his submission to the court, said: "There was no dispute that Mr. Wakeman was not the father of the child."

The husband also gave evidence, which I ignore so far as it related to his movements before the birth of the child. Towards the end of his evidence in chief he said, with reference to the hearing on June 20, 1946: "I had no witness then." In the course of his cross-examination he said:

On June 20, 1946, I did not give evidence. I consented to an order under the Guardianship of Infants Act on advice from my solicitor. The circumstances to-day are different. Adcock was in England in June, 1946. I had a lieutenant in court on June 20, 1946.

At the conclusion of the husband's evidence it was submitted on behalf of the wife that there was no case to answer on the grounds (in effect) that, while there was no dispute that the husband was not the father of the child, the adultery was condoned, in law the child was a child of the marriage, the husband had agreed to the order of June 20, 1946, and there was no "fresh evidence" now before the court to support his application for the discharge of that order. The justices took time for consideration and, on Mar. 27, 1947, decided that there was a case to answer, and, the wife calling no evidence, stated their conclusion to the effect that the evidence called by the husband as to non-access was "fresh evidence within the meaning of this Act" (by which they presumably intended fresh evidence for the purposes of an application to vary or discharge an order under the Guardianship of Infants Act, 1925, s. 3, since s. 3 (4) contains no reference to "fresh evidence"), and that, being of opinion that "condonation did not go to the root of paternity," and having accepted the fresh evidence called on behalf of the husband, they, therefore, discharged the order of June 20, 1946. The order of Mar. 27, 1947, which is the subject of the present appeal, was made accordingly.

Although the husband, in his evidence, described himself as having "consented" to the order of June 20, 1946, I do not think that order should be treated as having been made by consent so as to preclude him from subsequently applying for its variation or discharge. There is certainly nothing in the terms of the order itself to suggest that it was a consent order, and the justices' note was merely to the effect that the application on which it was made was "unopposed." Nor, in my opinion, did the husband's condonation of the wife's adultery afford any valid ground of objection to the husband's application, and I think the justices were perfectly right in rejecting the argument founded on such condonation.

Counsel for the wife, however, attacked the justices' order of Mar. 27, 1947, before me on the grounds that (i) the subject-matter of the order of June 20, 1946, was res judicata except in so far as it could be varied or discharged under the Guardianship of Infants Act, 1925, s. 3 (4); (ii) that an order for such variation or discharge could not properly be made except on "fresh evidence"; and (iii) that the evidence adduced by the husband at the hearing of Feb. 27, 1947, was not "fresh evidence" within the meaning of that term as defined in the authorities. As regards the meaning of the term "fresh evidence," I was referred to Johnson v. Johnson (1), a case under the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895, s. 7, which provides that the court may "upon cause being shown upon fresh evidence to the satisfaction of the court, at any time alter, vary, or discharge" any order made under that Act or the Acts mentioned in the schedule thereto. In that case, according to the headnote, "fresh evidence" within the meaning of the section to which I have just referred :

... must be evidence which could not reasonably have been made available at the date of the order, or it must relate to something which has happened since the date of the order, and which affords ground for revision within the terms of the Act under which the order was made.

I advisedly refer to the definition as given in the headnote, because, although in a passage in his judgment ([1900] P. 21), SIR FRANCIS JEUNE, P., refers, not to "evidence which could not reasonably have been made available at the date of the order," but to "evidence which has come to the knowledge of the party applying" since the former hearing or trial "and which could not . . . have come to his knowledge before that time," it is obvious from the particular evidence held by the court to amount to "fresh evidence" in the case now before it, that the intention was to include in the definition evidence falling within the former and wider category, even though its existence might have been known at the time of the former hearing to the party subsequently seeking to adduce it. I was also referred to Colchester v. Peck (2), and Underwood v. Underwood (3), in both of which cases a definition of "fresh evidence," by reference to the passage in the judgment of SIR FRANCIS JEUNE, P., in Johnson v. Johnson (1), to which I have already referred, contained in the judgment of HILL, J. ([1919] P. 80) in Timmins v. Timmins (4), was cited with approval. I cannot, however, regard these cases as intending to exclude from the category of "fresh evidence" merely because its existence was then known to the party subsequently seeking to adduce it, evidence which could not reasonably have been made available at the time of the former hearing.

As to the necessity for "fresh evidence" in support of an application under the Guardianship of Infants Act, 1925, s. 3 (4), for the variation or discharge of an order made under that section, I was referred to R. v. Middlesex Justices, Ex parte Bond (5). The question in that case was whether the refusal by justices on two occasions to make an order on an application by a wife against her husband for custody and maintenance of a child of the marriage under the Guardianship of Infants Act, 1925, made the matter res judicata so as to preclude them from making an order for custody and maintenance when the application was renewed on a third occasion, and the Court of Appeal (affirming the Divisional Court) held that it did. SCRUTTON, L.J., said ([1933] 2 K.B. 9) :

It is quite clear that justices can upon fresh evidence alter, vary or discharge the order they had previously made . . . But it appears to me quite clear that the justices cannot alter their previous order when, as in this case, there is no evidence of any fresh circumstances.

This passage from the judgment of SCRUTTON, L.J., in R. v. Middlesex Justices (5), was strongly relied on on behalf of the wife in the present case as showing that fresh evidence is necessary to support an application under the Guardianship of Infants Act, 1925, s. 3 (4). With that, as a general proposition, I respectfully agree, but it seems to me that, if injustice is to be avoided, the stringency of the test to be applied in determining whether further evidence adduced in support of an application under the Guardianship of Infants Act, 1925, s. 3 (4), ought to be treated as evidence which could not reasonably have been made available at the date of the order sought to be varied or discharged must vary a great deal according to the circumstances of each particular case. I think, too, that the absence from s. 3 (4) of the Act of any express reference to "fresh evidence" suggests that the court was intended to have greater latitude in dealing with applications under that sub-section than it has under analogous statutory provisions which expressly require the production of fresh evidence as a condition of the variation or discharge of any order made.

In any case in which the hearing of an application under the Guardianship of Infants Act, 1925, s. 3 (4), would involve the re-opening of a disputed issue of fact which was contested and decided on the previous occasion, justice to the previously successful party, no doubt, demands that the applicant should be required to satisfy the court with some strictness that it was not reasonably possible for him to adduce at the proper time, i.e., at the time of the previous hearing, the further evidence on which he relies, but where, as in the present case, advantage has been taken of the legal presumption of legitimacy to obtain an order which would never have been made if the undisputed facts, as known to both parties, had been brought to the notice of the court by admissible evidence. I think justice to the party against whom the presumption has been so used demands that the court should view with relative indulgence a subsequent application by him to adduce admissible evidence not previously before the court on what, after all, resolves itself into a mere matter of technical proof in which he has been outmanoeuvred by the opposite party. Further, I think that the question whether, in all the circumstances of a particular case, the further evidence sought to be adduced should be treated as evidence which could not reasonably have been made available at the previous hearing, and be admitted as fresh evidence accordingly, is essentially a question of fact and degree, and, as such, eminently a question for the appropriate tribunal of fact, i.e., in the present case, for the justices who heard the husband's application.

Accordingly, in all the circumstances of the present case, and having regard to the wholly inconclusive character of the husband's cross-examination on this point, I find myself unable to hold that the justices were wrong in admitting the evidence of Adcock in support of the husband's application, and, having admitted it, I fail to see how they could have done otherwise than discharge the order of June 20, 1946.

I have only to add that counsel for the wife conceded in argument before me that the language of the Guardianship of Infants Act, 1925, s. 3 (4), should not be construed as precluding the husband from making an application under that sub-section on the ground that he was not the father. I am, accordingly, of opinion that this appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors : Wilfrid Firth & Co. (for the wife) ; Ferres, Roberts, Thomas & Co. (for the husband).

[Reported by R. D. H. OSBORNE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re MILLER'S AGREEMENT, UNIACKE v. ATTORNEY-GENERAL.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Wynn-Parry, J.), May 20, 21, 1947.]

Estate and other Death Duties—Estate duty—Annuity—“Interest arising on death”—Annuity payable from death of annuitant's father—Payment under deed made between annuitant's father and covenantors—Succession duty—Disposition of property—Whether annuitant “beneficially entitled”—Succession Duty Act, 1853 (c. 51), s. 2—Finance Act, 1894 (c. 30), s. 2 (1) (d).

On the sale of N.'s interest in a partnership firm to M. and V., a term of the sale was that M. and V. should undertake to pay certain annuities, and, by a deed dated Feb. 4, 1942, made between M., V. and N., M. and V. agreed to pay certain annuities to N.'s three daughters from the death of N. The deed provided, inter alia, that the annuities should be paid by quarterly payments to the persons “entitled thereto,” that each annuity should be paid exclusively out of income brought into charge to income tax, and that M. and V. charged “all their respective interests in the profits and assets of the partnership firm with payment of” the annuities. N. died on May 5, 1943, and the question was whether the daughters were liable for estate duty and succession duty in respect of the annuities provided to be paid by the deed :—

HELD : (i) on the true construction of the deed, notwithstanding the use of the word “entitled to,” the annuitants had no rights thereunder either at common law or in equity, except the right to retain any sums paid to them.

Re Schebsman, Ex parte Official Receiver, Trustee v. Cargo Superintendents (London), Ltd. & Schebsman ([1943] 2 All E.R. 768) applied.

(ii) the effect of the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 56 (1), was not to create rights, but to assist the protection of rights which already existed, and the annuitants did not, therefore, obtain rights under the deed by reason of this sub-section.

White v. Bijou Mansions, Ltd. ([1938] 1 All E.R. 546), Re Sinclair's Life Policy ([1938] 3 All E.R. 124), and Re Foster, Hudson v. Foster ([1938] 3 All E.R. 357) applied.

(iii) the word "interest" in the Finance Act, 1894, s. 2 (1) (d), meant such an interest in property as would be protected by the courts, and the annuities payable under the deed were, therefore, not annuities within the meaning of s. 2 (1) (d), and the annuitants were not liable to estate duty in respect of them.

(iv) since the annuitants had no right to sue for the annuities, they did not become "entitled" to them within the meaning of that phrase in the Succession Duty Act, 1853, s. 2, and, therefore, they were not liable to succession duty in respect of them.

[AS TO INTERESTS ARISING ON DEATH, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 13, p. 242, para. 233; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 21, pp. 15, 16, Nos. 73-80.

AS TO SUCCESSIONS UNDER DISPOSITIONS, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 13, pp. 349, 350, para. 383; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 21, pp. 84-86, Nos. 601-623.]

Cases referred to :

- (1) Re Schebsman, Ex p. Official Receiver, Trustee v. Cargo Superintendents (London), Ltd. & Schebsman, [1943] 2 All E.R. 768; [1944] Ch. 83; 113 L.J.Ch. 33; 170 L.T. 9; Digest Supp.
- (2) White v. Bijou Mansions, Ltd., [1937] 3 All E.R. 269; affd. [1938] 1 All E.R. 546; [1938] Ch. 351; 107 L.J.Ch. 212; 158 L.T. 338; Digest Supp.
- (3) Re Ecclesiastical Comrs. for England's Conveyance, [1936] Ch. 430; 105 L.J.Ch. 168; 155 L.T. 281; Digest Supp.
- (4) Re Sinclair's Life Policy, [1938] 3 All E.R. 124; [1938] Ch. 799; 107 L.J.Ch. 405; 159 L.T. 189; Digest Supp.
- (5) Re Foster, Hudson v. Foster, [1938] 3 All E.R. 357; Digest Supp.

ADJOURNED SUMMONS to determine whether the annuitants, to whom certain annuities were provided by a deed to be paid, were liable for estate duty and succession duty in respect of the annuities. The facts appear in the judgment.

Cyril King, K.C., and Geoffrey Cross for the plaintiffs (the annuitants).

J. H. Stamp for the Crown.

WYNN-PARRY, J. : The main question which arises on this originating summons is whether, on the true construction of a deed dated Feb. 4, 1942, and made between Dawson Risch Miller, to whom I shall refer as Mr. Miller, of the first part, George Henry Vos, to whom I shall refer as Mr. Vos, of the second part, and Thomas William Noad, to whom I shall refer as Mr. Noad, of the third part, the plaintiffs, who are the daughters of Mr. Noad and to whom annuities are provided to be paid by the deed, are liable for estate duty and succession duty in respect of those annuities.

By the deed to which I have referred, it was recited, first, that Mr. Noad had for many years past been the senior partner in the firm of Charles Taylor & Co. (thereinafter called the partnership firm) and had by a deed of even date with that deed sold and transferred to Mr. Miller and Mr. Vos the goodwill in the partnership firm as from Jan. 1, 1942, and had retired from the partnership firm. Secondly, it was recited that it was a term of the sale that Mr. Miller and Mr. Vos should enter into that deed, and should thereby undertake to pay the annuities thereinafter mentioned. The deed then proceeded to provide that Mr. Miller and Mr. Vos, subject to and in accordance with the provisions thereinafter contained, should, as from the death of Mr. Noad, pay the following annuities, viz., to his daughter, Muriel, an annuity of £1,000 per annum for the remainder of her life and to each of the remaining two daughters, Kathleen and Eileen, an annuity of £500 per annum during the remainder of their joint lives, and an annuity of £1,000 per annum after the death of one of them to the survivor for the remainder of her life. It was then provided that if Mr. Noad should die before Dec. 31, 1945—an event which occurred—£1,500 should be substituted for £1,000 and £750 should be substituted for £500 as regards the above annuities. By cl. (2), it was provided that each annuity should be deemed to accrue from day to day, and should be paid to the respective person or persons entitled thereto by stated quarterly payments. The last paragraph of the deed provided that Mr. Miller and Mr. Vos should procure that each annuity should be paid exclusively out of income brought into charge to income tax, and ends with these words :

Mr. Miller and Mr. Vos hereby charge all their respective interests in the profits and assets of the partnership firm with payment of the said several annuities.

Mr. Noad died on May 5, 1943, whereupon the annuities became payable in accordance with the document and have since been paid without interruption by Mr. Miller and Mr. Vos to the annuitants. The Estate Duty Office have, in due course, claimed that estate duty under the Finance Act, 1894, s. 2 (1) (d), and succession duty under the Succession Duty Act, 1853, s. 2, became chargeable on the death of Mr. Noad, in respect of the annuities payable under the deed, and that the annuitants are accountable for such duties. In October, 1944, the Court of Appeal held [in Re Noad, Midland Bank Executor and Trustee Co., Ltd. v. Noad ([1944] 2 All E.R. 470)] that, on the true construction of the will of Mr. Noad, the estate duty, if any, and the succession duty, if any, payable on the death of Mr. Noad in respect of the annuities should be borne by his residuary estate. Nevertheless, the annuitants are the persons who would be accountable for such duty to the revenue and, accordingly, this summons has been issued by them to have determined the validity of the claim put forward by the revenue.

As regards estate duty, the claim is based on the Finance Act, 1894, s. 2, which says :—

(1) Property passing on the death of the deceased shall be deemed to include the property following, that is to say . . . (d) Any annuity or other interest purchased or provided by the deceased, either by himself alone or in concert or by arrangement with any other person, to the extent of the beneficial interest accruing or arising by survivorship or otherwise on the death of the deceased.

The property in question in each case is an annuity, and is clearly in each case an annuity purchased or provided by Mr. Noad, the deceased. However, the vital question is : Did any beneficial interest, within the meaning of that phrase as used in the section, accrue to the plaintiffs on the death of Mr. Noad ? In my view, the word “interest” in the sub-section means such an interest in property as would be protected in a court of law or equity. In the present case, it is clear—and counsel for the Crown, does not contend to the contrary—that the effect of the deed of Feb. 4, 1942, is not to create any trust in favour of the annuitants. It further appears clear to me, from the reasoning of the Court of Appeal in Re Schebsman, Ex p. Official Receiver, Trustee v. Cargo Superintendents (London), Ltd. & Schebsman (1), that at common law the annuitants have no right to sue Mr. Miller or Mr. Vos under the deed. On the receipt by each of the annuitants of any payment in respect of her annuity, the property in the money so paid will pass to her, but she has no right to compel any payment. At common law, so far as each annuitant is concerned, the deed is res inter alios acta, and she has no right thereunder.

Reliance was placed on the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 56 (1), which says :

A person may take an immediate or other interest in land or other property, or the benefit of any condition, right of entry, covenant or agreement over or respecting land or other property, although he may not be named as a party to the conveyance or other instrument.

In White v. Bijou Mansions, Ltd. (2), SIMONDS, J., having reviewed the purpose for which the Real Property Act, 1845, s. 5, had been passed, said ([1937] 3 All E.R. 276) :

I think the important aspect of that section, for my present purpose, is this. It appears to me to be quite plain that that section has a limited operation. It is intended to confer a benefit only upon those persons to whom the deed purports to grant an estate or interest, or those persons with whom there purports to be a covenant or agreement. It is impossible, in my view, to regard this section as creating a benefit in favour of any persons who may like to avail themselves of it and say : If we can take advantage of this it will be for our benefit.

SIMONDS, J., having read the section, said (ibid, 277) :

I think many difficulties may well arise on that section which do not fall to me to-day to solve. It appears to one at once that, so far as any other interest in land is concerned, the section is superfluous, because a person always could take another interest in land, though not a party. It is at least a question how far such a provision is necessary at all in the case of personality. Without deciding it, I should be disposed to think that equitable estates, even in land, were not subject to the old artificial rule, and it is very doubtful if an interest in personality was ever so subject. However that may be, for the purposes of the present case I think I am concerned with only one aspect of this question. Just as, under s. 5 of the Act of 1845, only that person could call it in aid who, although not a party, yet was a grantee or covenantee, so, under s. 56 of [the Act of 1925], only that person can call it in aid, who, although not named as a party to the conveyance or other instrument, is yet a person to whom that conveyance or other instrument purports to grant something, or by which some agreement or covenant is purported to be in his favour. To give it any other meaning appears to me to open the door to claims or assertions of rights which cannot have been contemplated by the legislature, for, if that be not the limitation which must be imposed on this section, it appears to me that there is no limit, and it will be open to anybody to come into this court and say : Here is a conveyance which, if enforced, will redound to my advantage ; therefore, I claim the benefit of the section, I claim that the general covenant condition is one that should be enforced in my favour, because it is for my benefit ; whether intended for my benefit or whether not intended for my benefit would not appear to matter. I cannot give to the section any such meaning as that. I interpret it as a section which can be called in aid only by a person in whose favour the grant purports to be made, or with whom the covenant or agreement purports to be made.

A similar reason underlies the judgment of LUXMOORE, J., in Re Ecclesiastical Commissioners for England's Conveyance (3), as was observed by SIMONDS, J., in White v. Bijou Mansions (2), where he said ([1937] 3 All E.R. 278) :

... although the judge [LUXMOORE, J.] has not considered the section so fully as I have had to do to-day, it is, I think, implicit in his decision, particularly in a passage ([1936] Ch. 438) beginning : "What it is necessary to consider" ... that the view of the section which I am taking is one that he also took.

The judgment of SIMONDS, J., was upheld in the Court of Appeal, where SIR WILFRID GREENE, M.R., said ([1938] 1 All E.R. 554) :

... whatever else s. 56 (1) may mean, it is, I think, confined to cases where the person seeking to take advantage of it is a person within the benefit of the covenant in question, if I may use that phrase. The mere fact that somebody comes along and says : "It would be useful to me if I could enforce that covenant," does not make him a person entitled to enforce it under s. 56 (1). Before he can enforce it, he must be a person who falls within the scope and benefit of the covenant according to the true construction of the document in question.

Section 56 was also considered in Re Sinclair's Life Policy (4), and in Re Foster, Hudson v. Foster (5). In the latter case CROSSMAN, J., said ([1938] 3 All E.R. 365) :

Mr. Stone contended that the effect of s. 56 is that any beneficiary under a contract can sue on the contract although he is not a party to it. That is substantially what his submission amounts to. In my judgment, s. 56 does not have this effect. I think that Mr. Stone's contention really amounts to saying that an agreement by A with B to pay money to C. gives C a right to sue on the contract. I think that it must go as far as that, and I am not prepared to hold that s. 56 has created such an enormous change in the law of contract as would be involved in that proposition, because there could be no doubt, that apart from the section, nobody could ever have suggested that a contract by A with B to pay C a sum of money enabled C to sue A on that contract. I hold, following what I understand to have been the view that LUXMOORE, J. expressed in Re Ecclesiastical Commissioners for England's Conveyance (3), ... and the view that SIMONDS, J., expressed in White v. Bijou Mansions, Ltd. (2) ... and the view of SIR WILFRID GREENE, M.R., expressed in the same case on appeal ... and of FARWELL, J., as expressed in Re Sinclair's Life Policy (4), that the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 56, can be called in aid only by a person who, although not a party to the conveyance or other instrument in question, is yet a person to whom that conveyance or other instrument purports to grant something or with whom some agreement or covenant is thereby purported to be made.

Counsel for the Crown pointed out that, in both Re Sinclair's Life Policy (4), and Re Foster (5), the persons claiming the policy moneys were mere nominees, to such an extent that, if the policy moneys had been paid to them, they could not have kept them while the insurer could have intervened and intercepted them. I agree that these circumstances form grounds for distinguishing those cases from the present, which is, from this point of view, as it appears to me, on all fours with Re Schebsman (1). Nevertheless, in both cases the court expressed its view on the section, as will be seen from the extracts I have read from the judgment of CROSSMAN, J., in Re Foster (5). It will thus be seen that there exists a considerable body of judicial opinion showing that the courts have been constrained to limit the scope of the section. I think it emerges from these cases that the section has the effect, not of creating rights, but only of assisting the protection of rights shown to exist. Whether or not a right exists is the first question, and, in this case, that is a question on the construction of this deed.

Counsel for the Crown has put forward certain submissions with a view to showing that, on its true construction, the document purports to grant to the annuitants beneficial interests. If he is right on that, then, as he contends, s. 56 will operate, but he was constrained to admit that it is not possible to extract from the terms of the deed the conclusion that there is any purported agreement with the annuitants. He points out that the document is an especial document in the sense that its provisions were not incorporated, as they might have been, in the deed of even date which is recited in the document, providing for the sale and transfer to Mr. Miller and Mr. Vos by Mr. Noad of the goodwill of the partnership firm and for an annuity to Mr. Noad. Secondly, he points out the provision in the deed for an increase in the annuities in the event, which has happened, of Mr. Noad dying earlier, submitting that that points to a recognition by Mr. Miller and Mr. Vos that, were the annuities to the plaintiffs not raised in that circumstance, they would not have given full consideration for the benefits they received under the other deed. Thirdly, he points out that, in cl. (2) of the deed, the persons to whom the payment has to be made of the annuities are described as "respective person or persons entitled thereto." Fourthly, he points out that there is the provision that each annuity is to be paid exclusively out of income brought into charge to income tax, and, lastly, he relies, and relies strongly, on the existence of the charge by Mr. Miller and Mr. Vos of "all their respective interests in the profits and assets of the partnership firm with payment" of the annuities.

It does not appear to me that these circumstances, either separately or taken together, are sufficient for his purpose. The fact that these annuities were provided for by this separate deed is, in my view, an entirely colourless circumstance. It may be correct, or not, to draw the conclusion which is sought to be drawn from the provision for the increase of the annuities, but, in my view, it is not a circumstance which can have any decisive effect on the matter. The use of the phrase "person or persons entitled thereto" in cl. (2) is, I think, a loose use of the word "entitled." It is used there simply as a convenient way of describing those who are to receive the annuities, and is not of itself a decisive matter. As regards the provision that each annuity is to be paid exclusively out of income brought into charge to income tax, various things may be speculated on as to the reason for that clause, and I find nothing in it which can be used in favour of the argument of counsel for the Crown.

Lastly, there is the question of the charge. Counsel for the Crown sought to pray this in aid by pointing out that, by its language, the charge was, as he put it, at large, and that, taken in conjunction with the other circumstances which he put forward as internal evidence in the document, it showed that the intention was that the annuitants should be entitled to rely on this charge if their annuities should not be paid, and that it, therefore, followed that, on its true construction, the document did purport to grant a beneficial interest to the annuitants. I am unable to share this view. The essential function of a charge is to secure the performance of an obligation, and the charge is essentially ancillary. The obligation in this deed is the covenant of Mr. Miller and Mr. Vos, to pay the annuities in question, and I am unable to extract from the document any other result than that the charge is intended to stand as security for the performance of that obligation. On its true construction, I cannot find—and this is really admitted—that the deed confers on any of the annuitants any right to sue, or anything more than a right to retain any sums which may from time to time be paid by Mr. Miller or Mr. Vos under the deed. In my view, the annuitants are not persons to whom the deed purports to grant something or with whom some agreement or covenant is purported to be made, and, in these circumstances, the annuities are not annuities within the meaning I place on the word as appearing in the Finance Act, 1894, s. 2 (1) (d).

A Counsel for the Crown has submitted that, on the true construction of that sub-section, relating it to the facts of this case and, particularly, praying in aid the definition of the expression “on the death” in s. 22 (1) (l) of the Act as including “at a period ascertainable only by reference to the death,” what one is dealing with, in this case, is a series of payments (i.e., those payments which will, or may, actually, be received by the annuitants), and that the likelihood of the annuitants receiving payments must be estimated, B and a value placed on the interest so estimated on which estate duty will be due. In my view, that argument is not sound, because, on the view which I take of the document, the payments, if and when made, will be no more than voluntary payments and, as such, appear to me to be quite outside the scope of the section. Therefore, I hold that the annuitants are not liable to estate duty in respect of the annuities.

C As regards succession duty, I must refer to parts of ss. 1 and 2 of the Succession Duty Act, 1853. Section 1 provides :

The term “personal property” . . . shall include money payable under any engagement . . . The term “property” alone shall include real property and personal property.

Section 2 provides :

D Every past or future disposition of property, by reason whereof any person has or shall become beneficially entitled to any property or the income thereof upon the death of any person dying after the time appointed for the commencement of this Act, either immediately or after any interval, either certainly or contingently, and either originally or by way of substitutive limitation, and every devolution by law of any beneficial interest in property, or the income thereof, upon the death of any person dying after the time appointed for the commencement of this Act, to any other person, in possession or expectancy, shall be deemed to have conferred or to confer E on the person entitled by reason of any such disposition or devolution a “succession” . . .

It is clear that the annuities are “property” under s. 2, since they represent money payable under the engagement, namely, the deed. The material question, as it seems to me, is whether the annuitants became beneficially entitled to such property on the death of Mr. Noad. Nothing turns, to my mind, on the word “beneficially.” If they became entitled to the annuities, they became F entitled to them beneficially. The crucial question, therefore, is : Did they become entitled to the annuities on Mr. Noad’s death ? The word “entitled,” as used in this section, appears to me necessarily to carry the implication that, for a person to be entitled to property under this section, it must be capable of being postulated of her that she has a right to sue for and recover such property.

G For the reasons which I have already given in discussing the question of estate duty, I am of the opinion that it cannot be said of the plaintiffs that, on the death of Mr. Noad, they became “entitled to any property” within the meaning of that phrase as used in the Succession Duty Act, 1853, s. 2, and, therefore, that the plaintiffs are not liable to succession duty in respect of the annuities.

Declaration accordingly.

I Solicitors : Blyth, Dutton & Co. (for the annuitants) ; Solicitor of Inland Revenue (for the Crown).

[Reported by R. D. H. OSBORNE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

DORRINGTON v. LONDON PASSENGER TRANSPORT BOARD.
[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Hilbery, J.), May 2, 22, 1947.]

Master and Servant—Common employment—Servant temporarily off duty—Injured by negligence of fellow servant—Liability of employer.

The plaintiff, an omnibus conductor employed by the defendant Board, having completed a journey, was standing, during her off-duty time, by her omnibus on the unenclosed forecourt of a station on the underground railway which was owned by the corporation. She was free to do as she liked until the time came for her to resume duty. An omnibus, driven by another employee of the corporation, drew up alongside, and was then backed and driven forward again so negligently that the plaintiff was crushed between the two vehicles.

HELD: although the plaintiff's work had brought her to the locality and created the opportunity for her to stand where she was at the time of the accident, at that time she was not doing the work which she had contracted to do, nor was she doing anything which was a natural or necessary consequence of her work or incidental thereto, and, therefore, she was not debarred by the doctrine of common employment from claiming damages from the Board for the negligence of their servant.

Coldrick v. Partridge Jones & Co., Ltd., ([1910] A.C. 77) distinguished.

[AS TO COMMON EMPLOYMENT AND A MASTER'S LIABILITY TO A SERVANT, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 22, pp. 191-194, paras. 322-328; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 34, pp. 207-220, Nos. 1697-1824.]

Cases referred to :

- (1) Radcliffe v. Ribble Motor Services, Ltd., [1939] 1 All E.R. 637; [1939] A.C. 215; 108 L.J.K.B. 320; 160 L.T. 420; 83 Sol. Jo. 337. H.L.; Digest Supp.
- (2) Burr v. Theatre Royal, Drury Lane, Ltd., [1907] 1 K.B. 544; 76 L.J.K.B. 459; 96 L.T. 447; 34 Digest 210, 1728.
- (3) Morgan v. Vale of Neath Railway Co. (1865), L.R. 1 Q.B. 149; 5 B. & S. 736; 35 L.J.Q.B. 23; 13 L.T. 564; 30 J.P. 36; 34 Digest 212, 1750.
- (4) Charles v. Taylor, Walker & Co. (1878), 3 C.P.D. 492; 38 L.T. 773; 42 J.P. 724; 34 Digest 212, 1749.
- (5) Graham or Miller v. Glasgow Corp'n., [1947] 1 All E.R. 1; [1947] L.J.R. 239; 176 L.T. 142.
- (6) The Petrel, [1893] P. 320; 62 L.J.P. 92; 70 L.T. 417; 7 Asp. M.L.C. 434; 34 Digest 213, 1757.
- (7) Coldrick v. Partridge, Jones & Co., Ltd., [1910] A.C. 77; 79 L.J.K.B. 173; 101 L.T. 835; 34 Digest 211, 1741.

ACTION for damages for negligence. The facts appear in the judgment.

Bernard Lewis for the plaintiff.

Paull, K.C., and John Harington for the defendants.

Cur. adv. vult.

May 22. HILBERY, J., read the following judgment. The defendant corporation is the owner of the land and premises at Morden station. The front of the station is composed of a line of shop premises, in the centre of which is the entrance to the booking hall. The pavement runs along in front of the shops and has on it three omnibus stop poles, stopping places for omnibuses belonging to certain numbered services, and at one point a passenger shelter for passengers waiting at that particular stop. In front of the pavement the corporation's land extends to a line of granite sets, which mark its boundary, and beyond is the open highway. There is no difference in level between the corporation's land and the open highway, and traffic from the highway to and from the station and the shops passes freely to and fro. This piece of land between the kerb and these sets has been referred to during the trial as the "forecourt," but, as I have indicated, it is not, as that expression might suggest, enclosed in any way or shut off from the highway by any wall or fence. On the side of this so-called "forecourt" nearest the London Road there are two passenger shelters, and at certain points on the "forecourt" itself there are some other omnibus stop posts used by the omnibuses belonging to certain services. Some of the services of omnibuses coming to Morden station are through services; for others it is a terminal point. Those for which it is a terminus stand alongside one another, if there happens to be more than one waiting between journeys, on the "forecourt" the property of the defendant corporation.

On July 27, 1945, the plaintiff was a conductor in the employment of the defendant corporation. Her omnibus completed a journey at Morden station and took up a position beside and next to the passenger shelters by the London Road, facing north-east. The plaintiff carried her surplus "coppers" to her driver and handed them over to him. To do this, she walked between the off side of the omnibus and the backs of the shelters. When she had so handed over her surplus coppers, she had completed her duties for the time being. It was then her "stand-off" time and she was free to do what she liked and to go where she liked until the time arrived for her to resume duty. Being off duty, she lighted a cigarette, strolled round the front of the omnibus, and paused by the near side of the driver's cab, chatting with the driver. While in this position, another omnibus was driven from the London Road round the north-east end of the passenger shelters and the front of the plaintiff's omnibus and along its near side. As the second omnibus did this, the conductor of it stepped off the platform and the plaintiff provided him with a light for his cigarette. He then stood beside the plaintiff, talking to her, for a moment or two. He thought that his omnibus, which had stopped just after he had got off, was in the position in which his driver intended it should stand. He did not anticipate his driver moving it again. It did not occur to him that his driver might back it, because it is a rule of the defendant corporation that an omnibus must not be backed without the conductor being on the platform and giving the appropriate signals to the driver. In the circumstances, this conductor, as he was no longer on the platform, but standing on the roadway; did not pay any further attention to his omnibus. What the driver of his omnibus did, however, was to back the omnibus in a north-easterly direction and then to drive forward again, taking a course which would bring the vehicle very much closer to the near side of what we may call the plaintiff's omnibus, and in so doing he drove so carelessly that his near side front wheel touched the foot of his conductor as he stood talking to the plaintiff and the near side front of his omnibus struck the plaintiff so that she was driven against the side of her stationary omnibus and was crushed between the two vehicles. It was broad daylight, and there was nothing to obscure the driver's view of these two people standing where they were. The manoeuvre which the driver made was not forced on him by any exigency created by the movement of other vehicles or people, nor was there the least reason for him to act hastily. How in such circumstances he so mis-managed his omnibus that he ran the plaintiff down is difficult to understand and impossible to excuse. In these circumstances, if the plaintiff is not by some peculiar doctrine of law deprived of her ordinary legal rights as a member of the public, the defendant corporation have no defence to her claim to be compensated for the injuries and damages which she has sustained. The defendant corporation does not contest the facts, it offers no excuse or explanation of the driver's negligence, and it has abandoned the plea put forward in the defence that the plaintiff was herself guilty of contributory negligence. The only answer on which the defendant corporation relies is a contention that the plaintiff's remedy is barred in law by that highly artificial and now unfashionable legal fiction known as the doctrine of common employment. Whether or not in the circumstances the plaintiff's claim is so barred is the sole question which I have to decide.

In 1939, in Radcliffe v. Ribble Motor Services, Ltd. (1), the House of Lords reviewed all the cases on common employment, and an examination of them, including the decision in that case, shows that whenever the doctrine has been applied the accident has happened in the course of the performance of the work undertaken by the injured workman under his contract of employment. The risk which the servant impliedly undertakes according to the doctrine is the risk involved by putting himself in juxtaposition with other persons employed by the same employer whose presence is incidental to the occupation in which he is engaged so that he cannot complain of that which is a necessary or reasonable incident of the situation in which he has voluntarily placed himself. Those are the words of SIR RICHARD HENN COLLINS, M.R., in Burr v. Theatre Royal, Drury Lane, Ltd. (2). In Radcliffe's case (1), LORD WRIGHT quotes them ([1939] 1 All E.R. 657) and compares them with the language of BLACKBURN, J., in Morgan v. Vale of Neath Railway Co. (3), where that judge said (5 B. & S. 580) :

There are many cases where the immediate object on which the one servant is employed is very dissimilar from that on which the other is employed, and yet the risk of injury from the negligence of the one is so much a natural and necessary consequence of the employment which the other accepts, that it must be included in the risks which are to be considered in his wages.

LORD WRIGHT goes on to pronounce his own opinion on the two passages, and says ([1939] 1 All E.R. 657) :

I think the words "natural and necessary" are more accurate than those of the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, "necessary or reasonable." I construe BLACKBURN, J.'s, words as meaning "necessary in the normal course of things," having regard to the service undertaken.

LORD WRIGHT then quotes BRETT, L.J.'s words in Charles v. Taylor, Walker & Co. (4), (3 C.P.D. 496) :

Where the service of each will bring them so far to work in the same place and same time that the negligence of one may injure the other. It is noteworthy that BRETT, L.J. . . . says "will bring," not "may bring."

Those passages all indicate, it seems to me, that it must be in the course of doing the work for which the servant contracts that he is exposed to the risk of negligence of another servant in the employment of the same master. LORD MACMILLAN, in the same case, says ([1939] 1 All E.R. 648) :

It is not enough, for the doctrine to apply, that the negligent employee and the injured employee should be in the service of a common master. They must be serving him in a common employment or, as it was put by LORD CRANWORTH, L.C., "engaged in a common work." The chauffeur who drives his master to the works is not in a common employment with his master's employees in the works, though they have a common employer. In the ordinary case of common employment, the nature of the employment is such as to bring the employees into association with each other in carrying on some activity in common, and it is from this association that there arises the risk that one of those so engaged may be injured by the negligence of another also so engaged.

Again, it is to be observed that, for the doctrine to apply, the risk from which the injured servant suffers must result from his association with the negligent servant in carrying on some activity in common for the common master. There is a passage in LORD SIMON'S judgment in Graham (or Miller) v. Glasgow Corporation (5) where the learned Law Lord says ([1947] 1 All E.R. 4) :

The criterion is often expressed by saying that, to make good the defence of common employment, it is not enough that the plaintiff was a fellow-servant of the person by whose fault he was injured, but it is also necessary that the two should have been engaged at the time of the injury in a "common work." But this last expression also needs definition, or at any rate, explanation. "Common work" is not limited to the sharing of the same task, like the task of two sawyers in a saw-pit, or of engine driver and stoker on the footplate of a locomotive. The phrase covers the case where the work of one is so related to the work of the other that the risk of injury to the one, due to the carelessness of the other, is not merely fortuitous, but is a special risk involved in the relationship itself, so that that risk must be deemed to have been in contemplation of the injured servant when he entered into his contract of service.

I observe and repeat the all-important qualifying words, "but it is also necessary that the two should have been engaged at the time of the injury in a 'common work.'" The risk from which the injured servant suffers if the doctrine is to apply is a special risk involved in the relationship brought about by doing and while doing the work which he has contracted to do.

In the now celebrated passage in "The Petrel" (6), ([1893] P. 320) SIR FRANCIS JEUNE, P., is obviously visualising the case of both the injured captain and the negligent captain being engaged at the time of the injury in their common work for the one shipowner. There is nothing in his judgment to suggest that, if one captain, going on shore-leave, was standing on the dock side with his luggage, waiting for a cab, and another captain in the service of the same shipowner negligently manoeuvred his vessel so that it crashed into the dock side and injured the captain where he stood, the doctrine of common employment would prevent that captain from recovering damages against the shipowners by whom both he and the negligent captain were employed. According to the doctrine, what the servant impliedly undertakes when he contracts to perform certain work for a master is the risk of injury through the negligence of other servants of the same master with whom, when doing his work, he will put himself in juxtaposition, and the nature of his employment may be such that this juxtaposition and risk of injury will naturally and necessarily come about though the respective tasks of the negligent servant and the one injured through that negligence are entirely dissimilar, but the servant only impliedly undertakes this risk of injury by the negligence of a fellow servant because doing the work which he contracts to do will expose him to it. I see no reason why, when he is no longer doing his work or doing something which ought in the particular circumstances of the case to be regarded as naturally and necessarily incident to the doing of his contractual work, he should be said to have impliedly undertaken the risk of injury through the negligence of other servants of his master. There must be a point of time at which a conductor, at a terminus on an omnibus system, having finished his work, resumes his full rights as an ordinary member of the public and is entitled to a remedy when injured by the negligence of the driver of an omnibus belonging to the same system, in the service with him of the same master, even though the negligent act occurs at or near the terminal point in question and at a place where the master's omnibuses congregate.

The plaintiff at the time of her accident was not doing her work, nor was she doing anything which was a natural or necessary consequence of her work or incidental thereto. Having finished her work for the time being, her work as a conductor did not require her to be where she was or require her to take the risk of the negligent driving of another of the defendants' omnibuses. It is true that her work had brought her to the locality, but, having brought her to the locality, it had not either necessitated her standing where she was standing, nor were the circumstances of her employment such that the inference should be drawn that it was a normal incident of her work that she should stand where she did during her own free time off. No doubt, it was her work which created the opportunity for her to stand where she did stand on that particular afternoon in her leisure time, but it would be quite illogical to say that her work caused her to stand there. Her work did no more than produce an occasion when she might stand there or anywhere else she chose. I cannot believe that, if the facts had been that she had crossed the forecourt and been struck by an omnibus of the defendants negligently driven when she was standing on the pavement looking in one of the shops forming the front of the station, deciding which of several articles displayed there she would buy, it could have been successfully contended that the risk of being so injured was one which she impliedly undertook when she entered into a contract with the defendants to do the work of a conductor. It is true that in Coldrick v. Partridge Jones & Co. (7) the workman at the time of his accident had finished his work and that LORD LOREBURN, L.C., in the course of his speech, said that that fact was immaterial, but, read in the context in which that statement was made, it was no more than that on the facts in that case the workman, in riding to and from his work in the colliery, as he was doing at the time of his accident, on the train provided for that purpose by his employers, was doing something which was incidental to his work. There is, therefore, nothing in that decision which conflicts with the conclusions at which I have arrived in the present case. In my view, the plaintiff is entitled to succeed, and I give judgment for her for the sum of £670.

Judgment for plaintiff with costs.

Solicitors : Pattinson & Brewer (for the plaintiff) ; A. H. Grainger, Solicitor to the London Passenger Transport Board (for the defendants).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

EGERTON AND OTHERS v. ESPLANADE HOTELS, LONDON, LTD. AND ANOTHER.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Morris, J.), May 7, 8, 9, 12, 13, 1947.]

Landlord and Tenant—Lease—Forfeiture—Breach of covenant—Notice of breach—Notice not containing requirement that breach should be remedied—Permitting premises to be used as a brothel—Validity—Relief—Law of Property Act, 1925, (c. 20), s. 146 (1) (2).

A

B

C

D

E

F

G

H

The lease of certain premises contained a covenant by the tenants not to do, or suffer to be done, on the premises any act which might be an annoyance, damage or disturbance to the landlords or their tenants, and to use them as a private dwelling-house only, and there was a proviso for re-entry in the event of a breach of covenant. Under a licence from the landlords, the tenants were allowed to use the premises as a hotel, and, by the terms of this licence which were to be treated as though embodied in the lease, the premises were to "be kept and managed . . . so as not to contravene any of the laws of the land . . . and in a quiet orderly and proper manner." In March, 1945, the tenants allowed rooms in the hotel to be occupied by persons for the purpose of having illicit sexual intercourse. Pursuant to the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 146 (1), the landlords served a notice on the tenants complaining that they had committed a breach of covenant by allowing the premises to be used as a brothel, but the notice did not contain any requirement that the breach should be remedied :—

HELD : (i) the premises had been used as a brothel (definition in Winter v. Woolfe ([1931] 1 K.B. 549) applied), and the tenants had committed a breach of their obligations under the lease and the licence, but the breach was not capable of remedy and there was no necessity for the landlords to have called on the tenants to remedy it, and the notice was, therefore, a valid and sufficient notice under the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 146 (1).

Rugby School v. Tannahill ([1935] 1 K.B. 87) followed.

(ii) in the circumstances of the case, the tenants were not entitled to relief under s. 146 (2) of the Act.

[AS TO NOTICE OF BREACH, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 20, pp. 257-259, paras. 290, 291; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 31, pp. 483-486, Nos. 6322-6342, and Supplement.]

Cases referred to :

- (1) Winter v. Woolfe, [1931] 1 K.B. 549; 100 L.J.K.B. 92; 144 L.T. 311; 95 J.P. 20; Digest Supp.
- (2) R. v. Holland, Lincolnshire JJ. (1882), 46 J.P. 312; 15 Digest 754, 8133.
- (3) Rugby School v. Tannahill, [1935] 1 K.B. 87; 104 L.J.K.B. 159; 152 L.T. 198; Digest Supp.

ACTION for possession of premises on the ground of breach of covenant by the tenants, the first defendants. The relevant facts appear in the judgment.

Melford Stevenson, K.C., and Sir S. Worthington-Evans for the plaintiffs.

M. Turner-Samuels, K.C., and Jessel Turner-Samuels for the first defendants.

Ungoed-Thomas for the second defendants.

MORRIS, J. : The plaintiffs are the trustees for the time being of the Paddington estate and they claim possession of premises known as 37 Warrington Crescent, Paddington. Those premises are in the occupation of the first defendants, Esplanade Hotels London, Ltd., and form part of a hotel carried on by them at Nos. 2, 37 and 39, Warrington Crescent. By a lease dated Nov. 10, 1863, and made between the then trustees of the estate and a Mr. William Thompson, the premises, No. 37, were demised to Mr. Thompson for a term of 95½ years from Michaelmas, 1863. That term has become vested in the first defendants. The second defendants, Magnet Building Society, are parties to the action because, by a mortgage of Mar. 1, 1937, and a further charge dated Aug. 4, 1937, the first defendants, as beneficial owners, charged the premises to the society. The Magnet Building Society counterclaim for relief if circumstances arise making it necessary for them to do so.

The claim is brought by the plaintiffs because they say that there was a breach by the first defendants of an obligation contained in the lease and, also, a breach of a licence granted in July, 1937, by the plaintiffs to the first defendants, the terms of which were to be treated as though embodied in the lease. So far as the lease is concerned, there is a covenant which binds the first defendants that they :

... shall not nor will do or suffer to be done on the premises any act which may be or grow to be an annoyance damage or disturbance of the said Lord Bishop [i.e., the bishop joined in the deed] or his successors or the said trustees or trustee for the time being or their or his tenants and shall and will keep and use the said messuage or tenement as and for a private dwelling-house only.

There was a proviso for re-entry and it provides that, in default of performance of any of the covenants, then it shall be lawful for the trustees for the time being to enter the demised premises. The licence that was granted permitted the premises to be used as a hotel and included in the terms of the licence was this provision :

(7) That the said premises shall be kept and managed only as specified in the schedule hereto and so as not to contravene any of the laws of the land for the time being in force and in a quiet orderly and proper manner.

The schedule set out that the user was by Leon Shapiro, and Marie Davidova of 2 Warrington Crescent, Paddington, called the licensed users

... whilst being directors of Esplanade Hotels London, Ltd., and whilst personally supervising managing and keeping up the said premises and attending upon the persons therein with a competent resident manager or manageress and a staff of servants in style and manner appropriate to the character of the said premises as and for a high class private residential hotel for persons of good class and social position suitable to the character aforesaid but so that and only so that the provisions and conditions hereinbefore set out are fully observed fulfilled and kept.

Clause I of the licence was in these terms :

That throughout the term of the said lease and the subsistence of this licence all the lessee's covenants and the conditions contained in the said lease (subject to any subsisting licence previously given by us or our predecessors in title) be applicable to and enforceable in respect of the premises comprised therein and generally operate and have effect as if the user and any other things hereby licensed or permitted had been licensed or permitted by the said lease and the provisions and conditions herein had been embodied therein but so that in all other respects and subject as aforesaid the said lease shall continue in full force.

The plaintiffs say that the first defendants, in breach of the covenant and of the condition in the licence, used the premises and suffered them to be used as a brothel between Mar. 2, 1945, and Mar. 6, 1945. The plaintiffs say that they have complied with the necessities of the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 146 (1), and that, therefore, they are entitled to exercise their right to re-enter, and are, in consequence, entitled to possession of the premises. The first defendants deny that they have broken the covenant or the term of the licence to which I have referred. They say, secondly, that no notice that was sufficient or satisfactory to comply with s. 146 of the Act of 1925 was ever served on them. In the alternative, if a breach is proved and if a valid and sufficient notice was given, they ask that relief be granted to them under the provisions of s. 146 (2).

The first issue is clearly one which depends on the facts. [After reviewing the evidence, HIS LORDSHIP found that rooms in the hotel had been occupied by persons for the purpose of having illicit sexual intercourse. He said that, following a raid by the police on the hotel on Mar. 11, 1945, one Westermann, who was one of the directors of the first defendants and was at the relevant time largely responsible for the management of the hotel, and one Lienhard, a porter at the hotel, were convicted for that they between Mar. 2 and 6, 1945, at the Esplanade Hotel had unlawfully assisted in the management of a brothel. HIS LORDSHIP continued :—] The plaintiffs have alleged their breach in the way in which I have indicated and, therefore, they must prove that breach. In Winter v. Woolfe (1), in the Divisional Court, AVORY, J., said ([1931] 1 K.B. 555) :

I am content to accept the definition of a brothel given by GROVE and LOPES, JJ. [46 J.P. 312, 313] in the case of R. v. Justices of Parts of Holland, Lincolnshire (2).

GROVE, J., said: "The sole question is whether there was any evidence to support this conviction before the justices for permitting these licensed premises to be a brothel . . . I don't think that the matter of nuisance is of any importance, for it is too well known that these places are often kept in such a way as to be no nuisance at all, but kept perfectly private. But what needs only to be proved is this, namely that the premises were kept knowingly for the purpose of people having illicit sexual connection there." LOPES, J., said: "Now, the sole question before the justices was whether the applicant permitted his premises to be a brothel. What is the meaning of permitting the premises to be a brothel? I think my brother GROVE has given a very apt definition, namely, that it is permitting people of opposite sexes to come there and have illicit sexual intercourse. That is a very complete and satisfactory definition of the whole matter."

AVORY, J., added (ibid.):

There was in this case evidence upon which the only reasonable inference was that these men and women were resorting to these premises habitually for the purpose of having illicit sexual intercourse, and of this, on the evidence, it is not really disputed that the respondent must have known.

I accept the evidence that the three police officers gave in this case. In my judgment, it leads overwhelmingly to the conclusion that the covenant in the lease and the conditions in the licence were broken by the first defendants, since, between Mar. 2 and 6, 1945, the premises were used as a brothel in the sense in which that expression has been referred to, and is referred to, in the courts, and were, therefore, used in such a way as to violate the obligations binding on the first defendants as assignees of the lease and licensees under the licence.

That being my clear conclusion on the first issue, viz., that there was a breach of covenant, the next matter which arises is the question whether the plaintiffs served a notice under the provisions of the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 146, so as to comply with statutory necessities. There has been much discussion at the Bar in regard to the wording of s. 146 (1) and, therefore, I think it necessary to read the words of the sub-section:

A right of re-entry or forfeiture under any proviso or stipulation in a lease for a breach of any covenant or condition in the lease shall not be enforceable, by action or otherwise, unless and until the lessor serves on the lessee a notice (a) specifying the particular breach complained of; and (b) if the breach is capable of remedy, requiring the lessee to remedy the breach; and (c) in any case, requiring the lessee to make compensation in money for the breach; and the lessee fails, within a reasonable time thereafter, to remedy the breach, if it is capable of remedy, and to make reasonable compensation in money, to the satisfaction of the lessor, for the breach.

The notice that was served on behalf of the plaintiffs was dated Aug. 3, 1945. The breach complained of is the breach pleaded in the statement of claim, the breach which I have already said I find to be established. The notice does not contain any requirement that the breach should be remedied. It is, therefore, submitted on the part of the first defendants that the notice is not a good notice and that a right of forfeiture cannot be exercised, for it is said by counsel for the first defendants that the breach was one capable of being remedied. It is said by counsel for the plaintiffs that this breach was not one capable of being remedied. I think it is clear that the phrase "remedy the breach" cannot mean, and was not intended to mean, that the breach was to be wiped out, for that clearly would be an impossibility. That which has taken place cannot be obliterated as an event or as a fact. Counsel for the second defendants submitted that a useful way in which to approach the phrase "remedy the breach" would be to consider whether the consequences of the breach were capable of remedy.

I think that the section is precise in its language and that it is necessary to look at the facts of each case where there has been a breach of covenant and to say whether the breach was, or was not, capable of remedy. I do not think that it would be desirable to lay down or suggest that there are certain categories, or groups, or types, of breaches of covenants which are incapable of remedy, and I propose to approach the facts in this case and to consider them and them alone. I think I am entitled to get as much guidance as possible from Rugby School v. Tannahill (3), a decision of the Court of Appeal which is, of course, binding on me. In that case a lessee committed a breach of her tenancy not to use the premises for illegal or immoral purposes. The notice that was served on her did not require her to remedy the breach or to make compensation in money, and it was held by the Court of Appeal (approving the decision of MACKINNON, J., but not entirely indorsing everything that he said) that ceasing to commit the breach was no remedy, that the breach was not capable of remedy, and that, consequently, an omission to require it to be remedied did not invalidate the notice. GREER, L.J., said ([1935] 1 K.B. 90, 91) :

The first point is, whether this particular breach is capable of remedy. In my judgment MACKINNON, J., was right in coming to the conclusion that it was not. I think perhaps he went further than was really necessary for the decision of this case in holding that a breach of any negative covenant—the doing of that which is forbidden—can never be capable of remedy. It is unnecessary to decide the point on this appeal; but in some cases where the immediate ceasing of that which is complained of, together with an undertaking against any further breach, it might be said that the breach was capable of remedy. This particular breach, however—conducting the premises, or permitting them to be conducted, as a house of ill-fame—is one which in my judgment was not remedied by merely stopping this user. I cannot conceive how a breach of this kind can be remedied. The result of committing the breach would be known all over the neighbourhood and seriously affect the value of the premises. Even a money payment together with the cessation of the improper use of the house could not be a remedy.

MAUGHAM, L.J., said (ibid, 93, 94) :

The second thing to be gathered from the section is that the breach must be capable of remedy within a reasonable time. The lessor is not to be kept out of his right of action for an unreasonable time. If, for example, the breach is of such a character that many months or perhaps years must elapse before the breach can be remedied to the satisfaction of the lessor, such a case would not be as regards remedy within the section at all. The importance of that in this case is that merely ceasing to use the premises for an illegal or immoral purpose is not in any true sense to remedy the breach. The phrase in the covenant is of course negative; it is not to permit the premises to be used for an illegal or immoral purpose. In a sense the lessee ceases to permit the premises to be used for such a purpose if during a week she complies with the covenant; but that is not sufficient to establish that in the particular case the breach is capable of remedy. The use of the premises for a long period for an immoral purpose seriously tends to damage their value and to give them a bad name, as indeed is shown by the common designation of such premises—namely, a house of ill-fame; and merely ceasing for a reasonable time, perhaps a few weeks or a month, to use the premises for an immoral purpose would be no remedy for the breach of covenant which had been committed over a long period.

The matter which I have to consider is whether, on the facts of this case, the breach was capable of remedy. The breach was in March. The notice was served in August, but that, presumably, was because, after the proceedings in court as a result of the police raid on Mar. 11, 1945, there were appeals, and, doubtless, the result of those appeals, which were heard in July, was awaited before the notice was served. In any event, no complaint is made by anyone that the notice was not served earlier. Was this breach a breach capable of remedy, which means a breach capable of remedy within a reasonable time of the date in August on which the notice was served? There were the convictions of two individuals, and the dismissal of their appeals. Inevitably there would be some publicity, though I cannot assess the amount of it in regard to those proceedings, but, in my judgment, the breach was of such a nature that it must cast a stigma on the premises and impose a taint which can only be removed if those who have brought it about are no longer associated with the premises. There are, of course, always the beneficent effects of time in effacing the memory of unhappy and unpleasant things, but this was not, in my opinion, a breach which was capable of remedy within a reasonable time. I think I am entitled, when considering this matter, to have regard to the whole amenity of the neighbourhood and what must be the repercussions of events of this kind and their effect on property in the neighbourhood. Under the contract, which existed between the plaintiffs and the first defendants, the first defendants covenanted not to use the premises in the way in which they have used them. Merely desisting from the wrongful user or not continuing to commit further breaches is not, in my judgment, on the facts of this case, a way of remedying the breach. In my view, the conclusion on this second issue that arises is that these breaches were not capable of remedy and that there was no necessity for the plaintiffs to have called on the first defendants to have remedied the breaches of which the plaintiffs complain. It follows, therefore, that the notice that was given was a valid and sufficient notice.

The result of these findings, unless the powers of the court can successfully be invoked, is that the plaintiffs are entitled to re-enter these premises, but the first defendants ask the court for relief under s. 146 (2) of the Act of 1925, which reads :

Where a lessor is proceeding, by action or otherwise, to enforce such a right of re-entry or forfeiture, the lessee may, in the lessor's action, if any, or in any action brought by himself, apply to the court for relief ; and the court may grant or refuse relief, as the court, having regard to the proceedings and conduct of the parties under the foregoing provisions of this section, and to all the other circumstances, thinks fit ; and in case of relief may grant it on such terms, if any, as to costs, expenses, damages, compensation, penalty, or otherwise, including the granting of an injunction to restrain any like breach in the future, as the court, in the circumstances of each case, thinks fit.

Without reference to any of the authorities on this matter, a mere reading of those words shows that the discretion in the court is very wide, and, indeed, is unfettered, subject to this, that it must be exercised judicially and having regard to all the circumstances. [His LORDSHIP reviewed the evidence on this part of the case, and continued :] I have no doubt that in Mar., 1945, many proprietors of hotels had particular difficulties. Clearly a man who runs a hotel cannot be responsible if, without his knowledge, unmarried couples resort to his hotel to have illicit intercourse. I think it is right to make every possible allowance for those who were running hotels during the difficult days of the war. When all these matters are taken into account I think the inquiry is raised : Did or did not those who were running this hotel know what was happening ? Did they or did they not tolerate what was happening ? Did they or did they not profit deliberately and without regret as the result of what was happening ? I think it is reasonable also to bear in mind that, although the breaches complained of are stated to refer only to five days, when considering the general circumstances it would be unreasonable to say that one must have regard to those five days only. It further seems to me that the sort of events that were occurring on Mar. 11, and between Mar. 2 and 6, could not have taken place on the scale on which they were taking place without many of the people responsible for running the hotel, who were managing it and deriving their income from it, having a pretty shrewd idea what was happening and of the source of a good many of their receipts. I have no doubt that this hotel was conducted for a great many years quite properly, but, nevertheless, for the reasons that I have stated, it seems to me that it would not be right for me to grant relief in this case on any terms which permitted the first defendants to continue, beyond some reasonable time, to be in occupation.

Judgment for the plaintiffs against the first defendants. The question of relief to the second defendants to be dealt with later.

Solicitors : Trower, Still & Keeling (for the landlords) ; Kerly, Sons & Karuth (for the tenants) ; Wright, Son & Pepper (for the mortgagees).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

MINISTER OF PENSIONS v. WILLIAMS.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Denning, J.), May 5, 9, 1947.]

War Injury—Pension—Burden of proof—Test of causation—Personal Injuries (Civilians) Scheme, 1944 (S.R. & O. 1944, No. 369), arts. 2 (2), 6.

On May 20, 1944, the claimant, while out walking, picked up a small object of uncertain origin, resembling a piece of piping of dull lead colour. The following evening he was examining the object and at the same time holding a lighted cigarette, when an explosion occurred by which he was injured. He claimed a pension under the Personal Injuries (Civilians) Scheme, 1944, made under the Personal Injuries (Emergency Provisions) Act, 1939.

HELD : (i) there was no burden on the claimant to prove that his injury was a war injury, and the pensions appeal tribunal had rightly given him the benefit of the doubt and found that the object was a missile discharged by the enemy.

(ii) the fact that the claimant was examining the object and not taking it to a police station might mean that he was guilty of negligence, but did not break the chain of causation, because he was not doing a deliberate act in relation to the object, nor was the chain of causation broken by his holding a lighted cigarette near the object.

Minister of Pensions v. Chennell ([1946] 2 All E.R. 719) applied. Smith v. Davey, Paxman & Co. (Colchester), Ltd. ([1943] 1 All E.R. 286), distinguished.

(iii) there was evidence on which the tribunal could find that the injuries were caused or contributed to by the serious negligence or misconduct of the claimant for the purposes of art. 6 of the scheme and the Pensions Appeal Tribunals Act, 1943, s. 4, under which an award may be withheld or reduced.

[FOR THE PERSONAL INJURIES (CIVILIANS) SCHEME, 1944, arts. 2 (2), 6, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 37, pp. 849, 851.]

Cases referred to :

(1) Smith v. Davey, Paxman & Co. (Colchester), Ltd., [1943] 1 All E.R. 286 ; 36 B.W.C.C. 60 ; Digest Supp.

(2) Minister of Pensions v. Chennell, [1946] 2 All E.R. 719 ; [1947] K.B. 250 ; 176 L.T. 164.

APPEAL by the claimant from a decision of a pensions appeals tribunal dismissing his appeal in respect of a claim for a pension made by him under the Personal Injuries (Civilians) Scheme, 1944, the ground for the decision of the tribunal being that the claimant's injuries were caused or contributed to by his own serious negligence or misconduct. The facts appear in the judgment.

H. L. Parker for the Minister of Pensions.

The claimant did not appear.

Cur adv. vult.

May 9. DENNING, J., read the following judgment. The claimant, when out walking on May 20, 1944, in Carmarthenshire, picked up a small object which he described as like a piece of piping of a dull lead colour, and placed it in the pocket of an old Army tunic he was wearing at the time. On the following evening, May 21, when he was in a field near his home in the company of two friends, he took the object from his pocket and was examining it, at the same time holding a lighted cigarette, when an explosion occurred. As a result, he received lacerated wounds of the face and the right hand and fingers of the left hand. He claimed a pension under the Personal Injuries (Civilians) Scheme, 1944, made under the Personal Injuries (Emergency Provisions) Act, 1939. If his incapacity for work or disablement is caused by a "war injury" he is prima facie entitled to a pension.

In considering whether it was a "war injury," the first question is whether this was a missile discharged by the enemy, or in combating the enemy, or in repelling an imagined attack by the enemy. There is no evidence that there had been any bombs dropped by the enemy in this vicinity, or that any of our troops had been in action against the enemy there, or, indeed, of any "incident" in the locality. All that the evidence showed was that the object was lying in a field on the top of a mountain about 50 yards from a pillbox. Its appearance was like a piece of dull, lead-coloured piping. It was two to two and a half inches long and about one and half inches in diameter. One end was milled; the other end was smooth. There was no fuse attached to it. In the field where the explosion took place, police found portions of some metal object marked "P.O.B.W.2209." They were found some few yards from the place where the explosion took place, and they were of a dull coloured alloy. They were inspected by a major of the Home Guard who stated that they were not portions of anything used by the Home Guard. They were also inspected by an inspector of the War Emergency Department, Llanelly, by the bomb disposal unit at Swansea, and by the garrison engineer at Llanelly. None of these investigations produced any definite results. The policeman who found the missile said that he was satisfied that it had not been buried, but it was free from rust and appeared quite new. The police told the claimant that the object was not of British origin.

On this part of the case much depends on the burden of proof. By art. 2 (2) of the scheme :

In no case shall there be an onus on any claimant . . . to prove that incapacity for work or disablement was caused by, or that death was the direct result of, a qualifying injury, and the benefit of any reasonable doubt on those questions shall be given to the claimant.

That article corresponds to art. 4 (2) of the Royal Warrant concerning Retired Pay, etc. (Cmd. 6489) and to similar articles in the schemes relating to the merchant navy and other persons under the Pensions (Navy, Army, Air Force and Mercantile Marine) Act, 1939. These articles must be read with ss. 1, 2 and 3 of the Act of 1943. The similarity of wording shows that on the questions that come before the tribunals under those sections there is to be no burden of proof on the claimant and the benefit of any reasonable doubt is to be given to him. On the narrow question whether the incapacity for work or disablement was caused by the injury, it is plain there is no burden on the claimant, but the real question is whether the injury was a "war injury." Where is the burden on that question? A "war injury" is defined as a physical injury caused by the discharge of any missile by the enemy. It seems to me that on that question there is also no burden on the claimant. If the benefit of art. 2 (2) were confined to the narrow question, it would have little or no practical effect.

Applying that test in this case, the evidence is very inconclusive. It may be that the object was a missile discharged by the enemy, but there is a reasonable doubt on the point. The tribunal were right to give the claimant the benefit of the doubt and to find that it was a missile discharged by the enemy.

Assuming that the missile was discharged by the enemy, the next question is whether the injuries to the claimant were caused by it being so discharged. That depends on whether it falls within the decision of Smith v. Davey, Paxman and Co. (Colchester), Ltd. (1) or that of Minister of Pensions v. Chennell (2). As I stated in Chennell's (2) case, intervening negligence or misconduct does not of itself break the chain of causation. The Personal Injury Scheme, indeed, and the Pensions Appeal Tribunals Act, 1943, both contemplate that even serious negligence and misconduct may not break the chain of causation, because, under art. 6 of the scheme and s. 4 of the Act, serious negligence or misconduct is made a ground on which the Minister may withhold, cancel or reduce an award, a question which would not arise unless the chain of causation was intact. This leads to a just result, because, if the chain of causation is broken, innocent passers-by who are injured would have no recompense under the scheme, whereas so long as the chain of causation is intact, they may be compensated, but the person who is guilty of serious negligence or misconduct may not. The distinction between the two cases cited is this. In Smith v. Davey, Paxman & Co. (Colchester), Ltd. (1) everyone concerned knew that the cannon shell was from an enemy aeroplane. The man who sawed it at his bench was doing a deliberate act in which the origin of the shell was only part of the history. It would have been all the same if it had been an explosive coming from a source unconnected with the war. In Chennell's (2) case, however, the intervening action was that of children acting in the irresponsible way in which children do act. In the present case, the claimant was not doing a deliberate act such as the workman in Smith v. Davey, Paxman & Co. (Colchester), Ltd. (1) was doing. He was only examining a strange object in the way in which a careless man might do. If he had been taking it to the police station and was examining it on the way when it exploded, both he and any passers-by would have been entitled to compensation. The fact that he was not taking it to the police station, but was examining it in a field, may mean that he was guilty of negligence, but does not break the chain of causation. The fact that he was also holding a lighted cigarette may render his negligence so serious as to disentitle him to any compensation, but, again, it does not break the chain of causation so as to prevent an innocent person who may have been injured by the explosion from recovery. I hold, therefore, that on this point this case falls within Chennell's (2) case rather than that of Smith v. Davey, Paxman & Co. (Colchester), Ltd. (1). The tribunal found that it was a war injury, and I see no error in law in that finding.

The remaining question is whether the injuries were caused or contributed to by the serious negligence or misconduct of the claimant. The tribunal found that they were. There was evidence on which they could come to that conclusion, and there is no ground on which I should interfere. The result is that I uphold the decision of the tribunal on all points.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitor : Treasury Solicitor (for the Minister of Pensions).

[Reported by W. J. ALDERMAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Considered. HADLUM v. HADLUM.
[1948] 2 All E.R. 412.

WOOD v. WOOD.

[PROBATE, DIVORCE AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION (Lord Merriman, P., and Jones, J.), April 16, 1947.]

Divorce—Evidence—Adultery—Period of gestation—Three hundred and forty-six days.

A husband and a wife ceased to cohabit on Aug. 8, 1945, and on July 20, 1946, the wife bore a child which appeared to be at least fully grown. The husband adduced no evidence of any adulterous association by the wife, nor any medical evidence, but he contended that, having regard to the lapse of time between his last cohabitation with his wife and the date of the birth of the child, the wife must have committed adultery.

HELD : (i) the court declined on the information before it to hold that the wife had committed adultery.

Gaskill v. Gaskill ([1921] P. 425) discussed.

(ii) although the husband believed that the wife had committed adultery and that he was not the father of her child, he must nevertheless be considered to have deserted her because his belief was not induced by such an act on her part as would lead a reasonable person to believe that she was guilty of adultery.

Glenister v. Glenister ([1945] P. 30) distinguished.

[AS TO PERIOD OF GESTATION, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 10, p. 663 n.; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 27, pp. 298, 299, Nos. 2753, 2754.]

Cases referred to :

- (1) Gaskill v. Gaskill, [1921] P. 425; 90 L.J.P. 339; 126 L.T. 115; 27 Digest 298, 2753.
- (2) Clark v. Clark, [1939] P. 228.
- (3) Glenister v. Glenister, [1945] 1 All E.R. 513; [1945] P. 30; 114 L.J.P. 69; 172 L.T. 250; 109 J.P. 194; Digest Supp.
- (4) Russell v. Russell, [1924] A.C. 687; 93 L.J.P. 97; 131 L.T. 482; Digest Supp.

APPEAL by a husband from a decision of Prescott (Lancashire) justices.

The justices found desertion of the wife by the husband proved, and made a maintenance order in her favour, holding that the fact that for the husband to have been the father of a child born to the wife the period of gestation must have been 346 days was not a ground for inferring that the wife had committed adultery. The facts appear in the judgment of LORD MERRIMAN, P.

H. B. Grant for the husband.

LORD MERRIMAN, P. : On Jan. 17, 1947, on a summons by the wife on the ground of desertion, the justices, finding desertion proved as from Aug. 25, 1946, the date on which the husband wrote a letter indicating very plainly his intention to abandon his wife, made an order for the maximum amount in respect of the wife and the child. The ground of the appeal is that the justices rejected the husband's defence that he was not bound to continue cohabitation with his wife because she had committed adultery, and the case raises rather a curious point. The parties were married in Mar., 1945, and were able to live together only so far as was permitted by the fact that the wife was serving in the Land Army and he was a chemist. There is evidence sufficient to show, if the justices chose to accept it (as I am assuming that they did) that the last date on which the husband and wife actually cohabited was on or about Aug. 8, 1945. A child was born on July 20, 1946, which appeared to be at least fully-grown, and, if anything, rather over the average weight. There is not a shred of evidence adduced by the husband of any sort of association between the wife and any other man named or unnamed, but the husband has charged the wife with adultery solely on the length of what would have been the period of gestation if the conception had been the result of their last cohabitation.

On the assumption which the husband was putting forward, counting from the latest possible date, Aug. 8, 1945, the period of gestation was 346 days, and it is said that that is proof positive that this child was not his, and, therefore, the wife has committed adultery. The magistrates state in the reasons for their decision that the wife denied on oath the alleged adultery, and that her conduct was not called in question, but that the period extended far beyond the normal length of gestation, which, according to the usually accepted average and the evidence of a midwife, is 280 days. They continue :

We considered that an allegation of adultery was a serious allegation which must be strictly proved, and that we could not, on that evidence alone, assume the wife's adultery and that it was impossible that the husband could be the father of the child. In these circumstances we accepted the evidence of the wife, and found that she had not committed adultery.

They refer to LORD BIRKENHEAD's judgment in Gaskill v. Gaskill (1), where LORD BIRKENHEAD was dealing with facts whereby it was fixed that the last possible date for sexual intercourse was 331 days before the birth of the child. In the converse case of Clark v. Clark (2), I was dealing with a matter in which the earliest possible date on which sexual intercourse could have occurred was 174 days before the birth of a prematurely born child. In both cases, both LORD BIRKENHEAD and I were pointing out the necessity of attempting, but the difficulty of achieving, some reconciliation between the notional reckoning of the normal period of gestation and a period in which the earliest or the latest date, as the case might be, from which conception could possibly exist was fixed and known. It is, at least, clear that it is fallacious to attempt to mix the notional and the actual in the period of calculation.

I am not going to say any more about the present case than that we have been asked to say that there comes a point at which any judge must take judicial knowledge of the fact that the period is altogether outside what is possible. I agree. Of course, there must come such a point, and the whole question is whether, in a case in which we have had no advantage of medical evidence or of argument on the other side, we are bound to say that that stage has come at a point 15 days longer than the period with which LORD BIRKENHEAD dealt in 1921 in a case in which, as here, there is not a shred of evidence of any adulterous or improper association between the wife and any man.

One can add grains of corn together, and there must come a time when they become a heap. It may be said to be impossible to know where to draw the line, yet it can plainly be seen that one case or another must be on the wrong side of any line that can possibly be drawn. With that I agree, but I absolutely decline, on the information before us in this case, to say that we are judicially bound to hold that this period of 346 days is on the wrong side of any line which can possibly be drawn, that we are judicially bound to hold that this wife has committed adultery, and that the magistrates were wrong in rejecting the husband's contention.

There remains the alternative point on which it is said that, even if the wife did not commit adultery and the primary case is rejected, nevertheless the circumstances were such that the husband had every right to believe that she had committed adultery, and, therefore, on the authority of Glenister v. Glenister (3), he cannot be held to be a deserter. Glenister v. Glenister (3), however, turned on the finding that the wife had so misconducted herself as to lead any reasonable husband to suppose that she had committed adultery.

A One of the suspicious circumstances was that she had been caught at night by her husband with men in her room, and, in addition, there was the birth of a child. In my judgment I said ([1945] 1 All E.R. 518) :

Take a hypothetical case, in which, short of actual and direct proof of adultery, the wife so conducts herself to the knowledge of the husband as to warrant the inference that adultery has been committed, though, (I am supposing), that is ultimately held not to be a fact.

B I then call attention to the dilemma in which a husband might be placed, the simplest illustration of which would be a circumstantial confession of adultery by the wife herself, made for some purpose of her own, which confession proved afterwards to be false. The dilemma of the husband is that either he remains with the wife, in which case he condones her adultery, or he goes away and leaves her because of the confession, in which case he is held to be a deserter. I ended this passage by saying (ibid.) :

C It seems to me to put the husband in an almost impossible position, if that is the law. But the question is whether it is the law. I do not think it is. If the wife has so conducted herself as to lead any reasonable person to believe, until she gives some explanation, that she has committed adultery, the husband, becoming aware of the facts and honestly drawing that inference and leaving the wife on that ground ought not to be held to have left her without reasonable cause.

D The whole point is that it is the wife's misconduct which induces the reasonable belief on the part of the husband.

E That brings me back again to the case of Gaskill v. Gaskill (1), where, at the conclusion of his judgment ([1921] P. 434), LORD BIRKENHEAD called attention to the fact, in expressing the hope that there might be a reconciliation, that the young couple in that case had both been "the sport of nature," words which seem to me to be applicable exactly to this case. It seems to me to be impossible to apply the principle and the reasoning on which Glenister v. Glenister (3), is based to a case where the wife has done nothing wrong herself, but has been the victim of a freak of nature. That being so, this appeal fails, and must be dismissed.

JONES, J. : I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors : G. Houghton & Son (for the husband).

F [Reported by R. HENDRY WHITE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

CAMPBELL v. PROUD'S ENGINEERING CO., LTD.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Tucker and Evershed, L.JJ., and Macnaghten J.), June 5, 1947.]

G Workmen's Compensation—Accident—"Arising out of employment"—Workman going to employers' pay office to draw pay—Jumping on passing lorry—Collision between lorry and trucks—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925 (c. 84), s. 1 (1).

H A workman was working on a ship in a dock, and, in the course of his employment, he had to go to his employers' pay office, which was a little over a mile away, to receive his pay. While on his way there, he jumped on the near side of a passing lorry which was going in the same direction. The lorry swerved to avoid another lorry, collided with some railway trucks, and the workman was crushed to death between the trucks and the lorry. In a claim by his widow for compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925, s. 1, the employers contended that, although the accident happened in the course of the workman's employment, it did not arise out of it because the act which he was doing was different in kind from that which he was employed to do :—

HELD : there had been no deviation by the workman from the journey

he set out to take, his act in jumping on the lorry instead of proceeding on foot did not render his journey to the pay office different in kind from what it would have been had he used a safer method, and the accident, therefore, arose out of the employment.

Harris v. Associated Portland Cement Manufacturers, Ltd. ([1938] 4 All E.R. 831) applied.

[AS TO ACCIDENTS ARISING OUT OF AND IN THE COURSE OF EMPLOYMENT, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 34, pp. 822-836, paras 1160-1169; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 34, pp. 276, 277, Nos. 2332-2340, pp. 284-293, Nos. 2389-2439, and pp. 321-323, Nos. 2627-2641.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Stephen v. Cooper, [1929] A.C. 570; 98 L.J.P.C. 97; 141 L.T. 300; 22 B.W.C.C. 339; Digest Supp.
- (2) Harris v. Associated Portland Cement Manufacturers, Ltd. [1938] 4 All E.R. 831; [1939] A.C. 71; 108 L.J.K.B. 145; 160 L.T. 187; 31 B.W.C.C. 434; Digest Supp.
- (3) Noble v. Southern Ry. Co., [1940] 2 All E.R. 383; [1940] A.C. 583; 109 L.J.K.B. 509; 33 B.W.C.C. 176; Digest Supp.
- (4) Wilson & Clyde Coal Co. v. M'Ferrin, Kerr v. Dunlop (James) & Co., [1926] A.C. 377; 95 L.J.P.C. 130; 135 L.T. 164; 19 B.W.C.C. 1; 34 Digest 301, 2499.
- (5) Seivior v. Somerset Collieries, Ltd., [1940] 1 All E.R. 649; 162 L.T. 403; 33 B.W.C.C. 62; Digest Supp.
- (6) Thomas v. Ocean Coal Co., Ltd., [1933] A.C. 100; 102 L.J.K.B. 142; 148 L.T. 219; 25 B.W.C.C. 436; Digest Supp.
- (7) Hawker v. Doncaster Amalgamated Collieries, Ltd., [1938] 4 All E.R. 577; 160 L.T. 31; 31 B.W.C.C. 472; Digest Supp.

APPEAL by the widow of a deceased workman from an award of His Honour JUDGE L. C. THOMAS, made at Cardiff County Court, and dated Dec. 4, 1946, refusing her claim to compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925, s. 1, on the ground that, at the time of the accident, the workman was doing what he was not employed to do, and, therefore, the accident did not arise out of his employment. The facts appear in the judgment of TUCKER, L.J.

Roderic Bowen for the appellant.

Beney, K.C., and G. Owen George for the employers.

TUCKER, L.J.: This is an appeal from a decision of His Honour JUDGE L. C. THOMAS sitting as arbitrator under the Workmen's Compensation Acts, whereby he made an award in favour of the employers on a claim made by the widow of the deceased workman against the employers, Proud's Engineering Co., Ltd., by whom the deceased man had been employed.

The deceased man, Campbell, was a boiler worker, and he had been working on a ship at the Bute East Dock at Cardiff. His employers had been carrying out work on this ship and he had been working for them. The accident which caused his death occurred on Friday, June 21, 1946. The normal practice was for the men to go at the conclusion of work on Friday and draw their pay from the employers' pay office which was situated to the west of the Bute West Dock. The normal way of getting there would be for the employee to pass down Bute East Dock on the east side, cross that dock and the Bute West Dock on the south side of those docks, and then proceed northwards along the Bute West Dock until he got to the pay office. The distance from the ship on which the men had been working to the pay office was approximately one mile and 200 or 300 yards. Campbell left his work shortly after 4 p.m., walked across the south end of the docks, and then turned north to go to the pay office. When he was some 200 or 300 yards from the pay office, he saw a lorry travelling in the direction in which he desired to go, and he jumped on the near side of it as it was in motion. Shortly afterwards the lorry swerved to avoid an on-coming lorry, collided with some railway trucks on its near side, and Campbell was crushed and killed. The county court judge states that the facts were not in dispute, and continues:

The pay-out took place from 4.45 to 5, and there was no question that he could not make the journey on foot quite comfortably within the time. As he was passing along Collingdon Road, however, on the way to the pay office, he jumped on to a passing lorry. . . . Almost immediately after he came into contact with a railway wagon or wagons and such contact caused his death.

That the county court judge regarded what Campbell did as an imprudent and wrong thing to do there can be no doubt when we come to the rest of his judgment, but I cannot read into it anything more than that making use of the lorry was a method whereby he tried to get to the pay office. The county court judge then applies the law to those facts and says :

A In my view the accident cannot be said to arise out of and in the course of the employment. If the act he was doing which caused the accident was an act he was employed to do, then the fact that he did it negligently does not bar a claim for compensation. I apply, however, the dictum of LORD WARRINGTON OF CLYFFE [in Stephen v. Cooper (1)] cited with approval by LORD WRIGHT in Harris' case [Harris v. Associated Portland Cement Manufacturers, Ltd. (2)] that what the workman did was a thing he was not employed to do and was not in the contemplation of either party to the contract. I might, perhaps, put it in another way by saying that when he jumped on the passing lorry there was a deviation from the normal course of his employment.

I do not think there is any dispute that the county court judge applied the right test to the facts. The question is whether, on those facts, it was possible to come to the conclusion at which he arrived. I think that it was impossible, as a matter of law, to arrive at the decision at which he did arrive.

C It is not necessary to refer in detail to any of the authorities. The judge cited the passage from LORD WRIGHT's speech in Harris v. Associated Portland Cement Manufacturers, Ltd. (2) where LORD WRIGHT said ([1938] 4 All E.R. 844, 845) :

D With the greatest respect to the opinions of the Court of Appeal, I think that these expressions tend to obscure the real distinction between the manner of doing an act which in its nature is within the employment and the doing of an act which in its nature is different in kind from any contemplated by the employment. It is not easy to reconcile all the expressions which have been used in judgments on the question of whether the application of s. 1 (1) of the Act [the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925] depends on fact or law. In one sense, it is both fact and law. The facts have to be found and the words of the Act then applied to the facts according to their true construction, which is a matter of law. For reasons already stated, I do not think that, on the true construction of the section, an act which in its nature is within the section ceases to be so because it is recklessly or improperly performed, or that mere degree of negligence or impropriety, such as is found in this case, changes the intrinsic character of the act and makes it different in kind.

F In two other cases which have been cited to us this matter is referred to. Noble v. Southern Railway Co. (3) was a case where the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925, s. 1 (2), fell to be considered, but sub-s. (1) was also referred to in its relation to sub-s. (2). LORD MAUGHAM propounded the questions which an arbitrator has to ask himself in dealing with sub-s. (2), but I do not think I need refer to that because, in my view, this is a case which falls to be decided under s. 1 (1) and not under s. 1 (2). LORD PORTER drew a distinction between the two classes of case which arise under this section. He said ([1940] 2 All E.R. 398, 399) :

G The distinction now to be made between cases in which s. 1 (2) is applicable and those in which it is not is perhaps best illustrated by the decision in Wilsons & Clyde Coal Co. v. M'Ferrin, Kerr v. Dunlop (James) & Co. (4), in which your Lordships' House considered the cases of two separate workmen, one of whom returned to a shothole in the mistaken belief that a shot which he had fired had exploded, and was injured. In so returning, he was acting contrary to a statutory regulation, but was nevertheless held entitled to recover. The other, who was a miner, coupled an electric cable to a detonator for the purpose of firing a shot. This act was also contrary to a statutory regulation, but, in any case, was no part of the duty of a miner. The first man recovered because the only ground for refusing compensation was that his act was prohibited. The second failed to recover, because, quite apart from the prohibition, he had arrogated to himself the duties of a fireman, which duties were not his, in any case, to perform. Indeed, in the course of the argument before us, both sides accepted the position laid down by VISCOUNT DUNEDIN in Wilsons & Clyde Coal Co. v. M'Ferrin (4)—namely, that one ought to disregard the fact that the workman, at the time when he met with his accident, was acting in contravention of a regulation, and to determine, without reference to that fact, whether the accident arose out of and in the course of his employment.

That shows that even in considering a case under sub-s. (2) it is always necessary, in the first instance, to decide whether or not, apart from sub-s. (2), the accident would have been one which arose out of and in the course of the man's employment. LORD PORTER then said (ibid, 399) :

No doubt this question may often be a matter of some nicety, and a question of degree. I can imagine an employee ordered to proceed to France at the present day arguing that he was entitled to travel by steamer, or train-ferry, or even by air, but I should not think it permissible for him to cross by row-boat, or to proceed by canoe. Whether, if he had ample time, it would be permissible for him to proceed by sailing boat might be a matter of more doubt.

There is only one other passage in the cases cited to us to which I wish to refer, and that is in the judgment of GODDARD, L.J., in Seviour v. Somerset Collieries, Ltd. (5). In that case, GODDARD, L.J., dealing with the test which is to be applied in these cases, said ([1940] 1 All E.R. 656, 657) :

For myself, I find no assistance at all in considering cases merely because they deal with tubs, nor do I find any assistance, or very much assistance, in considering cases which were decided before the alteration of the section in 1923. That remark applies equally to the cases which were decided before Thomas v. Ocean Coal Co., Ltd. (6), which is really a landmark in this branch of the law.

He then referred to certain other cases and said (ibid, 657) :

... I think those cases lay down one or two principles which, if borne in mind, make this class of cases comparatively simple—much more simple, at any rate, than they were before. I ventured to say, in Hawker v. Doncaster Amalgamated Collieries, Ltd. (7) that that case was reasonably clear. What one has to do is to see what the man was employed to do—find what the contract of employment was, and what he was employed to do—and then see whether he was doing something which he was not employed to do at all, or whether he was doing what he was employed to do in a way in which he had been forbidden to do it.

The last few words from that judgment are not applicable in the present case because we are not dealing with a case in which there was any express prohibition, but counsel for the employers says that the award of the county court judge should be upheld because Campbell was doing something which he was not employed to do and not merely doing something which he was employed to do in a wrongful or negligent manner. It is conceded by counsel for the employers that this accident happened in the course of the man's employment, but he argues that it did not arise out of the employment because the act which he was doing was different in kind from that which he was employed to do. I agree that in all these cases it is a question of degree, and that there is a border-line on one side or the other of which each case falls, but, in the view which I take of this case and in view of the facts as set out in the judgment, I think that there is no doubt that this matter clearly falls on one side of the line, and that it is impossible to say that the claim has not been made out. Campbell was going to draw his pay. He was using a method of conveyance of which his employers might not have approved, but I find it impossible to say that he was doing something which rendered his whole journey of a different nature from what it would have been if he had been proceeding on foot or on a bicycle, or if he had got into a stationary lorry which was waiting for him when he left the ship. In my opinion, he was using a method of conveyance in, no doubt, a dangerous and negligent manner, but his act did not render his journey different in kind from that which it would have been if he had been using some safer method. For these reasons I think that the appeal succeeds.

EVERSHED, L.J. : I agree. The question resolves itself into this : Was Campbell's act in jumping on the lorry on his way to the pay office one so beyond the contemplation of the contract that it was different in kind from the work he was engaged to do—that the act and the subsequent accident were taken out of the sphere of his employment ? If the county court judge had found that the act of jumping on the lorry was so irrational and acrobatic as to be outside the contemplation of the contract, or if he had found that the claimant had failed to prove the contrary—and on the evidence he might, I think, have so found—we in this court would not have disturbed that finding. Counsel for the employers has argued that the proper view of the judgment is that the former of the two alternatives I have posed was the conclusion of the county court judge. I have reached the view that that contention is not right. As I read his judgment, the county court judge has laid no emphasis on the particular object in view. He has not suggested that the workman, by jumping on the lorry, was not seeking to pursue his object of getting his pay. It seems to me that the fair and only proper reading of the judgment is that the county court judge thought, having regard to the time which remained to the workman and the distance, that to take advantage of the "lift" which was offered was in itself—whether or not having regard also to the risk of jumping on a moving vehicle—outside the contemplation of the contract, and, as such, a sufficient deviation from the normal course of the employment, so that the test which he applied from LORD WRIGHT's dictum resulted in a conclusion adverse to the claimant. If that is the right view of the judgment, I am of the opinion that the county court judge misdirected himself as a matter of law.

MACNAGHTEN, J.: I am of the same opinion. It is not disputed that it was in the course of the deceased's employment that he left the ship in which he was working in the Bute East Dock to go to the pay office to receive his pay, and that under the contract between him and his employers the time spent in taking that journey was included in the time for which he was to be paid. The action which led to his death was not that of jumping on the lorry. His death was due to the fact that, after he had got on the lorry, it swerved to avoid a collision with another lorry, and came so close to some trucks on its near side that the deceased was crushed between the trucks and the lorry. In my opinion, there was no evidence on which the county court judge could find that there was any deviation by the deceased from the journey which he had set out to take from the ship at which he was working to the pay office where he was to receive his pay. The accident, therefore, arose out of and in the course of his employment.

Appeal allowed with costs.

Solicitors: Bell, Brodrick and Gray, agents for Buchanan, Giles & Evans, Cardiff (for the workman); Theodore Goddard & Co., agents for T. S. Edwards & Son, Newport, Mon. (for the employers).

[Reported by R. L. ZIAR, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

BRANCA v. COBARRO.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Lord Greene, M.R., Tucker and Asquith, L.JJ.), May 21, 22, 1947.]

Sale of Land—Agreement for sale—"Provisional" agreement "until" formal agreement executed—Whether immediately binding.

By an agreement dated July 15, 1946, the vendor agreed to sell the lease and goodwill of a mushroom farm for £5,000, payable as follows:—a deposit of £500 on July 15, 1946, £2,500 on July 18, 1946, and the balance within six months from the date of the agreement. In the event of default by the purchaser in the conditions of payment the farm was to "go back" to the vendor "as his full property" and the purchaser was to have no claim in the £3,000 already paid. The agreement concluded: "This is a provisional agreement until a fully legalised agreement drawn up by a solicitor and embodying all the conditions herewith stated is signed":

HELD: the language of the final clause, and more especially the word "until," implied that the agreement was intended to be immediately fully binding and to remain so unless and until superseded by a subsequent agreement of the same tenor but expressed in a more precise and formal language.

[EDITORIAL NOTE.] The case under the Companies Act, 1900, to which ASQUITH, L.J., refers, would appear to be Re "Otto" Electrical Manufacturing Co. (1905) Ltd. [1906] 2 Ch. 390).

AS TO AGREEMENTS CONTEMPLATING EXECUTION OF MORE FORMAL DOCUMENT, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 29, p. 237, para. 321; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 12, pp. 83-89, Nos. 490-546.]

APPEAL from DENNING, J.

In an action by the purchaser for the return of the deposit money paid by him in connection with the purchase of a farm, DENNING, J., construing the word "provisional" in the agreement as "tentative," ordered the return of the deposit money. The vendor appealed.

W. A. Fearnley-Whittingstall and P. Zeigler for the vendor.

E. N. Winterbotham for the purchaser.

LORD GREENE, M.R.: This case raises the familiar question whether an informal document constitutes a contract or whether it is evidence of mere negotiation in contemplation of a contract coming into existence at some future date.

The purchaser sues for the return of £500 which he paid as a so-called deposit on account of the purchase price of a mushroom farm. The document which has given rise to the question is dated July 15, 1946, and is signed by both parties in the presence of a witness. I will read the whole document :

Jose Cobarro Yelo, of "Martyns," Langley Lane, Crawley, agrees to sell to Alfredo Branca, of 71, Walsingham Gardens, Ewell, Surrey, the lease and goodwill of the mushroom farm known as "Martyns," Ifield, near Crawley, and all the appliances of his property for the said business at present there, for the sum of £5,000. Alfredo Branca undertakes to pay the above mentioned sum of £5,000 sterling as follows:—£500 deposit on July 15, 1946; £2,500 cash on Thursday, July 18, 1946; and the remaining £2,000 within six months' time as from today. In the event of Alfredo Branca's default of the conditions of payment the farm, goodwill and appliances above mentioned go back to Jose Cobarro as his full property. In this case of default by Alfredo Branca, he will have no claim on the £3,000 already paid to Jose Cobarro.

Now come the words that give rise to the question :

This is a provisional agreement until a fully legalised agreement drawn up by a solicitor and embodying all the conditions herewith stated is signed.

The £500 was paid, but on a date not precisely ascertained, either July 18 or 19, the purchaser repudiated the bargain and he now demands the return of his £500.

There are one or two preliminary points to which I may refer about this document. First, it is expressed as an agreement. The provision for payment by the purchaser is worded in this way: "Alfredo Branca undertakes to pay," and in the concluding clause the word "agreement" is used to describe the document. It is perfectly true that words such as "agree" are by no means conclusive of the question whether the parties were intending a contract or had only arrived at a state of negotiation. Too much weight must not be attached, therefore, to the words I have mentioned, but I think that in the particular context of this document they are not without importance.

One other matter is that the terms of payment were £500 on July 15—i.e., the date when the document was signed—and £2,500 cash on July 18. Though this is a small point and I do not attach too much importance to it, it is, I think, consistent with the view that I take as to the construction of this document. July 18 was the date on which a large sum of money, £2,500, was to be paid. Of course, the parties may have contemplated, as counsel for the purchaser contends, that what they call "a fully legalised agreement drawn up by a solicitor" would have been prepared, agreed and signed before July 18. If that were not done and if the purchaser did not pay the £2,500, the fully legalised agreement could not contain all the terms of this document. It would have to be something different. They may have contemplated that the whole thing could be done in three days, but one would have thought that even these gentlemen might have hesitated before coming to such a conclusion. That is only an indication, but it does throw, I think, some little light on the intention of the parties. The decision must turn on the last paragraph and, in my opinion, that last paragraph does not indicate that the drawing up and signature of a formal document was to be a condition of there coming into existence a binding contract.

Down to the end of the paragraph preceding the final paragraph there can be no question that the document is a contract. If that final paragraph had not been there, no question could have been raised about it. The sole question is whether that paragraph introduces an element which destroys any contractual efficacy in the rest of the document. It is in rather an unusual form: "This is a provisional agreement until..." That the parties contemplated and wished that there should be what they call "a fully legalised agreement" drawn up

A and signed is clear, but the first thing to notice about these words is that they are not expressive of a condition or stipulation to that effect. The familiar words "subject to contract" and many other forms of words that one has come across in this class of case are words of condition, but these are not words of condition or stipulation. The word "until" in this context, to my mind, clearly means that what is called "a provisional agreement" is going to have some efficacy until a certain event happens. The efficacy of the document is not made in any sense conditional on the happening of that event. The event puts a term to the operation of what is described as "a provisional agreement" and it is noticeable that the parties describe the thing which is to have that operation until that event happens as "an agreement."

B Counsel for the purchaser says: "You must not attach too much importance to the word 'agreement,'" and I have already expressed my agreement with that proposition, but it is significant that in this very clause, which is supposed to negative the existence of an agreement, the parties have chosen to use the word "agreement," an agreement which is to have some operation until a certain event happens. If this paragraph is read in its ordinary meaning, if that event does not happen, the document will continue to have for an indefinite period the operation which the parties are giving to it. In other words, the happening of the event, viz., the drawing up of the fully legalised agreement, is not a condition of the operation of this document. On the contrary, it is something which, when it happens, will bring to an end a document which the parties clearly treat as being an operative document. I have used the word "operative" deliberately as a neutral word. The words "fully legalised agreement" must, I think, mean, and I do not think it is disputed, what we generally call a formal agreement. It is an argument which has got to embody "all the conditions herewith stated." No other terms or conditions are to appear in that fully legalised agreement.

D DENNING, J., decided this case on the construction which he gave to the word "provisional." He said that, in his opinion, it meant "tentative." With the greatest deference, "tentative" is not, I should have thought, the meaning in ordinary English of "provisional." It certainly is not the meaning that is to be found in the Oxford Dictionary, and I should have thought that in this context to change the word "provisional" and substitute "tentative" would be introducing something which is really not contained in "provisional." The idea expressed by "tentative" is something quite different with all respect from that expressed by "provisional." The ordinary meaning of "provisional" is something which is going to operate until something else happens. If I am right that these words are intended to show that the parties regarded themselves as entering into an agreement which was to last only until something else took its place or superseded it, the word "provisional" would be the proper and apt word to describe that intention. An agreement which is only to last until it is replaced by a formal document containing the same terms and drawn up by a solicitor could be described by no more apt word than the word "provisional." If the word "provisional" is linked up with the word "until," the whole thing seems to me to fall into shape.

E My reading of this document is that both parties were determined to hold themselves and one another bound. They realised the desirability of a formal document as many contracting parties do, but they were determined that there should be no escape for either of them in the interim period between the signing of this document and the signature of a formal agreement, and they have used words which are exactly apt to produce that result and do not, in my opinion, suggest that the fully legalised agreement is in any sense to be a condition to be fulfilled before the parties are bound, because, as I have said, the word "until" is certainly not the right word to import a condition or a stipulation as to the event referred to. In my judgment, if the parties never signed a fully legalised agreement, the event putting an end to the provisional operation of this agreement would never occur and this document would continue to bind the parties. In the result, with all respect to the learned judge, I take a different view of this document from that which he took for the reasons I have given, and the appeal must be allowed.

H TUCKER, L.J.: I agree with the construction that has been put on this document by the MASTER OF THE ROLLS and for the reasons which he has stated.

I will content myself with saying that the two matters which, I think, turn the scale in favour of the vendor are, first, and most important of all, the use of the word "until" and, secondly, the fact that by this document the sum of £2,500 had to be paid in cash by July 18, 1946, and on the failure of such payment, the £500 would be forfeited. The fact that that might occur at a time when the fully legalised agreement had not been drawn up is, I think, a factor to be taken into consideration. It is worthy of note that these foreign gentlemen, when drawing up this agreement, had it witnessed by a third party. That tends to indicate that they were entering into a formal and binding agreement. I agree that the appeal succeeds. A

ASQUITH, L.J.: I also agree. I do not think the authorities assist much. On any view, the term "provisional," as applied to an agreement, imports some restriction of its efficacy which it would not have possessed in the absence of that epithet. The restriction may simply be a time limit within which the agreement is binding and beyond which it is not to go, or it may be some other sort of condition. This I should have thought was the meaning of "provisional" as applied to an agreement. It is true that in one case cited to us a provisional agreement was held to be an agreement inoperative until a condition precedent had been fulfilled, but there the language of the Companies Act, 1900, was such as to make any other construction impossible. In the present case the language of the material clause in the so-called provisional agreement of July 15, and more especially the word "until," seems to me plainly to imply that that agreement is to be immediately fully binding unless and until superseded by a subsequent agreement of the same tenor, but expressed in more precise and formal language. I agree that this appeal should be allowed. B

Appeal allowed with costs.

Solicitors: Chapman-Walkers (for the vendor); Hughes Minton & Barker (for the purchaser). D

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re EASTERN TELEGRAPH CO., LTD.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Jenkins, J.), June 4, 5, 1947.] E

Companies—Winding-up—Compulsory winding-up—Cessation of business—Power to "amalgamate" with company carrying on same business—Share capital acquired by company carrying on same business—Sale of physical assets to third company—Failure of substratum—Winding-up order just and equitable—Compulsory acquisition of shares by Treasury—Companies Act, 1929 (c. 23), s. 168 (3) (6).

A company was incorporated in 1872, and in 1929 its authorised and issued share capital was £7,000,000 divided into £2,000,000 preference stock and £5,000,000 ordinary stock. The objects were, inter alia: "The acquiring of the undertakings, telegraph lines, property [etc., of four companies] . . . the establishment of telegraph stations, and, generally, carrying on the business of a telegraph company; . . . the subscribing for and acquiring shares of, or amalgamating with and sharing in the business or undertakings of, any other telegraph company or companies. . . ." In 1929 Cable and Wireless, Ltd. (later called Cable & Wireless (Holding) Ltd.) acquired the ordinary share capital of the company. On Dec. 30, 1929, Imperial and International Communications, Ltd. (later called Cable and Wireless, Ltd.) bought the whole of the physical assets of the company for shares in Imperial and International Communications, Ltd. On Nov. 6, 1946, the Cable and Wireless Act, 1946, became law, providing for the compulsory acquisition by the Treasury of the shares in Cable and Wireless, Ltd. On a petition brought, before the assessment and payment of compensation in respect of the compulsory transfer, by certain preference stockholders for the compulsory winding-up of the company on the grounds that (a) the company had ceased to carry on its business for more than a year, i.e., since 1929, when Imperial and International Communications, Ltd., had acquired the physical assets of the company; (b) that the substratum of the company had gone. F

G

H

A HELD : (i) the case did not fall within the principle that, where the memorandum of association of a company provides that the company has a specific main object followed by general words, the general words should not be construed as enabling the company to throw its main object over altogether and embark on some new venture, but, on the true construction of the memorandum, the transaction carried out in 1929 by which Imperial and International Communications, Ltd., acquired the ordinary share capital of the company was an amalgamation into which the company had power to enter, and, consequently, the company had since continued to carry on one of the main forms of business authorised by the memorandum, because, although not operating a telegraph or cable business itself, it had participated, through the medium of its shareholding, in the proceeds of operation of the business carried on by Cable and Wireless, Ltd. The reference in the memorandum to amalgamation did not constitute general words ancillary to the company's main object, but comprised a specific object ranking on a par with all preceding objects.

B (ii) there had been no failure of the contemplated objects of the company ab initio, nor any suggestion that the directors should adventure the money of the company on some object which was not contemplated when the company was formed, nor any confiscation of the property of the company, but the transfer to the Treasury of the shares in Cable and Wireless, Ltd., was a transaction which the company was bound to carry out by the Act of 1946, that transaction was not yet complete, and, in view of the desirability of having the directors act on behalf of the company in the matter of compensation, and the risk of detriment to the company's foreign concessions if a winding-up order were made, it would not be just and equitable, although advantageous to the preference shareholders, for the company immediately to be wound-up on the ground that its substratum was gone, for such a winding-up order would be premature.

Re Baku Consolidated Oilfields, Ltd., [1944] 1 All E.R. 24 distinguished.

[AS TO GROUNDS FOR WINDING UP, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 5, pp. 543-548, paras. 882-885; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 10, pp. 817-819, 822-825, Nos. 5326-5334, 5358-5374.]

Cases referred to :

- E (1) Re Haven Gold Mining Co. (1882), 20 Ch.D. 151; 51 L.J.Ch. 242; 46 L.T. 322; 10 Digest 822, 5359.
 (2) Re German Date Coffee Co. (1882), 20 Ch.D. 169; 51 L.J.Ch. 564; 46 L.T. 327; 10 Digest 823, 5361.
 (3) Re Red Rock Gold Mining Co., Ltd. (1889), 61 L.T. 785; 1 Meg. 436; 10 Digest 823, 5363.
 (4) Re Baku Consolidated Oilfields, Ltd., [1944] 1 All E.R. 24; Digest Supp.
F (5) Re Kitson & Co., Ltd., [1946] 1 All E.R. 435; 175 L.T. 25.
 (6) Re Amalgamated Syndicate, [1897] 2 Ch. 600; 66 L.J.Ch. 783; 77 L.T. 431; 4 Mans. 308; 10 Digest 822, 5357.

PETITION by preference stockholders of the Eastern Telegraph Co., Ltd., for the compulsory winding-up of the company on the grounds (1) that the company had ceased to carry on its business for a whole year or more, and (2) that the substratum of the company had gone. The facts appear in the judgment.

G Harman, K.C., and E. Milner Holland for the petitioners.

Sir Cyril Radcliffe, K.C., Gordon Brown and Charles Russell for the company.

JENKINS, J. : This is a petition by certain preference stockholders of the Eastern Telegraph Co., Ltd., for the compulsory winding-up of the company. The petition is supported by holders of preference stock to an aggregate amount of £365,000, or thereabouts, out of a total issue of £2,000,000 of such stock. The grounds on which the compulsory order is sought are two. First, it is said that the company has ceased to carry on its business for a whole year or for more than a year, an allegation which, if substantiated, would make good one of the grounds for compulsory winding-up specifically mentioned in the Companies Act, 1929, s. 168. Secondly, it is said that the substratum of the company has gone, an allegation which, if substantiated, might bring the case within that class of cases in which it is just and equitable that the company should be wound-up within the meaning of the same section and having regard to the series of cases commonly known as the substratum cases.

The company was incorporated in 1872, and the authorised and issued share capital became, at all times material for the purposes of this case, £7,000,000, divided into £2,000,000 of 3½ per cent. preference stock and £5,000,000 of ordinary stock. Be it noted that, as the preference stock carried a cumulative preference dividend at the fixed rate of 3½ per cent., but (as I propose to assume for the purposes of this case) an unlimited right of participation in assets in a winding-up, the amount receivable by the preference stockholders in the event of a winding up would be proportionate to the assets available, and they would be entitled to go against those assets pari passu with the holders of the ordinary stock. Even under present conditions of cheap money, it is fairly obvious that preference stock carrying a rather unusual and hybrid right of that character, with a fixed dividend as low as 3½ per cent. and unlimited rights of participation in assets, might, should the break-up value of the assets be anything substantially over the nominal amount of the issued capital, be much more valuable, as one might say, dead than alive, or, in other words, much more valuable in a winding-up than it would be if the company continued to exist. Therefore, one can appreciate that it might well be greatly to the advantage of the holders of the preference stock to procure an immediate winding-up of the company and division of its assets.

I must now refer to the objects clause in the memorandum of association of the company. In 1872 it was not customary to draft object clauses in the ample, not to say diffuse, form which has since become the rule, and the objects were, therefore, relatively concisely expressed, and it is practicable for me to read them in extenso :

The objects for which the company is established are : The acquiring of the undertakings, telegraph lines, property, privileges, effects, obligations, and liabilities of the following four companies, namely, the Anglo-Mediterranean Telegraph Co., Ltd., the British Indian Submarine Telegraph Co., Ltd., the Falmouth, Gibraltar and Malta Telegraph Co., Ltd., and the Marseilles, Algiers and Malta Telegraph Co., Ltd., and, subject to the previous sanction of an extraordinary general meeting, of any other telegraph company or persons whose lines of telegraph may, in the opinion of the company, be conveniently worked in connection or alliance with any lines of the company ; the working, maintaining, renewing, leasing, selling and dealing with the lines of telegraph from time to time belonging to or in the possession of the company ; the contracting for, constructing, acquiring, leasing, or taking on lease, maintaining, selling, dealing with, and working any lines of telegraph whatsoever, which the company from time to time determine to contract for, construct, acquire, lease, or take on lease, sell, deal with, or work ; the establishment of telegraph stations, and, generally, carrying on the business of a telegraph company ; the applying for, acquiring, selling, leasing, using, and disposing of such lands, telegraph lines, vessels, concessions, leases, privileges, licences, and letters patent, and any shares or interest therein respectively, as may be useful or desirable for the purposes aforesaid, or any of them ; the doing of all or any of those matters or things in conjunction with any other company or person ; the registration or constitution of the company abroad as a societe anonyme or otherwise ; the subscribing for and acquiring shares of, or amalgamating with and sharing in the business or undertakings of, any other telegraph company or companies, and the making and carrying into effect of working, traffic and other agreements with governments, railway, postal, steamboat, telegraph, and other companies and authorities, and the doing of all such other things as are incidental or conducive to the attainment of the above objects.

It should be noted that this objects clause concludes with a general provision as to "the doing of all such other things as are incidental or conducive to the attainment of the above objects," and that, while the earlier part of the objects contemplates that the company will itself operate telegraph installations, the latter part clearly provides that the company may amalgamate with any other telegraph company or companies and subscribe for and acquire the shares of any telegraph company or companies.

In 1928, or thereabouts, there was an Imperial Conference on the subject of telecommunication, and as a result a scheme, dated May 14, 1929, for merger between the company and other companies was evolved. That scheme provided for the acquisition by a new company, which had been formed in the previous April under the name of Cable and Wireless, Ltd., of substantially the whole of the ordinary share capital of the company, the Eastern Extension Australasia & China Telegraph Co., Ltd., and the Western Telegraph Co., Ltd., and also the preference and ordinary shares of Marconi's Wireless Telegraph Co., Ltd. It will be noted that the preference stock of the company was not brought

A into this arrangement. The plan was duly implemented and the company then known as Cable and Wireless, Ltd., became the holder of substantially all the ordinary stock of the company and also of substantially all the share capital of the other three companies which I have mentioned. That plan necessitated certain consequential alterations in the articles of association of the company, and the articles dealing with the directorate were altered so as to ensure the identity of the personnel of the board of the various companies in the merged group of companies. The position, therefore, was that, as a result of the plan, Cable & Wireless, Ltd., controlled these four companies, including the company with which the present petition is concerned, from June 27, 1929.

B On Apr. 8, 1929, a new company called Imperial & International Communications, Ltd., had been formed, and on Dec. 30, 1929, that company entered into an agreement with the company for the acquisition, broadly speaking, of the whole of the physical assets of the company for shares in Imperial and International Communications, Ltd. Clause 18 of this agreement provided :

C On completion of the sale and purchase (a) the cable company shall covenant with the communications company that it will not at any time thereafter directly or indirectly carry on or (except as a member of the communications company) be concerned or interested in any business of any kind which the communications company is by its present memorandum of association empowered to carry on except (1) (so long as the cable company holds the same) to the extent of the cable company's present investments in present or future telegraph or wireless telegraph companies as the communications company may with the consent of the latter company's advisory committee sanction in writing ; and except (2) as in this agreement otherwise provided.

D That agreement was duly carried out, so that instead of the physical assets comprised in it, the company as from the date of completion held 10,626,601 fully paid ordinary shares of £1 each in the communications company, as it was called in the agreement, i.e., in Imperial & International Communications, Ltd. In addition to holding those shares as beneficial owner, it continued to have vested in it various assets which, owing to conveyancing or legal difficulties, could not conveniently be transferred. The effect of the agreement was to convert the company from an operating telegraph and cable company into a company holding shares in an operating company with like objects, formed by the fusion of the undertakings of the company and of the other companies in the group.

E When one looks at the balance sheet and accounts of the company from that time on one finds that its operations were very much what one would expect in the case of a holding company. There is no sign, nor is it, I think, to be expected that there would be any sign, of any telegraph operations by the company on its own behalf. It would have been in breach of the agreement if it had continued to operate as a telegraph company. Nor is there any sign F in the accounts of the carrying on by the company for the purchasing company's account of the excepted parts of its business. That does not seem to me to be in the least surprising, because it would be carrying on such business, not for its own benefit, but for the benefit of its purchaser. If the assets in question had been shown as assets in the balance sheet of the company that would have been simply misleading unless the entry on the assets side was balanced by a precisely similar entry on the other side of the account, which would seem to me to have led simply to a duplication of entries which would serve no useful purpose.

J The merger transaction and sale to Imperial & International Communications, Ltd., which formed part of the scheme which I have now briefly described, is obviously a transaction which was widely canvassed and carefully considered, and it was one of great public importance and public interest. It was carried out in the way that I have described, so far as I am aware, without objection I on anybody's part, and the company remained in existence and carried on as a holding company for upwards of 17 years thereafter. The upshot of all the transactions seems to have been that the company which was originally known as Cable & Wireless, Ltd., but which changed its name in 1932 to Cable & Wireless (Holding), Ltd., became the holder of substantially the whole of the share capital—excepting always the preference stock of the company—of the company, the Eastern Extension Company, the Western Company, and, through Eastern and Western respectively, of one subsidiary of Eastern, two subsidiaries of Western and one subsidiary which was apparently controlled in equal proportions by Eastern and Western. These companies were all, in effect, holding companies whose principal asset—apart from what is not related at all to the telegraph business, that is to say, ordinary investments—consisted of holdings of shares in Imperial and International Communications, Ltd., whose name was afterwards changed to Cable and Wireless, Ltd.

On Nov. 6, 1946, the Cable and Wireless Act, 1946, became law. That was an Act to provide for the nationalisation of the imperial telecommunications system. It provided by s. 1:

(1) On the appointed day all the shares of Cable and Wireless Ltd. (hereafter in this Act referred to as "the operating company") other than shares already held on behalf of the Treasury shall, by virtue of this section, be transferred, free of all trusts, liabilities and incumbrances, to such persons respectively as the Treasury may by order nominate, to be held by those persons on behalf of the Treasury. (2) Compensation for the transfer of the said shares shall be made to the companies mentioned in schedule I to this Act (which companies on Apr. 18, 1946, held between them all the said shares and respectively held the number of shares specified in the second column of that schedule) and shall, in the case of each company, be satisfied—(a) by the issue to the company of such amount of government stock as is, in the opinion of the Treasury, of a value equal, on the date of the issue, to the amount of the company's compensation having due regard to market values of other government securities existing at such date; and (b) by the payment to the company of a sum by way of interest on the amount of the company's compensation for the period beginning with the appointed day and ending immediately before the date of issue of the said stock at such rate or rates as the Treasury may determine in relation to that period or different parts thereof.

It is plain that the effect of that Act was to sever compulsorily for good and all the connection of the company with the business of cables and telecommunications, with which it had been previously concerned. It was a compulsory acquisition of the shares of Cable & Wireless, a transaction enjoined by Act of Parliament, and, therefore, a transaction which the company was bound by law to carry out. The position now is that the shares in Cable & Wireless have all been transferred to the Treasury or its nominees, but the compensation to be paid or provided in the form of government stock and divided among the constituent companies, if I may so describe them, remains to be assessed. There is evidence, which I accept, that the business carried on by the company in Portugal and concessions from and agreements with the Portuguese Government, which were not conveyed under the sale agreement of 1929, are still vested in the company. It is said that it has not proved practicable to obtain the necessary consent for transfer, and it is also said in evidence, and I have no doubt genuinely believed, although it is not a matter, as far as I can see, that is susceptible of proof, that the winding-up of the company might jeopardise the position in Portugal as the government concerned might take that event as a pretext for revoking the concession or insisting on less advantageous terms.

The allegation that the company has ceased to carry on its business for more than a year, that is to say, since 1929, depends entirely on the agreement of Dec. 30, 1929, under which Imperial & International Communications, Ltd., acquired the physical assets of the company. It is said that from and after the completion of that sale, the company ceased to carry on its business. Obviously, it could not be said absolutely that the company ceased to carry on any business, because it continued in business as a holding company, but it is contended that on the true construction of the memorandum of association of the company, while it had power to subscribe for shares in other similar companies and to effect amalgamations, it could not do these things except as subsidiary to the objects relating to the operation of telegraph services, and so forth, stated earlier in the memorandum, and if it did so otherwise than in a manner ancillary to those objects, although it would not be acting ultra vires and would be doing something that it had power to do under its objects clause, it would bring about a state of affairs in which it would be obliged to go into voluntary liquidation. That is an argument which I have some difficulty in following. To my mind, the question whether the company ceased in consequence of the 1929 sale agreement to carry on its business must depend on the true construction of the memorandum of association. If one finds in the memorandum of association, fairly construed, power to do that which was done under the 1929 sale agreement, then it seems to me that the company has certainly continued to carry on its business ever since, albeit in a different way from the way in which its business had previously been carried on or, putting it rather differently, albeit with the substitution of one for another of the various forms of business contemplated by the memorandum. It will be remembered that the memorandum contains this passage :

A the subscribing for and acquiring shares of, or amalgamating with and sharing in the business or undertakings of, any other telegraph company or companies, and the making and carrying into effect of working, traffic and other agreements . . .

B So, it says expressly that the company may subscribe for shares of or amalgamate with other telegraph companies. It seems to me that the transaction carried out by the sale agreement of 1929 in conjunction with the arrangements made with the other telegraph companies in the group was exactly an amalgamation. That is a perfectly accurate description of it, and the company carried it out by acquiring shares of the communications company in exchange for its physical assets, the upshot of the whole transaction being that, instead of operating a telegraph or cable business itself, it participated, through the medium of its shareholding, in the proceeds of operation of a business carried on by the communications company, which combined the undertakings of the companies in the group. In those circumstances, I am unable to hold that the company ceased to carry on its business in 1929. It continued to carry on one of the C businesses, and one of the main businesses or of the main forms of business, authorised by the memorandum by virtue of its holding of shares in the amalgamated concern. I appreciate that it has been laid down in various cases that where a company has a specific main object followed by general words, the general words should not be construed as enabling the company to throw its main object over altogether and embark on some fresh venture on the strength of the general words, but I do not think that any such difficulty arises here. I do not see why the object which comprises amalgamation should not rank on a par with all the other objects which have preceded it, simply as a matter of construction. Furthermore, I fail to see how an amalgamation properly so called could be effective in conjunction with the continued operation by the company of a telegraph undertaking. In that case there would not have been an amalgamation properly so called. There would have been only some partial amalgamation of some part of the company's business. In my judgment, therefore, the first of the grounds on which an order is sought cannot be supported.

E The second ground is that it is just and equitable that the company should be wound-up because its substratum has gone. On this branch of the case I was referred to a number of authorities. I do not think that I need refer to them in any detail. The first was the well-known case of Re Haven Gold Mining Company (1) (20 Ch.D. 151). The principle laid down by that case is, I think, sufficiently stated in the first paragraph of the headnote :

F Where the court is satisfied that the subject-matter of the business for which a company was formed has substantially ceased to exist, it will make an order for winding-up the company, although the large majority of the shareholders desire to continue to carry on the company.

G That, I take it, means that, if a shareholder has invested his money in the shares of the company on the footing that it is going to carry out some particular object, he cannot be forced against his will by the votes of his fellow shareholders to continue to adventure his money on some quite different project or speculation. It is a matter on which the individual consent of every person who will be effected by the change of plan ought to be obtained. In Re German Date Coffee Company (2) the main object of the company was to exploit a German patent H for making coffee from dates and the patent was never obtained. It was held, accordingly, that the substratum of the company had failed, and that it was impossible to carry out the objects for which it was formed. Consequently, it was just and equitable that the company should be wound-up. In the course of the case the limitations placed on general words describing the objects of the company were considered, and I think that the upshot of the discussion was broadly as I have already stated. In Re Red Rock Gold Mining Company, Ltd. (3) a company had been formed to purchase and work the Red Rock Mine. The headnote says (61 L.T. 785) :

There were further objects mentioned in the memorandum, namely, to purchase and otherwise acquire mines and other properties in the colony of New South Wales and elsewhere, and generally to carry on the business of milling and mining in all its branches.

In the following year the directors reported to the shareholders that the Red Rock Mine was a failure, and that the company must either go into liquidation or employ the unexpended capital in other ways. At a meeting of shareholders the majority passed a resolution requesting the directors to find some suitable mode of investing the money, and the court held, following Re Haven Gold Mining Co. (1) and Re German Date Coffee Co. (2) that the main object for which the company was formed had failed, and that, although there were large subsidiary powers in the memorandum of association, there must be a winding-up order. KAY, J., thus stated the principle (61 L.T. 787):

The principle of this court is, that where an association is formed for a particular purpose, it does not matter that it has large powers in addition to that particular purpose; if that particular purpose fails, any shareholder has a right to say "Put an end to it, pay me my money."

Re Baku Oilfields, Ltd. (4) was a case of a company formed to acquire the undertakings of four other companies carrying on an oil business in Russia. The headnote says ([1944] 1 All E.R. 24):

Before the undertakings could be acquired, they were confiscated and since 1920 the company had been engaged in an endeavour to substantiate a claim against the government in Russia. It had not otherwise carried on any business and had considerable assets:—Held: in the circumstances the whole substratum of the company had gone and a compulsory order ought to be made. Such claim as the company had against the authorities in Russia could be equally well enforced by a liquidator.

It was clear in that case, and BENNETT, J., held, that the purpose for which the company was originally formed was gone. Prima facie there was a case for a winding-up order. The order was resisted on the ground that the claim against the Russian government might be prejudicially affected by a winding-up. The judge held that that had not been made out, and he made the order. Re Baku Oilfields, Ltd. (4) was cited, not only on the general question of substratum, but also as regards the effect or possible effect of a liquidation in the present case on the Portuguese and other concessions. It was said that, if the liquidation of the company in Re Baku Oilfields, Ltd. (4) was thought not to prejudice any possible claim against the Russian government, therefore, by parity of reasoning, the liquidation of the company in this case could not be said to be likely to prejudice the position in regard to the Portuguese concession. It seems to me that the two cases are entirely different. Re Baku Oilfields, Ltd. (4) was a case of an alleged accrued right to damages, or something of the kind, and a right such as that could, no doubt, be pursued as well by a liquidator or by the company in liquidation as it could be by a company which was a going concern. I completely fail to see how one can adduce from that that the position in regard to the foreign concessions here would not be prejudiced if a winding-up supervened.

In Re Kitson & Co., Ltd. (5), the question was whether the substratum of the company had gone. On a consideration of the memorandum and on the facts of that particular case it was held by the Court of Appeal that the substratum had not gone. In the course of his judgment, LORD GREENE, M.R., said ([1946] 1 All E.R. 438):

It must be remembered in these substratum cases that there is every difference between a company which on the true construction of its memorandum is formed for the paramount purpose of dealing with some specific subject-matter and a company which is formed with wider and more comprehensive objects.

He goes on to state how the memorandum should be construed in a case of that sort. Finally, I was referred on behalf of the company to Re Amalgamated Syndicate (6), which dealt with a company the principal object of which was an adventure in seats for the Diamond Jubilee. After the Jubilee there was a shareholders' petition for a winding-up order on the ground that the whole of the syndicate's substratum had gone. It was held in the circumstances of that case that it was just and equitable that the company should be wound-up. In the course of the judgment, VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, J. ([1897] 2 Ch. 604) said:

I do not think the court could, or would if it could, make a winding-up order merely because there was nothing left to be done besides dividing the surplus assets and adjusting the rights of the shareholders. But it is said that it is "just and equitable" that the court should in this particular case take upon itself to wind-up the company, because the principal business which the company was formed to carry on has come to an end, and the directors, instead of setting about to divide the assets, are contemplating entering on fresh business.

The judge came to the conclusion that there was sufficient ground for making the order.

The cases to which I have been referred to do nothing more than enunciate the well-settled principles that it is in general just and equitable that a company should be wound-up when its substratum is shown to have gone, and that the question whether the substratum of a company has gone or not is one which depends, or may depend, on the construction of the memorandum of association. I should add that I do not think that any of the principles of construction which these cases enunciate displaces the conclusion at which I have arrived as regards the construction of the memorandum of association in this case in relation to the petitioners' first ground for claiming a winding-up order.

It is plain that the result of the Act of 1946 was to put an end entirely to the company's connection with the business or businesses with a view to carrying on which it was formed. Its only connection with those businesses now is that it still has vested in it all or some of the assets not conveyed under the 1929 sale agreement. The question is whether it necessarily follows that a case has been made out for an immediate order for the compulsory winding-up of the company. It is material to remember that in the present case there is no allegation of any improper conduct. There is no allegation that the directors are going to adventure the moneys of the company on some speculative undertaking of which nobody ever thought when the company was formed or when the shares were subscribed for. It is not a case of the contemplated object failing ab initio, nor is it a case of confiscation of a foreign concession, or discovery that a believed title to property abroad had no existence. The company here has been expropriated on terms of receiving compensation by a supervening act of the legislature. That was an event to which the company had necessarily to bow. It had no option but to comply with the terms of the Act.

When the compulsory acquisition has been finally completed, and the compensation has been assessed and received, it may be that difficult questions will arise as to the company's future, whether it should be wound-up or whether, owing to difficulties about some of the foreign concessions, and so on, it should be kept in existence with some suitable scheme of arrangement to dispose of the capital in excess of its wants, and so forth, but the question before me is whether it is just and equitable that a compulsory winding-up order should be made today in the circumstances which exist at present.

As I have said, this statutory transaction was obviously one which by force of the statute the company was entitled and bound to carry out. The Act certainly contemplated that it would carry it out, and by implication empowered it to carry it out. That transaction is not yet complete. The compensation has to be assessed and received. The amount of compensation is a matter of great importance, and it is obviously desirable in everybody's interests—both in the interests of the preference stockholders and of the ordinary stockholders—that the company's case as to the amount of compensation should be cogently and effectively put in order that the compensation received may be as large as possible. It seems to me that the proper people to look after that matter are the directors of the company, who are directors also of all the other companies in the group, and who are well acquainted with the undertaking of Cable and Wireless, Ltd. It seems to me that it would be wrong at this juncture to make a compulsory order which would have the effect of removing them from office, and which would bring in a liquidator who, capable and expert as he might be, would not have the same knowledge as the directors have. Furthermore, it seems to me that a great detriment might ensue if the company were wound-up, on account of the foreign concessions which it still holds. That is a matter which is stated in evidence to be one that is causing anxiety. I have no reason to regard the anxiety as being otherwise than bona fide, and it seems to me that it may be well founded. Therefore, whatever the position may be after the government stock has been issued, and after the outstanding foreign concessions have been got in by Cable & Wireless, Ltd., it does seem to me that, as the matter stands at present, the compulsory order would be premature.

Counsel for the petitioners challenges that view, and contends that, owing to the particular rights attached to the preference stock, it would be inequitable to the preference stockholders to delay the winding-up for one moment, because so long as the company goes on, dividends can be paid, the preference stockholders can get only $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent., and the directors will be quite in order in distributing the balance of the profits among the ordinary stockholders. With respect to counsel, it does not seem to me that that is really a ground for holding that a compulsory order ought to be made. No doubt, it provides the motive for presenting the petition, but it seems to me that one has to decide from the point of view of the general body of corporators—and I think also from the point of view of those to whom the company is under obligations, such as the obligations with regard to foreign concessions—whether a position has been reached in which it is just and equitable that the order should be made. It would, no doubt, be advantageous to the preference stockholders in this case, but the preference stockholders have no monopoly of equity. Here, again, I think it should be borne in mind that this is a case of expropriation by a supervening act of legislature. If this act of nationalisation had not supervened, there is no reason to suppose that the company would not have continued indefinitely as a holding company until such time as the ordinary stockholders, who have a monopoly of the voting rights, might choose to have it wound-up, and so long as it continued the preference stockholders would get $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. only and the ordinary stockholders the balance of the divisible profits. I do not see why the fact that this compulsory acquisition for the purpose of nationalisation has supervened should be regarded as giving the preference stockholders an equity to compel an immediate winding-up of the company in order that they may secure for themselves a windfall which they would not have obtained in any foreseeable period of time if the Act had not been passed.

For all these reasons, while saying and deciding nothing about the position as it may be after the government stock has been issued and the various concessions now remaining vested in the company have been got in, it seems to me that at the present time this petition is premature, and that it fails and should be dismissed with costs.

Petition dismissed with costs.

Solicitors : Rubinstein, Nash & Co. (for the petitioners) ; Linklaters & Paines (for the company).

[Reported by R. D. H. OSBORNE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

DE RENEVILLE (COMTESSE) (otherwise SHERIDAN) v. DE RENEVILLE (COMTE).

[PROBATE, DIVORCE AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION (Jones, J.), May 20, 22, 1947.]

Divorce—Nullity—Jurisdiction—Domicil—Marriage in France—Petitioner born in England of English parents, and resident in England when petition presented—Respondent domiciled and resident in France.

In a suit brought by a wife for the dissolution of her marriage on the ground of non-consummation owing to the incapacity or wilful refusal of the husband, the husband entered an appearance under protest against the jurisdiction of the court. The wife was born in England, of English parents, and was now resident in England, but the husband, a Frenchman, was domiciled in France and had resided there at all material times. The marriage had taken place in Paris in 1935 and until 1939, except for a few months, the parties had resided together in France :—

HELD : (i) since the wife had married the husband in France and had lived with him there, she had acquired his domicil by the marriage ; as she was seeking to have the marriage annulled on the ground of non-consummation, the marriage was merely voidable and not void, and, until a decree had been pronounced, the parties had the status of married people ; and, therefore, since the marriage was still subsisting, the wife had never lost the husband's domicile and she was not domiciled within the jurisdiction of the court.

Turner v. Thompson (1888) (13 P.D. 37) followed. Fowke v. Fowke ([1938] 2 All E.R. 638) and Adams v. Adams ([1941] 1 All E.R. 334) applied. Stathatos v. Stathatos ([1913] P. 46) and De Montaigu v. De Montaigu ([1913] P. 154) distinguished.

(ii) the husband being domiciled and resident abroad and there being no special circumstances or hardship, the court had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit even though the wife was resident within the jurisdiction.

Roberts v. Brennan ([1902] P. 143) discussed. White (otherwise Bennett) v. White ([1937] 1 All E.R. 708) distinguished. Robert (otherwise De La Mare) v. Robert ([1947] 2 All E.R. 23) not followed.

[AS TO VOIDABLE MARRIAGES, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 10, pp. 640, 641, para. 937; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 27, pp. 265, 266, Nos. 2326-2338.

AS TO JURISDICTION OF ENGLISH COURTS IN NULLITY SUITS, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 6, p. 303, para. 357; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 11, p. 428, Nos. 924-926, and Supplement.]

Cases referred to :

- (1) Turner v. Thompson (1888), 13 P.D. 37; 58 L.T. 387; 52 J.P. 151; 11 Digest 332, 214.
- (2) Salvesen (or von Lorange) v. Austrian Property Administrator, [1927] A.C. 641; 96 L.J.P.C. 105; 137 L.T. 571; Digest Supp.
- (3) Newbould v. A.-G., [1931] P. 75; 100 L.J.P. 54; 144 L.T. 728; Digest Supp.
- (4) Fowke v. Fowke, [1938] 2 All E.R. 638; [1938] Ch. 774; 107 L.J.Ch. 350; 159 L.T. 8; Digest Supp.
- (5) Adams v. Adams, [1941] 1 All E.R. 334; [1941] 1 K.B. 536; 110 L.J.K.B. 241; 165 L.T. 15; Digest Supp.
- (6) Stathatos v. Stathatos, [1913] P. 46; 82 L.J.P. 34; 107 L.T. 592; 11 Digest 425, 905.
- (7) De Montaigu v. De Montaigu, [1913] P. 154; 82 L.J.P. 125; 109 L.T. 79; 11 Digest 425, 906.
- (8) White (otherwise Bennett) v. White, [1937] P. 111; [1937] 1 All E.R. 708; 106 L.J.P. 49; 156 L.T. 422; Digest Supp.
- (9) Robert (otherwise De La Mare) v. Robert, [1947] 2 All E.R. 22.
- (10) Roberts v. Brennan, [1902] P. 143; 71 L.J.P. 74; sub nom. Brennan (otherwise Roberts) v. Brennan, 86 L.T. 599; 18 T.L.R. 467; 11 Digest 428, 926.
- (11) Niboyet v. Niboyet (1878), 4 P.D. 1; 48 L.J.P. 1; 39 L.T. 486; 43 J.P. 140; 11 Digest 423, 894.
- (12) Graham v. Graham, [1923] P. 31; 92 L.J.P. 26; 128 L.T. 639; 27 Digest 392, 3867.
- (13) Le Mesurier v. Le Mesurier, [1895] A.C. 517; 64 L.J.P.C. 97; 72 L.T. 873; 11 Digest 422, 885.
- (14) Hutter v. Hutter (otherwise Perry), [1944] 2 All E.R. 368; [1944] P. 95; 113 L.J.P. 78; 171 L.T. 241; Digest Supp.
- (15) Easterbrook v. Easterbrook (otherwise Jervis), [1944] 1 All E.R. 90; [1944] P. 10; 113 L.J.P. 17; 170 L.T. 26; Digest Supp.

PRELIMINARY ISSUE on an application by the husband (the respondent) to determine whether the court had jurisdiction to entertain a suit brought by the wife for the nullity of the marriage on the ground of the incapacity or wilful refusal of the husband to consummate it. The wife was born in England of English parents and was now residing in England, but the parties were married in France and the husband, a Frenchman, was domiciled in France and had resided there at all material times. The facts appear in the judgment.

Karminski, K.C., and Victor Russell for the wife.

R. J. A. Temple for the husband.

JONES, J. : In the suit in which this issue has been directed the petitioner is the wife, and she prays that the marriage be declared null and void on the ground that it has not been consummated owing to the incapacity or wilful refusal of the husband to consummate it. The husband at first entered a general appearance on July 15, 1946, but, pursuant to an order dated Aug. 27, 1946, his appearance was amended on Aug. 30, 1946, to an appearance under protest to the jurisdiction on the ground that the court has no jurisdiction to entertain the petition. The husband contends that the allegations of non-consummation by wilful refusal or incapacity, if established, would render the marriage voidable, but not void ab initio, that, consequently, the marriage still subsists, and that the wife's domicile is that of the husband, who at all material times was, and now is, domiciled in the republic of France. On Oct. 8, 1946, it was ordered that an issue be tried whether the court has jurisdiction to entertain this petition, and by her answer to the husband's amended appearance the wife very clearly raises the points that I have to decide. She says, first :

If the allegations either in para. 7 or in para. 8 of the petition are established, the court will declare the marriage had and solemnised between the [husband] and the [wife] on Aug. 1, 1935, to have been and to be absolutely null and void to all intents and purposes in law whatsoever. The effect of the said declaration will be that the [wife] was never married to the husband, and, therefore, never acquired the husband's domicile, which was French, but retained her own domicile, which was and is English.

Secondly, the wife says that she "admits that the [husband] was at all material times domiciled in France, but contends that the domicile of the husband is not an essential ingredient to found the jurisdiction of this court," and, further, that she :

... has never at any time lost but has retained and still retains her domicile of origin in England and is and was at all material times resident in England and this court has jurisdiction to entertain her suit.

The following facts have been either proved or admitted. The husband is a Frenchman. His domicile has always been French, and he appears to have been resident for many years in the republic of France. The wife was born in England of English parents, and lived in England until her marriage. The marriage was solemnised in Paris, at the mairie of the Sixth Arrondissement, and after the marriage the parties lived for six months in Paris, where the husband held a military appointment. They then went to the French Congo, where they lived for two years. In 1938 they returned to France for a few days, and then they spent a few months in England staying with friends or relations until Sept., 1938, when they returned to Paris, the husband having been recalled to military duty. They then went to Biskra, in Algeria, in the republic of France, and they lived together there until the outbreak of war in 1939, when the wife returned to England, the husband remaining at Biskra. In April, 1940, she went to Biskra because her husband was seriously ill, and stayed there for six weeks. Then she returned to England, and she has lived in England ever since apart from the husband. It is admitted, therefore, that the husband has always been domiciled in France and has been resident there except during the months he was in England in 1938 ; that he was resident in the republic of France when the petition was presented ; and, apparently, that he is resident there now.

I do not think that it can be disputed that the wife acquired the domicile of her husband by her marriage to him. There is considerable authority that that must be so. I refer only to a passage in the judgment of SIR JAMES HANNEN, P., in Turner v. Thompson (1), where he said (13 P.D. 41) :

A woman when she marries a man, not only by construction of law, but absolutely as a matter of fact, does acquire the domicile of her husband if she lives with him in the country of his domicile.

That was approved by VISCOUNT DUNEDIN ([1927] A.C. 662, 663) in Salvesen (or von Lorang) v. Administrator of Austrian Property (2) where he said : "On this point I would cite the words of SIR JAMES HANNEN in the case of Turner v. Thompson (1) . . ." and then he cited the passage which I have just read. There is no doubt that the wife did prima facie acquire the domicile of her husband at the time of her marriage. In view of the facts that she married the husband in Paris and lived with him there and afterwards lived with him in other parts of the republic of France, I hold that she did, in fact, acquire his domicile.

If a decree of nullity on the ground of the husband's incapacity is pronounced in this case, the marriage would be declared always to have been null and void. For that Newbould v. Attorney-General (3) is an authority. This is a voidable marriage, and there is some doubt whether for this purpose there is a distinction between a void and a voidable marriage. Fowke v. Fowke (4) and Adams v. Adams (5), cited by counsel for the husband, appear to indicate that there is a considerable difference between a void and a voidable marriage. In Fowke v. Fowke (4), FARWELL, J., said ([1938] 2 All E.R. 645, 646) :

The difference between that case and the case of persons who are married but whose marriage has never been consummated is quite plain. In the case of persons who, being (apart from physical disability) free to marry, have gone through a ceremony of marriage, and are living together, those two persons are, so far as everyone in the world is concerned, except themselves, man and wife, in the sense that no one can be heard to say that they are not legally married. To allege of two such persons, before any degree of nullity has been made, that they were living in sin would, I apprehend, be slanderous, and would be an allegation which might give rise to a cause of action for damages on the part of one or other of the parties, or on that of both parties. Moreover, their position is that of man and wife from all material points of view. The husband, for instance, is bound to maintain the wife, and the wife, if she is not maintained, is entitled to pledge his credit, and, if she pledges his credit, and a tradesman then sues the husband for the amount, it is not open to the husband in those proceedings to set up that the lady is not his wife at all, nor is it open to the tradesman to set up that there never has been a marriage at all. So long as neither the husband nor the wife has taken proceedings in the Divorce Court and got a decree of nullity pronounced, those two persons are . . . to all intents and purposes married people. The moment the decree of nullity is pronounced, however, the position becomes wholly different. There is then no marriage, and never has been a marriage.

In Adams v. Adams (5) SCOTT, L.J., said ([1941] 1 All E.R. 337, 338) :

Before discussing the interpretation of the separation agreement, upon which, in my opinion, the appeal really turns, it is desirable to clear the ground on two points. In the first place, no impossibility supervened, either in fact or in law, to prevent performance by the appellant of his promise to pay the respondent £1 per week. If he was by the decree relieved of that obligation, it was on some other ground. In the second place, until the decree absolute, the status of husband and wife continued to attach to the appellant and respondent, and, although, from the time when he first discovered her incapacity to consummate, he possessed a legal right to get the marriage annulled, it remained in law an effective marriage until he got his decree. Some confusion has been caused, in legal discussion upon the difference between a decree of nullity and a decree of divorce in regard to their retrospective effects upon the pre-existing marriage, by the use of the words "void" and "voidable." It has been said that, in the case of divorce, it is good law to speak of the marriage as having been voidable, but that it is not so in the case of nullity, for there the decree pronounces the marriage to have been "void" from the outset. Primarily, the use of those two words is a metaphor from the law of contract, and is not truly appropriate to the law of status, but the use of both terms in connection with the status of marriage has received judicial sanction, and is consonant with the ordinary English meaning of the words, although it lends itself to misuse and may cause confusion.

GODDARD, L.J. said (ibid., 342) :

The decree was granted by reason of the incapacity of the wife to consummate the marriage and it was, therefore, a case of what has always been described as a voidable, and not of a void, marriage. Such a marriage is good and valid unless and until the assistance of the court is sought, or, as would have been said before 1857, the office of the judge had been promoted, and a decree obtained. A sentence or decree always has been, and is, as necessary to annul a marriage on this ground as to dissolve it for adultery or cruelty. Until decree, the parties have the status of married people, with all the rights and liabilities consequent thereon.

It appears to me that there is very clear authority for a distinction for this purpose between marriages which are void and marriages which are voidable, but counsel for the wife argues that, although this marriage has not yet been declared void, it really is non-existent, because it may at some future time, if these proceedings are successful, be declared to be a void marriage. I am not convinced by that argument. It appears to me that there must be a distinction between a void and a voidable marriage. At the present moment this marriage is a subsisting marriage. If it were a bigamous marriage, no doubt, it might be said to be already void, but, as it is a marriage which is perfectly good until there is a decree saying it is to be voided on the ground of the incapacity which is alleged in the petition, it seems to me that at the present moment it is a subsisting marriage and that I ought to treat it as such.

In Stathatos v. Stathatos (6) and De Montaignu v. De Montaignu (7) it was held that the wife was entitled to bring proceedings for dissolution of marriage in this country although the husband was domiciled abroad, but those were cases in which the wife had been placed in an intolerable situation, as one of the judges said, by the husband obtaining a decree of nullity in the courts of his foreign domicile, and the ground on which jurisdiction was assumed by the court in each case was that the wife was in that intolerable position and it was right that the court should assume jurisdiction and treat her as having a domicile of her own sufficient to support a suit for dissolution of the marriage.

I come to the conclusion, therefore, that the wife has failed to establish that she has a domicile other than that of her husband, that she acquired the domicile of her husband by the marriage, that she has never lost it, and that at the present time she is not domiciled within the jurisdiction of this court.

The other contention on which the wife relies is that when the petition was presented she was resident here, that she is still resident here, and that, therefore, the court has jurisdiction to entertain the petition. It appears to be established that in suits for nullity this court follows the practice of the Ecclesiastical Courts, and that the jurisdiction of the Ecclesiastical Courts in such suits was based on the residence of the parties, though it may be based also on domicile. Until the decision in White v. White (8) it appears to have been considered that it was essential to the jurisdiction that both parties should be resident within the jurisdiction of the court, but in that case BUCKNILL, J., held that the wife never acquired the domicile of the husband and that the court had jurisdiction, although the respondent husband was in Australia. That decision has been followed by BARNARD, J., in Robert v. Robert (9).

In White v. White (8), BUCKNILL, J., followed Roberts v. Brennan (10), which was a case decided by SIR FRANCIS JEUNE, P., the headnote to it being:

Matrimonial residence within the jurisdiction is sufficient to give the court power to declare a bigamous marriage null and void, even though the domicile of the respondent be Irish and the de facto marriage celebrated in the Isle of Man.

In his judgment SIR FRANCIS JEUNE, P. ([1902] P. 144) said:

Although Niboyet v. Niboyet (11) is now of discredited authority as applied to suits for dissolution of marriage, the judgment in that case in the Court of Appeal still applies in such a case as this. In my view, residence—not domicile—is the test of jurisdiction in a nullity case. The jurisdiction of the Ecclesiastical Courts was based on the residence of the parties, and in suits for nullity this court follows the practice of the Ecclesiastical Courts, as prescribed by the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857, s. 22.

He pronounced a decree nisi. In Graham v. Graham (12), HORRIDGE, J., expressed great doubt whether the report of Roberts v. Brennan (10) in the LAW REPORTS could be correct. He said ([1923] P. 37):

I was very much pressed on behalf of the petitioner with the case of Roberts v. Brennan (10) in which SIR FRANCIS JEUNE, P., stated that, in his view, residence and not domicile was the test of jurisdiction in a nullity case, because it was said in that case on the report there was no evidence of either party having been resident within the jurisdiction; but on production of the original citation which I sent for it appeared that the wife had given an address within the jurisdiction. The report in this case is not to my mind satisfactory as to the evidence of residence before the court, and I cannot think I ought to rely on it if it is inconsistent with the authorities I have already referred to.

Counsel for the wife to-day referred me to the report of Roberts v. Brennan (10) at 18 T.L.R. 467, where the headnote is:

The court has jurisdiction to grant a decree of nullity where the matrimonial residence is within the jurisdiction, though the domicile is not.

The report of the judgment in this report is as follows:

The PRESIDENT said that although the judgment of the Court of Appeal in Niboyet v. Niboyet (11) had been practically over-ruled and held to be wrong as applicable to suits for dissolution (vide Le Mesurier v. Le Mesurier (13)), yet the reasoning in that case would still apply to suits for nullity of marriage. In his opinion, in cases of nullity the doctrine of domicile did not apply, but that of residence did. It seemed clear that a case such as the present one could have been brought before the Ecclesiastical Courts, as their jurisdiction would have depended upon the matrimonial residence of the parties, and that being so this court also would have jurisdiction to entertain it.

It does not appear to me to be clear from that report that the petitioner only was resident within the jurisdiction. SIR FRANCIS JEUNE, P., referred to matrimonial residence and said that residence, not domicile, was the test of jurisdiction, but it does not appear to be clear, though it may be the fact, that he was deciding that the residence of one party—i.e., the petitioner only—was enough to give the court jurisdiction. BUCKNILL, J., followed that case in White v. White (8) and decided that residence of one party was enough—i.e., that the residence of the petitioner was enough.

There are many points of distinction, I think, between White v. White (8) and the present case. Very careful attention must be given to White v. White (8). The headnote is as follows :

On a petition by a woman for nullity of a form of marriage contracted in a foreign country on the ground of the bigamy of the man, the domicile of the man is not an essential ingredient to found jurisdiction. A woman, petitioner for nullity, went through a form of marriage abroad with a man whose wife was living, and two days later left the place of the marriage without consummation. The petitioner was domiciled and resident in England ; the man, the respondent, was domiciled either in Malta, his domicile of origin, or Australia, his domicile of choice, and had never resided here. The man was served with notice to appear. He acknowledged service, but did not enter appearance. He also signed a written admission that when he went through the form of marriage with the petitioner he was a married man. Held, that the woman never acquired the domicile of the man and that in the circumstances of the case the court had jurisdiction and the woman was entitled to a decree nisi of nullity. Quære whether the court would have had jurisdiction if the man had entered appearance under protest.

In his judgment, BUCKNILL, J., said ([1937] P. 124, 125) :

Though a defendant may usually reside out of the jurisdiction, yet if he is served with a citation within the jurisdiction of an Ecclesiastical Court in England in a suit for nullity of marriage, that court has jurisdiction to try the validity of the marriage, wherever it may have been contracted. Roberts v. Brennan (10) decided that in a case such as the present it is not the so-called husband's domicile which is an essential ingredient to found jurisdiction, and that residence within the jurisdiction of the parties at any time since the marriage is sufficient. The present case, however, goes one step further, so far as the respondent is concerned. On the other hand, it is in one respect a stronger case, in that the petitioner is domiciled and resident here. If, as in this case, the respondent has never resided in England, but the petitioner is domiciled and resident here, is it necessary for her to proceed to whatever part of the world the respondent may happen to reside in, in order to get her status established by a decree of nullity ? This would impose a heavy burden indeed on the petitioner, for the respondent may move about from place to place and have no fixed residence. Counsel on behalf of the King's Proctor argued that in a case of nullity such as this, jurisdiction must be based on the residence or domicile of the respondent within the jurisdiction. He also argued that the decree asked for in this case was not merely declaratory, but that the statutory jurisdiction of the court was invoked and that certain consequences might flow from such a decree (although not in fact asked for in this case) such as custody of children, orders for maintenance or variation of settlements. He further argued that there was a general principle that this court would not exercise jurisdiction in a case where the respondent has not subjected himself to the jurisdiction by residence or domicile or by submission to it. I appreciate the weight of these arguments, and if the respondent had entered an appearance to the petition under protest against the exercise of jurisdiction, I should have had serious doubts whether this court had jurisdiction over the matter. But I do not think I have to decide that question in this case. In my view, the respondent, by his conduct and by his admissions, has so acted as to justify the court in exercising jurisdiction. He has not in terms submitted to the jurisdiction, but he has, I think, made it clear that he has no objection to its exercise. In my view, under the special circumstances of this case, the court has jurisdiction to make the decree sought by the petitioner.

There are many points of difference, as I have said, between that case and the present case, and one of the most important points is that in that case the respondent had not entered an appearance. Counsel for the wife observed that he was not able quite to appreciate the judge's view that that was a matter of importance, but the judge said that, if the respondent had entered an appearance against the petition under protest against the jurisdiction, he would have a very serious doubt whether or not the case came within the jurisdiction of the court. Moreover, in that case the respondent lived with the wife only two days after the marriage, he was already married at the time of the marriage, and her petition for nullity was based on the ground that he was married at the time when she went through a form of marriage with him. It appears to me that BUCKNILL, J., came to the conclusion that those circumstances amounted to special circumstances which, in his view, justified the court in exercising jurisdiction.

In my view, the present case can be distinguished from White v. White (8), as none of those special circumstances exists here. The story in this case is a simple one—that of a marriage in the French republic, the parties living together in the French republic, the husband being domiciled there and always having lived there except for a few months in 1938. There are no special circumstances of hardship in this case such as existed in White v. White (8). In Robert v. Robert (9), BARNARD, J., held that the fact that the petitioner was resident within the jurisdiction at the time of her suit gave the court jurisdiction to entertain it, although both parties were domiciled in Guernsey and the respondent was resident there. In that case there was no protest against the jurisdiction, and I have not been referred to any case in which there has been a protest against the jurisdiction and it has been decided that the court has jurisdiction to entertain a suit of nullity where the respondent was domiciled and resident abroad and the petitioner was domiciled abroad, although resident within the jurisdiction. I have been referred to Hutter v. Hutter (14), which, also, was a case of hardship. The parties to that suit were resident within the jurisdiction, and the respondent was also domiciled within the jurisdiction. In Easterbrook v. Easterbrook (15), the respondent was domiciled and resident in England. The difficulty about the present case is that the husband is both domiciled and resident in France. The French court can pronounce a decree of nullity that would be binding here. Consequently, there would not appear to be any special circumstances such as there were in White v. White (8), and it does not appear to me that the authorities which have been cited to me establish that the court has accepted jurisdiction when the respondent was both resident and domiciled out of the jurisdiction and where there is no case of hardship or any special circumstances such as there were in White v. White (8). For these reasons I have come to the conclusion that the wife has failed to make out the contentions set out in her answer to the husband's amended appearance, and I hold that this court has no jurisdiction to entertain this suit.

Judgment for the husband on the issue. No order as to costs.

Solicitors: Charles Russell & Co. (for the wife); Peacock & Goddard (for the husband).

[Reported by R. HENDRY WHITE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

KIRK v. KIRK.

[PROBATE, DIVORCE AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION (Lord Merriman, P., and Jones, J.), April 17, 30, 1947.]

Husband and Wife—Maintenance order—Application to revoke—Decree of divorce granted to wife by Scottish court—Discretion of justices.

In 1929, a wife obtained in England a maintenance order against her husband, who was domiciled in Scotland. In 1946, she obtained in Scotland a decree of divorce. The husband thereupon applied for revocation of the maintenance order.

HELD: in view of the rights of relief available to the wife in the Scottish court and of the fact that it was doubtful whether the order could be enforced in Scotland, it was proper to terminate the order.

Per LORD MERRIMAN, P.: The court in Mezger v. Mezger ([1936] 3 All E.R. 130) did not lay down that in no circumstances whatever could it be right to keep a maintenance order alive when the parties had been divorced by a foreign court.

[AS TO DISCHARGE OF MAINTENANCE ORDERS, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 10, p. 843, para. 1345; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 27, pp. 565, 566, Nos. 6237-6250.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Bragg v. Bragg, [1925] P.20; 94 L.J.P. 11; 132 L.T. 346; 27 Digest 565, 6242.
- (2) Mezger v. Mezger, [1936] 3 All E.R. 130; [1937] P. 19; 106 L.J.P. 1; 155 L.T. 491; 100 J.P. 475; Digest Supp.
- (3) Forsyth v. Forsyth, [1947] 1 All E.R. 406; 111 J.P. 247; 176 L.T. 507.
- (4) McQueen v. McQueen, [1920] 2 Sc. L.T. 405.

APPEAL by a husband against a decision of Great Yarmouth justices on Jan. 22, 1947, refusing to revoke an order for maintenance made on Sept. 3, 1929, in favour of the wife. The facts appear in the judgment of LORD MERRIMAN, P.

Jukes for the husband.

The wife was not represented.

LORD MERRIMAN, P. : It is not suggested that when the order was made in 1929 the justices had not jurisdiction to make it, but reference is made to the fact that it was made against a husband who was a domiciled Scot and that on Mar. 20, 1946, in the Court of Session the wife obtained a divorce against her husband, and it is argued on behalf of the husband that it is inapt to continue an English order against him, notwithstanding the decision in Bragg v. Bragg (1), the validity of which is not disputed. The husband argues that the justices should have revoked the order, and have left the wife to whatever her remedies may be in Scotland. The argument was put in two ways. First, it is said that the decision of this court in Mezger v. Mezger (2) shows that in the case of a divorce by a foreign court (which for this purpose includes the Court of Session), there is no jurisdiction in justices to keep alive a maintenance order under the authority of Bragg v. Bragg (1). Alternatively, it is said that, if it is a matter of discretion, the justices should have exercised their discretion in favour of the revocation of the order.

Assuming that the justices had jurisdiction, in their discretion, to keep the order alive, manifestly one of the matters which would guide them and this court in considering the exercise of that discretion notwithstanding the decree of divorce would be whether the wife had any alternative rights in Scotland where she had obtained her decree, and it is right to say that the justices obviously had that point in mind, for, in the course of their reasons, they say :

(b) but for the maintenance order the wife would have been entitled to apply in the divorce proceedings for an order for her maintenance, and (c) that the husband ought not to be relieved of his responsibility for supporting his wife if she should fall out of work.

With counsel's consent we thought it right to address an enquiry to the proper officer of the Court of Session to ascertain whether the wife still had whatever rights might follow in Scotland from the decree of divorce which she had obtained, and we have received a reply stating that the effect of divorce in Scotland is that the innocent party is entitled to the legal rights to which he or she would have been entitled if the guilty spouse had died at the date of the decree, but that any award of alimony automatically ceases at that date. That really disposes of the first of the two reasons which I read. The wife would not have been entitled to obtain a maintenance order in Scotland on the decree. The Principal Clerk of Session goes on to say :

In the present case we have no information as to what these rights would be, but, as there are no children of the marriage and on the assumption that the matter was not regulated by an ante-nuptial marriage settlement, Mrs. Kirk would probably be entitled, in name of jus relictæ, to one half of the free moveable estate of her former husband. Whether he has any moveable estate is another matter. The Scottish courts would, if necessary, enforce such rights, but would not entertain any application for alimony after the decree of divorce.

That shows two things : (1) that the rights which the wife may have in Scotland are rights, to be asserted once and for all, to a certain share in her husband's personal estate, and (2) that there is no such thing as an award of alimony or maintenance after the decree has become effective. In other words, she has rights in Scotland, but they differ from her rights under this maintenance order. Moreover, as we know from Forsyth v. Forsyth (3), a recent decision of this court as at present constituted, it is, to put it at the lowest, very doubtful, on the authority of McQueen v. McQueen (4), which was cited in that case, whether, if this maintenance order were allowed to subsist, it would be enforced in Scotland.

I wish, in passing, to dispose of one matter which appears on the face of the reasons given by the justices. The statement of their reasons begins with these words :

The solicitors for the parties having agreed that the decision in Bragg v. Bragg (1) should be followed, the justices, in the exercise of the discretion vested in them, decided to refuse the husband's application for revocation of the order on the following grounds. . .

Two of the grounds I have already read ; the other is a statement of the fact of the decree of divorce. That might be read as meaning that the solicitors had agreed that the justices had jurisdiction and ought to exercise it in the way in which it was exercised in Bragg v. Bragg (1). I do not think it would be fair to impute any such meaning to the statement. Assuming the justices had no jurisdiction to keep this order alive, no admission by the solicitors could give them jurisdiction. All that was meant, I think, was (and I think this is the way in which it was treated by the justices) that the effect of the decision in Bragg v. Bragg (1) is that in proper circumstances justices have a discretion to keep a maintenance order alive, notwithstanding the fact that the parties have been divorced since it was made. I do not think the admission precluded the husband's counsel from arguing that there was no jurisdiction to keep alive the order in question here because the decree of divorce was made by a foreign court. Accordingly, he relied on the decision of this court in Mezger v. Mezger (2).

I do not think that it is necessary for us to decide positively whether in any circumstances in the case of a foreign divorce justices have jurisdiction to keep an earlier maintenance order alive. Mezger v. Mezger (2) was a very strong case. Since the making of the maintenance order the parties had been divorced in Germany after a trial in which both sides took part and the wife made certain allegations (among others, the allegation of failure to maintain her) on every one of which she was defeated. The whole case went in favour of her husband, and this court was not concerned to enquire into the merits of that decision which was a decision of a court of competent jurisdiction. The justices had given reasons which this court thought were hopelessly wrong and indicated that, if they had a discretion to deal with such a case, they had not exercised it judicially. Although it is true that in that case both members of the court said, in effect, that they could not imagine any circumstances which would justify the continuance of that order, I do not find that they laid it down that in no circumstances whatever could it be right to keep a maintenance order alive, on the authority of Bragg v. Bragg (1), when the parties had been divorced by a foreign court. I should prefer to leave it entirely open whether there might be circumstances in which such a course would be right. I can imagine, for example, though I am not expressing any opinion about it, a case of another character, where, after a divorce, say, in Scotland, the husband acquired an English domicile while the order was still running and at a time, as in this case, when he was continuing to pay under the order. I do not know what the proper decision would be, but I am not prepared to say absolutely that there could never be jurisdiction in the justices to keep the order alive whatever the circumstances might be, and I do not think that the decision in Mezger v. Mezger (2) obliges us to say so.

I think, however, that this is a case in which the justices ought to have exercised their discretion, and we ought to exercise our discretion, in favour of terminating this order. The wife necessarily had to resort to the Scottish court to get her decree of divorce. She has rights in that court, as we are informed, which are still available, whatever they may be. It is plain that they differ essentially from the relief to which she is entitled under this order, and it is, as I have said, very doubtful whether there is any means of enforcing this order in Scotland. In these circumstances, it seems to me, everything points to the propriety of terminating this order, and leaving her to assert her rights in Scotland. That being so, in my opinion, this appeal should be allowed.

JONES, J. : I agree.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors : Bartlett & Gregory, agents for Lucas & Wyllys, Great Yarmouth (for the husband).

[Reported by R. HENRY WHITE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

BRIGHTSTEIN v. BRIGHTSTEIN.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Tucker, Somervell and Evershed, L.JJ.), June 9, 17, 1947.]

Divorce—Appeal—Security for wife's costs—Application for new trial by unsuccessful husband petitioner—Jurisdiction of court to order security—Evidence to be considered on hearing of wife's application for security—Need for evidence of wife's means—Failure of husband to pay costs of hearing of petition—Stay of hearing of appeal.

On an application to the Court of Appeal by a husband for a new trial of a divorce petition which he had brought against his wife and which had been dismissed, the wife asked (i) that his application should be stayed until he had paid the costs of the hearing of the divorce petition; (ii) that he should be ordered to give security for her costs of the hearing of his application. The application for a new trial was to be based on allegations by the husband that, after the date when the petition was served, but before the hearing, the wife had committed adultery with two men in addition to the co-respondent named in the petition. The wife contended that the husband's affidavits containing these allegations were not admissible at the hearing of her applications for security and for a stay of the husband's application, but the allegations were not contradicted by her and insufficient evidence was given by her in regard to her means:—

HELD: (i) the fact that the costs of the first trial had not been paid might sometimes be relevant when the court was asked to order security on the ground of an appellant's inability to pay the costs of an appeal, but the mere refusal of an unsuccessful party to pay the costs in the court below was not, in itself, sufficient ground for ordering him to give security, and certainly not for staying the hearing of his application for a new trial.

Waite v. Waite and Muir (1916) (32 T.L.R. 432) distinguished.

(ii) where the marriage had not been dissolved in the court below, the Court of Appeal had jurisdiction to order the husband to give security in appropriate circumstances: King v. King ([1943] 2 All E.R. 253) followed; but where there was insufficient evidence of the wife's means the court would refuse her application for security on the ground of lack of material on which it could act.

(iii) in considering whether the case was an appropriate one for ordering security for the wife's costs, the court was entitled and bound to look at the evidence; the husband's affidavits were, therefore, admissible; and, in view of the prima facie evidence, which remained uncontradicted, the court would not order the husband to give security.

[AS TO SECURITY FOR WIFE'S COSTS OF APPEAL, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 10, pp. 780, 781, para. 1234, and Supplement; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 27, pp. 206, 207, Nos. 1787-1797, pp. 421, 422, Nos. 4277-4281, and Supplement.

Cases referred to:

- (1) Waite v. Waite and Muir (1916), 32 T.L.R. 432; 27 Digest 490, 5225.
- (2) King v. King, [1943] 2 All E.R. 253; [1943] P. 91; 112 L.J.P. 89; 169 L.T. 251; Digest Supp.
- (3) Ottaway v. Hamilton (1878), 3 C.P.D. 393; 47 L.J.Q.B. 725; 38 L.T. 925; 42 J.P. 660; 27 Digest 207, 1796.
- (4) Williams v. Williams, [1929] P. 114; 98 L.J.P. 40; 140 L.T. 383; Digest Supp.
- (5) Johnstone v. Johnstone, [1929] P. 165; 98 L.J.P. 76; 140 L.T. 451; Digest Supp.
- (6) Vidal v. Vidal and Wilson (1921), The Times, Oct. 13.

MOTIONS by the wife (i) for security for her costs of the husband's application for a new trial of his divorce petition; (ii) for a stay of the application for a new trial pending payment by the husband of the taxed costs of the hearing of the divorce petition. The facts appear in the judgment of TUCKER, L.J.

F. E. H. Gibbens for the wife.

Platts Mills for the husband.

TUCKER, L.J.: These are two applications, which have been heard together, by the wife, Sophie Brightstein, asking, in the one case, that her husband, Simon Jimmy Brightstein, should be ordered to give security for her costs of the hearing of an application by him that there should be a new trial of the divorce petition which he has unsuccessfully brought against her and one Jack Kagan as co-respondent, and, in the other case, that the husband's application to this court for a new trial should be stayed until he has paid the costs of the hearing of the divorce petition which were taxed and amounted to £69 17s. 10d. which he has not paid.

I will deal, first, with the last of those applications, namely, the application to stay this appeal, as I call it for convenience, until the costs of the first hearing have been paid. The fact that the costs of the first trial have not been paid may sometimes be a relevant matter to be taken into consideration when the court is asked to order security on the ground of the appellant's inability to pay the costs of the appeal, but, apart from that, the mere refusal of an unsuccessful defendant or plaintiff or petitioner or respondent to pay the costs in the court below is not in itself a sufficient ground for giving security, and certainly not, in my view, for staying the hearing of his appeal. Authority has been cited to us in Waite v. Waite and Muir (1), where a Divisional Court of the Divorce Division refused an application for the re-hearing of a divorce petition until the costs of the first hearing had been paid. I think, in the first instance, that that case can be distinguished by the fact that the Divisional Court of the Divorce Division was there applying its own practice, whereas we are dealing with an appeal to the Court of Appeal, and, secondly, the nature of the application there was different. It was an application in the Divorce Division for a re-hearing, not an appeal to this court asking for an order for a new trial. However that may be, I do not think that we should follow the practice, if it be applicable to appeals to this court, which was adopted by the Divorce Division in that particular case. Therefore, the application to stay on the ground of non-payment of the wife's costs of the husband's petition before HODSON, J., fails.

Then there is the further application that the husband should be ordered to give security for his wife's costs of the appeal and that the appeal should be stayed pending the giving of such security as we may order. With regard to that, two affidavits were relied on by the wife—one by her solicitor and one by herself. The solicitor's affidavit merely sets out the failure to pay in the court below and exhibits correspondence showing that the husband has refused to give security. The affidavit of the wife states that the costs have not been paid. In para. 3 she says :

After the dismissal of the [husband's] suit I was informed by him and verily believe that he was employed by his parents as the manager of a hairdressing business, and that he earns a good salary. The [husband] lives at home with his parents.

Then she says :

I am employed as a typist by Rex Meters, Ltd., Kingsbury Works, Kingsbury Road, Kingsbury, N.W.9, at a salary of £4 per week, leaving me the weekly sum of £3 17s. 5d. after deduction of insurance contributions.

That is the only information that this court has with regard to the means of the wife. There is no suggestion that the husband lacks means to pay for this appeal if he loses it, and there is a complete absence of information with regard to the wife's means or ability to pay, save the bald statement that she is earning £4 a week as a typist. On that ground alone (i.e., lack of material on which this court could act) it would, I think, be sufficient for this court to say that it must refuse this application for security. If the court is to act on the basis that, if an order is not made, the wife will be unable to maintain her case in this court, it is most relevant to be informed as to her possession of means to pay for her case. Her affidavit, in my view, is lacking in that respect, but another matter has been gone into, and we must deal with it. It is of a rather exceptional nature. This application for a new trial is going to be based on allegations that the wife has committed adultery with two men in addition to the co-respondent, Jack Kagan. The acts of adultery which are to be relied on are alleged to have taken place after Nov. 1, 1945, when the petition was served, but before the hearing of the divorce petition on Jan. 31, 1947. I express no opinion whether the statements in those affidavits will be admissible or relevant on the hearing of the application for a new trial, but counsel for the husband asked leave to read those affidavits and to rely on certain paragraphs in them by way of resisting this application for security. When these applications were last before the court, we adjourned the matter for a week to enable counsel for the wife to consider (i) the admissibility, on an application of this kind, of those affidavits, and (ii) whether, if we decided to admit them, he desired to answer them. After a lapse of several days the case has come into the list, and counsel for the wife has been content to rest on his submission that those affidavits are inadmissible and has not filed any affidavit by the wife or any one else denying the allegations of adultery made against the wife in those affidavits.

A We decided to entertain those affidavits and look at those allegations, reserving our decision whether they were admissible, and I think it becomes necessary, in view of the attitude of counsel for the wife, to state our decisions with regard to their admissibility.

In King v. King (2), a full Court of Appeal, consisting of six members, considered the jurisdiction of the court to order a husband to give security for the costs of his wife in an appeal by him against the dismissal by a judgment of the Divorce Division of a petition for divorce brought by him against his wife. B The decision of the court was that the court has jurisdiction in such a case and will order security in appropriate circumstances. The court also decided that security will not be ordered as a matter of course merely because the wife has no means of her own for financing her costs of the appeal. As I read that case, it clearly shows that this court will approach applications of this kind from a different angle from that from which they approach, for example, an C ordinary application for security in an appeal from the King's Bench Division. The court there considered the history and basis of the practice for ordering security in the Divorce Division in the first instance, and the judgment of the court is expressed as follows ([1943] 2 All E.R. 254) :

We do not think it necessary to discuss the second proposition [i.e., an alternative proposition put forward by Serjeant Sullivan for the basis for this practice], as the first was plainly enunciated in 1878 by the Court of Appeal (consisting of BRAMWELL, D BAGGALLAY and THESIGER, L.JJ) in Ottaway v. Hamilton (3), an action in which a wife's solicitor sued the husband for her costs in obtaining her divorce. That decision is sufficient to establish the common law rule that the wife has authority to employ legal help at the expense of the husband in such a case as the present. It is true that the reason for the rule of practice giving the wife security for her costs was evolved in the old ecclesiastical court and continued by the court created by the Act of 1857 at a time when the wife had no property (other than settled property) of her own out of which E to defray such expenditure, and that, as HILL, J., said in Williams v. Williams (4) the Married Women's Property Acts have greatly modified the position of the wife. The practice, however, both before and after the [Matrimonial Causes] Acts of 1857 and 1873, has always been only to give the wife security in cases where she has not sufficient estate to pay her own costs. This practice was recently recognised as still right and proper by the Court of Appeal in Johnstone v. Johnstone (5), where LORD HANWORTH, F M.R., said ([1929] P. 172) : "The old rules of the Ecclesiastical Courts were preserved by s. 22 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857 (20 and 21 Vict., 85), and are now reproduced by s. 103 of the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925. The result is that the old rule as to the costs of the spouses is still applicable to costs in the Divorce Division, and the husband has to make provision for costs of the wife to enable her to contest the issue."

The Court of Appeal decided that that was the basis of the rule, and, I think, nothing more. The court went on to say ([1943] 2 All E.R. 255) :

G We expressly limit our decision to cases like the present because, where the judge, exercising divorce jurisdiction, makes a decree of dissolution on the ground of the wife's adultery against the wife, the doctrine of a common law agency of necessity would seem to be excluded.

After stating other considerations which would require consideration, they then stated (ibid) : "That question we keep open." Thus, they expressed no final view as to what the position would be where the marriage has been H dissolved in the court below on the ground, e.g., of the wife's adultery. In an earlier part of the judgment, after referring to Vidal v. Vidal (6), the Court of Appeal said (ibid, 254) :

The report does not state the reasons given by the Court of Appeal when ordering security for the wife's costs, and the case, therefore, does not establish the proposition that security in this court will be ordered as a matter of course merely because the wife has no means of her own for financing her costs of the appeal, but the case is a clear authority for the proposition that this court has jurisdiction to make such an order and will do so in appropriate circumstances.

I think this last sentence shows the real decision of the court in that case, subject to the limitation, as I have already indicated, that the court reserved for future consideration what the position might be if the marriage had been dissolved as the result of a finding of adultery in the court below. Therefore, that case shows that, in the present case, we clearly have jurisdiction to give security. I think the case further shows that we do not approach a case of this kind solely from the angle from which we should approach an application for security in an appeal from the King's Bench Division, but it leaves it completely at large as to what are the appropriate circumstances in which security should be ordered.

In our view, it was relevant to take into consideration the allegations that the wife, at the moment when she came before this court asking for security, was living in adultery with a man, that she had, on her own admission, given birth to a child of which the husband was not the father, and that during a period of time subsequent to the filing of the original petition she had also been living in adultery with another man. Those allegations remain uncontradicted, and I think it is impossible to say that this court is bound to shut its eyes to that uncontradicted evidence—evidence which, if true (and I am assuming for the moment that it is true without, of course, coming to any final decision on the matter) shows that the wife had no authority to pledge her husband's credit. I think it is permissible for the court to look at evidence of that kind and to take it into consideration in deciding whether, in the exercise of its discretion, it considers a particular case an appropriate one for the granting of this relief. In this case, I particularly stress the fact that those allegations remain uncontradicted, and I do not suggest for one moment that, where there is an issue before the court with evidence on both sides whether or not a wife has committed adultery, or is at the moment living in adultery with a man, this court should seek to solve such an issue. It might well be that in a case of that kind the court would think it proper, if the other circumstances in the case made it appropriate, that they should order security and refuse to try out an issue of that kind. In the present case, where there is very clear prima facie evidence which remains uncontradicted, I think that this court is entitled and bound to look at such evidence, and, having looked at it, if we consider it renders the case inappropriate to the granting of this relief, to act accordingly. For those reasons I think that both these applications fail.

SOMERVELL, L.J. : I agree.

EVERSHED, L.J. : I agree.

Motions dismissed.

Solicitors: Edward Moeran (for the wife); Westbrook & Co. (for the husband).

[Reported by R. L. ZIAR, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

PRESTON AND ANOTHER v. NORFOLK COUNTY COUNCIL.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Lord Greene, M.R., Wrottesley, L.J., and Lynskey, J.),
May 1, 2, 23, June 16, 1947.]

Agriculture—Agricultural holding—Compensation for disturbance—Tenant quitting holding “in consequence of” notice to quit—Notice to quit—Tenant refusing to leave—Judgment for possession—Jurisdiction of High Court to hear Special Case—Agricultural Holdings Act, 1923 (c. 9), s. 12 (1), sched. II, r. 10.

By s. 12 (1) of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1923: “Where the tenancy of a holding terminates by reason of a notice to quit given by the landlord, and in consequence of such notice the tenant quits the holding, then . . . compensation for the disturbance shall be payable by the landlord to the tenant in accordance with the provisions of this section . . .”

The landlords served on the tenants a notice to quit their holding which expired on Oct. 11, 1942. The tenants disputed the validity of the notice and failed to give up possession. On Oct. 13, 1942, the landlords issued a writ in the High Court, and, by a judgment of OLIVER, J., dated June 7, 1943, the tenants were ordered to give up possession. The judgment directed that, in default of settlement by valuers, the tenants' claim for compensation for disturbance under s. 12 of the Act of 1923 should be submitted to arbitration. The matter went to arbitration, and, by what purported to be an award in the form of a Special Case, there was submitted for the opinion of the High Court the question whether the tenants were entitled to compensation for disturbance. If they were, the arbitrator awarded them an agreed sum :—

A. HELD : (i) the arbitrator had jurisdiction to act and the court had jurisdiction to deal with the Special Case.

Lowther v. Clifford ([1927] 1 K.B. 130) followed.

(ii) the question whether or not a tenant, who held over for any period after the expiration of a notice to quit and subsequently quitted the holding, could be said to have quitted the holding "in consequence of" the notice within the meaning of s. 12 (1) of the Act, was a question of fact on which the finding of an arbitrator under the Act was conclusive, provided there was evidence to support it; where, as in the present case, the tenant disputed the validity of the notice and the court decided against him and he thereupon quitted the holding, the inevitable inference would be that he had done so in consequence of the notice, and a tenant who quitted in consequence of the notice, even though he did so after an interval of time, must be regarded as a "tenant" within s. 12 (1) of a "holding" within the sub-section; and, therefore, the tenants were entitled to compensation.

Cave v. Page ([1923] W.N. 178) distinguished. Mills v. Rose ([1923] W.N. 330) followed. Hendry v. Walker (1927) S.L.T. 333 disagreed with.

Decision of LORD GODDARD, C.J. ([1946] 2 All E.R. 461), affirmed.

D [AS TO COMPENSATION FOR DISTURBANCE, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 1, p. 361, para. 594; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 2, p. 48, Nos. 265, 266.]

Cases referred to :

- (1) Cave v. Page, [1923] W.N. 178; 67 Sol. Jo. 659; Digest Supp.
- (2) Mills v. Rose, [1923] W.N. 330; 68 Sol. Jo. 420; Digest Supp.
- (3) Dale v. Hatfield Chase Corpn., [1922] 2 K.B. 282; 92 L.J.K.B. 237; 128 L.T. 194; 87 J.P. 11; Digest Supp.
- (4) Hendry v. Walker, (1927), S.L.T. 333; Digest Supp.
- E (5) Lowther v. Clifford, [1927] 1 K.B. 130; 95 L.J.K.B. 576; 135 L.T. 200; Digest Supp.
- (6) Olive v. Paynter, [1932] 2 K.B. 666; 101 L.J.K.B. 786; 148 L.T. 65; 90 J.P. 113; Digest Supp.
- (7) Donaldson's Hospital (Edinburgh) Trustees v. Esslemont, 1926 S.C. (H.L.) 68; Digest Supp.

F APPEAL from a decision of LORD GODDARD, C.J., dated July 12, 1946, and reported [1946] 2 All E.R. 461, on a Special Case stated by an arbitrator.

LORD GODDARD, C.J., first considered the question whether he had jurisdiction to deal with the matter, and decided that he had, and he then held that the tenants of an agricultural holding who, after failure to give up possession under a notice to quit, were ordered to give up possession by the court, quitted the premises "in consequence of" the notice to quit within the meaning of s. 12 (1) of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1923, and were, therefore, entitled to compensation for disturbance. The landlords appealed.

G Havers, K.C., and Diplock for the landlords.

Percy Lamb for the tenants.

Cur. adv. vult.

H June 16. LORD GREENE, M.R., read the following judgment of the court. The question of substance raised by this appeal is one of some general importance under the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1923. There are two decisions of this court under earlier Acts which, on one view, are said to be inconsistent with one another and, on any view, call for careful examination. We shall postpone consideration of them until we have stated the conclusions to which, apart from authority, we should ourselves have come on the true interpretation of the relevant provisions of the Act. We shall then consider whether those conclusions are open to us having regard to the authorities.

The appellants, the landlords, served on the respondents, the tenants, a notice to quit their holding which expired on Oct. 11, 1942. The tenants failed to give up possession. On Oct. 13, 1942, the landlords issued a writ, and by a judgment of OLIVER, J., dated June 7, 1943, the tenants were ordered to give up possession. The judgment contained a number of provisions relating to incidental matters which, although purely consensual, were not expressed, as they ought to have been, to be such in the order. One of these provisions directed that, in default of settlement by valuers, two matters should be submitted to arbitration of which one is the question relevant to this appeal, viz., the tenants' claim for compensation for disturbance under s. 12 of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1923. This matter went to arbitration, and, by what purports to be an award in the form of a Special Case, there was submitted for the opinion of the court the question whether, having regard to the facts in the Case, the terms of the submission, and the documents referred to in the schedule to the Case the tenants were entitled to any compensation for disturbance. If they were so entitled, the arbitrator awarded them the agreed sum of £212 10s. 0d. A

At this point we must interpose a reference to a preliminary point of considerable difficulty, viz., whether, having regard to the special provisions of the Act of 1923, the arbitrator had jurisdiction to act, and, consequently, whether LORD GODDARD, C.J., and on appeal from him, this court, had jurisdiction to deal with the Special Case. Logically we should deal with this question first, but, as we have come to the conclusion that we are bound by authority to say that the jurisdiction exists and as the nature of the question as to jurisdiction will, we think, be more readily intelligible after we have examined the provisions of the Act which bear on the point of substance, we will defer our examination of the question of jurisdiction until we have dealt with the point of substance. B

Section 12 (1) of the Act of 1923 so far as material, provides as follows :—

Where the tenancy of a holding terminates by reason of a notice to quit given by the landlord, and in consequence of such notice the tenant quits the holding, then . . . compensation for the disturbance shall be payable by the landlord to the tenant in accordance with the provisions of this section . . . C

The right to claim compensation is excluded in certain events specified in the sub-section, none of which occurred in the present case. Sub-section (6) of s. 12 provides as follows :— D

The compensation payable under this section shall be a sum representing such loss or expense directly attributable to the quitting of the holding as the tenant may unavoidably incur upon or in connection with the sale or removal of his household goods, implements of husbandry, fixtures, farm produce or farm stock on or used in connection with the holding, and shall include any expenses reasonably incurred by him in the preparation of his claim for compensation (not being costs of an arbitration to determine the amount of the compensation), but for the avoidance of disputes, such sum shall, for the purposes of this Act, be computed at an amount equal to one year's rent of the holding, unless it is proved that the loss and expenses so incurred exceed an amount equal to one year's rent of the holding, in which case the sum recoverable shall be such as represents the whole loss and expenses so incurred up to a maximum amount equal to two years' rent of the holding. E

It is argued on behalf of the landlords that, as the tenants failed to give up possession on the expiration of the notice to quit, they were not entitled to any compensation for disturbance. Two reasons were given for this. The first was that the tenants cannot be said to have quitted the holding "in consequence of" the notice to quit since they had refused to do what the notice required them to do and only gave up possession under the compulsion of the judgment of OLIVER, J. They quitted the holding, it was said, not in consequence of the notice, but in consequence of the judgment. The other reason was that, on the expiration of the notice to quit, the tenants became trespassers and each ceased to be a "tenant," while the "holding" which they had occupied was no longer a "holding." In other words, for both reasons, it was said, compensation for disturbance under the sub-section can only be claimed where the tenant quits voluntarily on the expiration of the notice. This result, it was said, would be in accordance with the apparent purpose of the Act which cannot be to assist tenants who wrongfully refuse to comply with a notice to quit. For the tenants, it was argued that, as the notice to quit is the essential step which gives rise to the claim to recover possession and F is thus the real foundation of the judgment, a tenant who quits under the judgment is truly said to quit "in consequence of" the notice. As to the second of the two reasons put forward on behalf of the landlords, the tenants replied that, on the true construction of the Act, the words "tenant" and "holding" in this particular context and elsewhere in the Act must be interpreted as including a person who was, but has ceased to be, a tenant, and land which was, but has ceased to be, a holding, and they rely particularly on sub-s. (2) of the interpretation section (s. 57), which we will set out when we come to deal with this second reason.

We will now return to the first of the two reasons advanced on behalf of the landlords, and we will deal with it on the assumption that the second reason is a bad one, i.e., that for the purposes of s. 12 (1), a tenant who has held over may still be a "tenant" and his holding may still be a "holding." On this basis, as it seems to us, the question whether or not a tenant who holds over for any period, be it short or be it long, after the expiration of a notice to quit and subsequently quits the holding can be said to have quit the holding "in consequence of" the notice, is really a question of fact on which the finding of an arbitrator under the Act is conclusive, provided that there is evidence to support it. In spite of the fact that a tenant holds over, it may well be that the notice is what causes him to quit the holding. To explain our meaning, we will give two examples. At the expiration of the notice, the tenant may be in bed seriously ill, and incapable of moving. In the absence of permission to remain, he becomes in law a trespasser. Nevertheless, if when he recovers sufficiently to enable him to be moved, he at once quits the holding, the inevitable conclusion would be that he did so "in consequence of" the notice. His temporary failure to comply with the notice could not break the causal link between the notice and his departure which is all that is postulated by the words "in consequence of." The other example is the case of a tenant who disputes the validity of the notice and requires a decision of the court upon it. Either he or the landlord may (subject to the arbitration provisions if they apply) obtain that decision by an originating summons or by an action for a declaration. If in such a case the court decided against the tenant, and the tenant thereupon quitted the holding, the inevitable inference would, we think, be that he had done so "in consequence of" the notice, since the notice, and nothing but the notice, would have been the effective cause of his departure. On the other hand, there may well be cases in which the arbitrator would be at liberty to find on the facts that the necessary causal link between the notice and the quitting of the holding did not exist.

If this view be right, it gives rise in the present case to an apparent difficulty, since there is no finding of the arbitrator on the question whether the tenants quitted the holding "in consequence of" the notice. That question is really involved in the question submitted to the court, that is, whether the tenants on the facts are entitled to compensation for disturbance. The difficulty is, we think, apparent rather than real, since, on the facts stated, we do not think that it would have been open to the arbitrator to find that the tenants quitted the holding otherwise than "in consequence of" the notice. The case, we think, falls within the principle of our second example. It is true that the validity of the notice was tested and established by means of an action to recover possession. We do not think, however, that the answer to the question can depend on whether an ejectment order is or is not, in fact, asked for or made. In order to ascertain whether what we have called the "causal link" exists or not, it is, we think, necessary to look beyond the mere form of the action and the mere form of the order. In the present case a reference to the defence put in by the tenants in the action before OLIVER, J., shows that under a certain amount of pleader's verbiage, the real point which fell to be determined was the validity of the notice which was attacked on a number of grounds, one at least of which, viz., that the notice was not given bona fide (whatever that may mean), was quite irrelevant, but it was a ground put forward for saying that the notice was invalid. In these circumstances we do not think that it would have been open to the arbitrator to find that when after the judgment the tenants quitted the holding, they did so otherwise than "in consequence of" the notice the validity of which had been established by the judgment.

We now come to the second of the two reasons for rejecting the tenants' claim which are put forward on behalf of the landlords. In considering the first reason we assumed that the second reason was a bad one. It depends on the true meaning to be attributed to the words "tenant" and "holding" in the context. The relevant provisions of the interpretation section (s. 57) are as follows:

(1) . . . unless the context otherwise requires—"Tenant" means the holder of land under a contract of tenancy, and includes the executors, administrators, assigns, guardian, committee of the estate, or trustee in bankruptcy, of a tenant, or other person deriving title from a tenant: "Holding" . . . means [with certain exceptions] any parcel of land held by a tenant . . . (2) The designations of landlord and tenant shall continue to apply to the parties until the conclusion of any proceedings taken under or in pursuance of this Act in respect of compensation.

We should ourselves have thought that to interpret the words "tenant" and "holding" as necessarily excluding a person who had been, but had ceased to be, a tenant, and land which had been, but had ceased to be, a holding, would have been to place an unwarrantably narrow construction on those words, particularly in view of the language of sub-s. (2) of s. 57, but we are relieved of the necessity of considering this question by itself—a course which would have placed us in some difficulty in view of Cave v. Page (1), hereinafter referred to—since any such construction is, in our opinion, excluded by the language of s. 12 (1) itself. We have already discussed the meaning of the phrase "in consequence of." The special significance of that phrase for this branch of the argument lies in the fact that, as we have pointed out, it postulates as a necessary condition of a claim for compensation the existence of nothing more than a causal link between the notice and the quitting. This appears to us to lead inevitably to the conclusion that the existence of a gap in time between the determination of the notice and the quitting by the tenant cannot possibly defeat a claim to compensation once the causal link is established. In other words, a tenant who quits in consequence of the notice, even if he does so after some interval of time, must be regarded as a tenant for the purposes of s. 12 (1), and similarly with the word "holding."

Counsel for the landlords relied on certain other passages in the Act in order to show the inconveniences which might result if the tenants were right. The most important of these points are as follows. Under s. 12 (6) compensation for disturbance is to be a sum representing "such loss or expense directly attributable to the quitting of the holding as the tenant may unavoidably incur upon or in connection with the sale or removal of" his household goods, implements, stock, etc. Under s. 12 (7) compensation is not to be payable (a) in respect of a sale unless the tenant has before the sale given the landlord a reasonable opportunity of making a valuation; (b) unless the tenant has, not less than one month "before the termination of the tenancy," given written notice of his intention to claim. Under s. 16 (2) a claim for (among other things) compensation for disturbance ceases to be enforceable "after the expiration of two months from the expiration of the tenancy" unless particulars of the claim have been given to the landlord. These references to "the expiration of the tenancy" are relied on as showing that the legislature cannot have contemplated the existence of an interval of time between the expiration of a notice to quit (which terminates the tenancy) and the quitting of the holding by the tenant. In particular, it is asked, how can the necessary information be given under s. 16 (2) if the quitting of the holding which puts the tenant to the expense upon which his claim to compensation is based, does not take place, as it well may not, for months after the termination of the tenancy? The answer to these objections is, we think, a short one. It may very well be that the legislature did not direct its mind to any case other than the normal one in which the tenant quits on the expiration of the notice, but we are concerned with the language which the legislature has used, and if, as we think, that language is clear, the possibility that unforeseen inconveniences may arise in practice must be ignored. It may be that by reason of s. 16 (2) the time within which a tenant can hold over without losing his claim to compensation is curtailed, but we express no opinion on this point which admittedly does not arise on the special facts of the present case.

At this point we may conveniently refer to the authorities in this court, of which mention has already been made. They are both reported in the 1923 volume of the WEEKLY NOTES and no fuller report appears to exist in either case. The first, Cave v. Page (1), was decided on Apr. 20, 1923, by a court consisting of SIR HENRY DUKE, P., BANKES and SCRUTTON, L.JJ. The statute which was applicable was the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1908. That Act provided, by s. 11, for compensation for disturbance, but only where the

A landlord had acted unreasonably as mentioned in the section. The words of the section were that in the cases mentioned "the tenant, upon quitting the holding, shall . . . be entitled to compensation for the loss or expense directly attributable to his quitting the holding which the tenant may unavoidably incur upon or in connection with the sale or removal" of his household goods, implements, stock, etc. The relevant provisions of the interpretation section (s. 48), were in substance the same as those already quoted from the Act of

B 1923. Notice to quit was served expiring on Mar. 25, 1920, but the tenant held over and was finally removed from the holding on Jan. 1, 1921, pursuant to an ejectment order made on Nov. 5, 1920, in proceedings instituted by the landlord. He had furnished details of his claim for compensation on Dec. 29, 1920, nine months after the notice to quit expired, but three days before he was actually ejected. Paragraph (d) of the proviso to s. 11 of the Act provided that no compensation under the section should be payable if the claim was not made

C within three months after "the time at which the tenant quits the holding." The tenant claimed that his claim was made within three months of his quitting the holding and that he was entitled to compensation. The question submitted by the arbitrator was whether he was so entitled notwithstanding that nine months had elapsed between the termination of the tenancy and the furnishing of the claim, and in view of the fact that the claim was made

D within three months of his quitting the holding. The county court judge decided that the tenant was not so entitled and this court affirmed his decision. SIR HENRY DUKE, P., at p. 179, said that the case depended on the words "the time at which the tenant quits the holding." He referred to the meanings of the words "tenant" and "holding" as given in the interpretation section, but neither he nor either of the Lords Justices referred to sub-s. (2) of that section, which is similar to sub-s. (2) of s. 57 of the Act of 1923

E (already quoted) providing for the continuation of the designation of landlord and tenant until the conclusion of any proceedings. The learned President then proceeded to say that, having regard to the interpretation section, from Mar. 25, 1920, the tenant was not holding under a contract of tenancy and the land which he persisted in occupying was not a holding within the meaning of s. 11. BANKES, L.J. (ibid), agreed, and said by way of dictum that the

F question in the case was not likely to arise again because it was set at rest by s. 10 of the Agriculture Act, 1920, which had then recently been passed, but did not apply to the case. This Act of 1920 had extended the right to compensation for disturbance to cases other than cases of unreasonable conduct by the landlord, and the language of s. 10 was, for all relevant purposes, the same as that of s. 12 of the Act of 1923. In particular, it for the first time used,

G in consequence of such notice the tenant quits the holding," in place of the words "upon quitting the holding" in s. 11 of the Act of 1908. BANKES, L.J., appears to have thought that these new words would have excluded the right to compensation in such a case as that before him. This, of course, was dictum only, and, with deference, we cannot agree with it, save on the assumption that on the facts it could properly have been found that the tenant, who appears

H to have been physically removed from the holding, had not quitted in consequence of the notice, but on the actual Case BANKES, L.J., refused to accept the meaning of the words "quits the holding" as being "takes his final departure from the holding," an interpretation which would have benefited those who broke their contracts. He also agreed with the President's view that the interpretation section excluded such a meaning. SCRUTTON, L.J. agreed. We are not, of course, entitled to say that this decision was wrong, but it was a decision on a different statute, and it in no way binds us in the present case. Indeed, assuming, as we must, that the interpretation put by the court on the Act of 1908 was right, it was based on the view that there must be a coincidence in time between the expiration of the notice and the quitting of the holding. The Acts of 1920 and 1923, on the other hand, as we have already said, appear to us to have envisaged, by the use of the phrase "in consequence of," not a coincidence in time, but what we have described as a causal link between the notice and the quitting.

This brings us to the second of the two cases, Mills v. Rose (2), reported at p. 330, which was heard on the following Nov. 23, by a court consisting of BANKES, SCRUTTON and ATKIN, L.JJ. It was a case under the Act of 1920, and the court had to construe the words "in consequence of" in relation to the facts found by the arbitrator. Notice to quit was given expiring on Mar. 25, 1922. On Feb. 18, the tenant gave notice of intention to claim compensation for disturbance. The tenant gave possession of the land immediately after Mar. 25, 1922, but did not quit the farmhouse owing to the serious illness of his wife. On May 29, 1922, the landlord obtained judgment for possession in default of appearance and a writ of possession was executed on June 28. This court reversed the decision of the county court judge on the Special Case, and held that the tenant was entitled to compensation. Cave v. Page (1), does not appear to have been quoted, nor is it referred to in any of the judgments. The arbitrator, in announcing his decision by letter, had found that the tenant quitted his holding in consequence of the notice to quit. BANKES, L.J., said (at p. 331) that, on this finding, no question of law arose, and that it was impossible to say that there was no evidence to support it. He thus treats the question as one of fact as we ourselves regard it. The Special Case had, however, been demanded and BANKES, L.J. said of it that it did not enable the court to decide whether the tenant did or did not, in fact, leave in consequence of the notice. He went on to say, however, that the obtaining and execution of the writ of ejectment were "in consequence of the notice to quit"—in other words, that it was not open to the arbitrator on the facts to hold otherwise. With this, if we may say so, we respectfully agree, since the only reason which appears why the tenant did not give possession of the farmhouse was the serious illness of his wife. SCRUTTON, L.J. (at p. 332), agreed that the proceedings were in consequence of the notice to quit and saw nothing that would entitle the landlord to any finding other than that the tenant did quit the holding in consequence of the notice to quit. ATKIN, L.J. (ibid), thought that there was no question of law and said that "although the tenant was put out by a writ of execution he none the less quitted the holding in consequence of a notice to quit inasmuch as the landlord's right to a judgment in ejectment depended upon the notice to quit." Save insofar as the opinions expressed appear to lay it down that in every case where there is a notice to quit followed by ejectment proceedings it must necessarily be said that the tenant quitted the holding in consequence of the notice, this decision appears to us to be in complete accord with the conclusions to which we have come independently of it. It treats the question as one of fact, it affirms our view as to the causal link implied by the words "in consequence of," and it disaffirms the view that coincidence in time between the expiration of the notice and the quitting of the holding is necessary before a claim to compensation can be made. On the matter above referred to in which the opinions expressed appear to go beyond what we ourselves think is the correct view, those opinions were, in our judgment, unnecessary to the decision, and we venture respectfully to disagree with them. In any case, if they be right and our view is wrong, the reasons for deciding the present case as we do decide it are, of course, strengthened. There appears to us to be no real conflict between this decision and the decision in Cave v. Page (1), because the latter was a decision on quite different language.

Two other cases were relied on by counsel for the landlords. With one of them—Dale v. Hatfield Chase Corpn. (3), we need not deal. The point in it which is relied on is that, under the Act of 1908, the person liable to pay the compensation is the person who was the landlord at the expiration of the notice to quit. This does not appear to us to have any bearing on the present question. The other case was that of Hendry v. Walker (4), decided by the Lord Ordinary (LORD CONSTABLE) in the Outer House of the Court of Session on Dec. 1, 1926. The Act there in question was the Agricultural Holdings (Scotland) Act, 1923, which for the relevant purposes contains similar provisions to those contained in the English Act of 1923. The tenant had refused to quit on the expiration of a notice to quit, his ground being that the notice was invalid. Ultimately the landlords obtained a decree of removal. The Lord Ordinary, after holding that he had jurisdiction to consider the questions (i) whether the tenant was a "tenant quitting the holding" and (ii) whether he quitted the holding "in consequence of the notice to quit," proceeded to examine Cave v. Page (1) and Mills v. Rose (2). Cave v. Page (1), in his opinion, supported the view that question (i) should be answered in the negative, and the judgment of BANKES, L.J. in that case appeared to him to suggest that a negative answer should be given to question (ii) also. He felt, however, some difficulty in reconciling the decision in Cave v. Page (1), with that in Mills v. Rose (2). On the whole, he preferred the reasoning in the latter case, but he preferred to base his judgment on the answer which he thought should be given to question (i) on the authority of the reasoning in Cave v. Page (1), i.e., that for more than a year prior to his removal there had neither been a holding within the meaning of the Act nor a tenant thereof. He thought that "the language and the provisions of the Act plainly imply that the quitting of possession upon which the statutory claim emerges shall take place at or immediately after the termination of the tenancy." With respect, we cannot agree with this broad proposition, and we have already given our grounds for thinking that the reasoning on which the decision in Cave v. Page (1), was based is not applicable to cases under the later Acts. LORD GODDARD, C.J., decided the point of substance in favour of the tenants. He found difficulty in reconciling the decisions in Cave v. Page (1) and Mills v. Rose (2), but he preferred the reasoning in the latter case. We do not share his difficulty in the matter of reconciliation for reasons already explained, but, with the modification which we have explained earlier in this judgment, we respectfully agree with him in his preference for the reasoning in Mills v. Rose (2).

We will now deal shortly with the question of jurisdiction. This question was raised by the Lord Chief Justice himself, who, without expressing any opinion of his own, thought it right to follow two decisions in the Court of Session in order that there might be uniformity of practice. The question arises in this way. Under s. 16 (1) of the Act of 1923 :

Any question or difference arising out of any claim by the tenant of a holding against the landlord for compensation payable under this Act . . . or otherwise in respect of the holding . . . and any other question or difference of any kind whatsoever between the landlord and the tenant of the holding arising out of the termination of the tenancy of the holding . . . and any other question which under this Act is referred to arbitration shall be determined, notwithstanding any agreement under the contract of tenancy or otherwise providing for a different method of arbitration, by a single arbitrator in accordance with the provisions set out in sched. II to this Act.

Schedule II contains a set of rules as to arbitration the object of which appears to be to provide a cheap and simple method of dealing with disputes. Under r. 10 the arbitrator is empowered and may be directed by the judge of the county court to state in the form of a Special Case "for the opinion of that court" any question of law arising in the course of the arbitration. Both parties before us very naturally supported the view that the Lord Chief Justice had, and that, on appeal from him, this court had jurisdiction to deal with the matter in controversy, and we did not have the advantage of hearing any argument to the contrary. On considering our judgments, we found it desirable to restore the case to the list for further hearing on the question of jurisdiction, and we had the advantage of hearing a very helpful argument from junior counsel for the landlords. We are bound to confess that, apart from authority, we should have thought that the present question was covered by s. 16 (1), and that the statutory arbitrator and the county court judge had exclusive jurisdiction, and that, in consequence, (i) the order of OLIVER, J. as to arbitration, (ii) the consequential submission by the parties, (iii) the Special Case, and (iv) the hearing before the Lord Chief Justice, were contrary to the provisions of the statute, and that this court could have no jurisdiction save on an appeal from a decision of a county court judge. It is noticeable that both in Cave v. Page (1) and in Mills v. Rose (2), no doubt appears to have suggested itself to the mind of this court as to the jurisdiction of the county court judges from whom the appeals in those cases were brought, but the subject of the scope of s. 16 (1) was much debated in later cases—in which neither Cave v. Page (1) nor Mills v. Rose (2), appear to have been cited. We do not propose to burden this judgment by a detailed examination of the authorities, since we feel bound by what appears to us to be the ratio decidendi of the decision of this court in Lowther v. Clifford (5). The point which, it was argued in that case, must go to arbitration under the statute, was different from the point which we have had to consider, but the court placed a limited construction on s. 16 (1). The substance of the decision was, as it appears to us, that s. 16 (1) must be construed as a procedure section dealing only with those matters which in other parts of the Act are referred to arbitration. It is not for us to criticise the reasoning on which this construction was based, nor to discuss the rather strange consequences to which, in Olive v. Paynter (6), the decision in Lowther v. Clifford (5), was held by this court to lead. In the present case, the question of substance is whether or not the necessary condition for the making of a claim to compensation for disturbance was satisfied, viz., the quitting of the holding in consequence of the notice. Nowhere in the Act is this question referred to arbitration, and the result, in our opinion, necessarily follows from Lowther v. Clifford (5), that it does not fall within s. 16 (1) as construed by this court. The Lord Ordinary, in Hendry v. Walker (4), decided that a question which was on all fours with the present question, fell outside the corresponding provisions as to arbitration in the Scottish Act, and he found support for this view in an earlier decision of the Court of Session in Donaldson's Hospital v. Esslemont (7). In feeling ourselves bound to decide as we do, we do not ignore the decisions in Cave v. Page (1) and Mills v. Rose (2), but, as the point was not considered by the court in either of those two cases, we cannot regard them as prevailing against the decision in Lowther v. Clifford (5). We need say no more on the question of jurisdiction save that, in our opinion, the state of the authorities, in the absence of an authoritative decision by the House of Lords, calls for the attention of the legislature, whose apparent object to secure a cheap and simple procedure seems, through the inadequacy of the language used, to have been singularly frustrated. In the result, the appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors: Sharpe, Pritchard & Co., agents for H. Oswald Brown, clerk to the Norfolk County Council (for the landlords); Tarry, Sherlock & King, agents for Blyth & Hornor, Norwich (for the tenant).

[Reported by J. CROCKETT, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

EVERETT v. ASSOCIATED EQUIPMENT CO., LTD.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Scott, Bucknill and Wrottesley, LJJ.), June 5, 6, 16, 1947.]

Workmen's Compensation—Partial incapacity—Declaration of liability—Earnings not diminished by injury—Illness causing workman's return to employment in which earnings diminished by injury—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925 (c. 84), ss. 1, 9 (3) (i).

The workman, whose previous occupation had been that of a tailor, worked as a turner during the war, and on Nov. 1, 1941, in the course of that employment, he suffered an accident which caused the loss of the top joint of the index finger of his right hand. After a short period of total incapacity during which he was paid compensation, he resumed work as a turner at his old wages, a declaration of the liability of the employers being recorded. In 1945, an affliction of the legs, from which he had suffered as a child, recurred, so that he could not continue working as a turner and he returned to tailoring, but, owing to the injury to his finger, he was unable to earn as a tailor as much as he had been earning as a turner at the time of the accident, and he claimed compensation.

Held: (i) the workman's right to compensation under s. 1 (1) of the Act of 1925 was established by the declaration of liability, and the quantum and conditions of compensation, which were the only questions before the county court judge, did not touch that right, which remained dormant until the partial incapacity of the workman to do the work of a tailor came into existence; the concomitance of a second cause of incapacity did not prevent the continuing operation of the cause within s. 1; and, therefore, the workman was entitled to compensation.

[AS TO COMPENSATION FOR PARTIAL INCAPACITY, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 34, pp. 914-917, paras. 1258-1260; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 34, pp. 414-416, Nos. 3364-3383.]

Cases referred to:

- A (1) Lysons v. Knowles (Andrew) & Sons, Ltd., Stuart v. Nixon & Bruce, [1901] A.C. 79; 70 L.J.K.B. 170; 84 L.T. 65; 65 J.P. 388; 34 Digest 423, 3433.
 (2) Ball v. Hunt (William) & Sons, Ltd., [1912] A.C. 496; 81 L.J.K.B. 782; 106 L.T. 911; 34 Digest 395, 3228.

APPEAL by a workman from an award of His Honour JUDGE REES, at Uxbridge County Court, dated Oct. 4, 1946.

- B The county court judge held that the workman abandoned his former trade as a tailor when he became employed as a turner, and that the aggravation of an infirmity, unconnected with the accident, which made it impossible for him to continue work as a turner deprived him of his accrued right under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925.

Edgedale, K.C., and H. Lester for the workman.

John Russell for the employers.

- C Cur. adv. vult.

- June 16. SCOTT, L.J., read the following judgment of the court. This appeal by the workman must be allowed. The facts are not really in dispute, although we think the judge misapprehended one aspect of them. The workman, who was 41 years old at the time of the arbitration, as a child had suffered from infantile paralysis, which affected his legs permanently and made it necessary for him to be put into a trade where little standing would be involved. Tailoring was chosen, and in that trade he became proficient. His leg weakness became less and in May, 1941, he felt it his duty to take up some war work. He, accordingly, became a turner employed by the present respondents. On Nov. 1, 1941, however, he met with an accident within the Workmen's Compensation Acts which caused the loss of the top joint of the index finger of his right hand. He was paid compensation for total incapacity for a short time and then he resumed work at his old wages as the injury did not interfere with his work as a turner. The partial disablement, of course, was still there, but, as he was earning no less than at the time of the accident, it caused no present "incapacity for work," either total or partial, within the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925, s. 9. By consent, on Jan. 23, 1942, the time of his return to work at his old wages, a declaration of liability was duly recorded in the county court. Thereafter the workman continued to work for the employers as a turner at not less than his previous wages, but on Sept. 27, 1945, the paralysis of the legs became worse, and he could no longer stand to do the work of a turner. Accordingly, he gave up that work and resumed the trade of tailoring in which he had been brought up and which may properly be regarded as his own trade. The master tailor who had employed him previously employed him again, but his finger disability prevented him earning as much money as he had been earning from the respondent employers at the time of the accident or thereabouts. His claim, therefore, under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925, s. 9 (3) (i) for half the difference, took the form of a claim for review under s. 11, based on the declaration of liability.

- What, then, was the legal position? In our opinion, it was plain. The workman's right under s. 1 of the Act was established by the declaration of liability, and the only question before the judge was as to the amount and conditions of compensation under s. 9. As was pointed out by the House of Lords in Lysons v. Andrew Knowles & Sons, Ltd. (1), and again in Ball v. William Hunt & Sons, Ltd. (2), the workman's statutory right is vested in him by s. 1 of the Act and the quantum and conditions of compensation do not touch the right. For that reason the Acts of 1897 and 1906 relegated them to the schedule, and the basic distinction between the vested right and the quantum of compensation has not been altered by the subsequent Parliamentary transfer of the provisions about compensation from the schedule to the body of the Act, now to be found in s. 9.

What then was the workman's position when working for the respondent employers on his return to them after his finger amputation had healed up? Obviously, he still owned his latent right to receive compensation as and when his actual earnings—or, if he was not, in fact, earning, his ability to earn—might fall below his pre-accident earnings, in which event he automatically became pro tanto incapacitated for work and so entitled to receive half that difference. Until he left his employment as a turner his right was, as it were, dormant, but the moment the facts contemplated by s. 9 (3) (i) came into existence it became active again. The judge made the mistake of assuming that the aggravation of the workman's old trouble, which made it impossible for him to continue work as a turner, deprived him of his accrued right under the Workmen's Compensation Act. He forgot that the concomitance of a second cause does not prevent the continuing operation of the cause within s. 1 of the Act. There is one sentence in the judgment which we think indicates where the judge went wrong. He says:

It is true that, as a tailor, he is now unable to earn the wages that he could earn if he had not lost the tip of his finger. That loss is, without a doubt, a serious and disabling handicap in the tailoring trade. But he had abandoned that trade when he entered the service of the respondent employers [as a turner].

We can see no evidence to justify the statement that the workman had abandoned his trade of tailoring. On the contrary, his uncontradicted evidence was:

I gave up tailoring because I thought I ought to do some war work. I have been re-training my hand for tailoring . . . I wanted to do war work during the war and if the A.E.C. [i.e., the employers] did not retain me I intended to go back to tailoring.

The workman is partially incapacitated from doing the work of a tailor, and the law is clear that where a man is partially incapacitated for his proper work by an accident within the Act, the test of his actual earnings at that moment remains applicable to the ascertainment of the amount of his compensation, even though some other cause of incapacity be concurrent. When this workman met with his accident, he was of full capacity for tailoring work. As his present employer said: "but for the accident he would be earning £20 a week." The appeal must be allowed, the award below set aside, and the case remitted for the exact amount to be agreed, or settled by the judge.

Appeal allowed with costs.

Solicitors: W. H. Thompson (for the workman); Carpenters (for the employers).

[Reported by C. ST. J. NICHOLSON, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

Affirmed. H.L. [1949] 1 All E.R. 841.

Re MIDLETON'S SETTLEMENT, COTTESLOE v. H.M. ATTORNEY-GENERAL.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Lord Greene, M.R., Cohen, L.J., and Vaisey, J.), June 6, 9, 10, 1947.]

Estate Duty—Settlement—Investments in England representing proceeds of sale of land in Eire—"Purpose of devolution"—Settled Land Act, 1882 (c. 38), s. 22 (5)—Irish Free State Constitution Act, 1922 (Session 2) (c. 1), sched. I, art. 73.

Certain securities, transferable on registers in England, represented the proceeds of sale of land situate in Ireland, arising under a strict settlement. The trustees were resident in England, and both the former and the present life tenants were domiciled in England. On the death of the first life tenant, estate duty was claimed in respect of the securities.

HELD: (i) art. 73 of the Irish Free State Constitution as set out in the Irish Free State Constitution Act, 1922, (Session 2), sched. I, by which all laws then in force in the Irish Free State were to continue to operate, had not the effect of continuing their operation outside the Irish Free State, and, therefore, the Settled Land Act, 1882, s. 22 (5), by which capital money was for certain purposes to be considered as land, and which had been superseded in England by the Settled Land Act, 1925, could not be regarded for the present purpose as an enactment of the Parliament of the United Kingdom.

(ii) the incidence of estate duty was not a "purpose of devolution" within s. 22 (5), which dealt solely with the preservation of beneficial interests.

Re Stoughton ([1941] I.R. 166) not followed.

Marlborough (Duke) v. Attorney-General ([1945] Ch. 145) discussed.

Decision of ROXBURGH, J. ([1947] 1 All E.R. 345), affirmed.

[AS TO DUTIES ON FOREIGN PROPERTY, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 13, pp. 246-248; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 21, p. 17, Nos. 89-96.]

Cases referred to :

(1) Re Stoughton, [1941] I.R. 166.

(2) Marlborough (Duke) v. Attorney-General (No. 2), [1945] Ch. 145; Digest Supp.

(3) Re Cartwright, Cartwright v. Smith, [1938] 4 All E.R. 209; [1939] Ch. 90; Digest Supp.

B APPEAL from a decision of ROXBURGH, J., dated Jan. 28, 1947, and reported [1947] 1 All E.R. 345.

ROXBURGH, J., held that investments in the United Kingdom representing the proceeds of sale of land situated in Eire were not property situate out of the United Kingdom and were liable to estate duty. The facts appear in the judgment of LORD GREENE, M.R.

G. R. Upjohn, K.C., and D. Buckley for the appellant (the life tenant).

C N. C. Armitage for the trustees.

J. H. Stamp for the Attorney-General.

D LORD GREENE, M.R.: This is an appeal by the second defendant, the second Earl of Middleton, who is tenant for life in possession under a settlement of May 15, 1909. The question raised by the appeal is as to the position with regard to estate duty on certain investments held by the trustees of the settlement for the purposes of the Settled Land Act, 1882. The investments with which we are concerned are what are described in the affidavit as the English investments, being "inscribed or registered stock or shares transferable in the books of the Bank of England or on registers kept in England." They are, therefore, prima facie, located in England. Under one of the well-known rules which attribute location to property, the location of shares in an English company, transferable on an English register, is to be treated as in this country.

E The settlement was originally a settlement of Irish land. The present tenant for life and his father, the first tenant for life and the first earl, were both domiciled in England, the father being domiciled there at the date of his death, and the son being domiciled there now. The trustees are in England and the investments are in England. Therefore, prima facie, I should have thought that there could be no possible question that, on the death of the first earl, the property passed within the meaning of the Finance Act, 1894, and on that passing estate duty was attracted.

F Had the matter stood there, I do not think that this would be contested, but it is said that, for the purposes of estate duty, these investments must be regarded as located in the Irish Free State. The argument in support of that proposition is a complicated one, but it seems to me that there are several grounds for holding that it cannot succeed. It is said that the investments, G for the purposes of English estate duty, must be regarded as land situate in Ireland, and reference is made to the Settled Land Act, 1882, s. 22 (5), which is the relevant Act for present purposes. By that sub-section it is provided :

H Capital money arising under this Act while remaining uninvested or unapplied, and securities on which an investment of any such capital money is made, shall, for all purposes of disposition, transmission, and devolution, be considered as land, and the same shall be held for and go to the same persons successively, in the same manner and for and on the same estates, interests, and trusts, as the land wherefrom the money arises would, if not disposed of, have been held and have gone under the settlement.

First, it is said that that sub-section applies to the present case and its effect is that these investments must be treated not merely as land, but as land locally situated in Ireland, the investments having been derived ultimately from the proceeds of the sale of the Irish settled land. It is argued that the phrase "for all purposes of disposition, transmission, and devolution" includes estate duty as being an incident of devolution. Next, the Crown says: How can the Settled Land Act, 1882, which, in effect, is now to be treated as an Irish Act, operate to defeat the claim to estate duty of the United Kingdom revenue by making alterations in what is, prima facie, the location of property? Counsel for the life tenant concedes that if, just before the death of the first earl, the Irish Free State Parliament had chosen to pass an Act purporting to declare the locality of property physically situated in England as Irish, that could not possibly have had an extra-territorial effect in this country so as to defeat the operation of the Finance Act as applied to property situated here, but he says that this is not the position, because the Settled Land Act, 1882, for all relevant purposes must be regarded, not as an Irish Act having a purely Irish territorial effect within the Free State, but as an Imperial Act which is competent to declare or to regulate questions of the locality of property situated within the jurisdiction of the Imperial Parliament. It is argued that the Settled Land Act, 1882, was an Act of the United Kingdom Parliament, and that it applied, with certain modifications to Ireland, and that the provisions of s. 22 (5) applied to England as much as they applied to Ireland.

I might interpose that, for the purposes of estate duty, it made not the slightest difference, before the creation of the Irish Free State, whether property was located in England or Ireland, because it attracted British estate duty in any event, but the Crown rely on the Irish Free State Constitution Act, 1922, (Session 2), which was passed on Dec. 5, 1922, and was brought into operation by proclamation on Dec. 6, 1922. That Act provided that the constitution set out in the first schedule to a document referred to as "the Constituent Act" was, subject as mentioned, to be the constitution of the Irish Free State. Article 1 of the constitution provided that the Irish Free State :

... is a co-equal member of the community of nations forming the British Commonwealth of Nations.

Article 2 provided :

All powers of government and all authority legislative, executive, and judicial in Ireland, are derived from the people of Ireland and the same shall be exercised in the Irish Free State . . . through the organisations established by or under, and in accord with, this constitution.

Speaking generally, the effect was to constitute the Irish Free State as a co-equal member of the community of nations forming the British Commonwealth of Nations, raising it to the same status as the other self-governing parts of His Majesty's Dominions. At that time the Statute of Westminster, 1931, had not been passed, but under the recognised convention which governed the relations of the Commonwealth, the British legislature would not legislate for such a dominion as the Irish Free State without the consent of that country. That convention was given the force of law by the Statute of Westminster. Article 73 of the Free State constitution provides :

Subject to this constitution and to the extent to which they are not inconsistent therewith, the laws in force in the Irish Free State . . . at the date of the coming into operation of this constitution shall continue to be of full force and effect until the same or any of them shall have been repealed or amended by enactment of the Oireachtas [i.e., the parliament of the Irish Free State.]

Counsel for the life tenant contends that the Settled Land Act, 1882, was an Act of Parliament of the United Kingdom operating at its date both in Ireland and in England, that it remains as an Act of the United Kingdom Parliament, and, therefore, that it is not true to say that he is claiming by virtue of an Irish Act to alter the notional location of property situated in England. He maintains that he is relying on an Act of Parliament of the United Kingdom which has force locally in this country and is not confined in its operation to the Irish Free State. The Act of 1882 has been superseded in England by the Settled Land Act, 1925. The Act of 1882, we are told, has never been repealed or modified by the Irish legislature. Therefore, at the date of the death of the first earl, which was the date of the passing of the property, the Settled Land Act in force in this country was the Act of 1925 and the Settled Land Act in force in the Free State was the Act of 1882. It was said that the Act of 1882 still has the effect of altering in England the locality of property situated in England.

In my opinion, that argument completely breaks down. Article 73 had its force and effect by virtue of the Imperial Act which set up the Irish Free State. Constitutionally, it is imperial legislation. Although it originated in a document drawn up by persons responsible for organising the Irish Free State, it had not thereby any force in law. It could only have the force of law if it were given that force by United Kingdom legislation, but, in my opinion, the effect of art. 73, as construed in its context as part of the new constitution, is not to give to laws which are thereby said to remain in force in the Free State any extra-territorial effect so as to affect property outside the Free State. In my view, it can only mean that those laws shall continue to operate within the jurisdiction of the Irish Free State. To say that they will continue to operate, not merely within the jurisdiction of the Irish Free State, but extra-territorially, so that they would continue to operate in this country, appears to me to be a mistaken construction and not one which can be accepted in the case of a document which was setting up a new and independent co-equal member of the British Commonwealth. The result, in my opinion, is that the Settled Land Act, 1882, s. 22 (5), cannot be regarded for the present purpose as an Act of the United Kingdom Parliament, but must be regarded in the same way as an Act of the Irish Parliament which, as I have said, could have no jurisdiction to affect the law relating to the locality of property in the United Kingdom or to regulate that locality.

Counsel for the life tenant agrees that, unless he can succeed on that argument, he must fail in this appeal, and, in my opinion, he does fail on it.

He also fails, in my view, on his first argument on the construction of s. 22 (5). This is not a case of equitable conversion. Equitable conversion, based on the doctrine that equity regards as done that which ought to be done, requires a direction for sale to effect a change in the character of the property. There is no direction for sale here either in the Act or in the settlement. All that the Settled Land Act does is to give a power of sale. Obviously, it was necessary for the legislature to insert in the Act giving that power some provision which would ensure that its exercise should not prejudice the beneficial interests in land sold under the power. That was done by sub-s. (5). In my view, it is a mistake to regard sub-s. (5) as equivalent to or as expressing the same results as would arise on a conversion under the ordinary equitable doctrine of conversion. It does not say that the capital money and the investment of the capital money are to be considered for all purposes as though they were the proceeds of a direction to sell the land under the doctrine of equitable conversion. For certain limited and stated purposes, it enacts that the proceeds are to "be considered as land," and they are to be :

... held for and go to the same persons successively, in the same manner and for and on the same estates, interests, and trusts, as the land wherefrom the money arises would, if not disposed of, have been held and have gone under the settlement.

The object is, clearly, to preserve the beneficial interests and cause those beneficial interests to attach to the capital money in the same way as they attached to the land from which it was derived.

Counsel's argument involves two propositions. First, he has to say that the phrase "for all purposes of disposition, transmission, and devolution" includes the purposes of estate duty. He also has to say that the effect of sub-s. (5) is to treat capital money as located for those purposes in the same place as the land from which it was derived was located. Sub-section (5) appears to me to have nothing to do with location. Location was not a matter which was relevant for the purposes of the sub-section. All that the sub-section required to do was to ensure that the beneficial interests should be the same as regards the capital moneys as they had been regarding the land. To effect that result it was not necessary to bring in any reference to location at all. Wherever the land was located the same result would follow—that the beneficial interest would be preserved by virtue of those words. Apart from that, the words "for all purposes of disposition, transmission, and devolution" show that it is only for those selected purposes that capital money is to be considered as land. The sub-section clearly recognises that for other purposes, any purposes not falling under those three heads, capital money will not be considered as land because there is nothing to make it land. Therefore, it would remain personal property.

Counsel for the life tenant says estate duty is only exigible on a devolution described as a "passing" under the Finance Act, I am not going to stop to consider whether the word "passing" and the word "devolution" mean the same thing, but I venture to doubt it. What I do think is that estate duty is not a purpose of devolution. The devolution of property, if it be treated as the equivalent of passing, is merely the occasion on which the Crown steps in and levies duty. It is an incident, not a purpose, of devolution. It is something entirely outside the beneficial interests, inter se, which are preserved by the sub-section. It is a third party intervening on the occasion of the devolution and taking a toll. It seems to me impossible to say that that is covered by the sub-section. In my opinion, that argument also fails.

Counsel relied on certain authorities, and his principal authority was the Irish case of Re Stoughton (1), which raised a question under the Finance Act, 1894, s. 2 (2), a sub-section which is still in operation in Eire. The sub-section provides :

Property passing on the death of the deceased, when situate out of the United Kingdom, shall be included only if, under the law in force before the passing of this Act, legacy or succession duty is payable in respect thereof or would be so payable but for the relationship of the person to whom it passes.

In the application of that sub-section, for "the United Kingdom" would have to be read "Eire." The case turned on the question whether succession duty would have been payable. The question of the notional location of the English investments there in issue, which were derived from sales of Irish land, was not discussed by counsel, so far as appears from the report which contains a very full statement of the argument on both sides. HANNA, J., came to the conclusion that Irish succession duty would have been payable, and, therefore, that estate duty was also payable. I might mention that there is no question about s. 2 (2) in the present case, but, at the conclusion of his judgment, HANNA, J., refers to the Settled Land Act, which he said for the purposes of that case was an Irish Act. He said ([1941] I.R. 181) that the change was made :

... in pursuance of certain statutory rights and privileges given by the Irish law in relation to land. The sale of the lands was a joint operation under the powers of the Settled Land Act, 1882, and the Irish Land Act of 1903, the provisions of which Acts enable the proceeds of the sale to be followed wherever they may be and in whatever form, so that there is impressed upon such proceeds the notional character of Irish land . . . I am of opinion that the effect of these sections is to give a complete answer to the argument of the petitioners and to establish not only that the English securities are notional Irish land but that the claim of the Revenue Commissioners [i.e., the Southern Ireland Revenue Commissioners] to have the estate duty charged upon the proceeds falls upon them. The succession of William Anthony Stoughton was, in my opinion, a "devolution" within the meaning of the words in s. 22 (5) of the Settled Land Act, 1882, under the will, and also one of a series of successions made by "the disposition" thereunder. This brings the securities within one or other, or both, of the words in s. 22 (5), of the Settled Land Act. These words cannot refer to the barest legal meaning to be applied to the terms and would, in my opinion, carry with them the legal incidents or obligations such as estate duty attached thereto by statute or otherwise.

Counsel relies on that, and I should, of course, pay great respect to a decision of HANNA, J., but I must point out that it was a decision on a point which, apparently, was not argued before him so that he did not have the advantage of having the various difficulties pointed out. That being so, I cannot attach to his observations the weight I otherwise should. I hope in saying that I shall not be thought disrespectful, but for the reasons I have given, in so far as he held that s. 22 (5) could alter the prima facie location of investments representing capital moneys in England, I must disagree with him.

That is the only case in which the point was discussed or referred to in a judgment except for one casual reference to it in Duke of Marlborough v. Attorney-General (No. 2) (2), a case dealing with an entirely different question which arose under the Finance Act, 1894, s. 5 (5), which concerns, among other things, land settled by Act of Parliament. There was an annuity settled on the first duke and his heirs and successors by an Act of Parliament. It was, therefore, personalty in its origin. That was commuted for a capital sum which was invested, by an order of court, in land in London. CHITTY, J., made an order under which the London freeholds so purchased were to be deemed as temporary investments only, and they were, accordingly, conveyed to trustees on trust for sale with power to retain. The question there was whether the London freeholds were land within s. 5 (5) of the Act of 1894. The Crown argued that what had to be looked at to ascertain whether the property was land was the original settled property. There was also a statutory settlement of land and it was necessary for the Crown, to be logical, to maintain precisely the same principle in its argument in connection with both settlements. MORTON, L.J., in delivering the judgment of the court, said ([1945] Ch. 153) that at the date of the death of the ninth duke, the occasion which was relevant to the claim :

... the London freeholds were undoubtedly lands in fact, and it is contended by counsel for the duke that the trusts of the deed of Apr. 11, 1905, were not such as to convert them into personalty. Counsel conceded, however, that if the deed did operate to convert the London freeholds into personalty for the purposes of transmission and devolution, they must also be regarded as converted into personalty for fiscal purposes.

It is to be observed that that was the basis on which the court was approaching the matter. The court had no need to consider the question we are considering here, and, in particular, the question there had nothing whatever to do with the Settled Land Act, 1882, s. 22 (5). It was a question only, so far as the results of the conversion were concerned, of the effect of a deed of conveyance which, in accordance with the order of CHITTY, J., contained a trust for sale.

Therefore, it was not concerned with the special statutory provisions under which the proceeds of land sold under the powers of the Settled Land Act are, for the limited purposes mentioned in s. 22 (5), to be considered as land.

Counsel endeavoured to extract from some words of my own in Re Cartwright (3), a general proposition which assisted him. I only refer to the case to point out that, when it is read and the facts are appreciated, it is obvious that the language I used was in reference to the circumstances of that case and had nothing to do with any question of duty. Those words cannot be used to support counsel's argument in this case. In my opinion, the life tenant fails, and the appeal must be dismissed. Although the reasons that he gave are, perhaps, not quite the same in some respects as those which I have expressed, I agree that the conclusion to which ROXBURGH, J. came was the correct one.

COHEN, L.J. : I agree. Counsel for the Crown argued that, according to ordinary principles, the investments in question in this case would inevitably be regarded as locally situated in England, and, therefore, subject to estate duty in England. He also pointed out that, to escape this liability, the life tenant must establish, first, that the Settled Land Act, 1882, as it affects Irish land and the proceeds of sale of Irish land, has the force of a statute in this country, and, secondly, that the assessment of liability to estate duty is a purpose of disposition, transmission, and devolution within the Settled Land Act, 1882, s. 22 (5). ROXBURGH, J., decided the case on the ground that the life tenant had not negotiated the first hurdle. He was inclined to think that, if he had overcome that obstacle, he would still have failed at the second one. I agree with my Lord, the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, that he falls at both fences.

I do not desire to add anything to what my Lord has said so far as the first obstacle is concerned, but I will add a few words on the question whether the ascertainment of liability to estate duty can be said to be a purpose of disposition, transmission, and devolution. Counsel for the life tenant pointed out that, in cases where the equitable doctrine of conversion applies, the court has given full effect to that doctrine when considering whether the Crown has the right to demand payment of some particular duty, but that is because of the principle that equity regards as done that which ought to be done. That principle can have no effect here, because there is no obligation under the Settled Land Act, 1882, to invest the proceeds of sale of settled land in land. Land is only one of the investments which are the authorised investments of capital moneys. Counsel conceded that he must bring the case within the limited purposes defined by s. 22 (5), namely, "the purposes of disposition, transmission, and devolution," but he argued that the question of estate duty, being an incident inevitably arising on the passing of property, that is to say, on the devolution of property, the assessment of duty must be regarded as part of "the purposes of devolution." I entirely agree with the observations made by my Lord in rejecting that argument. It seems to me that what the sub-section is dealing with is the disposition, transmission and devolution of the beneficial interests in the property. It is not directed at, nor is it framed very aptly to affect, the rights of creditors. The Crown is really in the position of a creditor. It has, it is true, a statutory charge on the assets—including the investments now in question—but its rights none the less are those of a creditor.

For these reasons, in addition to those which were given by my Lord, I agree that this appeal fails. A VAISEY, J.: I agree with the judgments delivered by my Lords.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors: Warrens (for the trustees and for the tenant for life); Solicitor of Inland Revenue (for the Attorney-General).

[Reported by J. A. CROCKETT, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.] B COVERED MARKETS, LTD. v. (

Not followed. ADLER v. BLACKMAN, [1952] 2 All E.R. 41.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Macnaghten, J.), June 11.]

Disapproved. ADLER v. BLACKMAN, [1952] 2 All E.R. 945.

Landlord and Tenant—Duration of tenancy—Yearly tenancy remaining in possession—Rent payable weekly. C

In 1934 or 1935 the landlord granted to the tenant a lease of a lock-up fish shop for a period of 7 years at a rent of £3 payable weekly in advance. The tenant paid that amount every Monday throughout the term of the lease and thereafter until June 13, 1946 when he was served with a notice to quit expiring on June 24, 1946. The lease and counterpart were lost or destroyed and the exact contents thereof were unknown. In a claim for possession:—

HELD: the proper inference to be drawn from the circumstances was that there was a yearly tenancy on the termination of 7 years, and the action, therefore, failed. D

Observations of MAUGHAM, J., in Ladies' Hosiery & Underwear, Ltd. v. Parker ([1930] 1 Ch. 304) distinguished.

[AS TO TENANCY FROM YEAR TO YEAR BY PRESUMPTION OF LAW, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 20, p. 124, para. 137; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 31, pp. 52-58, Nos. 2003-2044.] E

Case referred to:

(1) Ladies' Hosiery & Underwear, Ltd. v. Parker, [1930] 1 Ch. 304; 99 L.J.Ch. 201; 142 L.T. 299; Digest Supp.

ACTION by the landlord for recovery of possession. The facts appear in the headnote. F

B. B. Stenham for the landlord.

C. Lewis Hawser for the tenant.

MACNAGHTEN, J., recited the facts and continued: The action is brought on the footing that when the term of 7 years expired, as it must have expired before June 28, 1946, when the writ was issued, the tenant, who had been lessee for 7 years and has remained in possession ever since, then became a weekly tenant who could be ejected from the shop at a week's notice. Counsel for the landlord relies on a passage in the judgment of MAUGHAM, J., in Ladies' Hosiery & Underwear, Ltd. v. Parker (1) [1930] 1 Ch. 327, where the learned judge, having decided the case, added some observations with regard to the matter which were obiter dicta. He held that in the circumstances of that case there was no ground to enable the court to draw the inference that on the termination of a lease for 3 years at a rent of £2 a week, payable weekly, the tenant became a tenant from year to year. The Court of Appeal held that the circumstances were such that no consensus between the lessor and the lessee could be inferred and they disposed of the case shortly on that ground. I do not understand MAUGHAM, J., as saying that where rent is payable weekly the proper inference may not be that the tenant who held over is a tenant from year to year. In the present case the circumstances were very different from those in the case dealt with by MAUGHAM, J., where the subject-matter was G a piece of vacant ground. In this case it is a fishmonger's shop, and the tenant for 7 years carried on his business under his lease and has been allowed to stay on for several years after the termination of that period. In my opinion, the proper inference from the circumstances is that there was a yearly tenancy on the termination of the 7 years, whenever that took place, and the result is the action fails and there will be judgment for the tenant with costs.
H

Judgment for tenant with costs.

A Solicitors: Elwell & Binford Hole (for the landlord); Manches & Co. (for the tenant).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

B J. L. FAIRRIE v. J. M. HALL (INSPECTOR OF TAXES).

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Macnaghten, J.), June 9, 10, 1947.]

Income Tax—Assessment—Deductions against profits—“Loss . . . connected with or arising out of trade”—“Disbursement wholly and exclusively laid for purposes of trade”—Damages and costs in libel action—Libel by sugar broker against chairman of rival company—Income Tax Act, 1918 (c. 40). sched. D, cases I and II, r. 3 (a) (e).

C The taxpayer, a sugar broker, had published a malicious libel against the chairman of a rival company, accusing him of using an official position for advancing the interests of his own company, and, in a libel action brought by the chairman, the taxpayer had to pay £550 damages and the costs of the action which amounted to £3,025. He claimed that these sums should be deducted from the assessment made on him under the Income Tax Act, 1918, sched. D, in respect of his profits as a sugar broker:—

D HELD: the damages and costs (although in one sense connected with the taxpayer's trade in that his object in publishing the libel was to increase his own profits) were not a loss “connected with or arising out of” his trade within the meaning of the Income Tax Act, 1918, sched. D, cases I and II, r. (3) (e) (and semble they were not a disbursement or expense “wholly and exclusively laid out or expended for the purposes of the trade” within r. 3 (a)), and they could not, therefore, be deducted from the assessment made on the taxpayer under sched. D.

E Strong & Co., Ltd. v. Woodfield ([1906] A.C. 448) and Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Warnes & Co. ([1919] 2 K.B. 444) applied.

[AS TO TRADE EXPENSES, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 17, pp. 149-156, paras. 309-320; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 28, pp. 42-45, Nos. 215-226, and p. 46, Nos. 233-236.]

F Cases referred to:

(1) Strong & Co., Ltd. v. Woodfield, [1906] A.C. 448; 75 L.J.K.B. 864; 95 L.T. 241; 5 Tax. Cas. 215; 28 Digest 57, 290.

(2) Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Warnes & Co., [1919] 2 K.B. 444; 89 L.J.K.B. 6; 121 L.T. 125; 12 Tax Cas. 227; 28 Digest 46, 235.

CASE STATED by Special Commissioners of Income Tax.

G The commissioners confirmed an assessment made on the taxpayer under the Income Tax Act, 1918, sched. D, rejecting a claim by the taxpayer that sums paid by him as damages and costs in a libel action should be deducted, in making the assessment, from his profits as a sugar broker. The facts appear in the judgment.

Borneman for the taxpayer.

H Sir Patrick Hastings, K.C., and Reginald P. Hills for the Crown.

MACNAGHTEN, J.: This is an appeal by Mr. J. L. Fairrie, a sugar broker in the city of London, against a decision of the Special Commissioners of Income Tax confirming an assessment to income tax under sched. D to the Income Tax Act, 1918, for the year ending Apr. 5, 1943.

The taxpayer, who acted as selling agent in London for a company called Calban Lobo which produced sugar in Cuba, was sued for libel by a Mr. William James Rook. Mr. Rook was chairman of Czarnikow, Ltd., a company of very high standing in the city of London, who acted as selling agents for various sugar producers throughout the world, and, among others, for a firm interested in sugar produced in Cuba. Shortly after the war broke out, Mr. Rook, by reason of his high standing in the city of London, was appointed Deputy Director of Sugar Supplies at the Ministry of Food. The alleged libel imputed against Mr. Rook that he had disgracefully abused his position as Deputy Director of Sugar Supplies in that he had used that position to advance the interests of the company of which he was chairman and of their clients in Cuba. The action came on for trial without a jury before ATKINSON, J. The defence raised was that the occasion of the communication of the libel was privileged because it was made in defence of the interests of the Calban Lobo company. That defence failed. ATKINSON, J., awarded Mr. Rook £550 damages and directed that the taxpayer should pay the costs of the action. The taxed costs of the plaintiff amounted to £3,025. In this appeal the taxpayer contends that these sums ought to be deducted from the assessment made on him under sched. D. in respect of his profits as a sugar broker.

The material provisions of the Income Tax Act, 1918, are contained in sched. D. Rules Applicable to Cases I and II, r. 3, which provides as follows :

In computing the amount of the profits or gains to be charged, no sum shall be deducted in respect of—(a) any disbursements or expenses, not being money wholly and exclusively laid out or expended for the purposes of the trade, profession, employment, or vocation . . . (e) any loss not connected with or arising out of the trade, profession, employment or vocation.

These provisions are re-enactments of similar provisions in the Income Tax Act, 1842.

In my opinion, this case is concluded by the decision of the House of Lords more than forty years ago in Strong & Co., Ltd. v. Woodifield (1). In that case the appellants, Strong & Co., a brewery company, owned an inn and conducted it through a manager. A customer sleeping in the inn was injured by a chimney falling on him and the appellants had to pay £1,490 in costs and damages, because the fall of the chimney was due to the negligence of the appellants' servants whose duty it was to see that the premises were in a proper condition. The House of Lords, confirming the order of the Court of Appeal, held that no part of that sum of £1,490 could be deducted for the purposes of income tax from the profits made by the brewery company in the way of their trade. The case was decided in 1906 and, therefore, it was decided under provisions similar to those in the Income Tax Act, 1918, which were at that date contained in the Income Tax Act, 1842. Dealing with the provisions of s. 100 of the Act of 1842 (sched. D, cases I and II, r. 1, now r. 3 (a) supra), which provided that no sum should be deducted in respect of any disbursements or expenses, "not being money wholly and exclusively laid out or expended for the purposes of the trade," LORD DAVEY said ([1906] A.C. 453) :

I think that the payment of these damages was not money expended "for the purpose of the trade." These words are used in other rules, and appear to me to mean for the purpose of enabling a person to carry on and earn profits in the trade, etc. I think the disbursements permitted are such as are made for that purpose. It is not enough that the disbursement is made in the course of, or arises out of, or is connected with the trade, or is made out of the profits of the trade. It must be made for the purpose of earning the profits.

I do not think that that pronouncement by LORD DAVEY has ever been questioned. LORD LOREBURN, L.C., dealt with s. 100 of the Income Tax Act, 1842, (sched. D, case I, r. 3) which is now contained in r. 3 (e), viz., that no sum shall be deducted in respect of "any loss not connected with or arising out of the trade." LORD LOREBURN, L.C., in the course of his judgment, said (ibid., 452) :

A deduction may be allowed on account of loss, and this [i.e., the £1,490 which was claimed to be deducted] is a loss. The Act does not affirmatively state what losses may be deducted. It furnishes merely negative information. A deduction cannot be allowed on account of loss not connected with or arising out of such trade. That is one indication. And no sum can be deducted unless it be money wholly and exclusively laid out or expended for the purposes of such trade. That is another indication. Beyond that the Act is silent. In my opinion, however, it does not follow that if a loss is in any sense connected with the trade, it must always be allowed as a deduction ; for it may be only remotely connected with the trade, or it may be connected with something else quite as much as or even more than with the trade. I think only such losses can be deducted as are connected with in the sense that they are really incidental to the trade itself. They cannot be deducted if they are mainly incidental to some other vocation or fall on the trader in some character other than that of trader. The nature of the trade is to be considered. To give an illustration, losses sustained by a railway company in compensating passengers for accidents in travelling might be deducted. On the other hand, if a man kept a grocer's shop for keeping which a house is necessary, and one of the window shutters fell upon and injured a man walking in the street, the loss arising thereby to the grocer ought not to be deducted. Many cases might be put near the line, and no degree of ingenuity can frame a formula so precise and comprehensive as to solve at sight all the cases that may arise. In the present case I think that the loss sustained by the appellants was not really incidental to their trade as inn-keepers, and fell upon them in their character not of traders, but of householders. Accordingly I think that this appeal must be dismissed.

In the present case the loss which the taxpayer has sustained—£550 damages and £3,025 costs—is in one sense a loss connected with his trade, but the case falls, it seems to me, exactly within the words of LORD LOREBURN, L.C., when he said that the losses :

... cannot be deducted if they are mainly incidental to some other vocation or fall on the trader in some character other than that of trader.

The loss fell on the taxpayer in the character of a calumniator of a rival sugar broker. It was only remotely connected with his trade as a sugar broker.

The case seems to me to be plain beyond all possible doubt, and, bearing in mind that at that date the standard rate of income tax was 10s. in the £, it would, indeed, be preposterous if the taxpayer were allowed to deduct these sums from his assessment and were thus enabled to share equally with the public revenue the loss to which he was condemned by the judgment of ATKINSON, J.

In Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Warnes & Co. (2), decided by ROWLATT, J., the Commissioners of Inland Revenue appealed from a decision allowing a deduction of a penalty of £2,000 and costs which had been incurred and paid by the taxpayers in proceedings instituted against them by the Attorney-General. The taxpayers carried on the business of exporting oil to Norway, and in connection with the export of certain cargo it was alleged that they incurred penalties under the Customs (War Powers) Act, 1915, s. 5 (1). They were sued for a very large sum, but, by consent, judgment was taken for a mitigated penalty of £2,000, and they had to pay their own costs. ROWLATT, J., said ([1919] 2 K.B. 452) :

Now, undoubtedly this detriment, if I may use the vaguest word, is a "loss" in the sense that the respondents have had to pay £2,000, and, therefore do not possess the £2,000 which they otherwise would have had. It is also "connected with or arising out of such trade," because they committed the offence—or what must be regarded as the offence—in carrying out their trade. But the question is whether, within the meaning of the rule, it is a loss connected with or arising out of their trade. I may shelter myself behind the authority of LORD LOREBURN, L.C., who, in his judgment in the House of Lords, in Strong & Co. v. Woodfield (1), said that it is impossible to frame any formula which shall describe what is a loss connected with or arising out of a trade. That statement I adopt, and I am not sure that I gain very much by examining a number of analogies; but it seems to me that a penal liability of this kind cannot be regarded as a loss connected with or arising out of a trade. I think that a loss connected with or arising out of a trade must, at any rate, amount to something in the nature of a loss, which is contemplable [sic] and in the nature of a commercial loss. I do not intend that to be an exhaustive definition, but I do not think it is possible to say that when a fine—which is what the penalty in the present case amounted to—has been inflicted upon a trading body, it can be said that that is a "loss connected with or arising out of" the trade within the meaning of this rule.

I entirely agree with what ROWLATT, J., said. I, too, shelter myself behind the authority of LORD LOREBURN, and I think that it is not possible to say that damages for a malicious libel published by a sugar broker can be said to be a loss connected with or arising out of his trade within the meaning of r. 3 (e). Therefore, the appeal must stand dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors : Ernest Bevir & Son (for the taxpayer) ; Solicitor of Inland Revenue (for the Crown).

[Reported by W. J. ALDERMAN, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS v. LAURENCE PHILIPPS & CO. (INSURANCE), LTD.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Atkinson, J.), May 15, 16, 19, June 6, 1947.]

Revenue—Excess profits tax—“Capital employed in trade or business”—Insurance company promoting underwriting syndicates—Loans to persons added as “names”—Finance (No. 2) Act, 1939 (c. 109), s. 13 (3), sched. VII, pt. II, para. 1 (1) (b).

The objects of a company were, inter alia : “(1) To carry on the business of insurance brokers and insurance agents in all its branches. (2) To act as agents or managers for any insurance company, club, or association, or for any individual underwriter in connection with its or his insurance or underwriting business. . . (37) To lend money to any person or company . . .” In 1934 the company promoted at Lloyds the formation of a marine syndicate for which the company acted as underwriting agent, receiving a salary and commission from each member of the syndicate. In 1935, the company promoted a non-marine syndicate. It was not an economic proposition for a syndicate to be small, and, therefore, certain persons, three of whom were directors and one an employee of the company, were added as “names” in the syndicates. The company lent money to two of these persons that they might deposit the necessary sums to become underwriting members of Lloyds.

HELD : the loans were temporary deposits made by the company with the object of securing business, and constituted “capital employed in the trade or business” within the Finance (No. 2) Act, 1939, sched. VII, pt. II, para. 1 (1) (b), and, therefore, they should be included in the computation of the “average amount of the capital” for the purposes of s. 13 (3) of the Act and the assessment of excess profits tax.

[FOR THE FINANCE (No. 2) ACT, 1939, s. 13 (3) AND SCHED. VII, PT. II, PARA. 1 (1), see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 32, pp. 1195, 1221.]

Cases referred to :

- (1) English Crown Spelter Co., Ltd. v. Baker, (1908), 99 L.T. 353 ; 5 Tax. Cas. 327 ; 28 Digest 48, 250.
- (2) Waldie (James) & Sons, Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, (1919), 12 Tax Cas. 113 ; Digest Supp.
- (3) Reid's Brewery Co., Ltd. v. Male, [1891] 2 Q.B. 1 ; 60 L.J.Q.B. 340 ; 64 L.T. 294 ; 55 J.P. 216 ; 28 Digest 56, 285.
- (4) Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Gas Lighting Improvement Co., Ltd., (1923), 129 L.T. 481 ; 12 Tax Cas. 503, H.L. ; Digest Supp.
- (5) Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Imperial Tobacco Co. (of Great Britain & Ireland), Ltd., [1940] 3 All E.R. 248 ; [1940] 2 K.B. 287 ; 109 L.J.K.B. 737 ; 163 L.T. 310 ; Digest Supp.
- (6) Thomas Roberts v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, (1946) Excess Profits Tax Leaflet, No. 42.
- (7) Acme Flooring and Paving Co. (1904), Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, May 14, 1947, unrep.

CASE STATED by the Special Commissioners of Income Tax, who had held, in favour of a company, that sums lent by the company to a director and an employee of the company to enable them to be added as “names” in a syndicate promoted by the company at Lloyds were capital moneys employed in the company's business and were not investments. The facts appear in the judgment.

The Solicitor-General (Sir Frank Soskice, K.C.) and R. P. Hills for the Crown. Mustoe for the company.

Cur adv. vult.

June 6. ATKINSON, J., read the following judgment. Laurence Philipps & Co., Ltd., carry on business as insurance brokers and insurance agents in all its branches. They are, therefore, assessable to excess profits tax. Certain assessments were made on them for the years ending Dec. 31, 1939, and Dec. 31, 1940, against which they appealed. They claimed to be entitled to an increase in their standard profits for the purpose of ascertaining the excess profit in those two years because of an increase of capital employed in the business. The Special Commissioners decided in their favour, and the Commissioners of Inland Revenue appeal by way of Stated Case.

The Case states in para. 3 :

The objects for which the respondent company was incorporated include the following :

- (1) To carry on the business of insurance brokers and insurance agents in all its branches.
- (2) To act as agents or managers for any insurance company, club, or association, or for any individual underwriter in connection with its or his insurance or underwriting business . . . (37) To lend money to any person or company, and on such terms, as may seem expedient, and in particular to customers and others having or contemplating dealings with the company.

A To understand this case, one must appreciate how business is carried on at Lloyds. Risks are undertaken by groups of underwriting members known as "syndicates," the members of which are described as "names." That is a very apt description, for it is all they are. The entire business is conducted for the syndicate by an agent called the "underwriting agent." The underwriting agent controls the syndicate. It can wind up the syndicate. It can decide what share any member of the syndicate may have. [His Lordship quoted a typical agreement between a syndicate and an underwriting agent, and continued :—] The actual technical accepting of the risk, i.e., the signing of the slip, is done on behalf of the syndicate by a person known as the underwriter, but he is appointed by the underwriting agent. He may or may not be a member of Lloyds, and, if a member of Lloyds, he may or may not be a member of the syndicate on whose behalf he initials the slips. Each member of the syndicate authorises the underwriting agent to conduct the business on his behalf.

B In 1934, the respondent company, with the object of increasing its business, promoted the formation of a marine syndicate at Lloyds for which they would act as underwriting agents. This is a usual undertaking in the business of brokers and insurance agents. It was to consist of at least six names, but the ultimate aim was to have ten, or even more. Every member of the syndicate would have to be an underwriting member of Lloyds. To be an underwriting member of Lloyds a man has to deposit with Lloyds securities of a value fixed by the committee. In this case the values were fixed at £5,000 in respect of the marine syndicate. The more names there are in a syndicate the better. More substantial risks can be accepted, the overhead expenses are reduced, and the underwriting agent gets more salaries and more commission. Only four names could be collected at the beginning, and it was decided that Mr. J. P. Philipps and Mr. W. G. Henderson, two of the company's directors, should be added as names. The company appointed Mr. O'Bryen Broadbridge, who was a salaried servant of the company, to be underwriter of the syndicate, and in 1936 he was added as a name. In 1935 the company formed another syndicate, a non-marine syndicate. Again, at the outset only four names were obtained. Mr. Philipps and Mr. Henderson were made names in that syndicate, and in 1938 Mr. Broadbridge was added as a name. The value of the security to be deposited was fixed by the committee at £1,500 per member, later increased to £2,500. Today the marine syndicate consists of 14 members, and the non-marine of 13. There are material advantages in having in a syndicate persons closely associated with the underwriting agent, whether as directors or employees. Besides the fact that the agent gets more salary and commission, others are encouraged to join, and it creates confidence in the syndicate because members who are connected with the company are less likely to leave the syndicate, and the syndicate is less likely to transfer the underwriting agency to other insurance broking businesses.

C Neither Mr. Henderson nor Mr. Broadbridge could supply the deposit of £5,000 for the marine syndicate, nor the £1,500 for the non-marine syndicate, nor the further £1,000 when the £1,500 was increased to £2,500. The company, therefore, agreed to lend them these sums for the express purpose, the only purpose, of providing the necessary deposits. There was also other money to be found, the amount, fixed by the committee, to be deposited by the names with the underwriting agent to form the nucleus of the premium trust fund, a fund into which premiums are paid and out of which claims are paid. The necessary loans were made to comply with those requirements. Further, £300 was required by each of them for the first annual subscription, and one or two other small sums were also required. These amounts were also lent at 3 per cent. interest.

The question for the commissioners was whether, for the purposes of the excess profits tax, these loans were capital employed in the business of the company, or whether they were investments and, therefore, to be excluded from the computation of the capital for the purpose of the tax.

One deposit deed, that for the marine syndicate, is made between Broadbridge and the respondent company and the Society of Lloyds, and it recites that:

The candidate is desirous of being admitted to the privileges of an underwriting member of Lloyd's [and he has] caused or procured to be transferred to or into the name of the society the stocks funds shares or securities mentioned in the schedule hereunder written [which in this case consisted of 5,180 2½ per cent Funding Loan, 1956-61] (hereinafter called the "trust fund") to be held by the society upon the trusts and for the purposes hereinafter mentioned. [Then the deed witnessed and declared] that the society shall stand possessed of the trust fund upon trust for the company until the candidate shall be admitted a member of Lloyd's as aforesaid and from and after his admission upon trust to allow the trust fund or any part thereof to remain in its present state of investment [for so long as the society shall think fit]. . . . Upon trust until the committee shall receive notice in writing that the candidate has made default in paying the just claims upon any policy or policies . . . to pay the annual income of the trust fund to the company or its assigns or as it or they shall direct. . . . And subject to the trusts aforesaid the society shall hold the trust fund or so much thereof as shall not be applied for any of the purposes aforesaid in trust for the company or its assigns.

The non-marine agreement is to the same effect and relates to the £1,500.

The agreement made between the company and Broadbridge, which is similar to the agreement with Henderson, recites that:

Mr. Broadbridge has appointed the company to be the underwriting agents. . . . And . . . the company has made to Mr. Broadbridge the three following loans (hereinafter called the "marine loans") . . . (a) the sum of £5,000, and (b) the sum of £1,000, and (c) the sum of £300 7s. 2d. representing Mr. Broadbridge's first annual subscription, and entrance fee to Lloyd's. . .

There follows the list of loans for purposes connected with the non-marine underwriting representing £1,500 and £1,000—that £1,000 being held upon the trusts of the premium trust deed—and a further £10 for certain expenses. The deed witnesses that Broadbridge acknowledged that he was indebted to the company in the amounts of the marine loans and the non-marine loans therein before recited. The deed continues:

2 (a) The annual income of the first marine loan and the first non-marine loan or any part thereof from time to time outstanding or any investments representing the same shall be paid to the company in accordance with and subject to the provisions of the marine deposit deed and the non-marine deposit deed respectively. (b) The annual income of the second marine loan and the second non-marine loan or any part thereof from time to time outstanding or any investments representing the same shall be paid to the company. (c) Mr. Broadbridge shall pay to the company interest at the rate of 3 per centum per annum upon the third marine loan and the third non-marine loan. . .

3(a): The company hereby undertakes and agrees that no part of the said loans or any investments representing the same shall at any time be repayable to the company by Mr. Broadbridge, either directly or indirectly out of Mr. Broadbridge's premiums or other underwriting moneys, except out of ascertained net profits on closed underwriting accounts. (b): Mr. Broadbridge hereby undertakes and agrees that the net ascertained profits on closed underwriting accounts of his marine underwriting shall from time to time be paid to the company in repayment [of the loans in a certain order until they have been all paid.]

There is a similar provision as to the non-marine loans, and that he is entitled to repay them at any time. By cl. 5 it is provided that the marine loans outstanding shall become repayable to the company if Broadbridge ceases to be a member, or if the company ceases to be the underwriting agents, or if Broadbridge ceases to be the underwriter for the company's marine underwriting. There is a similar provision as to the non-marine loans. When the further £1,000 was required as extra security for the non-marine syndicate a memorandum was added that the company, having increased the amount of the first non-marine loan by the sum of £1,000, was to be in the same position as the original £1,500. So that there was no question that these advances did result in debts from Henderson and Broadbridge to the company.

This transaction was remunerative for the company. The account shows, for example, that in the year ending Dec., 1939, the company received by way of interest and dividend from Mr. Henderson £274, a salary of £200, and a commission of £230, and from Mr. Broadbridge £263 interest, £200 salary, and £230 commission. The following year, in the case of Mr. Henderson, the commission was increased to £249, and was a little less in Mr. Broadbridge's case, namely £216. In 1941 there was £420 commission in the case of Mr. Henderson, and £396 in the case of Mr. Broadbridge, and in 1942 £701 commission in the case of Mr. Henderson and £627 commission from Mr. Broadbridge. In other words, from the two of them, in 1942, the commission amounted to £1,300 in addition to salaries of £400.

A The Finance (No. 2) Act, 1939, s. 13 (3) provides :

... Provided that if the average amount of the capital employed in the trade or business in any chargeable accounting period is greater or less than the average amount of the capital employed therein in the standard period, the standard profits for a full year shall, in relation to that chargeable accounting period, be increased, or, as the case may be, decreased, by the statutory percentage of the increase or decrease in the average amount of the capital employed in the trade or business.

B That percentage is later fixed at 8 per cent. Section 14 provides :

(2) The average amount of the capital employed in a trade or business in the standard period or any chargeable accounting period shall be computed in accordance with pt. II of sched. VII to this Act.

Schedule VII, pt. II, para. 1 provides :

C (1) Subject to the provisions of this part of this schedule, the amount of the capital employed in a trade or business (so far as it does not consist of money) shall be taken to be ... (b) so far as it consists of assets being debts due to the person carrying on the trade or business, the nominal amount of those debts. . . .

Part II, para. 3, provides :

Any investments the income from which is by virtue of the provisions of part I of this schedule not to be taken into account in computing the profits of the trade or business, and any moneys not required for the purposes of the trade or business, shall be left out of account, . . .

D Part I, para. 6, provides :

(1) Income received from investments shall be included in the profits in the cases and to the extent provided in sub-para. (2) of this paragraph and not otherwise.

E Sub-paragraph (2) limits that to the business of a building society or a banking business, assurance business or business "consisting wholly or mainly in the dealing in or holding of investments." There is no doubt that this business was one in which the income received from investments was not to be included in the profits of the concern. If the income is not to be included, pt. II, para. 3, makes it clear that the investments themselves are not to be deemed part of the capital. It is to be noted here that all the profit resulting from the finding and use of this money was included in the assessed profits of the company. I do not know whether the interest was included, but it is sufficient to say that these large profits, which were received solely as the result of the financing of these two employees of the company, all form part of the profits in respect of which the assessment has been made.

F The Crown contends that these advances or debts to the firm were not capital employed in the business, or, if employed in the business, they were still only investments. On the other hand, the company says—and this is the view the commissioners have taken—that the money was used in its business in furtherance of an operation which was in the ordinary course of the business. It was used for business purposes to produce business revenue, and it resulted in debts which, according to the section I have read, form part of the capital of the concern. There is no doubt that the advances were loans and did result in debts owing to the company, but investments might do that as well, so that does not settle the question.

H In English Crown Smelter Co., Ltd. v. Baker (1) a company carried on the business of zinc smelting and they wanted to be certain of their supply of "blende." They bought two Welsh mines and they formed a new company to take them over and to work them. They lent money to this new company at various times. When they had advanced up to £40,000 they refused to advance any more, with the result that the company was wound-up and the £40,000 was a bad debt. The only question there was whether the bad debt could be brought into the profit and loss account as a trade loss reducing their profits. The commissioners took the view that it was not an ordinary business transaction.

They were of opinion that the amounts advanced to the Welsh company represented advances quite out of the usual course of trade, and, therefore, the debt was not an ordinary trade loss which would come into the profit and loss account. a view which was upheld by the court. That does not help much in the present case, because what was done here was something in the usual course of trade.

The next case referred to, Waldie & Sons v. Inland Rev. Comrs. (2), seems to me very much in point. There certain coal merchants, who had the exclusive disposal on commission of the output of a colliery in which they had a controlling interest, made advances to the colliery, and the question was whether those advances could be treated as capital for the purposes of excess profits duty assessments. It was held that they could. LORD SALVESEN said (12 Tax Cas. 117), and his remarks seem to me to be very applicable to the case with which I have to deal:

These being the facts and the respective arguments, I am of opinion that the appellants are right. I think in a commercial sense the sums in question were employed in the appellants' business. It was on purely business grounds that they made the advances and if they had no other business than that of agents for the First Coal Company there would have been no profits to assess. It is conceded that if they gave their customers long credits for payment of their accounts and so needed a much larger working capital than if they had been able to get cash on delivery of the coal which they sold, the additional capital so used would have been employed in their business. Equally I think they were entitled to use their capital in financing for business reasons the sellers from whom they derived the raw material in which they deal. Ex hypothesi they could not have withdrawn these sums from their business and put them on deposit receipt or invested them in war loan without materially affecting the profits of their own business. The sums advanced have none of the features that are associated with investments, e.g., any fixed permanence or any expectation of profit whether in the shape of dividends or otherwise. I think they were merely temporary items (as they are described in the argument for the appellants) in the running agency account, very similar to advances which a law agent may make to a client in the course of a litigation and for the purpose of enabling the litigant to carry on his suit.

Later he quotes with approval a passage from the judgment of POLLOCK, B., in Reid's Brewery Co., Ltd. v. Male (3):

"It is found on the facts that in no case is any loan or advance made by way of permanent investment whether it be by way of deposit of deeds, mortgage, promissory note or otherwise. That might not be perhaps in itself sufficient, but the description of the course of business shows beyond doubt that this is not capital invested; it is capital used by the appellants, but used only in the sense that all money laid out by traders whether in the purchase of goods be they traders only, or raw materials be they manufacturers or on loans in the case of moneylenders or pawnbrokers is used. It is used and is out of capital but is not invested in the ordinary sense of the word."

In Inland Rev. Comrs. v. Gas Lighting Improvement Co., Ltd. (4), the company, which carried on the business of refining and distributing petroleum and petroleum products, held shares in a Belgian company formed to sell petrol, and shares and debentures in two Roumanian oil producing companies. The shares in the Belgian company were acquired as part of an arrangement under which the respondent company transferred its existing business in Belgium to the Asiatic Petroleum Co. for which the Belgian company was to act as distributor. The shares and debentures in the Roumanian companies were acquired to secure a supply of crude oil. There was no question, but that those were investment transactions. The only point which was decided was whether the exclusion of investments in the clause in the schedule which I read was limited to the exclusion of investments not connected with the trade or business. The decision, quoting from LORD CAVE'S opinion (12 Tax Cas. 535) was:

I find nothing in the Act which compels or admits of such a limitation of the meaning of the word "investments." The expression cannot be intended to apply to investments wholly unconnected with the business to be assessed; for investments of that character could in no case be regarded as capital of the business, and it would be quite unnecessary to direct their exclusion. It must therefore refer to investments connected with the business, and I see no reason why it should not include an investment of part of the business capital in an outside security, though made with the object of forwarding the trading operations for which the business was constituted.

LAWRENCE, J., made some useful observations on this matter in Inland Rev. Comrs. v. Imperial Tobacco Co., Ltd. (5). Having read that passage from LORD CAVE, which I have already read, he said ([1940] 3 All E.R. 250):

In my opinion, the crucial words for the present purpose there used by VISCOUNT CAVE, L.C., are "in an outside security." That is the limitation which, in my opinion, has to be imposed upon these words.

Dealing with the question whether it was income from other properties, he says (ibid., 251) :

In my opinion, the rule contrasts investment income and trade profits. I think that the words mean, as VISCOUNT CAVE, L.C., seems to me to have suggested in his opinion in the Gas Lighting Improvement Co., Ltd. (4) case, income derived from sources outside the trade, and produced by money or money's worth not then used in the trade.

It seems to me it would be impossible to say that these profits were profits from an outside security or that they were investment income as opposed to trade profits. It is clear that the profits derived from this transaction were trade profits. In Inland Rev. Comrs. v. Gas Lighting Improvement Co., Ltd. (4) the House of Lords was dealing with something which was, beyond question, an investment. Here the question is whether or not these loans were investments. I think that this money was capital put into the business and expended in a business transaction. The income derived from the transaction was not from a source outside the trade, but was within it, it being a customary part of the company's trade to promote syndicates. If it was customary for the company to promote syndicates, it must be part of its ordinary business functions to advance money to the syndicates where required. The Case finds that it was not unusual for an insurance broking company to form and manage one or more underwriting syndicates. I think the payments were temporary deposits on loan made with the object of securing a business revenue, not some collateral kind of revenue, but ordinary business revenue. That business revenue is included in the assessed profits. It could not have been earned without these deposits being made to finance the two members. It was, therefore, capital employed in the business. All the time it was serving the essential purpose of maintaining Henderson and Broadbridge as underwriting members of Lloyd's.

There is never any difficulty about regarding money lying idle in the bank as money employed in the business providing there is a reasonable probability of it being wanted in the accounting year or in a short space of time thereafter : see Thomas Roberts v. Inland Rev. Comrs. (6) and Acme Flooring and Paving Co. (1904) Ltd. v. Inland Rev. Comrs. (7). These deposits on loan to Henderson and Broadbridge were performing an active operation as compared with the passive operation of such balances. I read the Finance (No. 2) Act, 1939, sched. VII, pt. II, para. 1 :

(1) Subject to the provisions of this part of this schedule, the amount of the capital employed in a trade or business. . . shall be taken to be . . . (b) so far as it consists of assets being debts due to the person carrying on the trade or business . . .

as meaning, or, at any rate, as including, debts arising from a business transaction or from the employment of money in the business. I agree with the Solicitor-General that the paragraph does not include any debt however it comes about, because an investment may lead to a debt—for instance, a mortgage is a debt, notwithstanding that it is an investment—but, if a debt arises from a business transaction or through the employment of money in the business, it seems to me that the debt is capital within para. 1 of pt. II of the schedule. I think these debts arose from the employment in its normal course of business of capital belonging to the company, and that it is impossible to regard the advances as an investment, if the word is used in its ordinary meaning or in any of the meanings suggested by LORD STERNDALE in Inland Rev. Comrs. v. Gas Lighting Improvement Co., Ltd. (4). It is an employment resulting in a considerable profit enuring to the company, not profit from an outside source, but profit enuring to the company in the conduct of its own ordinary business, a profit which would not have enured but for the use made of this money. In my view, there was ample evidence to support the finding of the Special Commissioners, and the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors : Solicitor of Inland Revenue (for the Crown) ; Slaughter & May (for the company).

[Reported by W. J. ALDERMAN, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

WOLFSON v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Atkinson, J.), May 19, 20, June 6, 1947.]

Income Tax—Sur-tax—Settlement—“Power to revoke or otherwise determine settlement”—Dividends from shares in investment company controlled by taxpayer—Whether power must be found in terms of settlement—Finance Act, 1938 (c. 46), s. 38 (1) (a).

The Finance Act, 1938, s. 38 (1) provides: “If and so long as the terms of any settlement are such that—(a) any person has or may have power, whether immediately or in the future, and whether with or without the consent of any other person, to revoke or otherwise determine the settlement or any provision thereof and, in the event of the exercise of the power, the settlor . . . will or may cease to be liable to make any annual payments payable by virtue or in consequence of any provision of the settlement . . .”

The capital of a private investment holding company consisted of 1,000 shares of £1 each of which the taxpayer held 700, his two brothers 100 each, and his father's trustees the remaining 100. Each share carried a vote. To make provision for their sisters, the taxpayer and his brothers entered into a deed of covenant, under which they each covenanted to pay to trustees for the benefit of the sisters such sum each year as, after the deduction of income tax, left a sum equal to the net amount of all dividends received by them during the previous 12 months on the ordinary shares of the company. The Special Commissioners held that the annual sum payable by the taxpayer must be treated as his income. On an appeal by the taxpayer the Crown contended that while, on the face of it, the settlement was innocuous, in fact, the taxpayer could stop the dividends or wind-up the company alone or with the consent of another person and that that was enough to bring the settlement within s. 38 (1) (a).

HELD: the power referred to in para. (a) must be found in the terms of the settlement and not aliunde, and, as no such power was to be found in this settlement, the gross equivalent of the net amount paid annually by the taxpayer under the deed was an admissible deduction in computing his total income for sur-tax purposes.

Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Payne (1941) (110 L.J.K.B. 323); Chamberlain v. Inland Revenue Comrs. ([1943] 2 All E.R. 200); and Jenkins v. Inland Revenue Comrs. ([1944] 2 All E.R. 491) considered.

MacAndrew v. Inland Revenue Comrs. (1943) (25 Tax Cas. 500) criticised.

[FOR THE FINANCE ACT, 1938, s. 38, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 31, p. 348].

Cases referred to:

- (1) Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Payne (1941), 110 L.J.K.B. 323; 23 Tax Cas. 610; Digest Supp.
- (2) Chamberlain v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1943] 2 All E.R. 200; 25 Tax Cas. 317; Digest Supp.
- (3) MacAndrew v. Inland Revenue Comrs. (1943), 25 Tax Cas. 500; Digest Supp.
- (4) Jenkins v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1944] 2 All E.R. 491; 171 L.T. 355; 26 Tax Cas. 265; Digest Supp.; affg. [1944] 2 All E.R. 160.

CASE STATED by Special Commissioners of Income Tax.

The commissioners held that an annual sum payable by the taxpayer under a certain deed of covenant must be treated as his income. The taxpayer appealed. The facts appear in the judgment.

Sir Roland Burrows, K.C., and L. C. Graham-Dixon (with them A. G. Tribe) for the taxpayer.

The Solicitor-General (Sir Frank Soskice, K.C.) and Reginald P. Hills for the Crown.

Cur adv. vult.

ATKINSON, J., read the following judgment. This is an appeal by the taxpayer against a finding by the commissioners that certain settlements which he made in favour of his sisters were of such a nature that he was still assessable in the amount of the income involved. The question is whether the gross equivalent of a sum of £14,612 10s. 0d. (net) paid by the taxpayer under a deed of covenant dated Mar. 26, 1940, is an admissible deduction in computing the taxpayer's total income for sur-tax purposes.

The Case states the following facts. In 1931 a company (then called the New Central Cinema, Stamford Hill, Ltd.) was formed with the object of carrying on a cinema business. The taxpayer was one of the signatories to the memorandum of association. On May 4, 1933, the name of this company was changed to Leonard Gordon Estates Ltd., and since 1933 the company has been used by the taxpayer and his brothers as a private investment holding company. The capital consisted of 1,000 shares of £1 each. The taxpayer at all material times held 700 shares; one brother, Charles, held 100 shares; another brother, Samuel, held 100 shares; and the other 100 were held by the trustees of a settlement made by the taxpayer's father. Each share carried a vote. The taxpayer wanted to make provision for his sisters, and he consulted his solicitor, Mr. Chetham, who was one of the trustees of the father's settlement. That resulted in a deed of covenant, dated Mar. 26, 1940, being entered into between the taxpayer, Charles and Samuel, all called the settlors, of the one part, and Mr. Chetham and the taxpayer in their capacity as trustees, of the other part. The settlors each covenanted as follows:

(1) Each settlor hereby irrevocably covenants with the trustees that he will on the first day of April in each year during the period of 7 years commencing on Apr. 1, 1940, or until his death (whichever period shall be the shorter) pay to the trustees an annual sum calculated according to the provisions contained in cl. 2 hereof each such annual sum to be held by the trustees upon the trusts and subject to the powers herein declared and contained. (2) Each annual sum hereinbefore covenanted to be paid by each settlor shall (subject to the proviso hereinafter in this clause contained) be such an annual sum as after deduction of income tax at the standard rate for the time being in force leaves a sum equal in amount to the net amount in the aggregate of all dividends received by him during the previous 12 months expiring on the said first day of April in each year upon the ordinary shares of Leonard Gordon Estates Ltd. held by him as set out in the first schedule hereto. Provided that if at any time any settlor shall sell or otherwise dispose for value of the said shares in Leonard Gordon Estates Ltd. or any of them now held by him the annual sum thereafter to be paid by that settlor pursuant to cl. 1 hereof shall be such an annual sum as after deduction of income tax at the standard rate for the time being in force leaves a sum equal in amount to the net amount of all dividends received by him during the previous 12 months expiring on the first day of April in each year from any of the said shares in Leonard Gordon Estates Ltd. as may still be held by him together with the net amount of any other dividends or income received by that settlor during the said 12 months from the re-investment pursuant to cl. 4 hereof of the net proceeds of such of the said shares in Leonard Gordon Estates Ltd. as have been so sold or otherwise disposed of for value.

By cl. 3 of the deed it was provided that the trustees should stand possessed of the annual sums paid to them by the settlors upon trust to pay to each of the beneficiaries so long as she should be living out of the sums received by them in each year ending on Apr. 1 such an annual sum as, after deduction of income tax at the standard rate for the time being in force, left £450. By cl. 5 of the deed it was provided that any settlor should be entitled to make any of the annual payments covenanted to be paid by directing Leonard Gordon Estates Ltd., or any other company, individual, firm, institution or concern in or with whom proceeds of sale or disposal should have been re-invested pursuant to cl. 4 of the deed to pay to the trustees on his behalf the net dividends in trust or other income upon the shares or other investments in which the net proceeds may have been re-invested. In the year in question, i.e., in respect of the year ending Apr. 5, 1940, the taxpayer paid £14,612 10s. 0d. net "on account of his liability under the said deed of covenant" to the trustees. The question is whether, in view of the terms of that settlement, the taxpayer is entitled to deduct the equivalent gross sum from his profits for the purposes of sur-tax.

The taxpayer contends that this is a perfectly straightforward settlement made to provide for his sisters. He had shares in an investment company which was paying good dividends and he wanted whatever he had to go to them. He did not want to part with his shares. He may have had good reason, for he could secure wise control over the share transactions of the company so long as he retained voting power. By covenanting to hand over a sum equal to what he received his sisters would get all the benefits, while he retained the power of seeing that this company was as successful as possible. I am told, though it does not appear in the Case, that, in fact, the company has been very successful. The Crown's case is that, while on the face of it the settlement is innocuous, if one goes behind it one finds that the taxpayer had 7/10ths of the shares of the company and that he could prevent the payment of any dividend and let the profits of the company accumulate, and then, with the help of one brother, could wind-up the company, when 7/10ths of the assets would come to him in the form of capital.

The main question to determine is the meaning of s. 38 (1) of the Finance Act, 1938. That section begins in this way:

(1) If and so long as the terms of any settlement are such that—(a) any person has or may have power, whether immediately or in the future, and whether with or without the consent of any other person, to revoke or otherwise determine the settlement or any provision thereof and, in the event of the exercise of the power, the settlor or the wife or husband of the settlor will or may cease to be liable to make any annual payments payable by virtue or in consequence of any provision of the settlement; or (b) the settlor or the wife or husband of the settlor may, whether immediately or in the future, cease, on the payment of a penalty, to be liable to make any annual payments payable by virtue or in consequence of any provision of the settlement; any sums payable by the settlor or the wife or husband of the settlor by virtue or in consequence of that provision of the settlement in any year of assessment shall be treated as the income of the settlor for that year and not as the income of any other person. . .

The taxpayer contends that only the terms of the settlement can be looked at, and that the terms of this settlement do not give any person the power to revoke or otherwise determine the settlement or any provision thereof. On the other hand, the Crown contends that one can go further afield than the settlement, and that, if there is some person who can stop payment of the dividends or wind-up the company alone or with the consent of another person, that is enough to bring the settlement within sub-s. (1) of s. 38.

Reading the section unaided by authority, I should say, without much hesitation, that the contention of the taxpayer is right. I think the words mean that the power must be found in the terms of the settlement. I am confirmed in that view by the following considerations: (1) The contrary view would give no effect whatever to the words in the opening line "If and so long as the terms of any settlement are such . . ." Those words might just as well not be there. (2) The contrary view would lead to results which would shock the sense of justice of any reasonable mind. For example, a settlor might settle shares in a company on persons dependent on him. Quite unknown to him, A. and B. might between them hold enough shares to put the company into voluntary liquidation. According to the Crown, that settlement is hit by the section, and would still be hit even if A. and B. acquired their shares after the date on which the settlement had been made. (3) Section 21 of the Finance Act, 1936, contains a provision as to income settled on children. The section may not be easy to understand completely, but, at any rate, it is clear with regard to when a settlement is not to be deemed to be irrevocable. The relevant provisions as to that matter are contained in sub-s. (8) and are that a settlement shall not be deemed to be irrevocable "if the terms thereof provide . . ." If it were the intention of the draftsman or of Parliament in extending the code relating to settlements in the Act of 1938 to make so drastic a change as that contended for by the Crown, a change which, after the passing of that Act, would apply to settlements already within s. 21 of the Act of 1936, surely different language would have been used, language such as, for example, "notwithstanding the terms of the settlement"—something to make it clear that the words hitherto applicable, "if the terms thereof provide," were to cease to apply and that the new language was to be construed as meaning "notwithstanding what the terms provide." It seems to me that anyone desiring to express an intention of that kind, which is a complete reversal of that part of s. 21 of the Act of 1936 to which I have referred, would have used some such words as those I have suggested. No one would use the words which are used to make a really fundamental change in the law applicable to settlements.

I find, however, something which, I think, is still more conclusive in s. 38 itself. By sub-s. (1), (which I have read): "If and so long as the terms of any settlement are such that—(a) any person has or may have power . . ." to determine and on determination ceases to be liable to make any annual payment. By sub-s. (2): "If and so long as the terms of any settlement are such . . ." There follows the same provision about having power to determine a settlement, and then: "(b) in the event of the exercise of the power, the settlor," or his wife, "may become entitled to . . . any part of the property or . . . income." Neither sub-s. (3) nor sub-s. (4) is introduced by the words "If and so long as the terms of any settlement are such that." Sub-section (3) provides :

If and so long as the settlor has an interest in any income arising under or property comprised in a settlement, any income so arising during the life of the settlor in any year of assessment shall, to the extent to which it is not distributed, be treated for all the purposes of the Income Tax Acts as the income of the settlor for that year, and not as the income of any other person . . .

Sub-section (4) is :

A For the purpose of the last foregoing sub-section, the settlor shall be deemed to have an interest in income arising under or property comprised in a settlement, if any income or property which may at any time arise under or be comprised in that settlement is, or will or may become, payable to or applicable for the benefit of the settlor or the wife or husband of the settlor in any circumstances whatsoever . . .

B There one has what seems to me to be a very striking contrast. The first two sub-sections are introduced by the words : "If and so long as the terms of any settlement are such that," and sub-ss. (3) and (4) contain no such language, but incorporate the words : "in any circumstances whatsoever." The Crown, in effect, are asking me to construe the first two sub-sections, ignoring the words : "If and so long as the terms of any settlement are such that . . ." and as if the words "in any circumstances whatsoever" were in those two sub-sections as well as in sub-ss. (3) and (4). That is, in effect, what the argument comes to.

C It is said one can ignore the terms of the settlement and go behind it, and, if one finds that the settlement can be determined "in any circumstances whatsoever," the income is to be deemed to be the income of the settlor. It seems to me that, if that had been the intention of sub-ss. (1) and (2), the language would have been very differently phrased. The contrast between the wording of sub-ss. (1) and (2) and that of sub-ss. (3) and (4) is so strikingly clear. Unaided by any authority, that would be the view I should form. Is there anything in D any case which is inconsistent with that view ?

The first case referred to was Inland Rev. Comrs. v. Payne (1). There the point could have been raised in the simplest way. On Mar. 13, 1937, the taxpayer incorporated a company with a capital of £100. He held 95 shares himself, and had complete control of the company. By a deed of covenant in Mar., 1938, he covenanted with the company to pay it £72 a week after deduction of tax during his life or until an effective resolution to wind-up. E During the following year he paid £3,744, and then there was a resolution to wind-up, and he claimed a corresponding gross sum as deduction from his income to reduce his liability for sur-tax. If the contention of the Crown today is right, that was a simple case. There was the covenant, the settlor was in control of the company, and he could wind it up at any time, and so put an end to his liability. It is the same sort of case as that with which I have to deal, F but no one suggested that you could go behind the deed and consider what the settlor could do. The taxpayer was held assessable, because the court took the view that, in considering the settlement, it could look at the whole transaction—the formation of the company, the constitution of the company, the shareholding of the company—but the court, apparently, took it for granted that the power had to be found within the settlement. SIR WILFRID GREENE, M.R., said (23 Tax Cas. 626) :

G The word in the definition clause of "settlement" which is relevant to that question is the word "arrangement." The word "arrangement" is not a word of art. It is used, in my opinion, in this context in what may be described as a business sense, and the question is : can we find here an "arrangement" as so construed ? It is said that the only element in this transaction which falls within the definition of "settlement" is the deed of covenant itself. I am unable to accept that argument. It appears to me that the whole of what was done must be looked at ; and when that is done, the true view, in my judgment, is that Mr. Walter Payne deliberately placed himself into H a certain relationship to the company as part of one definite scheme, the essential heads of which could have been put down in numbered paragraphs on half a sheet of note-paper . . . Now, if a deliberate scheme, perfectly clear cut, of that description is not an "arrangement" within the meaning of the definition clause, I have difficulty myself in seeing what useful purpose was achieved by the legislature in putting that word into the definition at all.

He goes on to discuss the voting power, and says (ibid, 627) :

The question in the present case is not as to the bare exercise of a voting right looked at by itself. That voting right was brought into the scheme and was an essential part of the scheme, and it was used as the mechanism by which Mr. Walter Payne should be in a position to bring his liability to an end. It so happens that under the particular device adopted the method of bringing that liability to an end was by exercise of the votes attached to his shares. But those voting rights, used for the purpose for which they were used, and playing the part in the scheme which they did play, are, in my opinion, properly described in the context of this section as a "power."

That seems to me to mean that one has to find a power in the settlement, but the settlement is not the mere document containing the covenant. It is the whole arrangement. If one looks at the whole arrangement one sees there a power carefully created for the purpose intended. All that was absolutely unnecessary if the argument of the Crown today is right. All that the court need have said was: "There is the covenant. There is, in fact, the power. That is an end of it."

The next case, and a most important one, is Chamberlain v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue (2). There the settlor had formed an unlimited investment company with capital divided into preference and ordinary shares to which he transferred certain assets in consideration of the issue to him of preference capital which gave him complete control of the company. In Mar., 1936, he executed a settlement in favour of his wife and four children. He paid a sum of money to the trustees to be held on certain trusts, and the money was invested in the purchase of ordinary shares in the company, but that settlement contained a power to declare that the trust should cease and the trust funds should be held on trust for any one of the beneficiaries, and his wife was one of the beneficiaries. Therefore, it was a settlement under which in certain events the wife might obtain benefit. In Dec., 1936, the structure of the company was altered. The capital was divided into A, B, C, D and E shares, and a power was given to the company to redeem the shares on payment of a sum equal to the capital paid. The shares issued to the trustees of the settlement already in existence were designated "A" shares, and in Dec. the settlor executed four deeds of settlement paying the trustees equal sums of money to be invested as he should direct and to be held on irrevocable trusts for each of his four infant children. The money was invested in the purchase of the "B," "C," "D" and "E" shares of the company. In 1937-38 dividends were paid. The settlor was assessed to sur-tax for the year 1937-38 under s. 38 (2) in sums representing the difference between the company's income and the amount distributed on his preference shares. He was assessed on all the dividends paid on the ordinary shares and also on the undistributed profit. They were deemed to be the income of the settlor. It was agreed that the first settlement came within the section because of the possibility of the trust fund being applied for the benefit of the settlor's wife. It was held by the commissioners that he could be assessed in all these sums. There was no appeal as to the first settlement, but there was an appeal as to the four settlements. One of the Crown's contentions was a contention, founded on Payne's case (1), that one was entitled to look at the whole transaction—not merely the settlement, but the formation of the company, the power to redeem, the power to control the payment of dividends, and/or the power to wind-up the company and so on—which all amounted, it was said, to a power to determine the provisions of the four settlements when the wife might benefit under the March settlement.

Section 38 is not easy to construe. The purpose of the section is described as: "Income arising under certain settlements to be treated as income of settlor." Up to a point sub-ss. (1) and (2) are in precisely the same language:

If and so long as the terms of any settlement are such that—(a) any person has or may have power, whether immediately or in the future, and whether with or without the consent of any other person, to revoke or otherwise determine the settlement or any provision thereof, and, in the event of the exercise of the power, the settlor or the wife or husband of the settlor. . .

So far, they are the same, and then they branch out in different ways, sub-s. (1) dealing with the case where "the settlor or the wife or husband of the settlor will or may cease to be liable to make any annual payments," and sub-s. (2) dealing with the case where "the settlor or the wife or husband of the settlor will or may become beneficially entitled to the whole or any part of the property comprised in the settlement." In other words, sub-s. (1) deals with the case where the settlor merely ceases to be liable; sub-s. (2) deals with the case where he or his wife becomes entitled to any of the settled property. Chamberlain's case (2) was concerned with the latter, and, in so far as it deals with the meaning and effect of the language common to sub-ss. (1) and (2), it is equally relevant to both sub-sections. The event is the exercise of a power. That power may be one to be found in the settlement, or it may be a power existing independently of the settlement. The powers relied on by the Crown in that case, and in the case with which I am dealing, are very much the same. They are twofold : (1) A power to prevent the payment of dividends to the trustee either by withholding dividends or by redemption of the shares ; (2) the power to wind-up the direct or indirect source of the settlement income. In Chamberlain's case (1) it was the company in which the trustees held shares ; in the present case it is the company on whose continued existence and payment of dividends the covenant to pay depends for its value. It seems to me clear that the Court of Appeal in Chamberlain's case (2) took the view that the power must be found in the settlement, but that following Payne's case (1) they also took the view that the settlement as defined in the Act was not merely the contents of the four deeds, but was the whole arrangement. It was said that the whole of what had been done must be looked at, including the fact that the settlor had placed himself in a certain relationship with the company as part of a definite scheme. They held that the whole scheme was an arrangement and, therefore, a settlement, and, as a consequence, that the power was within the settlement. It followed that the power to revoke or otherwise determine the settlement was to be found within the settlement itself. It further followed that the income arising under the settlement included the income of the company, and that the whole of the assets of the company constituted property comprised in the settlement and that the taxpayers could be assessed with respect to the whole income of the company. DU PARCQ, L.J., read the judgment of the court in Chamberlain's case (2) and I want to refer to a passage which, to my mind, indicates that they were clearly accepting the view that the power had to be found in the settlement. Again, one would ask the question : Why all this pother about what constituted the settlement ? Why discuss the question whether the whole arrangement was the settlement or not, if it does not matter where the power is to be found ? That was not the view taken by the court. Dealing with what happened, DU PARCQ, L.J., says (25 Tax Cas. 324) :

There need be no apportioned dividend payable, because under article 3, as it stood at the material time, each class of ordinary shares was to be entitled only to such dividend as the company should from time to time in general meeting determine. Further, these shares could be redeemed out of income in a few years, so that there need be no loss of capital or of the future income to be enjoyed by the remaining shareholders. After redemption, the only shareholders would be the appellant with his large holding of preference shares, and the trustees of the March settlement. The next step might be a winding-up of Staffa, when all the assets of that company, after the par value of the appellant's preference shares had been provided, would go to the trustees of the March settlement. Now the March settlement provided that the trustees should have power at any time during the appellant's life to declare that the trusts therein declared should cease to apply to the trust fund, and to hold the trust fund " upon trust for . . . any one . . . of the beneficiaries," who might be the appellant's wife. Either the redemption of the shares or the winding-up of the company, or both these acts taken together, might properly be described as a determination of a " provision of the settlement," and the terms of the arrangement constituting the " settlement " gave the appellant power to determine the provisions of the settlement in the sense that the matter was so arranged that his voting rights enabled him to do so.

That seems to be a very plain statement. The terms of the arrangement gave the settlor the power to determine the provisions of the settlement. DU PARCQ, L.J., goes on :

If the power to redeem and to wind-up the company were exercised, then the wife of the settlor might become beneficially entitled at least to part of the property then comprised in the settlement. Thus the terms of s. 38 (2) appear to be completely satisfied.

I think one is justified in saying that the Court of Appeal clearly expressed the view that what one had to look for was power in the settlement, but that they also took the wide view that the settlement comprised the whole " arrangement."

The case went to the House of Lords who took the view that the settlement consisted of the four deeds, and, therefore, that the assessment was bad. Their Lordships had not to consider the precise point raised in the present case because there the taxpayer had been assessed with regard to the whole income of the company. Once one took the constitution of the company out of the settlement, there could be no power to make an assessment of the kind made there, and that was sufficient to dispose of the appeal. There is, however, one passage in LORD MACMILLAN'S opinion (ibid. 332) which is worth bearing in mind. He said :

It is essential to the Crown's case that it should make out that the whole assets of the Staffa Investment Co. are comprised in a settlement or arrangement made by the appellant within the meaning of the statute. In my opinion, the Crown has failed to establish this.

That, he said, made it unnecessary for him to say more, but he continued :

But I may say that I find it difficult to characterise the redemption by the Staffa Investment Co. of the shares held under the trust deeds, or the winding-up of the company, as a determination of a "provision" of the settlement.

One of the matters relied on here is a power to determine the provisions of the settlement with the aid of another by winding-up the company. That observation of LORD MACMILLAN is not a final decision, but it makes the point which is relied on here more difficult.

The next case was MacAndrew v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue (3), which the commissioners in this case held, gave them no option but to decide as they did. When that case came before the commissioners the appeal to the House of Lords in Chamberlain's case (2) had not been heard. MacAndrew's case (3) was a simple and straightforward case. The taxpayer had acquired all the shares in a private company, and he transferred all the preference shares and 5,590 ordinary shares to his wife and daughter who executed a declaration of trust declaring that they held the shares as to both capital and income for the taxpayer's wife and children as he should by will appoint. The remaining shares were held as to five by the taxpayer and five by his son. The income was accumulated and no dividends were declared. The whole of the company's income was treated as income of the taxpayer by virtue of s. 21 of the Finance Act, 1922, which gave the commissioners power to apportion the income if a reasonable part of the profits of the company had not been distributed in dividend. By the deed in question, of July, 1940, the taxpayer's wife, his only son, and his only surviving daughter consented to the payment to the taxpayer of all income arising from the shares subject to the declaration of trust which had been or should be treated for the purposes of the Income Tax Acts as the income of the taxpayer and the taxpayer covenanted to pay under the same deed of covenant to his daughter H. as trustee for her two children in each year commencing with the following year an amount equal to the gross of the income he should have received in that year from the company under the foregoing consent. It is a covenant which is very like the one here.

The question arose whether the taxpayer could be assessed in respect of that income. MACNAGHTEN, J., held he could. He read the relevant sections and said (25 Tax Cas. 506) :

The contention on behalf of the Crown is that the transfer of the shares to Mrs. MacAndrew and the deed of July 11, 1940, constituted a "settlement" within the meaning of the Finance Act, 1938, s. 38, and that Mrs. MacAndrew has power to determine it by putting the company into liquidation. Both those propositions are, in my opinion, well founded. . . . That Mr. MacAndrew is a "settlor" is indisputable. It is also indisputable that Mrs. MacAndrew can wind-up the company and can thereby put an end to the covenant made by the appellant.

That case is not very satisfactory because, first, it was argued in person, and, secondly, there is no reference whatever to the Chamberlain case (2). It is clear that the commissioners had decided the case on the decision of the Court of Appeal in Chamberlain's case (2). They had said :

We hold the conditions of s. 38 (1) are fulfilled in this case and that the creation of the original trust, the machinery of the company, and the provisions of the deed of July 11, 1940, constitute an arrangement or settlement with power to revoke or otherwise determine it. Should that power be exercised the settlor would cease to be liable to make annual payments.

It is very strange, if the decision of the House of Lords had been called to the attention of MACNAGHTEN, J., that he made no reference to the fact that the

A ground on which the commissioners had decided the case could no longer be relied on. It is very strange that no reference should be made to the Chamberlain case (2). It is also to be observed, that even the learned judge did not limit the settlement to the document itself, but said that the contention relied on was "that the transfer of the shares to Mrs. MacAndrew and the deed of July 11, 1940" both "constituted a 'settlement.'" Therefore, I am not satisfied that the point which has to be decided here was really present to the mind of MACNAGHTEN, J., particularly as Chamberlain's case (2) was not referred to.

B The only other case to which my attention has been drawn is Jenkins v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue (4). I will put the facts in that case as simply as I can. The taxpayer formed two companies, the Dilnot Investment Co. and the Woodlands Investment Co. The shares of both companies were divided into classes A and B. The taxpayer held all the A shares, and the constitution of the company gave him complete control of both. In June, 1934, he settled £500 on each of three daughters by three settlements. He lent to the trustees of each settlement £6,500 free of interest and the trustees used the £500 and the money lent in the purchase of all the B shares in Woodlands. Woodlands thereupon subscribed for all the B shares in Dilnot. The case concerned the dividends paid in the year 1936-37 and the year 1937-38. The trustees used the dividends in repaying part of the loans. The taxpayer had been assessed for C both years in respect of the income received by the trustees. The assessment as to the first of those two years depended on how far the settlement was a revocable settlement within the meaning of s. 21 of the Act of 1936. The second of the two years was governed by the Act of 1938. It will be remembered that sub-s. (7) of s. 38 of the Act of 1938 provides :

D The foregoing provisions of this section shall apply for the purposes of assessment to income tax for the year 1937-38 and subsequent years and shall apply in relation to any settlement, wherever made and whether made before or after the passing of this Act. . .

E The income received in the second year was, therefore, subject to s. 38 of that Act, but the income received in the year 1936-37 was only subject to s. 21 of the Act of 1936. The taxpayer could wind-up these companies, and in that event everything would have come to him. The commissioners decided the case under the rule in Payne's case (1), and the Court of Appeal's decision in Chamberlain's case (2). The taxpayer thus failed before the commissioners. On appeal, the case was heard by MACNAGHTEN, J., who began by dealing with the income for the year 1936-37. He said this. (26 Tax Cas. 275) :

F So far as the assessment for the year 1936-37 is concerned, since the claim of the Crown is based on the Finance Act, 1936, s. 21, and that section does not apply to irrevocable settlements, it was necessary for Mr. Stamp to rely on the provisions of sub-s. (8) of that section, which provides as follows : "For the purposes of this section, a settlement shall not be deemed to be irrevocable, if the terms thereof provide (a)—for payment to the settlor . . . of any income or assets in any circumstances whatsoever during the life of any child of the settlor to or for the benefit of whom any income, or assets representing it, is or are or may be payable or applicable by virtue or in consequence of the settlement." Mr. Stamp's argument, as I understood it, was this. The appellant can wind G up these companies whenever he pleases, and if he does so he will revoke the settlements, because the whole of the trust fund will disappear.

He goes through the figures, saying that the argument was well-founded and that the trust fund would and could be extinguished, and then he said :

H Mr. Stamp argued that the appellant, by means of the liquidation of the two companies, could revoke the settlement. It so happens that by s. 38 (1) (a) of the Finance Act, 1938, provision is made for the case where a person has power "to revoke or otherwise determine the settlement." I agree that the appellant in this case can, by putting the two companies into liquidation, determine the settlement otherwise than by revocation. But I do not think it can be said that, by putting an end to the trust fund, he revokes the settlement. The settlement still remains, but what has happened is that the trust fund has been destroyed. It is true that the trust fund, in the case supposed, has been destroyed by the act of the appellant ; but I do not think that is revoking the settlement within the meaning of s. 21 (8) of the Finance Act, 1936. I also agree with the argument of Mr. Talbot on behalf of the appellant that there are no terms in the settlement which provide for the payment to the settlor of any of the income or assets of the settlement. It is quite true that the appellant can get into his hands the whole of the trust funds, but that is not by reason of any terms contained in the settlements. It is by reason of the unhappy investment, if I may so call it, which the trustees thought fit to make of the £500 entrusted to their care for their infant beneficiaries. Therefore, in my opinion, s. 21 of the Finance Act, 1936, does not apply to the settlements made by Mr. Jenkins on June 22, 1934; and the assessment to sur-tax made upon him for the year 1936-37 must therefore be discharged.

Why stop there? If the argument for the Crown is right, what could have been easier than for MACNAGHTEN, J., to have said: "But this has no application to the second dividend, the dividend for 1937-38, because, under the Act of 1938 the power to wind-up and so put an end to the settlement need not be found in the settlement itself."

It is clear that the taxpayer there had the power to do exactly what it is said the taxpayer has power to do here, viz., to knock the bottom out of the settlement in the simplest way, but no such suggestion was made against the taxpayer in that case. He was hit in respect of the year 1937-38, not under sub-ss. (1) or (2), but under sub-ss. (3) and (4) of s. 38. Under those sub-sections the Crown succeeded, because there all the court had to do was to find whether in any circumstances whatsoever any of the settlement money could go to the settlor. It was held that it could, because of the power the trustees had to use the trust monies to repay the money lent by the settlor. Exactly the same thing happened in the Court of Appeal who upheld the view taken by MACNAGHTEN, J. LORD GREENE, M.R. (with whom the other members of the court agreed) began (26 Tax Cas. 279) dealt with the second year simply and solely under s. 38 (3) and (4). All that would have been unnecessary if the argument of the Crown today was right. Turning to the Act of 1936 (ibid., 281), LORD GREENE, M.R., expressed the same view as MACNAGHTEN, J., and dealt at some length with the meaning of the word "irrevocable." He thought that to treat the power to wind-up the company as a power to revoke the settlement was placing much too wide a construction on it.

I think that the view I have formed is in accord with that of the Court of Appeal on this point in Chamberlain's case (2), and again in Jenkins' case (4). It would have been so easy, to my mind, to have dealt with the second year in Jenkins' case (4) in a word if the argument advanced for the Crown today was right. As to MacAndrew's case (3), which was relied on by the commissioners, I do not know what weight ought to be attached to that case, but it was decided before Jenkins' case (4), and I am not satisfied that Chamberlain's case (2) was called to the learned judge's attention. I only want to add that I do not think that the withholding of the dividend would revoke or otherwise determine the settlement or any provision thereof. The covenant would remain and become effective when dividends were resumed. As to winding-up, the settlor had no power himself to wind-up. He needed the co-operation of another shareholder with the requisite shareholding. It is said that he could bring that about with the consent of another person, but I do not think he could. I think that the language is not apt for that. No mere consent can give him power to wind-up the company. He needs the co-operation of another shareholder. The ability of two shareholders acting together to bring about a certain result seems to me something different from the ability of one to bring about the result with the consent of another, and I bear in mind what LORD MACMILLAN said in Chamberlain's case (2) (25 Tax Cas., at p. 332). The conclusion I have come to is that the appeal must be allowed, and that the taxpayer was not liable to be assessed for the purposes of sur-tax in the income received under these settlements.

Appeal allowed with costs.

Solicitors: Harris, Chetham & Co. (for the taxpayer); Solicitor of Inland Revenue (for the Crown).

[Reported by W. J. ALDERMAN, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

MAYNE v. JOHNSTONE & CUMBERS, LTD.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lynskey, J.), June 3, 4, 5, 1947.]

Factories and Shops—Safety provisions—Floor—“Of sound construction and properly maintained”—Test to be applied—Factories Act, 1937 (c. 67), s. 25 (1).

In deciding whether the floor of a factory is of “sound construction and properly maintained” within the Factories Act, 1937, s. 25 (1), regard must be had to the purpose for which the premises are to be used. “Sound construction” and “properly maintained” mean that the floor should be of such construction and so maintained as to be fit to be used for the purpose for which the factory is intended to be used. The test is not that the floor should be of such construction and so maintained as to be sufficient to withstand some stress which would not occur during its normal user, even although caused by an accident which might have been anticipated.

[FOR THE FACTORIES ACT, 1937, s. 25 (1), see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 30, p. 220.]

ACTION under the Fatal Accidents Act, 1846, and the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1934, in respect of the death of the plaintiff's husband while working on the defendants' premises.

C The plaintiff's husband was installing a heavy machine in the defendants' premises when the floor beneath a jack supporting the machine gave way. The machine tilted over, pinning the workman to a wall, and he received fatal injuries. The floor was at least 24 years old, and it was found that there were local variations in its thickness to the maximum extent of $\frac{3}{4}$ inch, the whole floor being $6\frac{1}{2}$ inches deep. Certain parts of the concrete facing had been worn unevenly and in some places worn away.

D Paull, K.C., N. Parkes and Lermom for the plaintiff.

Edgedale, K.C., and C. J. A. Doughty for the defendants.

LYNSKEY, J. [having stated the facts]: On behalf of the plaintiff it is said that the real cause of this accident was the fact that the floor was not of sound construction and properly maintained within the meaning of the Factories Act, 1937, s. 25 (1). It is said that in view of s. 25 (1) one must have regard to the purpose for which the premises are to be used—namely, as a factory—and that “sound construction” and “properly maintained” means that the floor should be of such sound construction and so maintained as to be fit to be used for the purpose for which the factory is intended to be used. In my view, that is a correct interpretation of the section. Counsel for the plaintiff submitted that the test ought to be put a little higher, and that the section meant that the floor should not only be of sound construction and properly maintained for the purpose for which the factory was intended to be used, but that it should also be of such construction as to be sufficient to withstand the stress caused by an accident which although it might have been anticipated would not occur in the course of the normal user of the factory. In my view that is not the true construction of s. 25 (1). The section requires that the floor must be of such construction and so maintained as to be fit for the work which it is anticipated is to be done on it.

G The floor in the present case had been in existence certainly since 1921, and, in view of the date of the deeds, possibly for fifty years. It was to outward appearances a concrete floor, but, in fact, it consisted of three layers. There was a layer of what was called “facing”—half an inch of cement concrete. Underneath that there was about five inches of coke breeze concrete, and underneath that there was another half an inch of concrete. There were local variations in the thickness of the floor to the maximum extent of three-quarters of an inch, the whole floor being said to be six and a quarter inches in depth. I am satisfied on the evidence that in certain parts of the floor the concrete “facing” at the top had been worn unevenly, and that in other parts the “facing” had been either worn away or practically worn away.

I The plaintiff submits that what happened here was that when the deceased man was jacking up the machine the jack sank to some degree into the floor, and that it was at a slight angle with the result that it was thrust out by the weight of the machine which fell over and killed the deceased man. It is said that that accident was the result of the employers' breach of statutory duty. The defendants deny that. They say that this floor was quite sound in construction and was properly maintained for the purpose for which it was to be used—the installation of ink mixing machines and the use of those machines thereafter for the purpose of mixing ink. They say, first, that the floor would have stood the weight of the machine if it had been erected without negligence, and that the real cause of the accident was the negligence of the deceased man in the installation of the machine. They say that the machine was caused to fall by his negligence and the effect of that fall off the jack, a distance of some eight inches, was to impose an undue stress on the floor which the floor was never intended to take, so that the break in the floor was the result, not of the unsound construction or maintenance of the floor, but of the deceased's own negligence in the handling of the machine. [His LORDSHIP reviewed the evidence and found as a fact that the accident was not due to the negligence of the deceased man, to the fact that he was working alone, or to the defective condition of the jack used, and continued:—] In the result, I take the view that the real cause of the accident was the fact that the floor at this particular point was in a defective condition, and that in those circumstances there was a breach by the defendants of their statutory obligations to have the floor properly maintained.

Judgment for the plaintiff with costs.

Solicitors: Lewis & Lewis & Gisborne and Co. (for the plaintiff); William Charles Crocker (for the defendants).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

BROWN v. BROWN (otherwise GRAYSON) (by her guardian).
[PROBATE, DIVORCE AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION (Lord Merriman, P.),
February 26, 1947.]

Divorce—Desertion—Continuance of desertion—Animus deserendi—Feeble-minded person committed to institution for mental defectives—Release on licence—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1937 (c. 57), s. 2 (b).

In March, 1938, the wife left the husband in circumstances which amounted to desertion. In October, 1938, she was convicted before justices of theft, but the justices, being satisfied that she was a feeble-minded person within s. 1 of the Mental Deficiency Act, 1927, postponed sentence and directed that a petition be presented under the Act, and she was in due course committed to an institution for mental defectives where she remained until November, 1940, when she was released on licence. In a petition by the husband for divorce on the ground of the wife's desertion, presented on May 31, 1945:

HELD: the wife was capable of continuing the intention to desert which she plainly manifested in March, 1938, and the husband was entitled to a decree.

[AS TO CONTINUANCE OF DESERTION, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 10, p. 654, para. 964; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, p. 319, Nos. 2974-2977].

Cases referred to:

- (1) Williams v. Williams, [1939] 3 All E.R. 825; [1939] P. 365; 108 L.J.P. 140; 161 L.T. 202; Digest Supp.
- (2) Drew v. Drew (1888), 13 P.D. 97; 57 L.J.P. 64; 58 L.T. 923; 27 Digest 319, 2975.

PETITION by the husband, presented on May 31, 1945, for divorce on the grounds inter alia of the wife's desertion. The relevant facts appear in the judgment.

J. Gardner for the husband.

Stuart Horner for the wife.

LORD MERRIMAN, P.: This petition by a husband was originally presented on three alternative grounds for divorce and nullity of his marriage. The prayer for nullity and one of the prayers for dissolution have been withdrawn and now the only part of the case left is the prayer for dissolution on the ground of desertion.

A There is, in my opinion, sufficient evidence on which I can hold that the wife deserted the husband on or about Mar. 18, 1938, but that is not the whole question, and it is here that a point of some difficulty arises. Counsel for the wife argues that I ought not to find that the desertion continued throughout the whole period preceding the presentation of the petition, although in the ordinary course desertion is presumed to continue unless the contrary is shown, the reason for this submission being that during part of the period the wife was subject to the Mental Deficiency Acts, 1913-1927. On Oct. 24, 1938, the wife was charged before the Leeds justices with stealing two watches and a chain. The justices found the charge proved, but, being satisfied on medical evidence that the wife was a defective within the meaning of the Mental Deficiency Acts, they postponed passing sentence and directed that a petition be presented to the proper authority. When the matter came before them finally on Nov. 22, 1938, an order was made on the ground that she was a feeble-minded person and she was committed to an institution at Gateshead. About Nov. 4, 1940, she was transferred to Meanwood Park Colony in Leeds. Subsequently, she was released on licence to her mother who was living at Leeds, and there she has been ever since. She has not, therefore, been under restraint.

C It is clear that at no time since she left home in March, 1938, has the wife ever made the slightest overture to bring the state of desertion to an end, but it is said that, because from Oct., 1938, she has been treated as a mental defective under the Mental Deficiency Acts, I must hold that she was incapable of continuing to have the intention to desert, and, therefore, that she has not been guilty of desertion from the time she came within those Acts. If that be correct, it follows that I cannot find her guilty of desertion for three years immediately preceding the presentation of the petition.

D I have been referred to Williams v. Williams (1), in which it was held that a person of unsound mind, certified as such, in respect of whom a reception order has been made under the Lunacy Acts is incapable, from the date when he or she is found to be of unsound mind, of continuing to have an animus deserendi. If this case were such as that, I should have no option but to give full effect to that decision, but the present matter is a long way removed from that for these reasons. The Lunacy Act, 1890, deals with what were then called "lunatics." By s. 341 of that Act, 1890, a "lunatic" means an "idiot or person of unsound mind." By the Mental Treatment Act, 1930, s. 20 (5), the word "lunatic" is no longer to be used, and wherever it would have been appropriate to use that word Parliament has enjoined that the words "person" or "patient" of "unsound mind" shall be used.

F One of the classes of persons now within the Mental Deficiency Acts is "idiots." There are four classes of people who are deemed to be defectives under both the Act of 1913, s. 1, and the Act of 1927, s. 1. The only essential difference between the two sections is that, whereas the Act of 1913 provided that, in the case of idiots and imbeciles, the mental defectiveness must have existed from birth or at least an early age, that provision is omitted from the Act of 1927. The definitions in the sections of "mental defectives" are framed on a diminishing scale. They start with "idiots," go on to "imbeciles" whose defectiveness is stated not to amount to idiocy, and then refer to "feeble-minded persons" whose mental defectiveness does not amount to "imbecility," and "moral imbeciles." The definition of feeble-minded persons in the Act of 1927 is:

G Persons in whose case there exists mental defectiveness which, though not amounting to imbecility, is yet so pronounced that they require care, supervision and control for their own protection or for the protection of others.

Imbeciles are

H Persons in whose case there exists mental defectiveness which, though not amounting to idiocy, is yet so pronounced that they are incapable of managing themselves or their affairs...

A feeble-minded person within the Mental Deficiency Acts is, therefore, three statutory removes from a person of unsound mind. First, idiots have been taken out of the definition of a lunatic, or, as he is now called, a person of unsound mind, and are outside the Lunacy Act altogether. The second remove is from idiots to imbeciles, and the third remove is from imbeciles to feeble-minded persons. The whole basis of the judgment in the Court of Appeal in Williams

v. Williams (1) is that persons of unsound mind are incapable of forming any intention. I can see no reason whatever for importing that reasoning into a case like this where the person is not of unsound mind but is merely a mental defective and in the third category of such persons.

It is also said that the wife is physically unable to return to her husband, as she is merely released on licence issued under the Mental Deficiency Regulations, 1935, reg. 100. My attention has been called to para. (4) of that regulation :

A patient who is absent on licence shall reside with the person named for that purpose in the licence, unless the persons granting and the persons (if any) concurring in the grant of the licence otherwise permit.

Be it so, there is nothing to prevent her walking about Leeds, nothing to prevent her going to see her husband and sounding him as to whether he would be prepared to take her back, in which case it would remain to be seen what the authorities would be prepared to do. She has never made any attempt to do that although she has been physically at large ever since November, 1940, and living in the same town. So far as the mere physical inability to resume cohabitation is concerned, that matter has already been dealt with in Drew v. Drew (2), an authority the validity of which is specifically recognised in Williams v. Williams (1). It comes back to the point that Williams v. Williams (1) decided that a person who is of unsound mind in the full sense of the word cannot be said to be capable of desertion. I cannot bring myself to hold that the wife in the present case, who by statute is three degrees lower in the scale of mental illness, is incapable of continuing the intention to desert which she plainly manifested in March, 1938. That being so, there is no reason why I should not pronounce a decree of divorce on the ground of desertion.

Decree nisi.

Solicitors : Dale H. Parkinson (for the husband) ; Official Solicitor (for the wife).

[Reported by R. HENDRY WHITE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

Dictum of JENKINS, J., at p. 166, applied. Re GILLET'S WILL TRUSTS. [1949] 2 All E.R. 893.

Followed. In re GILLET'S WILL TRUSTS [1950] 1 Ch. 102

Re OLIVER, WATKINS v. FITTON AND OTHERS

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Jenkins, J.), June 5, 6, 1947.]

Wills—Construction—Accumulations—Direction to accumulate and invest surplus income for 21 years from testator's death—One third part to be held for residuary legatees—Income of two third parts to be paid to widow during her lifetime—Residuary trust fund to be divided on widow's death—Whether accumulations of two third parts undisposed of or included in residuary trust fund.

By his will, made on Feb. 6, 1909, the testator directed his trustees to hold his "residuary trust fund," (which he defined as consisting of the balance of the "proceeds of sale and ready money remaining over" after payment of his debts, funeral and testamentary expenses and any pecuniary legacies given by the will) on trust to invest, and, out of the resulting income, to pay certain annuities to his wife and daughters. Then, by cl. 6 (3) of the will, he directed : "As to any surplus income remaining over my trustees shall during the life of my said wife or if she shall survive me for a longer period than 21 years then for the period of 21 years computed from the date of my death invest and accumulate the same and shall hold one equal third part of such surplus income and all investments and accumulations thereof upon the same ultimate trusts as are hereinafter declared with reference to the capital of my residuary trust fund and as to the remaining two equal third parts of such surplus income and all investments and accumulations thereof my trustees shall pay the same unto my wife during her life." By cl. 7 of the will, on the death of the widow the residuary trust fund was to be divided in equal parts, in the events that had happened, on trust for two of the testator's daughters. The testator died on Feb. 17, 1909, and in 1931, on a summons taken out by the trustees, MAUGHAM, J., held (i) that there was no intestacy with regard to the one third share of the surplus income and investments and accumulations thereof, that the accumulations made in the 21 years period became capital for the purposes of cl. 7, and that the surplus income became income for the purposes of cl. 7 and immediately distributable as if the widow were not living; (ii) that, as regards the two thirds share, the surplus income accruing after the period of accumulation and the income of the investments representing the accumulations made during that period should be paid to the widow until her death. The widow died on Apr. 27, 1946, and the question now to be determined was whether the accumulations of the two thirds parts of the surplus income made during the period of 21 years after the testator's death were undisposed of by the will, or whether they passed under cl. 7 of the will:—

HELD: on the true construction of the will, in view of the direction to accumulate, which showed an intention to capitalise the income accumulated, and the direction to divide the residuary estate on the death of the widow, the investments representing the accumulations of surplus income of the two third parts were to be held, on the death of the widow, as capital of the residuary trust fund under cl. 7 of the will.

Weatherall v. Thornburgh (8 Ch.D. 261), Re Blake, Berry v. Geen ([1938] 2 All E.R. 362) and Re Mellor, Alvarez v. Dodgson ([1922] 1 Ch. 312) considered.

[AS TO ACCUMULATIONS DURING PERMITTED PERIOD, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 33, p. 122, para. 210; and FOR CASE, see DIGEST, Vol. 37, p. 149, No. 751.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Weatherall v. Thornburgh (1878), 8 Ch.D. 261; 47 L.J.Ch. 658; 39 L.T. 9; 37 Digest 146, 724.
- (2) Re Blake, Berry v. Geen, [1938] 2 All E.R. 362; 107 L.J.Ch. 173; sub nom., Berry v. Geen, [1938] A.C. 575; 159 L.T. 122; Digest Supp.
- (3) Re Mellor, Alvarez v. Dodgson, [1922] 1 Ch. 312; 91 L.J.Ch. 393; 126 L.T. 562; 43 Digest 791, 2289.

ADJOURNED SUMMONS to determine whether accumulations of surplus income made during the period of 21 years from the testator's death were undisposed of by his will or were to be held on the trusts of the residuary trust fund. The facts appear in the judgment.

Droop for the trustee.

J. V. Nesbitt for the personal representatives of a daughter, Kate.

Denys Buckley for a daughter, Ruth.

Tonge for a daughter, Ethel.

JENKINS, J.: This summons raises a somewhat difficult question of construction of the will of Thomas Underwood Oliver which has already been before the court. The will is dated Feb. 6, 1909, and there was a codicil of the same date with which I need not trouble for the present purpose. The testator died on Feb. 17, 1909, and his will was proved on Apr. 17, 1909, by his widow and the present plaintiff, Mr. John Henry Watkins. The testator left him surviving his widow and three daughters, Kate, Ruth and Ethel. Kate died in 1914, and, as her interest in a settled share of the testator's residuary trust fund devolved by virtue of her exercise of a general power of appointment on her representatives, those representatives are before the court as the first two defendants. The remaining defendants are the two surviving daughters of the testator. The widow died on Apr. 27, 1946, and that event makes it necessary for this application to be made to the court.

By his will, so far as is material for the present purpose, the testator appointed his wife, Mr. Watkins and one other person to be executors and trustees thereof. Then there was a specific bequest of household furniture, and so on, a gift of pecuniary legacies to executors accepting office, certain pecuniary legacies to two of his daughters and a legacy to another daughter, Ethel, subject to a condition against her marrying a certain person, whom she did, in fact, marry. Then, by cl. 6, the testator made a general residuary devise and bequest in these terms:

I devise and bequeath all my property both real and personal of whatsoever description and wheresoever situate and not otherwise disposed of by this my will unto my trustees upon trust. . .

There were the usual directions to sell, call in and convert and pay debts and funeral and testamentary expenses

. . . and any pecuniary legacies bequeathed by this my will or any codicil thereto and as to the balance of such proceeds of sale and ready money remaining over (hereinafter referred to as "my residuary trust fund") upon trust to invest the same and to pay and apply the resulting income as follows . . .

Pausing there, it will be noted that what the testator has defined as "my residuary trust fund" consists of :

. . . the balance of such proceeds of sale and ready money remaining over . . . It does not include by definition anything in the way of income of, or accretion to, such net proceeds and ready money. It would, no doubt, include by implication the investments representing such net proceeds and ready money, although it does not expressly do so.

Then the trusts were these :—

(1) to pay to my said wife during the remainder of her life if she shall so long remain my widow the sum of £600 per annum but if my said wife shall marry again then as from the date of her remarriage and until the date of her death my trustees shall pay to her the sum of £100 per annum only. (2) To pay out of the said income to each of my daughters Kate Oliver, Ruth Winifred Oliver, and Ethel Oliver during the life of my said wife the sum of £100 per annum to be increased in each case to £200 per annum if and when my said wife shall marry again but as to my daughter Ethel Oliver subject to the provisions of cl. 9 hereof. (3) As to any surplus income remaining over my trustees shall during the life of my said wife or if she shall survive me for a longer period than 21 years then for the period of 21 years computed from the date of my death invest and accumulate the same and shall hold one equal third part of such surplus income and all investments and accumulations thereof upon the same ultimate trusts as are hereinafter declared with reference to the capital of my residuary trust fund and as to the remaining two equal third parts of such surplus income and all investments and accumulations thereof my trustees shall pay the same unto my said wife during her life or until she shall marry again for her own use and benefit and if my said wife shall marry again then my trustees shall as from the date of such remarriage and until her death pay and divide two such equal third parts of surplus income unto and equally between such of my three daughters as shall for the time being be living but as to my said daughter Ethel Oliver subject to the provisions of cl. 9 hereof.

Clause 7 contains the trusts to take effect on the death of the testator's wife :

Upon the death of my said wife my trustees shall hold my residuary trust fund upon trust to divide the same into three equal parts and as to one equal part thereof they shall hold the same upon trust to invest the same and to pay the income thereof to my said daughter Kate Oliver during her life and after her decease upon trust to pay the capital thereof to such person or persons and in such shares or proportions as she by her last will or any codicil thereto shall direct or appoint and in default of any such direction or appointment they shall pay the same to such person or persons as would be entitled to such third share if it formed part of my said daughter's own personal estate and she had died intestate.

The remaining two equal one-third parts were to be held on the same trusts for the benefit of the other two daughters respectively.

There was a provision in the case of Ethel to the effect that any accretion to her share should be subject again to the provisions of cl. 9, and cl. 8 contains a provision carrying over to the other daughters, again subject to the special conditions in the case of Ethel, of the share of any daughter in the residuary estate of the testator. Clause 9 contains a provision to the effect that if, as happened, Ethel married a named person, her share should go over to the other daughters on the same trusts as their original shares, and Ethel was to take in substitution under the will a sum of £1 a week only. Ethel having infringed the condition, the result was that Kate and Ruth became entitled in equal shares under the trusts of cl. 7 for their respective lives with remainder as they should appoint. Kate exercised the general power of appointment and died in 1914.

The testator having died on Feb. 17, 1909, the period of 21 years from his death expired in 1930. The widow being still alive—she lived until Apr. 27, 1946, and never re-married—on the expiration of the period of 21 years, it became necessary to determine how the surplus income referred to in cl. 6 (i.e., the income remaining after the payment of the annuities payable) ought to be dealt with, having regard to the directions contained in that clause. On Feb. 20, 1931, an originating summons, asking for directions on this matter, came before MAUGHAM J.

There were really two branches of the clause to be considered. The first dealt with one equal third part of the surplus income and was a direction that, after the 21 years, the trustees should :

... hold one equal third part of such surplus income and all investments and accumulations thereof upon the same ultimate trusts as are hereinafter declared with reference to the capital of my residuary trust fund . . .

The other branch was :

... and as to the remaining two equal third parts of such surplus income and all investments and accumulations thereof my trustees shall pay the same unto my said wife during her life or until she shall marry again for her own use and benefit . . .

The matters of doubt, in effect, were these : What did the testator mean by saying "shall hold one equal third part of such surplus income and all investments and accumulations thereof upon the same ultimate trusts as are hereinafter declared ?" Did he mean that the accumulations should go as capital of the settled shares and the future surplus income as income, or did he mean all to be income ? As regards the other branch, it was obviously arguable that the widow might claim to be entitled not only to the surplus income accruing after 21 years, but also to the accumulations of surplus income of previous years. In fact, it seems that the trustees had acted on the supposition that this view was the right one, and, accordingly, that there was not really any effective direction for accumulation at all as regards the two-thirds.

On that summons coming before MAUGHAM, J., he gave judgment on Feb. 20, 1931, and he began by saying : "To my mind this will is not easy to construe, because it is expressed in inaccurate language . . ." Dealing with cl. 6, he said that, in his opinion, the whole of cl. 6 (3) was confined and related to the resulting income of the residuary trust fund during the period that would elapse before the death of the wife. He continued :

The first operative part of cl. 6 is confined to the giving of an annuity to the widow, which will be diminished in the event of her re-marrying. The second part is concerned with the giving of annuities to three daughters during the life of his wife, and then comes the third part of the operative part of cl. 6, which is in this form . . .

He then read the words of cl. 6 (3). Dealing with cl. 7, he said :

Some things at least are clear with reference to cl. 6 (3). The first thing is that it relates to the surplus income of the residuary trust fund after deduction of the annuities provided for in paras. (1) and (2). The second thing is that the testator is directing an accumulation for the lifetime of his wife, or 21 years, whichever shall be the shorter period, and I have no doubt at all that that is a positive direction. It may in some respects be inoperative if someone is entitled to stop the accumulation. His will is that the surplus income shall be accumulated for that period. Then he directs that there is to be an investment of the accumulations, and he proceeds as follows : "and shall hold one equal third part of such surplus income and all investments and accumulations thereof upon the same ultimate trusts as are hereinafter declared with reference to the capital of my residuary trust fund." To my mind, it is reasonably clear that he is there dealing with two separate things. First, he is dealing with accumulations of one third, which will be held by the trustees in the form of investments, and, as from the date when the period of accumulation ceases, with one equal third part of the surplus income, and he is saying that both those things are to go as mentioned in cl. 7. It is true that cl. 7 relates to the death of the wife, but that does not contradict the fact that these two items of property, one of which is capital, so to speak, and one of which is income for a period which will come to an end on the death of the wife, are to be held upon the ultimate trusts declared in cl. 7, which means the trusts to be operative at the death of the wife. There was, in my opinion, no intestacy with regard to that one third share. The accumulations, which are capital, are to be held as mentioned in cl. 7, and the income, for the period I have mentioned, will also go as provided in cl. 7.

The effect of that was that, as regards the one-third, the accumulations made in the 21-year period became capital for the purposes of cl. 7, and the surplus income became income for the purposes of cl. 7 and immediately distributable as it would have been if the widow had not been living.

MAUGHAM, J., then came to the provision about the two-thirds, which is the one with which I am concerned to-day, and he said :

Then comes a clause which I think is more difficult to construe, and that is as to the remaining two equal third parts. I have to bear in mind that the testator has directed the accumulation for the period I have mentioned, the life of his wife, or the period of 21 years, whichever is the shorter. Having done that, he says "as to the remaining two equal third parts of such surplus income and all investments and accumulations thereof." That is the same phrase which he has used, mutatis mutandis, with regard to the one third of the residue, and, I think, again he is dealing here with two separate things, the capital of the accumulations, or investments representing the accumulations—whichever you please—and two equal third parts of the surplus income during the period from when the accumulations come to an end to the death of the wife, and then there is a slip in the will, because he says, as regards those two items: "My trustees shall pay the same unto my said wife during her life or until she shall marry again for her own use and benefit . . ." That opens up the argument, which has been very fairly put, that the investments representing these accumulations, are to be paid to the wife. To my mind, though the argument, as I say, is a reasonable argument, it ought not to succeed. I think, having regard to the circumstances that there is an intended trust for accumulation, and that the only object of the accumulation is to capitalise this surplus income, and to the fact that the phrase is "shall pay the same unto my said wife during her life or until she shall marry again for her own use and benefit," the true construction of that clause is that the income of the investments and accumulations for the 21 year period and the income resulting from two equal third parts of the surplus of the residuary trust fund are to be paid to the wife during the period until her death.

MAUGHAM, J., then dealt with the resulting position at the death of the testator's widow :

It is true that, as the result of that construction, a question of some difficulty may arise as to the accumulations of the two third parts of the surplus income upon the death of the widow. I think that is inevitable. It is a future question, and it is impossible for me to know now what the parties would desire to argue when that point becomes material. It may very well be that, by some family arrangement, it will never arise for discussion. I cannot deal with it now. I must answer the first question by saying that the two third parts of the surplus income were not payable during the period of accumulation to the widow, but they ought to have been accumulated in accordance with the directions in the will. With regard to the second question, I answer it by saying that the accumulations representing one third of the surplus income on the expiration of the period of accumulation were to be divided or distributed or held as directed in cl. 7 of the will. That means that one half will be handed over to the representatives of Kate Oliver.

In the course of a discussion about the form of the declaration to be made, MAUGHAM, J., disclaimed having held that there was an intestacy. He said: "So far there is no intestacy." From what he said in the body of his judgment, he intended to keep open the question of some difficulty which he thought might arise on the death of the widow. The widow now being dead, the question has become a present question and it is now before me for decision. The question, in substance, is whether the accumulations made during the period of 21 years are undisposed of by the will, or whether they pass under cl. 7 so as to become divisible between the settled shares of the two daughters.

I think it is right to begin one's consideration of that question by remembering what I think is well settled, namely, that a gift expressly limited to take effect on a future date does not carry the intermediate income, and the gift in cl. 7 is a vested gift limited to take effect at a future date, as opposed to an immediate gift on a contingent event. If authority is needed for the proposition that a gift of that character does not carry the intermediate income, it is to be found in the authorities cited to me, the first of which was Weatherall v. Thornburgh (1). In that case the testator gave freehold and leasehold estates to trustees on trust for his wife for life or second marriage, and, in case she should marry again, then from and after that event, during the remainder of her life, on trust to receive the rents and to hold the same during her life on the trusts thereafter mentioned, and after her death to the use of G. absolutely. He gave his personal estate to the same trustees, and directed them to pay the income to his wife during her widowhood, but, if she should marry again, then from and after such marriage all these bequests in her favour were to cease, and in lieu thereof they were to pay her, out of the rents and income, an annuity of £500, and, during her life, to invest the surplus (if any), and after her decease such trust moneys, surplus, rents, funds, and accumulations of income were to be disposed of by the trustees in paying certain legacies, and the residue he gave to T.M. absolutely. The widow married again two years after the testator's death and, after her remarriage the surplus income had been invested and accumulated. There was no limit there of 21 years for the period of accumulation, and, accordingly, on the expiration of that period, the direction to invest the surplus income was avoided by virtue of the Thellusson Act [Accumulations Act, 1800] and the question was the destination of the surplus income during the rest of the widow's lifetime. The decision of the Court of Appeal was :

. . . that as to the surplus rents and income which would accrue between the expiration of 21 years from the testator's death and the death of his widow, there was an intestacy ; and that T.M. was not entitled during the life of the widow to ask for payment of the accumulated funds . . .

The basis of that decision was that, where a trust for accumulation is put an end to by the Thellusson Act, one must construe the will as if the direction to accumulate quoad the excessive period was struck out of the will and see what the result is. That operation having been applied in Weatherall v. Thornburgh (1), it was found that there was a gap and that the persons entitled under the future gift could not claim the intermediate income because there was no express gift of it to them, and the gift to them was not of such a character as to carry that result by implication. It will be noted, however, that Weatherall v. Thornburgh (1), was not concerned with the destination of the accumulations so far as lawfully made, which were, indeed, expressly disposed of.

In Re Blake, Berry v. Geen (2), a recent decision in the House of Lords, their Lordships arrived at a similar conclusion to that arrived at in Weatherall v. Thornburgh (1). The question in that case was what was to be done with surplus income directed to be accumulated until the death of the last survivor of certain annuitants, there being a gift after the death of such survivor on certain charitable trusts. The period of accumulation having been excessive, the question arose what was to happen to the income in the meantime. LORD MAUGHAM, L.C., said ([1938] 2 All E.R. 365) :

The next point argued is that the words " I give the whole of my property after the death of the last personal annuitant " are wide enough to include the surplus income illegally directed to be accumulated and released, so to speak, by the Act [the Thellusson Act, re-enacted in the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 164]. It is well settled that the proper method of approach to this question is to construe the will as it stands, without regard to the statutory limit of accumulation, and then to consider the effect of the Act upon the dispositions contained in the will. If a specific fund is directed to be accumulated for a period beyond that which is allowed by the Act, the released income (as I shall call the income not validly disposed of by the testator) will generally pass under the residuary gift.

That, of course, is not the present case, because the questions all relate to the residuary trust fund itself. LORD MAUGHAM, L.C., then said (ibid) :

If the direction refers to the income of residue, the released income, generally speaking, is undisposed of, and will devolve (as regards a will coming into operation before 1926), in the case of personal property, upon the next of kin, and, in the case of real property, upon the heir . . .

He then cited certain cases, and said (ibid, 365, 366) :

On the other hand, there may no doubt be cases where the final gift of residue is so worded as to include all income not effectually disposed of in the preceding dispositions. In the present case, such a construction seems to me to be impossible, since it is clear that the Congregational Union is given nothing until the death of the last personal annuitant. The words " after the death of the last personal annuitant " cannot be disregarded, and it is to be observed that the phrase is in effect a repetition of the previous sentence " and on the death of the last personal annuitant " which introduces the gifts of pecuniary legacies to the four named Congregational Churches. It follows that, unless the accumulations can be stopped, the released income down to the death of the last surviving personal annuitant will pass as on an intestacy to the next of kin and the heir-at-law.

By parity of reasoning, I think it is clear that, if this had been a case of an invalid direction to accumulate, the income during the period of excessive accumulation would have been undisposed of, because it could not be claimed that the gift under cl. 7 was one which would have carried the intermediate income if the excessive direction to accumulate had been struck out of the will, but it should be borne in mind that what is in question here is, not the destination of income invalidly directed to be accumulated during some excessive period, but the destination of accumulations, in fact, lawfully made. As to that, it is interesting to note that in Re Blake, Berry v. Geen (2), it was held by BENNETT, J., when the matter was before him—and, apparently, not questioned in the Court of Appeal or the House of Lords that the accumulations, so far as validly made, did pass to the recipients of the residuary capital. Under the will in Re Blake, Berry v. Geen (2), there was a gift and devise of all the testator's property, both real and personal, to his trustees on trust to pay certain annuities, then there was the direction to accumulate the surplus income, and then, after the death of the last personal annuitant, there was a gift of the whole of the testator's property to the Congregational Union of England and Wales on certain trusts. It was held there that, although there was no disposition in so many words of the income validly accumulated, it did pass.

In Re Mellor, Alvarez v. Dodgson (3), there was a gift to a class of beneficiaries "who, being males, attained the age of 25 years or being females attained that age or married in equal shares." This was a case of a contingent gift and was, therefore, a gift which carried by implication of law the intermediate income, and the testatrix, having made that contingent gift, went on to direct that the share of each beneficiary acquiring a vested interest should be settled on trusts under which the beneficiary took a life interest only. One of the beneficiaries in the class duly acquired a vested interest after the death of the testatrix, and the question was what was to be done with the income which, pending the contingency, had been accumulated, and, in accordance with the law applicable to a case in which there is a contingent gift, carrying intermediate income. The decision of EVE, J., and the Court of Appeal was that the accumulations must be treated as capital. That, of course, is a somewhat different case from the one now before me, because there was by implication of law an actual gift of the intermediate income, and the testatrix, having made a gift in that form, then proceeded to settle the shares in question. The only question was whether that settlement included the accumulations of income as income or capital, and it seems to me that, in those circumstances, the natural conclusion was that the testatrix must have intended that that which she directed should be settled should include as part of the capital the income which had been accumulated pending the happening of the contingency, but Re Mellor (3); does show, at all events, that accumulated income acquires what might be described as a capital flavour.

Be that as it may, in the present case there must be an intestacy unless I can find something amounting to a gift of the accumulations on the trusts of the residuary trust fund, and the question is whether I can do so on the construction of this will, which, as MAUGHAM, J., said, is expressed in inaccurate language. It is to be noted that, as regards the one-third, the testator directed his trustees to hold :

... one equal third part of such surplus income and all investments and accumulations thereof upon the same ultimate trusts as are hereinafter declared with reference to the capital of my residuary trust fund . . .

Thus, there was, as regards this one third, an express direction that the accumulations should be held as capital. That express direction is strongly relied on by those who contend for an intestacy in this case. It is said that, inasmuch as, in dealing with the first third, the testator gave an express direction to capitalise, it is clear he well recognised the distinction between the accumulations, on the one hand, and the capital of the residuary trust fund on the other, and appreciated the necessity of an express direction to treat the accumulation as capital. Furthermore, it is said that that express direction as regards the one-third excludes the possibility or propriety, as a matter of construction, of implying such a direction in the branch of the clause which deals with the two-thirds. I appreciate the force of that argument, but I cannot say I regard it as conclusive in construing an inaccurate and inadequately drawn will of this character. Then, again, it was said—and said, I think, with some force—that one cannot spell a gift of the accumulations out of the gift, in cl. 7 of the will, of "my residuary trust fund," inasmuch as the testator has been at pains to define the residuary trust fund as including, and including only, the net proceeds of sale and ready money remaining over after payment of his debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, and the legacies bequeathed by his will.

I quite appreciate the force of these arguments, but it is to be remembered that in considering cl. 6, MAUGHAM, J., found himself able to construe the provision regarding the two-thirds of the surplus income as a provision, not for the payment to the widow of the surplus income and the investments and accumulations thereof, but for the payment to the widow of the surplus income accruing after the period of accumulation and the income of the investments representing the accumulations made during that period. He was able to arrive at that conclusion, as I understand it, because he found in the direction to accumulate an intention to capitalise the income accumulated. Therefore, the testator in this branch of the clause, as construed by MAUGHAM, J., directed that the accumulations should be treated as capital during the widow's lifetime and that she should only receive the income of it. That is what he meant to happen, and, therefore, he must have contemplated that, at the widow's death, the trustees would have in hand, to be dealt with somehow, the residuary trust fund as it stood, or the investments representing it, plus investments representing accumulations which, as MAUGHAM, J., said, the testator intended to capitalise.

That being the state of affairs which the testator must be taken to have contemplated as existing when c. 7 came into operation, he said in cl. 7 :

Upon the death of my said wife my trustees shall hold my residuary trust fund upon trust to divide the same into three equal parts. . .

It seems to me that the direction to divide the residuary trust fund on the death of the wife, coupled with the direction in cl. 6 (3) as construed by MAUGHAM, J., provides a sufficient context to enable me to hold that what the trustees were to divide was the whole of the residuary trust fund then in hand, as defined in cl. 6, together with those further investments which the trustees would then have in hand, representing the accumulations of surplus income which the testator had directed to be made. I am fortified in reaching that conclusion by the decision of BENNETT, J., in Re Blake, Berry v. Geen (2), as regards the valid accumulations in that case (see [1938] A.C. 577) : As I have said, I appreciate the force of the argument founded on the express reference to capital in the passage dealing with the one third of surplus income, but it is to be noted that it was necessary as regards this one third for the testator to give some special directions, because what he wanted to do, so far as this one third was concerned, was, in effect, to accelerate the trusts which normally were only going to come into operation on the death of his wife. I think that that to some extent, at all events, accounts for this express reference to the capital in that part of the clause. Furthermore, in a will of this kind, I do not think that alterations in expression, or changes in language, are matters to which such strict regard should be had as to defeat what appears, on looking at the whole will, to have been the testator's intention, imperfectly expressed though it may have been.

For these reasons, I propose to declare that, on the true construction of the will, these accumulations as from the death of the widow fell to be held as capital of the trust fund under cl. 7, having regard, of course, to any events such as the exercise of a general power of appointment.

Declaration accordingly. Costs of all parties between solicitor and client to be paid out of the residuary trust fund.

Solicitors : Sharpe, Pritchard & Co., agents for Underhill, Willcock & Taylor, Wolverhampton (for the plaintiff) ; Last, Sons & Fitton ; W. F. Gillham and Taylor, Jelf & Co. (for the defendants).

[Reported by R. D. H. OSBORNE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

R. v. ST. EDMUNDSBURY AND IPSWICH DIOCESE
(CHANCELLOR) AND ANOTHER : Ex parte WHITE AND ANOTHER.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Scott, Wrottesley and Evershed, L.JJ.), May, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 19, 20, 21, 22, June 23, 1947.]

Crown Practice—Certiorari—Consistory court.

An order of certiorari does not lie to bring up to be quashed an order of a consistory court. There is no precedent for the making of such an order or the issue of a writ of certiorari by the Court of King's Bench or the King's Bench Division, and in the interests of all concerned, and, particularly, of litigants, a long settled practice of a court of record is not to be disturbed except by establishing that a departure from it is necessary to do justice to an applicant who can get justice in no other way and to whom the court has always had jurisdiction to grant the relief which is prayed for. A heavy burden lies, therefore, on those who challenge a practice so long settled. If applicants for an order of certiorari to an ecclesiastical court have, in fact, suffered from an excess of jurisdiction the writ of prohibition is available to put an end to their grievance.

Decision of the Divisional Court, [1946] 2 All E.R. 604, affirmed.

[AS TO WHAT COURTS CERTIORARI MAY ISSUE, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 9, pp. 851-873, paras. 1442-1475; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 16, pp. 400-402, Nos. 2438-2466.]

Cases referred to :

- (1) Ricketts v. Bodenham, (1836), 4 Ad. & El. 433; 5 L.J.K.B. 102; 111 E.R. 850; sub. nom. Bodenham v. Ricketts, 1 Har. & W. 753; 6 Nev. & M.K.B. 170, 537; 19 Digest 308, 1069.
- (2) St. David's (Bp.) v. Lucy, (1699), as reported in 1 Ld. Raym 539; 91 E.R. 1260; sub. nom. Lucy v. St. David's (Bp.), Brod. & F. 332; 19 Digest 323, 1270.
- (3) Mackonochie v. Penzance (Lord), (1881), 6 App. Cas. 424; 50 L.J.K.B. 611; 44 L.T. 479; 45 J.P. 584; 19 Digest 224, 16.
- (4) Longbottom v. Longbottom, (1852), 8 Exch. 203; 22 L.J. Ex. 74; 17 J.P. 169; 13 Digest 544, 993.
- (5) Ackerley v. Parkinson, (1815), 3 M. & S. 411; 105 E.R. 665; 19 Digest 241, 229.
- (6) R. v. Boaler, (1892), 67 L.T. 354; 56 J.P. 792; 16 Digest 401, 2448.
- (7) Cardiff Bridge Case, (1700), 1 Salk 146; 91 E.R. 135; sub. mon R. v. Glamorgan-shire (Inhabitants), 12 Mod. Rep. 403; 1 Ld. Raym 580; sub. nom. R. v. —, 1 Com. 86; 16 Digest 401, 2458.
- (8) R. v. Boaler, (1888), Times, Jan. 25; 16 Digest 403, 2487.
- (9) Re Gassock, (1656), 1 Lilly's Register, 253, 363; Style's Practical Register, 4th edn. 154; 16 Digest 400, 2432.
- (10) Burder v. Veley, (1840), 12 Ad. & El. 233; Arn. & H. 175; 4 Per & Dav. 452; 9 L.J.Q.B. 267; 4 J.P. 379, 394; 113 E.R. 801; affd. sub. nom. Veley v. Burder (1841), 12 Ad. & El. 265, Ex. Ch.; 16 Digest 372, 2109.
- (11) R. v. Electricity Comrs., Ex p. London Electricity Joint Committee Co. (1920), Ltd., [1924] 1 K.B. 171; 93 L.J.K.B. 390; 130 L.T. 164; 88 J.P. 13; Digest Supp.
- (12) Re Heapphy, (1888), 22 L.R.Ir. 500.
- (13) Lalor v. Bland, (1858), 8 I.C.L.R. 115.

APPEAL from a decision of a King's Bench Divisional Court (LORD GODDARD, C.J., LEWIS and OLIVER, JJ.) dated Nov. 7, 1946, and reported [1946] 2 All E.R. 604.

On Sept. 9, 1944, in the consistory court of St. Edmundsbury and Ipswich, the chancellor of the diocese granted a licence or faculty to Mrs. Florence Paddy, of 17 White City, Haughley, in the county of Suffolk. The licence recited (inter alia) that, on Apr. 16, 1944, the vicar of the parish, the Rev. W. G. White, wrote to Mrs. Paddy demanding that she apply to the chancellor for a faculty. The letter ran : "No flowers may be placed on the grave [of Mrs. Paddy's child] and no memorial set there, without a faculty." The operative part of the licence was (so far as material) in the following terms : "We do hereby (so far as by law we may or can) give and grant unto [Mrs. Paddy] our licence or faculty authorising her . . . at all reasonable times to have access to the grave of her child Patricia Ann Paddy in the churchyard of the parish church of St. Mary, Haughley, for the purpose of keeping the same neat and tidy and placing upon or removing from the said grave from time to time fresh natural flowers." The licence proceeded to inhibit all persons from interfering with Mrs. Paddy's exercise of the faculty granted to her, and ordered the Rev. W. G. White and the churchwardens jointly and severally to pay the court fees and Mrs. Paddy's costs of an incidental to the faculty, such costs, unless agreed, to be taxed by the registrar of the diocese, as between solicitor and client. On June 6, 1946, the applicants, the Rev. W. G. White and one of the churchwardens, Mrs. Rosie Helen Bloom, obtained leave from a Divisional Court of the King's Bench Division to apply for an order of certiorari to bring up the licence or faculty of Sept. 8, 1944, to be quashed for want of jurisdiction in the chancellor. The motion came on for hearing in Nov., 1946, before a Divisional Court consisting of LORD GODDARD, C.J., LEWIS and OLIVER, JJ. Mrs. Paddy, by her counsel, took the preliminary objection that the court had no jurisdiction to make an order of certiorari addressed to a consistory court, or at least no jurisdiction so to do in the present case, and the court, being of opinion that this objection was well founded, refused the motion with costs. The vicar and Mrs. Bloom appealed.

M. O. Strandens and R. A. Scaramanga for the applicants.

J. Neville Gray, K.C., and Humphrey H. King for the respondent, Mrs. Paddy. The Chancellor was not represented.

Cur adv. vult.

SCOTT, L.J. : I have read the judgments of WROTTESELEY and EVERSHED, L.JJ., and I agree with them. I will ask WROTTESELEY, L.J., to read his judgment.

WROTTESELEY, L.J., read the following judgment. In this case the applicants applied to a Divisional Court of the King's Bench Division for an order of certiorari to bring up and quash a faculty granted on Sept. 9, 1944, by the chancellor of the diocese of St. Edmundsbury and Ipswich, on the ground that the faculty was in excess of the jurisdiction of the chancellor. The faculty contained inter alia a grant to the petitioner, Mrs. Paddy, of the right of access to her child's grave in the churchyard of the parish church, and an inhibition against all the world (including the vicar) not to let or hinder her in the exercise of the grant, and also an order against the vicar and a churchwarden for the payment of costs as between solicitor and client. It was proposed, on behalf of the vicar and churchwarden, to contend that the faculty was one which the chancellor had no jurisdiction to make, but before the merits of the case were gone into the respondent, by her counsel, submitted that, in any event, the King's Bench could not, in accordance with its principles and practice, issue a writ, now an order, of certiorari to any ecclesiastical court. After argument, the court upheld this contention. The grounds of this decision were summarised by LORD GODDARD, C.J., as follows ([1946] 2 All E.R. 608) :—(1) In fact, no case had been found in the books of such a writ, in itself a reason for the court not to make a precedent by issuing it now, for communis opinio obviously had been that no such writ would issue to such a court. (2) The ecclesiastical courts are not inferior courts. In spiritual causes they are as unfettered as is the superior court in temporal causes, subject, however, to restraint from trespassing beyond the spiritual field by the writ of prohibition issuing from the High Court. (3) The ecclesiastical courts are not bound by decisions of the common law courts, and the common law judges did not issue writs of certiorari for the reason that they had not such knowledge of the civil or canon law with which ecclesiastical courts were concerned as to enable them to deal satisfactorily with matters controlled by an exotic law.

The question, therefore, with which this court is concerned is whether the Divisional Court was right in holding that it is no longer open to it to grant a certiorari to quash a proceeding in an ecclesiastical court which is in excess of the jurisdiction of the court. If the Divisional Court was right, the appeal must be dismissed. If it came to a wrong decision, the case must go back to enable the court below to decide whether in the circumstances and on the merits of the case the order ought to be made.

Before going into the matters in issue, it is well to state one thing on which both parties to the appeal are agreed. The order for certiorari is the modern substitute for the old writ of certiorari, and the researches of all concerned have failed to discover any case of a writ of certiorari issuing to an ecclesiastical court to bring up and quash any proceedings. Writs of certiorari have issued to bishops calling on them to certify to the common law courts, or to the chancery, matters peculiarly within the knowledge of the bishop, such as a list of the incumbents in a parish, whether a parson who has pleaded benefit of clergy in a criminal case is, in fact, a clerk, and so forth, but these instances do not give us any real help on the question which we have to decide, and there can be no doubt that when the Lord Chief Justice said that no case had been found of certiorari issuing to ecclesiastical courts he was referring, and was understood to refer, to writs of certiorari to courts to bring up the record or its equivalent in order that the King's Bench should cause to be done what of right it should see fit to do according to the law and custom of England, and not a writ or writing to certify something which it was desired merely to put in evidence. It will be seen that in the court below the Lord Chief Justice, while holding that the fact that this writ of certiorari to quash had not issued to the ecclesiastical courts over a period of 400 or 500 years was sufficient to justify the court in concluding that there was no jurisdiction to issue it, yet went on to explore the history of the matter in order to see what reasoning underlay the undoubted practice of the court. Similarly, in this court the parties have found it necessary, in the course of a hearing which occupied nine days, to investigate very fully the history, both of the writ of certiorari and also that of prohibition, and from that history the applicants claim to establish that the Lord Chief Justice was wrong (i) in concluding that the ecclesiastical courts are not inferior courts; (ii) in asserting that writs of certiorari have not lain to admiralty courts; (iii) in saying that there was such a doctrine as communis opinio, and that, even if there were, that it was to the effect that the writ of certiorari did not lie to the ecclesiastical courts; (iv) in saying that ecclesiastical courts were not bound by decisions of the High Court, at any rate, in matters of jurisdiction; (v) in saying that the judges of the common law courts have not knowledge of civil or canon law sufficient to enable them to prevent excess of jurisdiction by the courts which administer such laws. For the respondent, Mr. Neville Gray, while conceding that in certain respects the judgment of the Lord Chief Justice (which was not a reserved judgment) may have gone beyond what was necessary for the decision of the case and may have included propositions which could not, on a closer scrutiny of the history be supported, yet claimed that the decision was right and was in substance correct, both in the conclusion to which the Lord Chief Justice came and in substance in the reasons given.

One of the matters most in controversy, both in the Divisional Court and here, was the question whether the ecclesiastical courts were and are inferior courts, and the more this matter was investigated the clearer it became that the word "inferior" as applied to courts of law in England had been used with at least two very different meanings. If, as some assert, the question of inferiority is determined by ascertaining whether the court in question can be stopped from exceeding its jurisdiction by a writ of prohibition issuing from the King's Bench, then not only the ecclesiastical courts, but also palatine courts and admiralty courts are inferior courts, but there is another test, well recognised by lawyers, by which to distinguish a superior from an inferior court, viz., whether in its proceedings, and, in particular, in its judgments, it must appear that the court was acting within its jurisdiction. This is the characteristic of an inferior court, whereas in the proceedings of a superior court it will be presumed that it acted within its jurisdiction unless the contrary should appear either on the face of the proceedings or aliunde. In the latter sense it is nowhere suggested that the ecclesiastical courts were inferior. Indeed, in Ricketts v. Bodenham (1), counsel on both sides and LITTLEDALE, J., expressed a contrary opinion, SIR JOHN CAMPBELL saying that they were courts christian and superior, though liable to prohibition if they exceeded their jurisdiction. SIR FREDERICK POLLOCK said (4 Ad. & El. 446):

The fact that this court will restrain the ecclesiastical courts by prohibition shows that they are inferior to this court, so far as the present argument is concerned; though, in some sense, they may be termed superior courts.

He went on to point out want of jurisdiction appearing, as he said, on the face of the proceedings. LITTLEDALE, J., when pressed with the point that, since it did not appear on the face of the proceedings that the dispute was as to the validity of the rate, the writ should go on the authority of cases cited by SIR FREDERICK POLLOCK, said (ibid.):

Those are cases of common law courts, which are inferior to the courts of Westminster Hall; but ecclesiastical courts are not so.

and later he pointed out that prohibition lay to courts of a county palatine if they held plea of lands out of the county. Palatine courts were, of course - at any rate, in earlier times—superior courts of equal standing with the High Court and of co-ordinate jurisdiction. In this respect I find myself unable to agree with the author of the article in the April, 1947, issue of the LAW QUARTERLY REVIEW, at pp. 210 and 211, in throwing doubt on the report of the case. The observations of the judge are so interwoven with carefully reported arguments that they cannot be imaginary.

The matter is really one of terminology, and the true view is that the King's Bench, because it was the court in which the King sat, originally in fact and always in theory, was charged with the general duty of seeing that all courts of limited jurisdiction kept within those limits. At any rate, in early times it was the King in Council who set out the limits of those jurisdictions, though later this was done by statute. Some of these jurisdictions were limited only by local boundaries, such as palatinates where the King abandoned the regalia, including the administration of justice, to the head of the palatinate. Sometimes the limits were extremely wide as in the case of the Cinque Ports, whose inhabitants could only be sued at home. At the other end of the scale were the courts of pie poudre attached to fairs, for the settlement of disputes during the currency of the fair. There were the various courts which administered the law merchant. There was the court of the admiral in the time of Edward III, followed by the court of admiralty in the 15th century. There was the court of the constable and the marshal, administering martial law, which, in 1384, had to be controlled by statute. There was the court of heraldry which, in addition to its jurisdiction over coats-of-arms, exercised at one time a jurisdiction as to slander upon men of noble blood. These are only some of the many courts of limited jurisdiction which existed and sometimes flourished side by side with King's Bench, Common Pleas, Exchequer and later the Chancery courts: see HOLDSWORTH'S HISTORY OF ENGLISH LAW, Vol. 1, passim; but all these limited jurisdictions were subject to the jurisdiction of the King's Bench court in this respect, that if they transgressed their limits the writ of prohibition would go to put an end to the proceedings, and to prohibit both judges and parties from taking any steps to enforce anything that had been done. To this general overriding authority of the King's Bench the ecclesiastical courts, old as they were, were no exception, nor did the fact that prior to the reformation they derived some part of their authority from another sovereign, the Pope, afford any protection. Thus, in 1285, when the boundaries of the territory within which the church was supreme were still to some extent fluid, we find the King in Council laying down in the "Circumspecte Agatis" (13 Edw. I., stat. 4) the limits, and setting out some of the matters in which the courts christian could, and some in which they could not, hold plea. In 1315 the matter was more fully dealt with in the "Articuli Cleri" (9 Edw. II., stat. 1). These struggles continued down to the Reformation. The limits of the jurisdiction of the ecclesiastical courts were extremely wide, and at one time included, in addition to the jurisdiction concerning matrimony and probate, and, of course, heresy, the power to try and punish by spiritual measures, or through writs from Chancery in case of contumacy, various offences against morality and good behaviour, many of which were subsequently made criminal offences, subject either to indictment or to trial before justices. Public opinion and Parliament were alike in favour of limiting this part of the jurisdiction of the ecclesiastical courts, and of handing it over to the common law or criminal courts for reasons well known to readers of Chaucer. And no sooner did this occur than, to use the words of COKE in COKE UPON LITTLETON, 96 b:

... where the common or statute law giveth remedy in foro seculari (whether the matter be temporal or spiritual) the consans of that cause belongeth to the King's temporal courts only; unless the jurisdiction of the ecclesiastical court be saved or allowed by the same statute to proceed according to the ecclesiastical laws.

In 3 Jac. I came the "Articuli Cleri" of Richard Bancroft, Archbishop of Canterbury, which are fully set out with the unanimous answers of all the judges of England and the barons of the Exchequer in COKE'S INSTITUTES, II, pp. 601 et seq. It is not necessary to go through them in detail, but they show two things clearly. What was complained of by the clergy was the "multiplication of prohibitions" to the ecclesiastical courts; what is justified by the judges is the issue of prohibitions whenever those courts transgress the limits of their jurisdiction. The only other writ touched upon is habeas corpus, which the judges say they are bound to issue, and to release the prisoner if on return no cause or no sufficient cause appears. Certiorari is not even referred to.

I make no excuse for going in some slight detail into these matters of history, for what emerges from them is that the ecclesiastical courts were courts to which one would not expect a writ to go in order to remove into the King's Bench courts the record to decide what should be done in the case. Nor does the history indicate that it was by chance merely that a writ of certiorari never issued. Still less is it possible to read the history of the matter without seeing that the King's Bench was by no means backward in performing its duties of keeping the ecclesiastical courts, or any other courts, within their proper sphere, but the weapon which the King in Council had entrusted to his own court for this purpose was the writ of prohibition, which went to all courts of limited jurisdiction regardless of their position or of the law they administered. For this purpose, particularly where the court concerned did not administer the common law, prohibition was the logical remedy, one not open to abuse by the court issuing the writ, nor to criticism by the court prohibited, as certiorari would have been. Thus HOLT, C.J., in Bishop of St. David's v. Lucy (2) (1 Ld. Raym. 544):

It is without precedent, to grant a prohibition to the ecclesiastical courts, because they proceed there contrary to the canons; meaning that not even this writ could be resorted to to correct ecclesiastical courts, so long as they erred within their jurisdiction. Similarly, in Mackonochie v. Lord Penzance (3) (6 App. Cas. 444), LORD BLACKBURN pointed out that prohibition did not enable the temporal courts to act as a court of appeal from courts ecclesiastical, so to correct irregularity or injustice which may have been done in exercise of their jurisdiction. Certiorari, on the other hand, might have led to the very intermeddling which, when done by the ecclesiastical courts, was the principal ground of prohibition: see the first answer in "Articuli Cleri" of 3 Jac. 1 (COKE'S INSTITUTES, II, p. 601):

No man maketh any question, but that both the jurisdictions are lawfully and justly in his majesty, and that if any abuses be, they ought to be reformed: but what the law doth warrant in cases of prohibition to keep every jurisdiction in his true limits, is not to be said an abuse, nor can be altered but by parliament.

Longbottom v. Longbottom (4) provides an admirable example of the difference between the two writs. Prohibition, though asked for to a county court, was not granted; certiorari was, for the subject-matter lay within the jurisdiction of the county court and so it should not be prohibited, but it was so difficult a matter that it was removed for trial into the King's Bench.

The relationship between the common law courts and the ecclesiastical courts is admirably set out by BAYLEY, J., in Ackerley v. Parkinson (5) (3 M. & S. 428):

The subject-matter is the granting administration of the intestate's effects, and with a view to that all the proceedings are instituted. What the proceedings are to be in order to obtain administration, depends entirely upon the mode and practice of proceeding of the ecclesiastical court. Whether that court will grant administration or not to any person before citation goes, or certain previous steps be taken, is a matter which they must know as connected with their practice: but how are we, as judges of the common law, to know whether their proceedings have been such as the civil or canon law requires? Our knowledge of what is conformable or not to that law is chiefly derived from our practice of exercising jurisdiction over those courts in the matter of granting prohibitions. If it appears that the ecclesiastical judge has either no jurisdiction, or has exceeded his jurisdiction, this court is in the habit of interposing by granting a prohibition. But if the spiritual court has jurisdiction, I am not aware of any instance in which this court has granted a prohibition, except in cases where it proceeds to the trial of a matter triable only by the common law, or allows a thing not allowed by the common law, or where the construction of a statute, which is peculiarly confined to the common law, comes in question.

It is not, therefore, surprising to find that BLACKSTONE, writing in 1768 and approaching the matter, as he does, from a different angle, viz., that of the subject who is injured by encroachment of jurisdiction, calls the writ of prohibition the remedy provided by the common law. Here is the passage (BLACKSTONE'S COMMENTARIES, Bk. III, p. 111) :

The other injury, which is that of encroachment of jurisdiction, or calling one coram non judice, to answer in a court that has no legal cognizance of the cause, is also a grievance, for which the common law has provided a remedy by the writ of prohibition. A prohibition is a writ issuing properly only out of the Court of King's Bench, being the King's prerogative writ ; but, for the furtherance of justice, it may now also be had in some cases out of the Court of Chancery, Common Pleas, or Exchequer, directed to the judge and parties of a suit in any inferior court, commanding them to cease from the prosecution thereof, upon a suggestion that either the cause originally, or some collateral matter arising therein, does not belong to that jurisdiction, but to the cognizance of some other court. This writ may issue either to inferior courts of common law ; as, to the courts of the counties palatine or principality of Wales, if they hold plea of land or other matters not lying within their respective franchises ; to the county courts or courts-baron, where they attempt to hold plea to any matter of the value of forty shillings ; or it may be directed to the courts christian, the university courts, the court of chivalry, or the court of admiralty, where they concern themselves with any matter not within their jurisdiction ; as if the first should attempt to try the validity of a custom pleaded, or the latter a contract made or to be executed within this kingdom. Or, if, in handling of matters clearly within their cognizance, they transgress the bounds prescribed to them by the laws of England ; as where they require two witnesses to prove the payment of a legacy, a release of tithes, or the like ; in such cases also a prohibition will be awarded. For, as the fact of signing a release, or of actual payment, is not properly a spiritual question, but only allowed to be decided in those courts, because incident or accessory to some original question clearly within their jurisdiction ; it ought therefore, where the two laws differ, to be decided not according to the spiritual, but the temporal law, else the same question might be determined different ways, according to the court in which the suit is depending : an impropriety, which no wise government can or ought to endure, and which is, therefore, a ground of prohibition. And, if either the judge or the party shall proceed after such prohibition, an attachment may be had against them, to punish them for the contempt, at the discretion of the court that awarded it ; and an action will lie against them, to repair the partly injured in damages.

It is interesting here to note how BLACKSTONE catalogues the courts to which the writs will lie—"inferior courts of common law," including "courts of the counties palatine," etc., "county courts or courts baron," etc., and then he continues : "or it may be directed to the courts christian, the university courts, the courts of chivalry, or the court of admiralty" etc. It is true that later on in a discussion as to procedure, he uses the phrases "superior courts" and "court below," but this is clearly in the sense of issuing and receiving the writ of prohibition. It is unthinkable that BLACKSTONE would have described the writ of prohibition as being the remedy open to a person wronged by being cited to a court which exceeds its jurisdiction, and, in particular, an ecclesiastical court, if, in fact, there was another such remedy, viz., the writ of certiorari, for those were the days when remedies in the main still took the form of writs, adapted to the particular case.

In the course of his argument, Mr. Stranders was fain to admit that it involved the proposition that certiorari had always been open to the person proceeded against in the ecclesiastical courts in excess of their jurisdiction, and, indeed, it is implicit in that argument, unless some change can be pointed to which made the writ of certiorari for the first time the appropriate remedy. No such change has been found.

On the above material, the court might have said, as was said in the court below, that there was no necessity to go further. In R. v. Boaler (6), CAVE, J., held that absence of authority for the grant of a writ in a particular kind of case, i.e., to quash a conviction at the Central Criminal Court, on which sentence had been passed, was conclusive against the application. Speaking for myself, I have always understood this to be the case. It was argued by the applicants here that the issue of the writ lay "in principle." I am not sure that I understand what that means. We are concerned here, not with the application of an acknowledged principle of law to a new set of facts, to which it applies as a matter of logic ; we are concerned, on the one hand, with a writ issuing as a matter of history out of the King's Bench or the Chancery to courts of record or to officials, and, on the other, with courts whose history goes back beyond the first such writ. It is not as though the ecclesiastical courts were a new jurisdiction created by Act of Parliament administering the common law. To such courts it is clear that certiorari would lie, unless expressly excluded : see the case of Cardiff Bridge, also known as R. v. Inhabitants of Glamorganshire (7).

A rule of practice, rigidly enforced for many hundreds of years, and not challenged as failing to afford redress to persons wronged, is not to be over-set by saying that one kind of certiorari, viz. a certiorari to quash, and prayed for on one ground only, viz., that the decision was one which exceeded the jurisdiction of the ecclesiastical court, would be a convenient alternative remedy for the applicant, and would not be open to any objection since it achieved the same result as prohibition, and would not intermeddle with what was within the limited jurisdiction. It is true that MATTHEW, J., in the earlier case of R. v. Boaler (8), is reported as saying that he was reluctant to hold that certiorari would not lie if no other way of obtaining justice should be available. There is an advantage in adhering to a practice which is several hundred years old, in the interests of litigants generally. Moreover, as far as this case is concerned, I have not been able to see in what respect the writ of prohibition would not give the applicants (provided they are entitled to it) all necessary remedies.

I turn to the history of the writ of certiorari. SIR ARTHUR FITZ-HERBERT (1470-1538) in the new NATURA BREVIVM, with the commentary ascribed to SIR MATTHEW HALE, 9th ed., vol. II, p. 245 says :

The writ of certiorari is an original writ, and issueth sometimes out of the chancery, and sometimes out of the King's Bench, and where the King would be certified of any record which is in the Treasury, or in the Common Pleas, or in any other court of record, or before the sheriff and coroners, or of a record before commissioners, or before the escheator ; he may send this writ to any of the said courts or offices, to certify such record before him in banco, or in the chancery . . .

Numerous forms of the writ are subjoined, to judges itinerant, coroners, judges of gaol delivery, sheriffs, the Chief Justice of the King's Bench himself (with a view to a pardon) or of Common Pleas, or to a bishop to certify a list of incumbents since the time of Edward IV, but there is not a suggestion that it will go to a bishop in the capacity of judge or his courts or any other ecclesiastical court. Then BACON'S ABRIDGMENT, vol. II, 7th ed., p. 9, under the title "Certiorari," says :

A certiorari is an original writ issuing out of Chancery or the King's Bench, directed in the King's name, to the judges or officers of (a) inferior courts, commanding them to return the records of a cause depending before them, to the end the party may have the more sure and speedy justice before him, or such other justices as he shall assign to determine the cause.

Again at p. 13 :

The courts of Chancery and King's Bench may award a certiorari to remove the proceeding from any inferior courts, whether they be of an ancient or newly created jurisdiction, unless the statute or charter, which creates them, exempts them from such jurisdiction.

VINER'S ABRIDGMENT, vol. IV, p. 330, title "Certiorari"—Out of what court it ought to issue and to whom ; et c contra :

If the record be pleaded in a more base court than that in which it is, the court may grant a certiorari.

COMYNS DIGEST, vol. II, title "Certiorari," pp. 331 et seq., follows FITZ-HERBERT and gives among numerous instances, at p. 334, one of the censors of the College of Physicians to remove a judgment by them for malpractice, and "so to every inferior jurisdiction of record, though it be within the county palatine or in Wales."

LILLY'S PRACTICAL REGISTER, 2nd ed., 1735, vol. 1, p. 363, has this :

Certiorari is a writ which issues out of the King's Bench to any inferior court of record, commanding them to certify to them the loquela, viz., the plaint, which is before them cum omnibus ea tangentibus ; which when returned, then upon a rule given, bail must be put in before a judge, or else a writ of procedendo will be granted. There is also a writ of certiorari which issues out of the Crown Office to certify indictments, etc.

In the notes it appears that GLYN, C.J., in the case of one Gassock (9), said that the King's Bench would grant a certiorari and remove a cause before judgment if the inferior court had no jurisdiction "or do not proceed therein according to the rules of the common law ; but, if an inferior court have jurisdiction and this court hath not, no certiorari ought to be granted, or it would be to no purpose to grant it." Another note doubts whether certiorari lies to Cinque Ports, except in an extraordinary case and after judgment with a view to a more efficient execution. Finally, TIDD'S PRACTICE (1828), vol. 1, 9th ed., p. 398, has the following :

A certiorari lies, in general, for the removal of all causes from inferior courts . . . and it will lie to remove an ejectment from an inferior court.

After reciting the above passage from LILLY, it illustrates the point by reference to an action brought in London for calling a woman "whore," actionable by the custom of London but not elsewhere, so the court refused to bring up the proceedings as it would have prevented the plaintiff from getting redress.

From all these passages relied on by the applicants it is apparent, not only that the writ never did go to the ecclesiastical court, but also that no text-book writer has ever suggested that it did, unless it be granted that they understood the term "inferior court of record" to include ecclesiastical court. It is, at least, doubtful whether an ecclesiastical court is in this sense a court of record. Generally speaking, it could only imprison by applying in appropriate form to the common law courts, or possibly the Chancery, for a writ, and then only for contumacy. It is true that special commissioners, and later the Court of High Commission, were given special powers to imprison, but the court of the chancellor, the bishop's deputy, never had such powers, and it is clear from the history and account of the writ and the numerous instances given in the text-books that their writers never, in fact, can have intended to include the ecclesiastical courts among the inferior courts to which they said that writs of certiorari went, even if they regarded the ecclesiastical courts as inferior courts, which is at least doubtful. The reason is not far to seek. The King's Bench was always careful not to endeavour to interpret ecclesiastical law, which was either civil or canon law, except in a case where it had to do so to exercise its jurisdiction to prevent courts of limited jurisdiction from straying beyond those limits. To this extent only have the judges of the King's Bench the inclination or the knowledge necessary to apply ecclesiastical law : see per LORD DENMAN in Burder v. Veley (10) (12 Ad. & El., 259). Asked, therefore, for a writ of certiorari to an ecclesiastical court, the King's Bench was bound to refuse it for the reason that it would remove into the King's Bench proceedings not capable of being determined there. It was this salutary line of argument which determined the practice of the court of King's Bench since certiorari first began to be used, and nothing has happened to make an alteration in the practice desirable. To remedy any grievance from which the appellant may be suffering, the writ of prohibition will lie if the circumstances warrant its issue, provided that the ecclesiastical court has exceeded its jurisdiction.

So far as the admiralty courts are concerned, according to the introduction to vol. II of SELECT PLEAS IN THE COURT OF ADMIRALTY by REGINALD G. MARSDEN, vol. II, SELDEN SOCIETY PUBLICATIONS, p. xli, the practice appears to have been that :

. . . the earliest interference with the Admiralty jurisdiction . . . was by way of superseas and certiorari, issuing apparently from Chancery ; and that the common law courts were not resorted to for prohibitions, until it was found that applications to the Council and the Chancellor usually resulted in the Admiralty being left to exercise the jurisdiction which it claimed.

That, however, did not prevent a continuous flow, after certiorari ceased to go, of writs of prohibition, some of which are set out in the same volume, which continued right down to 1602. When one asks oneself why those early writs of certiorari were blocked, either in the council or by the chancellor or by the King himself, at least a likely reason is to be found in the fact that the admiralty courts administered maritime law or the law merchant. It needed a special commission of oyer and terminer to try a case "secundum legem mercatoriam." At any rate in 1280, the courts of common law had no jurisdiction to redress any tort committed abroad (ibid., p. xliii and cases cited). The history of certiorari in so far as admiralty courts are concerned illustrates the difficulties into which the King's Bench courts got when they endeavoured to try matters not governed by the common law. As to the statement by ATKIN, L.J., in R. v. Electricity Commissioners (11) ([1924] 1 K.B.D. 204)* it is sufficient to say that the Lord

* See per EVERSHED, J., p. 181, post.

Justice treated the matter as one in which the court was at liberty to grant either writ, as indeed was the case, and merely indicated the difference in operation between the two writs, viz., that while the one prevented, the other cured. None the less, it is the fact that the effect of a writ of prohibition is not merely to prevent the making of an order should it arrive in time, but is also to prevent the enforcement of it should it arrive after it has been made.

I am of the opinion, therefore, that the court below came to a right conclusion, and in all matters of substance for the right reasons. In the interests of all concerned, and, particularly, of litigants, a long settled practice of a court of record, extending in this case over hundreds of years, is not to be disturbed except by establishing that a departure from it is necessary to do justice to an applicant who can get justice in no other way, and to whom the court has always had jurisdiction to grant the relief prayed for. A heavy burden lies, therefore, on those who challenge a practice so long settled. Nothing of the kind can possibly be suggested here. If the applicants have, in truth, suffered from an excess of jurisdiction in the ecclesiastical court concerned, the writ of prohibition is there to put an end to the grievance. In addition, a scrutiny of the history of certiorari and prohibition shows that the practice was not merely settled, but was settled for reasons which would have prevailed throughout the period during which the writ of certiorari has existed. Hence arose the "communis opinio" which must have existed when FITZ-HERBERT, COKE, BACON, VINER and BLACKSTONE wrote, and these are some of the reasons: First, the ecclesiastical courts were always liable to be kept within the limits of their jurisdiction by the writ of prohibition, issuing during the last 400 or 500 years out of the King's Bench whenever they should transgress those limits. Secondly, so long as the ecclesiastical courts acted within those limits, no process was available issuing from the common law courts to control or correct them. There was, of course, the channel of appeal referred to by the Lord Chief Justice. Thirdly, the writ of certiorari has always been a writ designed to bring up to the King's Bench proceedings of courts to which it lay, in order that the King's Bench should do what was necessary to be done in the interests of justice. This might be a trial in a better qualified court, whether the King's Bench or elsewhere; it might be a more efficient form of execution, e.g., in that wider sphere where the King's Bench writs ran; it might be in order that after judgment a pardon should be granted by the King; it might be that the proceedings ought to be corrected or quashed. But none of these, except the very last, was appropriate to proceedings in an ecclesiastical court, and the last was sufficiently provided for by the writ of prohibition, which issued on the only ground upon which the King's Bench could presume to quash the decision of an ecclesiastical court, viz., excess of jurisdiction. For these reasons, the decision of the Divisional Court of the King's Bench Division ought to be upheld and the appeal dismissed.

EVERSHED, L.J., whose judgment was read by SCOTT, L.J., recited the facts and continued: The only question before the court has been that raised by the preliminary objection, and we have not been invited or been able to consider at all the merits of the application or whether, in the exercise of the discretion appropriate to the making of an order of certiorari, the present case is one in which the jurisdiction, if it insists, ought to be exercised. Nevertheless, the hearing in this court has occupied some nine days. Mountains of research and learning have been brought to bear on what may be thought a somewhat unedifying and even ridiculous subject-matter.

Pursuant to the Administration of Justice (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1938, and R.S.C. Ord. 59, r. 5, made thereunder, the old writ of certiorari has been abolished and in its place the court may make on motion an order of certiorari. It is, however, conceded by both sides that this alteration in form in no way affects the substance of the matter, which must, accordingly, be judged in the light of the statutes, authorities and text-books, some modern and many very ancient, applicable to the old historic writ.

The Lord Chief Justice, as I read his judgment, based his conclusion primarily on the absence of any precedent in the books for the issue of a writ of certiorari to an ecclesiastical court. If the profound researches of counsel failed to discover any instance of the exercise of such a jurisdiction, it is too late in the 20th century to create one, but the learned Lord Chief Justice sought also to find the reasons for the abstinence and held them to consist of the following—that a consistory court was not an inferior court to the court of King's Bench; that it administers a peculiar system of law foreign to and having "no privity with" the King's common law—a system of law of which the King's Bench judges would have no knowledge; that there had at all material times been a communis opinio among lawyers that such a jurisdiction did not exist; and that, if jurisdiction lay to issue a writ (or make an order) of certiorari to quash an order of an ecclesiastical court for want of jurisdiction, there must necessarily also exist (having regard to the ancient form of the writ) jurisdiction to bring up the whole case before judgment or sentence for trial, or after judgment or sentence for review, in order that right might be done in the cause—a thing which, because of the difference in the systems of law already noticed, the court of King's Bench could not in any circumstances do.

In the course of his argument, distinguished by its forcefulness no less than by the great care and labour he had taken in its preparation, Mr. Stranders attacked both the conclusion of the Divisional Court and also the reasons given by the Lord Chief Justice which I have summarised above. The gist of Mr. Stranders' argument, stated in the course of his reply in the form of eight propositions, may, I think, be accurately stated thus: Having regard to the superintending powers and duties of the court of King's Bench, the onus is on the party disputing the court's jurisdiction, and such onus is not discharged by referring to the absence of precedent. On the view which I take, it is not necessary or desirable that I should follow through all the stages of the applicants' argument or express opinions on many of the matters raised, of great historical interest, which are cognate to the main question, e.g., the history and jurisdiction of the old admiral's court or courts, later the Court of Admiralty. It does not seem to me that the fact that writs of certiorari were issued from time to time to the early admiral's court can greatly assist in the solution of the present problem. At best, such fact is, to my mind, a double-edged sword. For I agree with the conclusion of the Lord Chief Justice that the inevitable inference to be drawn from the absence of any precedent or of any hint of any precedent for the issue of a writ of certiorari directed to an ecclesiastical court administering or purporting to administer ecclesiastical law is that so to do was regarded, and must now be regarded, as outside the jurisdiction of the King's Bench Court. It is true that instances have been found of the issue of certiorari to bishops for the purpose of obtaining evidence—see, e.g., FITZ-HERBERT'S NATURA BREVIVM, 9th ed., vol. II, p. 246; BROWNLOW'S COLLECTION OF WRITS, p. 15—but this precedent was wholly different in kind as well as in form from the writ of certiorari which was the parent of the order now sought by the applicants. At best, again, such precedents are two-edged swords. When regard is had to the sources which have been examined—and, perhaps, particularly to the objections and answers set out under the title "Articuli Cleri" in COKE'S INSTITUTES, II, p. 599 et seq., the absence of any precedent or hint of any precedent, is, to my mind, inexplicable save on the view that, whether from the accident of history or otherwise, the King's Bench Court never assumed any jurisdiction to control, by means of the writ of certiorari, the transactions of ecclesiastical courts in ecclesiastical matters. The result, in my judgment, is that both the practice and the jurisdiction as regards such matters as are here in question must be taken as settled. If there be some illogicality in this conclusion I am not, for myself, deterred by Mr. Stranders' rebuke that it is an "argument of despair." If there be an illogicality, it is not alone in that respect in the system of our English law. It is not necessary to found this conclusion on, or even to support it by reference to, any "communis opinio" to be extracted from the ancient writers, though it may assume the existence of "communis opinio" in the sense of a view commonly held among lawyers. And I refer to the observations of CAVE, J., in R. v. Boaler (6) (67 L.T. 354), where he thought the absence of any precedent for a certiorari to quash an indictment after judgment to be conclusive against the application.

It is tempting to leave the matter there, but out of respect for the strenuous argument of Mr. Stranders I add some observations upon the reasons which may be said to have justified the growth of what I think to be the settled practice, and particularly upon the validity of the reasons to which the learned Lord Chief Justice referred. For my part, I greatly doubt whether the practice can be based on any alleged "superiority" of the ecclesiastical courts. There can,

I think, be no question that the expression "superior court" has been used in more than one sense. I cannot, however, doubt that for the purpose of controlling attempted usurpations of jurisdiction the ecclesiastical courts were and should be regarded as no less "inferior" to the King's Bench courts than, e.g., the old admiral's court or the courts of the counties palatine. It is conceded that writs of prohibition would always have issued against the ecclesiastical courts, no less than against the other courts which I have named, to curb excess of jurisdiction, and, in my judgment, that fact imparts a sufficient "inferiority" of status to have warranted—other things being equal—the issue of the other prerogative writs, including the writ of certiorari. I think it is true that the interlocutory observation of LITTLEDALE, J., in Ricketts v. Bodenham (1) (4 Ad. & El. 446), in its context does indicate the view that ecclesiastical courts must be treated as "superior" in the sense of being exempt from control by means of any so-called "original" or "prerogative" writs, but that learned judge seemed, at the time he made the observation, to think that the same reasoning applied to the palatine courts. It is, in my judgment, clear that, for the purposes in hand, the palatine courts were not, in fact, considered as "superior," and, as I have already stated, it is conceded that the ecclesiastical courts were at all times regarded as subject to restraint by way of prohibition. As pointed out by the author of the article upon the present case in the April, 1947, issue of the LAW QUARTERLY REVIEW, at pp. 210 and 211, the observation attributed to LITTLEDALE, J., in the report in ADOLPHUS & ELLIS finds no place in others reports of the same case, and, in my opinion, in the light of the exhaustive and authoritative reasoning of Mr. Stranders on the point, the interlocutory observation of LITTLEDALE, J., (if made) cannot be relied on as judicial authority for the view that the ecclesiastical courts ever possessed such a "superiority" of status as would negative the existence of a right to control their activities on the part of the King's Bench by any of their writs including the writ of certiorari.

Nor do I think that the absence of jurisdiction can properly or safely be based upon the circumstance that ecclesiastical courts were not (if they were not) courts of record. On the other hand, I am disposed to think that the true ground of the absence of jurisdiction is to be found in the fact that the ecclesiastical courts administered a system of law foreign to and having, in the words of LORD ELLENBOROUGH, C.J., no "privity with" the courts of the common law, the civil law which they administered being concerned primarily with rights and duties of spiritual import. The writ of certiorari appears to have become common in the latter half of the 14th century. The form, which seems to have been universally followed, requires the record of the cause to be brought up to the King's Bench Court, so that, on examination, right should be done between the parties to the suit.

I do not desire to express any concluded view on the question whether an order for certiorari to quash could lie in any case in which for any reason the King's Bench Court might itself be incompetent to try the issue between the contestants. Mr. Stranders relied on the Irish cases of Re Heaphy (12) and Lalor v. Bland (13) for the proposition that the Court of King's Bench will never "allow a nullity to remain on the record," whatever be the power or competence of the King's Bench Court as regards the question in issue. Nor do I forget the general language of HOLT, C.J., in VINER'S ABRIDGMENT, vol. IV, p. 336, that there is no court or jurisdiction which can withstand a certiorari. There is, however, to my mind, a difference in principle between courts having exempt jurisdiction in the sense that by some statute exclusive jurisdiction quoad subject-matters is conferred on them (e.g., the recently established Rent Tribunals for assessing the rents of furnished lettings), and courts administering a system of law wholly distinct, both in substance and in matters of procedure, from the system of law administered in the King's temporal courts, and though it may well be, as pointed out, e.g., by LORD BLACKBURN in Mackonochie v. Lord Penzance (3) (6 App. Cas. 446), that the common law judges are well able to inform themselves of the principles of ecclesiastical law and even of the practice of the ecclesiastical courts, in my view, the true inference to be drawn from all the considerable material placed before us by the industry and research of counsel is that the writ of certiorari as it developed was universally treated as by its nature inapplicable for any purpose to the ecclesiastical courts, at least in so far as they purported to administer a system of law which, albeit was the King's ecclesiastical law, yet was a law substantially distinct in history and substance from the system administered by the temporal courts. The qualification which I have made is, I think, rendered at least desirable by reason of the point made at the end of the article in the LAW QUARTERLY REVIEW to which I have earlier alluded. For, if by some future Act of Parliament the trial of some class of issues was relegated to the ecclesiastical courts, it must not be supposed that I am now expressing any view on the question whether as regards that class of case an order of certiorari would or would not lie. It is sufficient for the present case that the chancellor was, as I understand it, purporting to administer ecclesiastical law properly so called having no affinity to the common law administered in the temporal courts.

The result, and the basis which I think underlies it, are in no sense surprising. The form of writ of certiorari makes it, prima facie, inapplicable to courts administering a system of law foreign to that administered by the temporal courts. It would, therefore, as it seems to me, have required a stretching by the judges of the natural intendment of the writ to make it in practice applicable to ecclesiastical courts exercising ordinary ecclesiastical jurisdiction, even for the limited purpose of quashing a judgment in excess of jurisdiction. I am, therefore, far from accepting Mr. Stranders' contention that the onus lies on the party seeking to deny the jurisdiction of the King's Bench, though if the onus does so lie, it is, in my judgment, discharged by the inference which I think must inevitably be drawn from the absence of any precedent for the exercise or attempted exercise of such jurisdiction. Nor does the result leave a party without remedy against whom some "judgment" has been pronounced by an ecclesiastical court in excess of or in want of jurisdiction. For, although an order of the King's Bench Court quashing altogether such a judgment might be regarded as a cleaner or more complete form of redress, an order of prohibition directed to prevent any enforcement of the judgment would, so far as I can see, be, at least, practically effective, and, though I appreciate that I am not in the present very remarkable case entitled to enter upon any discussion of the merits, the terms of the licence of Sept. 8, 1944, and its recitals make me disinclined to lay any emphasis on any defect in remedy to which Rev. W. G. White and Mrs. Bloom might be supposed to be subject by reason of the absence of jurisdiction to quash the licence.

Mr. Stranders very naturally relied, and relied strongly, on the dictum of ATKIN, L.J., in R. v. Electricity Commissioners ([1924] 1 K.B. 204) as follows :

Both writs [of prohibition and certiorari] are of great antiquity, forming part of the process by which the King's Courts restrained courts of inferior jurisdiction from exceeding their powers. Prohibition restrains the tribunal from proceeding further in excess of jurisdiction; certiorari requires the record or the order of the court to be sent up to the King's Bench Division, to have its legality inquired into, and, if necessary, to have the order quashed. It is to be noted that both writs deal with questions of excessive jurisdiction, and doubtless in their origin dealt almost exclusively with the jurisdiction of what is described in ordinary parlance as a court of justice. But the operation of the writs has extended to control the proceedings of bodies which do not claim to be, and would not be recognized as, courts of justice. Wherever any body of persons having legal authority to determine questions affecting the rights of subjects and having the duty to act judicially, act in excess of their legal authority they are subject to the controlling jurisdiction of the King's Bench Division exercised in these writs.

That dictum has since been quoted many times with approval, and its general validity it is neither possible nor proper to doubt. In my judgment, however, it is clear that the question which has been raised in the present case was not present to the mind of the Lord Justice, and certainly was in no sense necessary to the decision in that case. Whenever, as a result of the establishment by Act of Parliament of some new jurisdiction or some new tribunal exercising judicial or quasi-judicial functions, it is necessary to consider the application thereto of well established forms of remedy, the court will not be afraid to extend the older principles to new circumstances. But the present case is not, in my judgment of that character. We are considering, not the application of established principle to a new jurisdiction, but the scope of the principle itself in regard to a jurisdiction no less ancient than the principle.

For the reasons which I have attempted to state, I am of opinion that, as a matter of principle, the ecclesiastical courts administering ecclesiastical law must at all times be treated as outside the ambit of the writ of certiorari, and for that reason the present appeal must, in my judgment, fail.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors: Evill & Coleman (for the applicants); Tamplin, Joseph & Flux, agents for Gudgeons, Peacock & Prentice, Stowmarket (for the respondents).
[Reported by C. St.J. NICHOLSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re TABRISKY.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Lord Greene, M.R., Cohen and Asquith, L.JJ.), June 18, 1947.]

Bankruptcy—Discharge—Suspension—Suspension for two years—Condition for payment of instalments to continue after discharge—Bankruptcy Act, 1914 (c. 59), s. 26 (2).

On an application by a bankrupt for his discharge certain of the facts specified in s. 26 (3) of the Bankruptcy Act, 1914, were proved. The registrar ordered that the discharge be suspended for two years under para. (ii) of s. 26 (2) of the Act, and attached a condition, the effect of which was that the bankrupt would have to continue the payment of instalments to the official receiver for two or three years after his discharge became effective.

HELD: the proviso to s. 26 (2) did not destroy the general power to attach conditions given by the body of the subsection, and, therefore, although on proof of the facts specified in s. 26 (3) the court must follow one of the courses set out in the proviso, there was nothing to prevent the court also imposing a condition under the main part of the sub-section, and, therefore, the condition as to payment of instalments was valid.

Re Dallmeyer, Ex p. Dallmeyer (1906) (22 T.L.R. 445), followed.

[AS TO CONDITIONAL ORDER OF DISCHARGE, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 2, pp. 328-331, paras. 447-448; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 4, pp. 569-575, Nos. 5237-5285.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Re Dallmeyer, Ex p. Dallmeyer (1906), 22 T.L.R. 445; 4 Digest 574, 5277.
- (2) Re Gardner, Ex p. Official Receiver v. Gardner, [1942] Ch. 50; 166 L.T. 81; sub. nom. Re Debtor (No. 6 of 1934), Ex p. Official Receiver, [1941] 3 All E.R. 289; 111 L. J. Ch. 75; Digest Supp.

APPEAL by the Board of Trade from an order of Mr. REGISTRAR PARTON, dated Apr. 22, 1947. The facts appear in the judgment of LORD GREENE, M.R., and are summarised in the headnote.

V. R. Aronson for the Board of Trade.

I. H. Jacob and W. R. Lawrence for the debtor.

LORD GREENE, M.R.: This is an appeal by the Board of Trade against an order made by a registrar in relation to the discharge of two bankrupts. The appeal only relates to the order as it affects one of those two, namely, Abraham Tabrisky, and the point raised is whether or not the registrar had jurisdiction to make the order.

The bankrupts were adjudged bankrupt on June 25, 1930. They had committed in their business certain acts which fall within the Bankruptcy Act, 1914, s. 26 (3). Regarding an application for discharge, s. 26 (2) of the Act provides:

On the hearing of the application the court shall take into consideration a report of the official receiver as to the bankrupt's conduct and affairs (including a report as to the bankrupt's conduct during the proceedings under his bankruptcy), and may either grant or refuse an absolute order of discharge, or suspend the operation of the order for a specified time, or grant an order of discharge subject to any conditions with respect to any earnings or income which may afterwards become due to the bankrupt, or with respect to his after-acquired property. . . .

By the proviso to the sub-section the court shall refuse or suspend the discharge or impose the condition that the bankrupt shall consent to a judgment on proof of any of the facts specified in s. 26 (3). Sub-section 8 provides:

The powers of suspending and of attaching conditions to a bankrupt's discharge may be exercised concurrently.

The order which the registrar made was as follows, so far as it affected Tabrisky :

It is ordered that the discharge of the bankrupt Abraham Tabrisky be suspended for two years, and that he be discharged as from Apr. 22, 1949, subject to the following condition as to his future earnings, after acquired property and income, which condition shall operate concurrently with the aforesaid suspension and shall continue to operate, if necessary, after Apr. 22, 1949, that is to say, the bankrupt Abraham Tabrisky shall pay to the official receiver as trustee for distribution among the creditors in the bankruptcy £110 per annum by equal monthly instalments of £9 3s. 4d. the first payment to be made on May 1, 1947, and subsequent monthly payments to be made on the first day of each succeeding month thereafter until the creditors in the joint estate shall have received a dividend of 2s. 3d. in the pound.

Counsel for the Board of Trade does not contest that the part of the order which suspends discharge for two years is within the powers of the registrar. What is complained of is the attachment of a condition with regard to the payment of sums of money out of the bankrupt's future earnings, that payment being one which will continue after the discharge has become effective, provided, of course, that the bankrupt does not pay up in advance. Assuming he makes the payments mentioned in the order and no more, it will take four or five years to comply with that part of the order, i.e., the payments will continue for two or three years after the order of discharge becomes effective. That condition, it is said, was not competent to the registrar to impose. The argument proceeds on these lines. The general power to impose conditions under s. 26 (2), which admittedly would include power to make such an order as the present, is cut down by the proviso which enacts :

Provided that the court shall refuse the discharge . . . where the bankrupt has committed any misdemeanour under this Act, or any enactment repealed by this Act, or any other misdemeanour connected with his bankruptcy, or any felony connected with his bankruptcy, unless for special reasons the court otherwise determines, and shall on proof of any of the facts mentioned . . . [in s. 26 (3)] either (i) refuse the discharge ; or (ii) suspend the discharge for a period of not less than two years : provided that the period may be less than two years, if the only fact proved of those hereinafter mentioned is that his assets are not of a value equal to ten shillings in the pound on the amount of his unsecured liabilities ; or (iii) suspend the discharge until a dividend of not less than 10s. in the pound has been paid to the creditors ; or (iv) require the bankrupt as a condition of his discharge to consent to judgment being entered against him by the official receiver or trustee for any balance or part of any balance of the debts provable under the bankruptcy which is not satisfied at the date of the discharge, such balance or part of any balance of the debts to be paid out of the future earnings or after-acquired property of the bankrupt in such manner and subject to such conditions as the court may direct . . .

Counsel for the Board of Trade maintains that in a case to which the proviso applies no conditions can be attached to an order for discharge other than the one condition mentioned in para. (iv) of the proviso—in other words, if the registrar thought it right to suspend discharge and also to extract from the bankrupt something from his future earnings, the only thing he could do was to require the bankrupt to consent to a judgment such as is mentioned in para. (iv). The effect of the proviso, he says, is to destroy the general power to attach conditions given by the body of the subsection and to substitute a limited power confined to the attachment of one condition only.

That, in my opinion, is a misconception of the effect of the sub-section. The sub-section starts with a general power, expressed in very wide language, to attach conditions to an order of discharge, and under sub-s. (8) it is competent both to suspend a discharge and to attach conditions. All the proviso does is to qualify the power to attach conditions, and that qualification is, of course, limited to precisely what the proviso says. It is common learning that the object of a proviso is to cut down or qualify something which has gone before, but, once the requirements of this proviso are complied with, there is nothing left to affect or cut down the general power to attach conditions in the body of the sub-section. The provision which has preceded the proviso is of a general power to give a discharge, absolute or suspended, and to impose conditions of the widest possible kind, and it would be contrary to the ordinary operation of a proviso to give it an effect which would cut down those powers beyond what compliance with the proviso renders necessary. The proviso, therefore, does not give powers. It qualifies powers already given, and provides that in the exercise of those powers the court shall be subject to certain limitations in the sense that one or more of the stated alternatives is made obligatory. There are four courses open to the court. They are not cumulative obligations; they are alternative obligations. The court may refuse the discharge, it may suspend the discharge for a period, it may suspend the discharge until a dividend of not less than 10s. is paid, or it may require as a condition of discharge consent to judgment. The court, therefore, in carrying out its duties in a case to which the proviso applies, finds that it must select one of those four courses. Once it has complied with that minimum requirement of the proviso, the proviso, it seems to me, has finished its work. It is no longer in operation, because the court can say: "I have done exactly what the legislature has told me to do, namely, that I must do one or other of the four things mentioned." That being so, what is there left to take away the general power to impose conditions given by sub-s. (2)? I can see nothing. It appears to me that to give the proviso the effect that counsel for the Board of Trade contends for would involve re-writing it. It would mean not only that the court is compelled to choose one of those four courses, but also that it must not impose any other condition. Nowhere does the proviso say that. When, therefore, one has carved out of the general power that limitation which the proviso requires to be carved out of it, one has done all that is required. In the result, the power to impose conditions remains as laid down in the body of the sub-section.

The matter is not without authority in this court, by which, in my opinion, we should be bound. Re Dallmeyer (1) was decided under the Bankruptcy Act, 1890, s. 8. That Act did not in any material respect for present purposes differ from the section we have to consider, save in one particular, that alternative (ii), mentioned in the proviso, referred only to suspension of the discharge for two years, in other words, the minimum punishment, so to speak (using that phrase in a general way for convenience), which was to be imposed was a suspension for two years. That has now been altered, and the period of suspension under the proviso may be whatever period the court thinks proper. Re Dallmeyer (1) was a case where certain of the necessary facts to bring the proviso into operation had been proved and, to that extent, it was similar to the present case. The registrar made an order granting an immediate discharge, but added a condition that the bankrupt, after setting aside £500 a year out of his earnings for his own support, was to pay the surplus, if any, to the trustees until the creditors had received 10s. in the pound on their debts. The bankrupt appealed. It is perfectly obvious, if I may say so, on the face of that order, that it did not comply with the proviso. It granted an immediate discharge, and so did not comply with paras. (i), (ii) and (iii) of the proviso. It did not require as a condition of discharge the bankrupt's consent to judgment being entered, and, therefore, it did not comply with para. (iv) of the proviso. The result, therefore, was that the registrar had not done what the proviso required him to do, and it was admitted by counsel that the order could not stand. It is to be noted that the condition imposed by the registrar was a condition to pay all earnings over £500 a year to the trustees until the creditors had received 10s. in the pound. It was a totally different condition, as I have already said, from that mentioned in para. (iv) of the proviso. When the matter came to this court all that the court did was to put the order into shape by inserting in it one of the obligatory terms which the proviso requires. They inserted a suspension for two years, which was one of the four courses open to the court (i.e., that mentioned in heading (ii) of the proviso), but they did not interfere with the other condition which the registrar had imposed. If the argument of counsel for the Board of Trade in the present case is right, that decision was wrong, because it was a case where the proviso applied, the discharge had been suspended, and a condition had been imposed which was not the condition mentioned in para. (iv) of the proviso, but could only have been lawfully imposed under the general power contained in the body of sub-s. (2). That is a decision on which the registrar says in his judgment in the present matter the practice has been based and innumerable orders have been made. The order now appealed from is an order of that type. Even if I had not come to the conclusion that I have, I should feel myself bound to follow that decision. Counsel for the Board of Trade wished us to hold that it was a decision which we were not bound to follow, because, he says, the point was not argued. With all respect to him, the point is one which I cannot help thinking stands out immediately one reads the sub-section, and I certainly do not claim for myself any extraordinary measure of perspicuity when I recall the fact that I raised this point the moment I read the section. I certainly think LORD COLLINS, M.R., and ROMER and COZENS-HARDY, L.JJ., were much more capable than I am of noticing a point which stands out clearly for everyone to see. I, therefore, cannot draw the inference that the point was not argued. There is nothing in the report to suggest that it was not argued, and, in my opinion, we are bound to follow that decision. In the result, the appeal will be dismissed.

COHEN, L.J. : I agree. The registrar, in the last paragraph of his judgment, said that he desired to secure for the creditors a sum of some £500, and he, therefore, imposed the condition which my Lord has read. Then he said this :

As, for the reasons above stated, this cannot, in my view, be achieved by an order under s. 51 (2) or a judgment and suspension order under s. 26 (2), paras. (iv) and (ii). It must be achieved by a Dallmeyer (1) order.

Counsel for the Board of Trade invited us to say that the registrar was wrong in thinking that no order could be made under s. 51 (2), or under paras. (iv) and (ii) of the proviso to s. 26 (2). So far as concerns the point relating to s. 51 (2), which enables the court during a bankruptcy to secure the appropriation of a portion of a debtor's salary for the creditors, counsel relied on a decision of MORTON, J., in Re Gardner (2). On the other alternative of a judgment and suspension under paras. (iv) and (ii) of the proviso to s. 26 (2), he relied on sub-s. (8). Counsel addressed to us an interesting argument on those points, but they do not arise in view of the conclusion to which we have come, that the registrar had jurisdiction to make the order which he did make under Re Dallmeyer (1). As there is nobody really interested to present the contrary argument to that advanced by counsel for the Board of Trade, I think it would be most undesirable to express any opinion about the correctness of the argument. I only mention the point in order that it may not be assumed that because we have confirmed the registrar's decision we necessarily agree with the observations in the concluding paragraph of his judgment. I agree that the appeal should be dismissed.

ASQUITH, L.J. : I also agree.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors : The Solicitor, Board of Trade ; Samuel Dalton (for the debtor.)
[Reported by J. A. CROCKETT, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

WARREN v. AUSTEN.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Lord Greene, M.R., Cohen and Asquith, L.JJ.), June 13, 16, 17, 1947.]

Landlord and Tenant—Rent restriction—Possession—Reasonableness—Tenant taking paying guests to augment income—Use of gardens as playground for children—Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933 (c. 32), s. 3 (1).

The tenant of a dwelling-house had the right under his lease to take paying guests, and, in common with neighbouring residents, to use the lawns and pleasure grounds in front of the house. The landlord required the house, which was one in a block, in order to convert it, together with adjoining houses, into a hotel, and he offered the tenant, who was a married man with five children and who worked as a clerk in a labour exchange, alternative accommodation which lacked amenities for the taking of paying guests and had no garden.

HELD : there was evidence on which the county court judge could come to the conclusion that it was not reasonable that he should grant the landlord an order for possession of the dwelling-house.

[AS TO RESTRICTIONS ON THE LANDLORD'S RIGHT TO POSSESSION, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 20, pp. 329-334, paras. 392-399; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST Vol. 31, pp. 576-578, 582-584, Nos. 7256-7269, 7311-7330.]

APPEAL by the landlord from an order of His Honour JUDGE CLEMENTS, made at Ramsgate County Court, on Apr. 9, 1947, dismissing the landlord's claim for possession of a dwelling-house. The facts appear in the judgment of LORD GREENE, M.R.

Safford, K.C., and R. W. Vick for the landlord.

The tenant appeared in person.

LORD GREENE, M.R.: In the county court action out of which this appeal arises the landlord was seeking to recover possession of a house subject to the Rent Restrictions Acts. He was engaged in converting into a hotel a number of houses numbered 3 to 18 in a crescent in Ramsgate called Royal Crescent. One house in that crescent constituted an obstacle to his plans, namely, No. 5, of which the defendant is the occupier. We are told that No. 5 is really a most important element in the landlord's scheme of conversion in that its omission would involve the omission from the scheme of Nos. 3 and 4 as well, and that that would mean 41 fewer bedrooms for the projected hotel and considerable inconvenience in the matter of the domestic services, electric lighting, heating and so on. That, from the landlord's point of view, is a most intelligible case, and nobody, I think, in the present circumstances could regard that enterprise of the landlord as a thing to be judged solely from the pecuniary results to himself which might follow. The question, however, that we have to consider is whether he is entitled to recover possession of No. 5.

Of the various matters which may be relevant in considering the landlord's claim to recover possession in such a case, two matters only come into question. Under s. 3 (1) of the Rent & Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933, there is one overriding matter with which the court must deal before it can make an order for possession, and that is that, under sub-s. (1), the court must consider it reasonable to make an order. In addition to that, the sub-section provides a number of conditions. The only relevant one with which we are concerned is condition (b), which provides that the court must be :

... satisfied that suitable alternative accommodation is available for the tenant or will be available for him when the order or judgment takes effect.

Suitable accommodation is dealt with in sub-s. (3), which provides that :

... accommodation shall be deemed to be suitable if it ... is, in the opinion of the court, reasonably suitable to the needs of the tenant and his family as regards proximity to place of work, and ... (ii) otherwise reasonably suitable to the means of the tenant and to the needs of the tenant and his family as regards extent and character.

It is said before us, and it was said before the county court judge, that certain accommodation at No. 5, Zion Hill, Ramsgate, offered by the landlord, was alternative accommodation which satisfied the tests laid down by the Act. The judge, in his judgment, started by saying that the landlord had failed to satisfy him that he had offered suitable alternative accommodation to the tenant within the meaning of the Rent Restrictions Acts. He then set out a number of matters which were established in the evidence in respect of which he compared the accommodation offered with that already enjoyed by the tenant.

I should refer, before examining the judgment further, to two matters which formed important elements in this case. Under the lease held by the tenant he had a right, in common with the occupiers of other houses in Royal Crescent, to use the lawn and pleasure grounds there mentioned. It appeared on the evidence (and the judge accepted it) that that right was one which was of importance to the tenant having regard to the fact, among others, that he had five children and the right for the children to use those grounds was valuable to him. The other matter is that under the agreement with the landlord the tenant was entitled to take in paying guests. We are told that the tenant is a clerk in the Labour Exchange at Ramsgate and that he supplements his income by taking in paying guests. I think it is not difficult to infer that the supplementing of his income in that way is a matter of some consideration for a man with five children who is receiving the sort of salary that a clerk in a labour exchange receives.

The judge had to consider two matters. The first was alternative accommodation. If he found, correctly on the facts and without misdirecting himself, that there was no proper offer of alternative accommodation, that, of course, would be the end of the case. The landlord's case would also be defeated, even if the issue as to alternative accommodation were found in his favour, by a finding by the judge that it was not reasonable to make the order for possession. The first point which arises, is whether or not the finding of the county court judge is confined to the matter of alternative accommodation, or whether, in addition to that, he finds that it would be unreasonable to make the order. It is said that his only finding is that the alternative accommodation offered is not sufficient, and that he came to that conclusion by taking into account facts which it was not open to him to take into account under s. 3 (3) (ii). For instance, it is said that what he has done is to compare the present accommodation with the accommodation offered and find that the accommodation offered is less in quality than that already enjoyed. That, it is said, is not the right approach to this question because the tenant is not entitled to demand in the alternative accommodation the existing standard enjoyed by him, but he is only entitled to demand something which may well be less in size and amenity. Providing it is reasonably suitable to his means and the needs of his family as regards extent and character, he is bound to be content with it even although it is not so good as what he had before. It is further said that the county court judge took into account, on the question of alternative accommodation, the circumstance that the tenant, having in his present house a certain standard of size and amenity which enables him to take in paying guests, would not have the same standard in the suggested premises, with the result that his business of taking in paying guests would be affected. It is said that the judge ought not to have taken those two matters into account, and that, therefore, the finding of no alternative accommodation cannot stand. Moreover, it is said that on the evidence the only finding open to him was that the alternative accommodation offered, was suitable.

The reasons for the judgment given by the county court judge, in my view, deal both with the issue of alternative accommodation and with the issue of reasonableness. It is true that, having decided the issue of alternative accommodation, there was no necessity for him to decide the issue of reasonableness, because the lack of alternative accommodation was sufficient to defeat the landlord, but I construe his judgment as meaning that he did, in fact, deal with both those matters. I am prepared to assume in favour of the landlord that the facts which the judge took into account on each of those two issues were the same, and I am also prepared to assume that some of the facts which he took into consideration were not relevant on the question of alternative accommodation, but, on the issue of reasonableness, I cannot see that any of the facts set out in his judgment would have been irrelevant. Counsel for the landlord has also submitted that the judge based his conclusion on the question of reasonableness on his finding that the alternative accommodation was not suitable. If he had done that and if his finding that the alternative accommodation was not suitable was due to a misdirection of himself in law, obviously his finding on the issue of reasonableness could not stand, but I do not read the judgment in that way. It is not a finding of no suitable accommodation which leads the judge to the conclusion that it is not reasonable to make an order, but it is on the facts set out in his judgment that he relies for his conclusion on both issues. All those facts were relevant for him to take into consideration on the issue of reasonableness, and I cannot agree that it would not be open to him, on those facts, to come to a conclusion adverse to the landlord on the issue of reasonableness. The difference between the two views is, of course, important. To use a decision that there was no suitable alternative accommodation as a ground for finding that it was unreasonable to make an order would involve, I cannot help thinking, a certain confusion of mind, because the one does not necessarily lead to the other and it is possible to have a conclusion on the ground of reasonableness on facts which are not sufficient to support a conclusion on the ground of no suitable accommodation. But I cannot see in the language of the judge, reasonably construed, anything to suggest that his finding on the issue of reasonableness was based on his conclusion of no suitable alternative accommodation. That being so, it seems to me that the judge's decision on the ground of reasonableness cannot be attacked on the ground of misdirection, and we have no option but to dismiss this appeal.

COHEN, L.J. : I agree. Junior counsel for the landlord told us that, at the close of the hearing in the court below, the county court judge did not desire to hear him on the question of reasonableness, having regard to his conclusion on alternative accommodation, but I do not gather therefrom that the county court judge had not in mind the question of reasonableness. Indeed, having regard to the concluding sentence of his written reasons it is plain that the point was present to his mind, and I think that all he meant by his observations to counsel was that, in view of his conclusion on the alternative accommodation point, prolonged argument on the other point would not help him. If that be the true view, and if, as I agree with my Lord, the question of reasonableness was present to the mind of the county court judge, I entirely agree with my Lord that there was evidence on which the county court judge could come to the conclusion which he reached on the question of reasonableness and that we cannot disturb his finding. I, therefore, agree that the appeal fails.

ASQUITH, L.J. : I also agree. I would only add that I am not fully persuaded that the county court judge's conclusion on alternative accommodation could not be supported. He would, of course, have been applying an entirely wrong criterion if he had said: "All I have to do is to compare the two sets of premises, and if, on a comparison, the alternative accommodation is proved to be inferior, it follows necessarily that it is unsuitable." That would be a patent misdirection. I am not certain that that is what he actually did, but the matter is an academic one, because I agree with my Lords that he did apply his mind to the issue of reasonableness and that there were materials on which he could reach the conclusion that he did on that issue.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors: Patersons, Snow & Co., agents for Daniel & Edwards, Ramsgate (for the landlord).

[Reported by J. A. CROCKETT, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re BAYER PRODUCTS, LTD'S APPLICATION.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Lord Greene, M.R., Cohen and Asquith, L.JJ.), June 9, 10, 11, 1947.]

Trade Marks—Application to register—Mark "likely to deceive or cause confusion" with mark already on register—Mark in respect of sulphadiazine preparations—Scheduled poison, supplied only under statutory regulations—Trade Marks Act, 1938 (c. 22), s. 12 (1).

Where application is made for the registration of a trade mark in respect of a pharmaceutical substance the supply of which is regulated by statutory regulations, in determining whether registration would be contrary to the Trade Marks Act, 1938, s. 12 (1), it is essential that the court, in considering the possibilities of deception, should take into account the extent to which such a possibility is minimised, or even completely obliterated, by the statutory regulations. Although the onus is on the applicant to show that there is no reasonable probability of confusion, his application is not to be defeated by constructing imaginary and unlikely cases in order to bring s. 12 (1) into operation.

Application for registration of the mark "Diasil" in respect of sulphadiazine preparations in the class of pharmaceutical substances was resisted by the owners of the mark "Alasil," which was registered in respect of goods of the same description. Sulphadiazine is a scheduled poison and, under the Pharmacy and Poisons Act, 1933, and the Poisons Rules, 1935, it can be supplied only by a registered pharmacist on a written prescription from a doctor:—

HELD : in view of the fact that legislation had ensured that the scheduled poisons could be dealt with only by skilled and responsible persons and subject to careful regulation, registration of the mark "Diasil" was not likely "to deceive or cause confusion," within s. 12 (1) of the Act of 1938, by reason of its similarity to the mark "Alasil."

[AS TO RESEMBLANCE OF MARKS, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 32, pp. 564-570, para. 873; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 43, pp. 160-165, Nos. 178-217, and Supplement.]

A APPEAL by the opponents, A. Wander, Ltd., from an order of WYNN-PARRY, J., dated Nov. 13, 1946, affirming the decision of the Assistant Comptroller of Trade Marks allowing the registration of the mark "Diasil" in respect of sulphadiazine preparations in the class of pharmaceutical substances. The opponents were the owners of the mark "Alasil," which was registered in respect of goods of the same class. The court dismissed the appeal. The facts appear in the judgment of LORD GREENE, M.R.

Lloyd-Jacob, K.C., and Stuart Bevan for the opponents.
Drewe, K.C., and Hignett for the applicants.

B LORD GREENE, M.R.: The application that was before the Assistant Comptroller was a double-headed one, in this sense. The demand of the applicants, in the first instance, was for registration of the mark "Diasil" in class 5 of sched. IV to the Trade Marks Rules, 1939. I am not sure whether their demand covered the whole of the class, but it is sufficient, for my purposes, to say that it covered the whole of the class of pharmaceutical substances. There was also an alternative claim, which had been offered by the applicants to the opponents, limiting the registration to a particular type of pharmaceutical preparation, namely, sulphadiazine preparations. Those preparations contain poison and can only be dealt with in accordance with the Pharmacy and Poisons Act, 1933 and the rules made thereunder [Poisons Rules, 1935]. The Assistant Comptroller did not accept the wider of those two demands, but he decided in favour of the applicants in respect of the one confined to sulphadiazine preparations. The opposition was based on the Trade Marks Act, 1938, ss. 11 and 12. Section 11 provides:

D It shall not be lawful to register as a trade mark or part of a trade mark any matter the use of which would, by reason of its being likely to deceive or cause confusion or otherwise, be disentitled to protection in a court of justice, or would be contrary to law or morality, or any scandalous design.

By s. 12 (1):

E Subject to the provisions of sub-s. 2 of this section, no trade mark shall be registered in respect of any goods or description of goods that is identical with a trade mark belonging to a different proprietor and already on the register in respect of the same goods or description of goods, or that so nearly resembles such a trade mark as to be likely to deceive or cause confusion.

F The opponents' mark "Alasil" is registered under the class as it existed before the Act of 1938, but it is common ground that the goods in respect of which the applicants now seek registration, namely, sulphadiazine preparations (because their claim is limited to that), are of the same description as those covered by "Alasil," the mark of the opponents. The opponents have, in fact, only marketed under that mark a preparation of somewhat similar character and use to aspirin. It is not a poison subject to the poisons legislation, but their registration, in view of the width of the class in respect of which it was made, would entitle them to the monopoly of that mark in connection with poisons, if they elected to apply it to products of that character—poisons in general, including sulphadiazine preparations, to which the applicants' application is limited. As counsel for the opponents correctly pointed out, s. 12 (1) looks to the register rather than to the use, which is what s. 11 looks to.

G The primary question really turns on s. 12 (1). If the opponents fail on that, I do not see—any more than WYNN-PARRY, J., or the Assistant Comptroller could see—how they can succeed on s. 11. I shall, therefore, devote my observations to s. 12 (1). Counsel for the opponents is in a very difficult position, because he has against him concurrent findings by the Assistant Comptroller and by WYNN-PARRY, J., to the effect that, in the circumstances of this case, and in reference to the only application which is now made, namely, the limited application, there is no such possibility of deception or confusion as to bring the case within s. 12 (1), and, therefore, make it illegal for the registrar to register the applicants' mark. I do not think it necessary to go any more fully into the facts of the case, because I propose to confine myself to the two substantial points that were put before us.

The Assistant Comptroller and the judge, by way of a different approach, but in the result arriving at the same conclusion, tested the possibility of confusion by reference to the circumstances which would attend the dealings with the applicants' proposed product. Counsel for the opponents did not dispute the proposition that the question whether there is a likelihood of deception or confusion cannot be considered under s. 12 (1) without reference to surrounding circumstances. In other words, the court is not confined merely to looking at the register and comparing the two marks as words in the English language or some invented language. It has to consider to what extent, in all the circumstances, deception or confusion is likely. What counsel for the opponents really complained of on this branch of his argument, as I understood him, was that both the Assistant Comptroller and the judge had given much too much weight to those special circumstances and that that led them to a wrong conclusion.

The special circumstances are these. Sulphadiazine, as I have said, is a poison. It can only be dealt with under the very stringent regulations of the poisons legislation, and the consequence of that is that, apart from exceptional cases, which do not require to be considered, sulphadiazine can only be supplied on the written prescription of a doctor. The legislation ensures that the scheduled poisons shall only be dealt with by skilled and responsible persons, subject to very careful regulation. Both the Assistant Comptroller and WYNN-PARRY, J., really based on that circumstance their conclusion that, having regard to the surrounding circumstances, there was not likely to be deception or confusion caused by the similarity of these two marks. In other words, the necessary course of trade—not merely a trade practice, which might change or differ from case to case, but a practice laid down by statute, making it illegal to depart from certain channels and methods of distribution and use—was sufficient, they thought, to differentiate this case entirely from cases where you are dealing with products which anybody can order or buy and anybody can supply, so to speak, over the counter. It is obvious that, once you get a statutory regulation of the channels of supply, it is essential that the court, in considering the possibilities of deception, should take into account the extent to which such a possibility is minimised, or, perhaps, obliterated altogether, by the statutory regulations.

Counsel for the opponents says that too much weight was given to that circumstance, but, even if I thought that the Assistant Comptroller and the judge had been disposed to give too much weight to it, I should hesitate long before I ventured to take a different view from their concurrent findings. In my opinion, however, they did not attach too much weight to that circumstance, which I regard as one of the utmost importance when an answer has to be given to the questions which the sub-section propounds to the court. Once you get the position that only a doctor can order sulphadiazine, that he must give a written prescription, and that a chemist cannot supply it without such a prescription, you ensure that the article is only going to pass at that stage through the hands of skilled persons, who by their training, their experience and their knowledge would be most unlikely to refer to it in a way which would admit of any reasonable possibility of confusion.

It is impossible, of course, to exclude entirely the risk of confusion. What we are concerned with are, not unlikely cases which may happen once in one hundred years, but reasonable probabilities, and we have to ask ourselves in relation to those facts: Is there such a risk that a doctor or a chemist, or the two of them in combination, by some carelessness in expression, some obscurity in handwriting, some slip of recollection, or some careless mistake which you would not expect highly trained professional people to fall into, will refer to the product in such a way as will lead the court to say that there is a reasonable probability of confusion? In my opinion, there is not. It seems to me that, if one is really to give weight to such a risk, it involves attributing to those highly skilled, experienced and careful people, to whom—and to whom alone—the legislature has entrusted the precautions necessary under the Pharmacy and Poisons Acts, qualities of carelessness or incompetence which are not usually found in that class of persons. We are concerned, not with hypothetical possibilities, but with the ordinary practical business probabilities, having regard to the circumstances of the case.

I do not think that it is necessary to say more on that aspect of the argument, because it seems to me that, if the matter had stood there, the decisions of the Assistant Comptroller and the judge are not decisions with which we can interfere, but there is one argument which has bulked very largely in the case, and quite rightly so, because it seems to me to be the only serious argument which we have to consider. Hitherto, I have referred to the dealings with the applicants' goods while they are completely under the effective physical control of the supplier and the doctor, or nurse, or whoever it may be, but it is said that the story does not end there, because the medicine has to be taken by a person who probably would not be a skilled or, perhaps, even a careful, person. Many examples were constructed to illustrate that point and I may refer to one or two of them to bring it out. It was said that the patient, having been told by his doctor to take "Alasil" and also having had prescribed for him at the same time "Diasil," might easily confuse the two in his mind and take the wrong medicine, or, if the patient himself did not do that, some unskilled person who happened to be attending on him—his wife, his valet, or a probationer nurse in a hospital—might make such a mistake. Such a mistake, it is argued, might be caused by oral or visual error, or by some usual type of lack of memory. It is perfectly true that in the use of either of these two drugs there may come a stage when, so to speak, the skilled person is out of the room and the drugs are dealt with by an unskilled person, namely, the patient or the person who is attending on him. It is said that there is a reasonable risk that at that stage confusion is likely to arise.

I put a formulation of the point which both counsel agreed correctly brought it out. I suggested that the question was: Is there a reasonable probability of a non-expert contact in such circumstances as to lead to a reasonable probability of confusion? That there is a possibility, and, in fact, one might also say a necessity, of non-expert contact is clear. It is the patient who has ultimately to swallow the medicine and not the doctor, but that is not enough. The contact must be such as to lead to a reasonable probability of confusion. The non-expert contact in such a case as the present is quite different from the non-expert contact of the customer who buys some article in a shop which is at liberty to supply it in the ordinary way. You have there two people, the customer and the shopkeeper. You have a shop in which the same kind of goods, produced by another manufacturer, may very well be, and probably are, sold, and, perhaps, exposed on the same counter at the same time. You are dealing with the ordinary type of customer, who has no special instruction or warnings issued to him, and the possibility of confusion from such non-expert contact, of course, is or may be considerable, according to the facts of the case. In the present case the non-expert contact is not of that character. The kind of case that is assumed is that the patient or his attendant will go, not to a shop and buy the wrong stuff or ask for the wrong stuff by mistake, but to the place in the house where the wrong stuff is kept and bring the wrong stuff instead of the right stuff. It is to be observed that, for the most part, the variations of that suggestion which have been put before us all have to assume the presence, in the same place, at the same time, under the control of the same person, of both the opponents' article and the applicants' article, because that is the way in which the confusion suggested must arise. The matter does not end there, because, in addition to that, you have to assume that there will be a mistake due to bad pronunciation or mis-hearing or mis-recollection or mis-reading of the labels on the bottles and that class of thing. You have, therefore, to make, so to speak, a double assumption. You have to assume two series of possibilities before you can arrive at the confusion which is said to be likely to occur. That, of course, is as different as anything can be from the ordinary case of a purchase over the counter, and many of the considerations that would lead the court in such a case to infer the possibility of confusion are necessarily absent.

It is not for the court to construct imaginary and unlikely cases to bring s. 12 (1) of the Act into operation. The burden is on the applicant, but his application is not to be defeated by constructing rather fantastic or far-fetched possible cases involving a combination of circumstances which, however possible it may be, has no reasonable probability in any business sense. There was an argument, which was rightly put before us, to the effect that for the purposes of s. 12 (1) it is not the actual state of user that is conclusive or dominant, but the description of goods for which the respective registrations are sought must be considered. It was pointed out that the opponents have a registration which would cover not merely sulphadiazine preparations, but any type of poison. It was said that there will be, therefore, an increased probability of deception if the opponents use their mark to the full extent to which they are entitled to use it, and the sub-section undoubtedly deals with that case and is not concerned with the limits of the actual user of the two marks. It is concerned with the ambit and scope of the registrations. That argument, in my opinion, does not carry the matter any farther. The possibility of confusion in the domestic medicine cupboard or by the invalid on the invalid's bedside table has to assume that by some curious combination of circumstances the two products would be in the medicine cupboard at the same time or on the bedside table at the same time. Otherwise there is no possibility of confusion. If the doctor has prescribed "Diasil," "Diasil" the patient will get into his medicine cupboard. The doctor has to give a written prescription and the chemist has to supply "Diasil," and that only, and I am not going to assume that professional men of that character would make a mistake. The same would apply if the patient got a sulphadiazine preparation with the opponents' "Alasil" mark on it. Both those drugs would have reached the patient under a doctor's prescription and in accordance with the doctor's orders. The "Alasil" product would not necessarily be a sulphadiazine, preparation. It might be some other type of poison, but that really does not carry the matter any farther than the case which we are now considering on the basis of the opponents' present trade, because in each case you have to assume before the possibility of confusion can arise that the patient has in his possession and under his control an "Alasil" product, be it poisonous or non-poisonous, and a "Diasil" product. It seems to me that the argument that s. 12 (1) requires the court to consider the full paper scope of the registrations does not really carry the point any farther. In my opinion, the appeal fails and must be dismissed.

COHEN, L.J.: I agree. Counsel for the opponents has submitted the judgment of WYNN-PARRY, J., to a careful post mortem examination, but, in my opinion, he has failed to disclose any poisonous matter which would vitiate the conclusion which the judge reached. WYNN-PARRY, J., summed up his judgment in these terms:

I have to consider what is likely to happen if each of the marks is used in a normal way as a trade mark for the goods of the respective owners of the marks. As I see it, I must postulate the stocking in chemists' shops of preparations under each mark. I must postulate a demand for the various preparations, whether by customers over the counter without or, where necessary, with a doctor's written prescription, or by doctors or hospitals. I must make due allowance for what is commonly called the human element—humanum est errare, but I must also postulate reasonable conduct, and, where necessary, the exercise of reasonable care by all concerned. I must bear in mind that, as regards the opponents' mark, it will only be used in respect of goods which can only be supplied on a doctor's written prescription or in hospitals on the authority of a doctor properly given to a nurse. I must bear in mind the conclusion of fact of the Assistant Comptroller, which I do not feel constrained to disturb, that the one mark would not be likely to be "directly mistaken for the other in conversation between two persons over the telephone or otherwise." I must bear in mind the relevant provisions of the Pharmacy and Poisons Act, 1933, and the Poisons Rules, 1935, made thereunder. On the other hand, I do not consider that I am constrained to take into account the possibility of an amendment of that Act or those rules, having as its consequence that sulphadiazine preparations could thereafter be sold freely over the counter without a doctor's written prescription or without the container being labelled "Poison." Taking all those considerations into account, I come to the conclusion that there is no real tangible danger of confusion . . . if the respondents' mark is registered, as the Assistant Comptroller decided, in pt. A of the register in respect of "Sulphadiazine preparations," so as to justify the court intervening under s. 12 of the Act.

It seems to me that the judge considered all the questions that he ought to have considered and the only argument advanced on behalf of the opponents with which he did not deal in terms was the argument to which my Lord has referred and which may be described as "the medicine cupboard argument." That argument was, we were told, fully presented to him and I have no doubt that it was present in his mind. Indeed, I think that it is implicit in, and is covered by, his finding that it was not likely, despite the medicine cupboard possibility, that there was a risk of confusion so as to disentitle, under s. 12, the applicants to registration. As LORD GREENE, M.R., has pointed out, that argument is based on a number of assumptions of various degrees of probability. Speaking for myself, I feel that the likelihood of these various probabilities being found all to occur in the same case is so remote that I do not think that we would be justified in finding on that ground that the marks so nearly resemble one another that the registration of the applicants' mark would be likely to deceive or cause confusion. For these reasons, in addition to those given by the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, I agree that this appeal should be dismissed.

ASQUITH, L.J.: I also agree. The onus is on the applicants to show that there is no reasonable probability of confusion. They will discharge this onus if they can show that confusion is not probable except in a very rare and unlikely concurrence of events, and this, in my view, they have succeeded in showing.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors: Slaughter and May (for the opponents); McKenna & Co. (for the applicants).

[Reported by J. A. CROCKETT, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

HUDDERSFIELD POLICE AUTHORITY v. WATSON.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., Atkinson and Lewis, JJ.), July 1, 1947.]

Police—Pension—“Injury received in execution of duty”—Duodenal ulcer—Police Pensions Act, 1921 (c. 31), s. 2 (1) (c).

For some months before September, 1939, a police officer was working very long hours and was subjected to exceptional worry in the course of his duty. He contracted a duodenal ulcer caused, according to medical evidence, by his conditions of work and the consequent irregular meals and rest. He applied for a special pension under the Police Pensions Act, 1921.

HELD: (i) the duodenal ulcer was “an injury received in the execution of his duty” by the officer, within s. 2 (1) (c) of the Act of 1921, and he was, therefore, entitled to a special pension.

Garvin v. Police Authority for the City of London ([1944] 1 All E.R. 378) followed.

(ii) the Divisional Court was bound to follow its own decision in Garvin's case. Where, as in matters arising under s. 17 (2) of the Police Pensions Act, 1921, the Divisional Court was made the final court of appeal, it must, as a general rule, follow a previous decision of the court and so avoid a conflict of authority and lack of finality.

Young v. Bristol Aeroplane Co., Ltd. ([1944] 2 All E.R. 293) applied.

[AS TO SPECIAL PENSIONS, see HALSBURY, Vol. 25, pp. 348, 349, paras. 577, 578; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 37, pp. 192-195, Nos. 125-142.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Garvin v. City of London Police Authority, [1944] 1 All E.R. 378; [1944] K.B. 358; 113 L.J.K.B. 305; 170 L.T. 336; 108 J.P. 107; Digest Supp.
- (2) Brintons, Ltd. v. Turvey, [1905] A.C. 230; 74 L.J.K.B. 474; 92 L.T. 578; 34 Digest 464, 3799.
- (3) Young v. Bristol Aeroplane Co., Ltd., [1944] 2 All E.R. 293; [1944] K.B. 718; 113 L.J.K.B. 513; 171 L.T. 113; 37 B.W.C.C. 51; Digest Supp.
- (4) Taylor v. Burgess, (1859), 5 H. & N. 1; 29 L.J.Ex. 7; 1 L.T. 12; 30 Digest 200, 690.
- (5) Casson v. Churchley (1884), 53 L.J.Q.B. 335; 50 L.T. 568; 30 Digest 203, 691.

APPEAL by the Huddersfield Police Authority under s. 17 (2) of the Police Pensions Act, 1921, from a decision of the Recorder of Huddersfield.

The recorder held that he was bound by the decision in Garvin v. City of London Police Authority (1) to award the police officer a special pension under s. 2 (1) (c) of the Act. The Divisional Court affirmed this decision. The facts appear in the judgment of LORD GODDARD, C.J.

Streatfield, K.C., and Wrangham for the appellants.

G. R. Hinchcliffe, K.C., for the respondent police officer.

LORD GODDARD, C.J.: The respondent in this case was a police officer in the Huddersfield county borough police force. In 1946 he was called on to resign on account of ill-health, and he applied to the police authority for a special pension under the Police Pensions Act, 1921, on the ground that his state of health—he was then suffering from a duodenal ulcer—was brought about by his police service. He contended that he was incapacitated for the performance of his duty by infirmity of mind or body occasioned by an injury received in the execution of his duty without his own default within s. 2 (1) (c) of the Act of 1921. The police authority, although they obviously had the greatest sympathy with the officer, felt unable to accede to his request for a special pension because they were not satisfied that they were entitled to regard his state of health as due to an injury received in the execution of his duty. He appealed, as he was entitled to do under s. 17 (1) of the Act, to the quarter sessions of the borough, and the recorder allowed his appeal.

From the facts found by the recorder, it seems that this officer, who is admitted to have shown exceptional devotion to duty, for some months before September, 1939, had been exposed to very long hours of duty and subjected to exceptional worry, with the result that he had irregular hours for his meals, irregular times of rest, and so forth, and that this combination of circumstances caused him to suffer from a duodenal ulcer which, in the opinion of the medical witnesses, whose opinions were accepted by the recorder, was the direct cause of his condition. He seems to have gone to hospital, to have been treated and to have returned to duty, but in 1946, after one or two absences from duty on account of his health, he was again found to be suffering from duodenal ulcer, and an operation took place in which a large part of the stomach was removed. The recorder finds that the condition from which he was suffering in 1946 was, to put it compendiously, a continuance of the condition which he suffered in 1939, and that there was a direct causal connection between his state of health and his services and duties as a police officer.

The recorder's findings of fact are not attacked, but the question arises whether it can be said that a duodenal ulcer is an "injury received in the execution of his duty without his own default." I may say at once that no question arises about any default on the part of the respondent. The matter was fully argued before the recorder, and, although he indicated in his judgment that for many reasons he was inclined to accept the arguments of counsel for the police authority, he held that he was bound by the decision of this court in Garvin v. City of London Police Authority (1), and he, accordingly, allowed the appeal. Before us, leading counsel for the police authority has challenged the correctness of the decision in Garvin's case (1), and he seeks to argue that, on a true view of the provisions of the material sections of the Act of 1921, it cannot be held that an illness or disease can amount to an "injury received in the execution of duty." I understand his argument to be that the injury alleged here is not in the nature of a condition caused by a blow, or the breaking of a bone, or immersion in water owing, perhaps, to a thief pushing the officer into water or the officer jumping into water in pursuit of a thief, or matters of that sort, and that an injury due to a diseased state of body cannot be regarded as an injury within the meaning of this Act. If we were to accept that argument, it seems that we should go directly against the decision in Garvin v. City of London Police Authority (1). The head-note in that case sets out sufficiently what the court decided ([1944] K.B. 358):

The appellant, a police constable, was on duty during the aerial bombardments from September, 1940, to the middle of 1941, serving twelve hours a day instead of the usual eight hours. During that time he could only take meals at irregular hours and was subjected to constant wettings. The medical evidence showed that these conditions would render him more liable to contract tuberculosis, and in fact tuberculosis supervened some time after September, 1940:—Held, first, that tuberculosis contracted in these conditions was an "injury" within section 2 (1) (c) of the Police Pensions Act, 1921, and secondly, that it was the direct result of and therefore suffered in the execution of his duty within the meaning of the same sub-section, and that consequently the appellant was entitled to the special pension therein referred to.

It seems to me it is impossible for us to say that the ratio decidendi of that case does not apply to the facts of the present matter. There is a difference, no doubt, in that tuberculosis is due to a bacillus or germ and the condition of duodenal ulcer is said, in the recorder's judgment where he sets out the medical opinion he accepts on that matter, to be :

A . . . a continuous process which begins in inflammation, and there may be an imperceptible lesion or abrasion at the point in which the pre-ulcerative condition of the mucous membrane passes into an ulcerated condition. It is a continuous process, probably, from the pre-ulcerated condition, through the whole of the ulcerated condition up to the full flower of the ulcer.

B In my opinion, Garvin's case (1) does not depend, as some of the cases under the Workmen's Compensation Acts at one time depended, on whether it can be said that at a particular moment of time a bacillus or germ of some disease entered into a man's body as, for instance, in the early case, under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, of Brintons, Ltd. v. Turvey (2). There, the germ of anthrax entered into a man's body causing his death, and it was held that the attack of the disease by means of a germ was an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment. It seems to me that the ratio in Garvin's case (1) C is that, if it is proved that the bodily condition from which the man is suffering, whether it be rheumatism, tuberculosis, or, I would add, a duodenal ulcer, is directly and causally connected with his service as a police officer, then he has received an injury in the execution of his duty. I can imagine many arguments which may or may not have been addressed to the court in Garvin's case (1), but, in my opinion, we have in that decision one which directly covers this case. D The court there laid down in terms that it was not necessary to decide whether or not there had been an accident if it could be shown that there was an injury, and they had no difficulty in holding that a disease was an injury. There was an end of the matter, provided it was sustained in the execution of the police officer's duty.

Delivering the judgment of the court, HUMPHREYS, J., said (ibid., at p. 362) :

E It would probably be impossible in any case of pulmonary tuberculosis to establish by evidence the day or the week, or, perhaps, even the month, during which the infection of the lung occurred, but where it is shown that the conditions of service during the critical period were such as to cause unusual mental and bodily strain which, acting on a frame ordinarily healthy but at the time enfeebled by long hours of duty, frequent wettings and such matters, rendered it more liable than usual to such infection, I think the injury might be described as being the direct result of, and, therefore, suffered in, the execution of duty.

F I do not read that judgment as laying particular stress on the word "infection." I think that HUMPHREYS, J., is using the word "infection" simply to mean the onset of the disease, and I can only read the reasoning and the ratio decidendi in that case as applicable to the present matter.

G Counsel for the police authority argued that it is open to us to depart from Garvin's case (1) if we think it was wrongly decided, but nothing I have heard satisfies me that Garvin's case (1) was wrongly decided. In any event, whether it was rightly decided or not, I am clearly of opinion that we ought to follow it. This court is made a final court of appeal in these matters : see s. 17 (2) of the Act of 1921 ; and I can imagine nothing more disastrous than, where the court has given a decision on the construction or application of this Act, that another court should give a contrary decision so that there would then be two conflicting cases and no finality in the matter at all. For myself, I think we ought to hold H that we are bound by this decision, and I say that for this reason. The Court of Appeal in Young v. Bristol Aeroplane Co., Ltd. (3), held, after argument before a full court of six judges, that the Court of Appeal was bound by its own decisions, with certain well-defined exceptions. The MASTER OF THE ROLLS summarised it in this way ([1944] 2 All E.R. 300) :

The only exceptions to this rule (two of them apparent only) are those already mentioned which for convenience we here summarize : (i) The court is entitled and bound to decide which of two conflicting decisions of its own it will follow ; (ii) the court is bound to refuse to follow a decision of its own which, though not expressly overruled, cannot in its opinion stand with a decision of the House of Lords ; (iii) the court is not bound to follow a decision of its own if it is satisfied that the decision was given per incuriam.

What is meant by giving a decision per incuriam is giving a decision when a case or a statute has not been brought to the attention of the court and they have given the decision in ignorance or forgetfulness of the existence of that case or that statute. The MASTER OF THE ROLLS pointed out in his judgment that in some cases Court of Appeal judgments are final, as in bankruptcy, and in others are reviewable by the House of Lords, and yet he drew no distinction as regards their binding force on the Court of Appeal. If, therefore, that is the position in a court most of whose decisions are reviewable in the House of Lords, how much more important is it that this court, which is a final court in this matter, should follow its own decisions and give full force and effect to them? If it were otherwise, a great deal of uncertainty would be introduced into the law. I know that in the writings of various eminent people the doctrine of stare decisis has been canvassed from time to time. In my opinion, if one thing is certain it is that stare decisis is part of the law of England, and in a system of law such as ours where the common law, and equity largely, is based on decided cases, it would be very unfortunate if, when a court of final appeal has given a decision and laid down a definite principle and it cannot be said the court has been misled in any way by not being referred to authorities, statutory or judicial, which bear on the question, it should then be said that that case was not to be a binding authority. Counsel for the police authority has called our attention to certain dicta, in which judges have said, apparently, that a court is bound by decisions of a court of co-ordinate jurisdiction if they are subject to appeal, but not otherwise. We are not here considering the decision of a court of co-ordinate jurisdiction. I think POLLOCK, C.B., in Taylor v. Burgess (4), to which counsel referred, was considering the position in the days when there were three High Courts. He, sitting in the Court of Exchequer, was stating how he regarded the decisions of the other courts which were reviewable by the Exchequer Chamber. We are now one court and we are not considering a decision of a court of co-ordinate jurisdiction. We are considering a decision of this court. So far as the dictum of GROVE, J., [in Casson v. Churchley (5) (53 L.J.Q.B. 336)] is concerned, I can only say for myself that I think the modern practice is that a judge of first instance, although, as a matter of judicial comity, he would usually follow the decision of another judge of first instance unless he was convinced that that judgment was wrong, certainly is not bound to follow the decision of a judge of equal jurisdiction. A judge of first instance is only bound to follow the decisions of the Court of Appeal and the House of Lords and, it may be also, of the Divisional Court.

For these reasons I am of opinion that we ought to decide this case in accordance with the decision in Garvin v. City of London Police Authority (1), and that the recorder was right in regarding himself as bound by it. Therefore, this appeal will be dismissed.

ATKINSON, J. : I agree, and would merely add that Garvin's case (1) does not stand alone. The House of Lords has held that broncho-pneumonia, heat-stroke, and rheumatism may be injuries, and, if those conditions and tuberculosis can be injuries, it is very difficult to hold that a duodenal ulcer is not an injury. I should like to say that I think Garvin's case (1) is absolutely right, but, right or wrong, I think we are bound to follow it.

LEWIS, J. : I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Sharpe, Pritchard & Co., agents for Harry Bann, town clerk, Huddersfield (for the appellants); Crossman, Block & Co., agents for Eaton Smith & Downey, Huddersfield (for the respondent).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

K.B.D.]

HOWARD v. WALKER

197

HOWARD AND WIFE v. WALKER AND OTHERS.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J.), June 23, 24, 27, 1947.]

Landlord and Tenant—Nuisance—Shop—Defective paving of forecourt—Injury to customer—Liability of landlord—No covenant by landlord to repair—Right of entry to inspect and repair—Repairs previously carried out by landlord.

A A customer, on leaving a shop, which, in common with adjoining buildings, stood back some distance from the pavement, sustained injuries from a fall caused by the defective paving of a forecourt in front of the shop. The forecourt was not fenced or walled off from the highway, but was not part of the highway. The premises were let under an agreement which imposed no obligation to repair on the landlords or on the tenant, but a right of entry was reserved to the landlords to inspect or repair as often as occasion should require, and such repairs as had been required had always been done by the landlords. In an action for damages against both tenant and landlords :

B HELD : the accident occurred while the customer was still the invitee of the tenant whose premises she was at that time leaving, and though, in the absence of contributory negligence, the tenant was liable, the landlords were not.

Wilchick v. Marks (1) ([1934] 2 K.B. 56) distinguished.

C [AS TO LIABILITY FOR INJURIES DUE TO WANT OF REPAIR, see HALSBURY, Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. 20, pp. 206-208, paras. 225-227 ; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 31, pp. 344-348, Nos. 4867-4905.]

Cases referred to :

- (1) Wilchick v. Marks and Silverstone, [1934] 2 K.B. 56 ; 103 L.J.K.B. 372 ; 151 L.T. 60 ; Digest Supp.
(2) Lane v. Cox, [1897] 1 Q.B. 415 ; 66 L.J.Q.B. 193 ; 76 L.T. 135 ; 31 Digest 347, 4896.
(3) Cavalier v. Pope, [1906] A.C. 428 ; 75 L.J.K.B. 609 ; 95 L.T. 65 ; 31 Digest 348, 4900.
(4) Bromley v. Mercer, [1922] 2 K.B. 126 ; 91 L.J.K.B. 577 ; 127 L.T. 282 ; 26 Digest 434, 1520.
(5) Heap v. Ind Coope & Allsop, Ltd., [1940] 3 All E.R. 634 ; [1940] 2 K.B. 476 ; 109 L.J.K.B. 724 ; 163 L.T. 169 ; Digest Supp.
(6) Owens v. Scott & Sons (Bakers), Ltd. and Wastall, [1939] 3 All E.R. 663 ; Digest Supp.

E ACTION for damages for injuries sustained by the plaintiff in the forecourt of a shop owned by the first defendants and occupied by the second defendant. The facts appear in the judgment.

B. L. A. O'Malley and Stephen Chapman for the plaintiff and her husband.
Berryman, K.C., and Marven Everett for the landlords.
F J. C. Lawrence for the tenant.

Cur. adv. vult.

G June 27. LORD GODDARD, C.J., read the following judgment. At about 5.45 p.m., on Nov. 2, 1945, the plaintiff, Mrs. Howard, went to a shop kept by the second defendant, Mr. Crisp, at 72, High Street, Norwood, to make a purchase. This shop, in common with the other buildings in the immediate neighbourhood, stands back some way from the flagged footpath. Originally, no doubt, when this street was a residential neighbourhood, there were either small gardens or forecourts in front of the houses. Now, there is nothing in the shape of a railing or wall separating what were originally the forecourts from the pavement, though there is a line which indicates where the forecourts ended and the pavement began, and the strip which formerly was the forecourt is of an appreciable width. The forecourt in front of Mr. Crisp's shop was at some time paved over with concrete. In the course of time this concrete has become broken and uneven and no repairs have been done to it. It was in just the sort of condition which invites an accident, especially in the dusk or at night. A person walking across it might easily catch his or her foot or heel and thereby be caused to fall. On the evening in question Mrs. Howard, having made her purchases, was leaving the shop, and, while still on the forecourt, remembered that she wished to make a call somewhere to her left, turned round, possibly sharply, to go in the direction she desired and fell heavily to the ground. I am satisfied that her fall was due to the uneven and dangerous surface on which she was walking. I see no reason to attribute any negligence to her. It is true she knew the place and it is true she knew, if she had thought about it at the time, that the concrete was broken, but a person who enters or leaves a shop in the evening can hardly be expected to keep her eyes on the ground. She fell in just the sort of way one knows often happens in streets when a person catches a foot on an uneven flagstone which may be only very slightly raised above that adjoining it. Mr. Crisp was quite frank about it. He had not realised that there was a danger. If he had, it could easily have been remedied. A little gravel or a few shovelfuls of earth rammed down would have rendered the approach to his shop, which I find was unsafe, perfectly innocuous. It was conceded, and the case proceeded throughout on the footing, that this forecourt and the forecourts adjoining (for, as I have already indicated, the shop is in a terrace) were not part of the highway. The highway is the pavement which immediately adjoins and the division can be clearly seen.

The accident to Mrs. Howard proved more severe than one would have anticipated. The special damage was agreed at £95 13s. 6d., and I do not feel that I can award her less than £350 in addition for her pain and suffering and the disability from which she will continue to suffer. So far as Mr. Crisp was concerned, there was no defence except a plea of contributory negligence, but, as I have already said, I am satisfied that the accident was due to the state of the forecourt and not to any negligence on her part. The judgment against Mr. Crisp, however, will probably be of very little value to Mr. and Mrs. Howard, and, therefore, they seek also to recover their damages against the first defendants who, as trustees, are the landlords of the property.

The question of the liability of owners of property of which they are not in occupation has been the subject of many cases, none of which is exactly similar to this, and the case seems to me to raise a point of some importance in a branch of the law which often presents difficulties. The property was held under an agreement dated Dec. 11, 1913, originally for a term of three years, and Mr. Crisp appears to have held over and to be a yearly tenant of the premises. No obligation to repair was imposed on either the landlords or the tenant, but by the terms of the agreement the landlords reserved full right and power to enter at reasonable times on the premises to inspect or repair them or any contiguous building thereto as often as occasion should require. Such repairs as have been required have always been done by the landlords, and, in fact, since this accident they have repaired the forecourt. In these circumstances Mr. and Mrs. Howard seek to make the landlords liable, relying particularly on Wilchick v. Marks (1).

Before, however, I turn to the authorities, I desire to make it clear that this accident happened to a person who was visiting the tenant's shop and while she was within its curtilage. It is not a case where a pedestrian on the highway steps aside for some reason on to adjoining land which is in an unsafe condition and meets with an accident. In going to the shop Mrs. Howard was an invitee, but she was an invitee of Mr. Crisp and not of his landlords. The landlords were under no duty to her to keep the premises in repair. As the law stands at present it is clear that, apart from any question of breach of covenant, a landlord who allows a house to become in a ruinous condition is under no liability either to the tenant or to the licensees or invitees of the tenant for any accident which may happen on the premises owing to their want of repair. He may, of course, be liable to the tenant if he has undertaken to repair and has failed in his obligation, but no liability can attach to him for accidents which may happen to the tenant's guests or customers, because no duty is owed by the landlord to them by contract or otherwise. In this regard I need only cite Lane v. Cox (2), Cavalier v. Pope (3), and Bromley v. Mercer (4). Wilchick v. Marks (1), however, has decided that a landlord is liable to a person using the highway if, having the right to repair, he fails to exercise it and allows the property to get into a dangerous condition in consequence of which a passer-by is injured. In that case a landlord who had retained the right to do repairs, and had put no obligation on the tenant to repair, allowed a shutter to get into a dangerous condition. The shutter fell and injured the plaintiff, who was walking past the house, and it was held that she was entitled to recover on the ground of nuisance. That case was approved in Heap v. Ind Coope & Allsop,

Ltd. (5), which decided that it was not necessary, as I had thought in Wilchick v. Marks (1), that the landlord should know of the defective state of the premises, but that he was liable whether he knew or whether he did not. Wilchick v. Marks (1), however, as I have said, related to a passenger on a highway, and, in my judgment, I said ([1934] 2 K.B. 66) :

Clearly if the plaintiff had been a visitor to the premises she would have had no cause of action against the landlords, as no duty was owed to visitors by the landlords any more than to the tenant.

In this case Mrs. Howard was a visitor or invitee of the tenant. Her counsel sought to put the case on the ground that she was a user of the highway, that she was about to get on it, and that the accident happened while she was so doing, and he endeavoured to support his case by reference to the well-known series of authorities which decide that, if a person creates a danger, whether by excavation or otherwise on land immediately adjoining the highway, he is liable to a person who inadvertently steps off the highway and is injured. This seems to me really to amount to the same argument as was unsuccessful in Bromley v. Mercer (4). There the defendants were the owners of a house and yard abutting on a highway and separated therefrom by a wall which was in such a defective state of repair as to constitute a public nuisance to the highway. The defendants were liable to maintain and keep the outside of the premises in good repair and condition. The plaintiff, who was visiting the tenant of the premises, was in the yard and was injured by a heavy stone falling on her from the wall. It was held that she had no cause of action against the landlords. It was argued that she would have had an action if she had been walking along the road and the wall had then collapsed on her, and it was held in the court below that she was entitled to recover because she was near to the highway, although she was in the yard and not on the highway. The Court of Appeal, however, held that it was wrong to say that where there was a nuisance adjoining the highway everyone who comes in proximity to it has a right of action which he can carry with him on to private premises. If the accident happens while the person is on the highway, he has an action, not in negligence but in nuisance, because the adjoining danger has interfered with his free use of the highway.

I can think of no better definition of nuisance than this, given in WINFIELD'S TEXTBOOK ON THE LAW OF TORT, 3rd ed., p. 426 ;

Nuisance is the unlawful interference with a person's use or enjoyment of land, or of some right over, or in connection with it.

If a person's right of free passage over a highway is subject to interference he has an action, just as he would have if a private right of way of which he was the grantee was obstructed. It may well be that had Mrs. Howard been walking along the pavement and inadvertently or to avoid some obstruction stepped on the forecourt and had fallen owing to its defective state, she might have been able to recover as did the plaintiff in Owens v. Thomas Scott & Sons, Ltd. (6), but she met with the accident while she was still the invitee of the tenant whose premises she was leaving. If she were entitled to recover against the landlords, I can see no reason why a person leaving a house abutting on a highway who was injured by the defective condition of the step should not also have an action, and yet that would be entirely contrary to the line of authority of which the cases I have cited are instances.

It may be that the law is not entirely satisfactory on this point. No doubt, it is difficult for a laymen to understand why, if he is walking along the road and slips into an excavation at the side of it, he should be entitled to recover, whereas if he slips into the excavation as he is endeavouring to get on to the road he is not, but I must take the law as I find it, and I have come to the conclusion that it is not possible for me to hold that Mr. and Mrs. Howard have a cause of action against the landlords. Accordingly, Mr. and Mrs. Howard will have judgment against Mr. Crisp for £455 13s. 6d., with costs, and there will be judgment for the landlords, also with costs.

Order accordingly.

Solicitors : L. Bingham & Co. (for the plaintiffs) ; Berrymans (for the landlords) ; Warren & Co. (for the tenant).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re DUKE OF LEEDS' WILL TRUSTS, LEEDS (DUKE) v. DAVENPORT AND OTHERS.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Jenkins, J.), May 14, 15, June 19, 1947.]

*Compulsory Purchase—Mines—Coal mine—Compensation—Disposal as between beneficial interests under settlement—Coal Act, 1938 (c. 52), sched. III, pt.
IV, para. 21 (2).*

Where compensation is payable under the Coal Act, 1938, ss. 6 and 7, in respect of several holdings comprised in one settlement, in view of the varying lives and fluctuating income of individual holdings, compensation received in respect of each holding should be dealt with separately. Where, however, the effect on the relative interests of successive beneficiaries of dealing separately with the compensation received in respect of each of several holdings would be insignificant as compared with the additional complication and expense involved in making separate calculations instead of a single calculation comprising the aggregate sum, practical considerations might make it proper to dispense with separate calculations and treat the aggregate amount as one fund.

The effect of the directions in regard to interest and accumulation in sched. III, pt. IV, para. 21 (2), to the Act is that, while an accumulation may be directed of any income which, if it had been royalty income from the holding, would have been required to be accumulated under an express or implied provision in the settlement, the process of converting the successive beneficial interests formerly subsisting in the holding, under the settlement, into the like benefits, "or as near thereto as may be," in the compensation moneys is not to involve any capitalisation of income during a period in which the holding, according to the estimates, would, in fact, have produced no royalty income, or only income smaller in amount than that produced by the compensation during the like period.

In determining, under para. 21 (2), the rights of the different beneficiaries in the settlement in respect of the compensation payable under the Act, the compensation received in respect of a holding must be treated as a wasting asset with a life corresponding to the estimated life of the holding, and, subject to the special direction against capitalisation of income in proviso (ii) to the paragraph, the capital and income of the compensation must be applied in such manner as to ensure, so far as possible, that each successive beneficiary receives year by year, during the continuance of his interest, a rateable proportion of the estimated royalty income which he would have received from the holding during the like period, the proportion, arrived at by a uniform abatement of each year's estimated royalty income throughout the estimated life of the holding, being so calculated as to exhaust the entire capital and income by the end of the estimated life of the holding.

Askew v. Woodhead, (1880) (14 Ch.D. 27) and Re Simpson, Clarke v. Simpson ([1913] 1 Ch. 277) applied.

Re Barrington, (1886) (33 Ch.D. 523) distinguished.

The requirements of para. 21 (2) will be satisfied by the following procedure: (i) Take the estimated life of the holding (as accepted by the valuation board concerned) as the period during which the capital and income of the compensation received in respect of the holding must be completely consumed. (ii) Assume that the holding would have produced, during each year of its estimated life, the estimated royalty income, if any, for that year (as accepted by the valuation board concerned). (iii) Estimate the yearly rate of interest which the compensation, or the balance of it from time to time remaining in hand, can be reasonably expected to produce during the period represented by the estimated life of the holding, and assume for the purposes of calculation that the rate of interest so estimated (here termed "the conventional rate") will be uniformly maintained throughout that period. (iv) Calculate what abatement, uniformly applied to the estimated royalty income for every year, must be made in the estimated royalty income for each year in order to ensure that the capital and income of the compensation will exactly suffice to provide for the payment in each year of the appropriate abated amount (here termed "the abated royalty equivalent") to the person for the time being entitled in possession under the settlement during the whole of the period represented by the estimated life of the holding, and will, by means of such payments, be completely exhausted by the end of that period, on the footing that (a) there will be no appreciation or depreciation in the value of the investments representing the compensation; (b) the compensation will produce uniformly throughout the period no less and no more than the conventional rate of interest; and (c) the person for the time being entitled in possession is to receive in respect of each year the income of the compensation for that year or the abated royalty equivalent, whichever is the greater, and the excess, if any, of the abated royalty equivalent for any year over the income of the compensation for that year (here termed "the capital supplement") is to be provided out of capital. (v) The compensation having been duly invested within the range of investments authorised by para. 21 (5), pay the person for the time being entitled in possession the resulting income, together with the capital supplement, if any, for each year, and continue this process until the compensation is exhausted or the balance of it becomes vested in possession in some person or persons absolutely entitled under the settlement, whichever event first happens. For the purposes of apportionment on the death of a tenant for life, the capital supplement attributable to any year should be treated as accruing from day to day during that year. (vi) If a proportion of the royalty income derived from the holding in any year, had it remained subject to the settlement instead of being compulsorily acquired, would, in view of the Settled Land Act, 1925, s. 47, have been liable to be set aside as capital money arising under the settlement, the like proportion of the abated royalty equivalent for the same year must be similarly set aside, but, in view of the prohibition against the capitalisation of income contained in the proviso to para. 21 (2) (which exempts the income of the compensation from accumulation, except in so far as there may be an obligation to accumulate by virtue of the actual limitations of the settlement itself in any particular case), not exceeding the amount, if any, of the capital supplement for that year. Any amounts so set aside and the future income thereof will, thenceforth, cease to be subject to the special provisions applicable to the capital and income, respectively, of the compensation.

The rate of interest appropriate to be adopted for the "conventional rate" is 3 per cent.

The arrangements indicated must be treated as taking effect as from the vesting date, i.e., July 1, 1942, and, therefore, the tenant for life in possession under the settlement is entitled to immediate payment of the interest and income allowed on, or earned by, the compensation since that date, together with the amount of such capital supplements as have accrued since that date, but he is not entitled to an immediate payment out of the capital of the compensation in commutation and satisfaction of all capital supplements accruing during the residue of his life.

With regard to the possibility of appreciation or depreciation in the investments representing the compensation, the persons ultimately entitled must take their chance of gain or loss according to the event.

[AS TO METHOD OF DISTRIBUTION OF COMPENSATION ON COMPULSORY PURCHASE, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 6, pp. 153, 154, para. 174; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 11, pp. 247, 248, Nos. 1464-1503.]

FOR THE COAL ACT, 1938, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 31, p. 455.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Re Phillips' Trusts, (1868), L.R. 6 Eq. 250; 11 Digest 247, 1476.
- (2) Askew v. Woodhead, (1880), 14 Ch.D. 27; 49 L.J.Ch. 320; 42 L.T. 567; 44 J.P. 570; 11 Digest 247, 1477.
- (3) Re Hunt's Estate, [1884] W.N. 181; 11 Digest 248, 1478.
- (4) Re Barrington, Gamblen v. Lyon, (1886), 33 Ch.D. 523; 56 L.J.Ch. 175; 55 L.T. 87; 11 Digest 248, 1500.
- (5) Re Robinson's Settlement Trusts, [1891] 3 Ch. 129; 60 L.J.Ch. 776; 65 L.T. 244; 11 Digest 248, 1503.
- (6) Re Fullerton's Will, [1906] 2 Ch. 138; 75 L.J.Ch. 552; 94 L.T. 667; 11 Digest 248, 1502.
- (7) Re Simpson, Clarke v. Simpson, [1913] 1 Ch. 277; 82 L.J.Ch. 169; 108 L.T. 317; 40 Digest 752, 2819.

ADJOURNED SUMMONS to determine the manner of disposal of the compensation moneys received in respect of the compulsory acquisition, under the Coal Act, 1938, of the freehold interests in coal mines formerly comprised in a settlement created by the will of the tenth Duke of Leeds. The facts appear in the judgment.

Andrew Clark, K.C., and J. V. Nesbitt for the plaintiff (the tenant for life in possession).

Coen for the trustees of the settlement.

C. A. J. Bonner for the National Coal Board.

Jopling and Neville Gray, K.C. and Lindner for other defendants (persons beneficially interested under the will).

Cur. adv. vult.

June 19. JENKINS, J., read the following judgment. This is an application under the Coal Acts, 1938-1943, for the directions of the court as to the disposal of the compensation monies received in respect of the compulsory acquisition, under the Coal Act, 1938, of the freehold interests in certain coal or mines of coal formerly comprised in the settlement created by the will, dated July 17, 1925, of the tenth Duke of Leeds, who died on May 10, 1927. The will was proved on Aug. 8, 1927, by the first three defendants in the present proceedings as the executors therein named, the same three persons being also appointed by the will to be trustees thereof for the purposes of the Settled Land Acts, 1882 to 1890, and of any Act amending or consolidating the same. The effect of the settlement created by the will, so far as material for the present purpose, was that, subject to the payment to the testator's widow of a yearly rent charge (which is amply secured without recourse to the compensation moneys in question) and to the payment of a further yearly rent charge to one of his daughters, since deceased, the testator's freehold lands and hereditaments not otherwise disposed of, including the coal or mines of coal in question, were limited (as regards all life estates without impeachment of waste) to the testator's only son, the present plaintiff (who succeeded his father as eleventh duke) for life, with remainder to the plaintiff's sons successively according to seniority in tail male, with remainder to the use in tail male of such person, if any, as should at the time of the failure or determination of the preceding limitations be entitled to the title or dignity of the Duke of Leeds, with remainder to the use in fee simple of the person or persons who at the time of the failure or determination of the preceding limitations should answer the description of the testator's own right heir or right heirs, with a provision revoking any estate in tail male limited to a person born in the testator's lifetime and substituting for the estate so revoked a limitation to the use of that person for life, with remainder to his sons successively according to seniority in tail male, with the like remainders over as were therebefore limited to take effect after the estate so revoked.

The plaintiff, born in 1901, is married, but has no issue. In default of male issue of his, the fourth defendant, Sir Francis D'Arcy Godolphin Osborne, born in 1884 and unmarried, should he survive the plaintiff, will succeed on the plaintiff's death to the dukedom of Leeds, and, consequently, become tenant for life under the settlement. In default of male issue of both the plaintiff and Sir Francis, the fifth defendant, Sydney Hugh Godolphin Osborne, born in 1887 and also without issue, should he survive them both, will in his turn succeed on the death of the survivor of them to the dukedom of Leeds, and, consequently, become tenant for life under the settlement. In default of male issue of the plaintiff and of both these defendants, the limitation in favour of the person or persons answering the description of the testator's own right heir or right heirs at the time of the failure or determination of the preceding limitations will take effect. The persons who would answer that description, if such failure took place to-day, would be the testator's daughter, the seventh defendant, Moira Godolphin Lyttelton, and the two surviving children of the testator's daughter, the late Countess of Strathmore, who was originally joined as the sixth defendant, but has since died. Directions were given at the hearing for the substitution of these two grandchildren of the testator as defendants in place of their mother. It will thus be seen that, while all persons beneficially interested under the settlement so far as at present in existence and ascertainable are before the court, interests of possible unborn male issue of the plaintiff or of either of the two presumptive life tenants in remainder are necessarily affected, while the persons who will, in fact, constitute the class of right heirs of the testator to become absolutely entitled under the ultimate limitation, if it takes effect, can only be ascertained by reference to the state of the family at a future date, that is to say, the date of the failure of the preceding limitations of the settlement. The remaining defendant in the present proceedings is the National Coal Board, which, under the provisions of the Coal Industry Nationalisation Act, 1946, has, since the issue of the originating summons herein, superseded the Coal Commission constituted by the Coal Act, 1938, and has, accordingly, been substituted for the Coal Commission as a defendant by order to carry on dated Feb. 20, 1947—a substitution now automatically provided for by R.S.C. (No. 2), 1947, r. 1 [R.S.C., Ord. 17, r. 7B]. The National Coal Board is concerned only with the question of costs, to be dealt with at a later stage in this judgment.

[HIS LORDSHIP dealt with the Coal Act, 1938, ss. 1-5, and continued:] Sections 6 and 7 provide for the compensation of existing owners, and it is under those sections, in conjunction with sched. III to the Act and certain rules made pursuant to the provisions of that schedule, that the compensation moneys to which the present proceedings relate were ascertained and paid. These sections, so far as material for the present purpose, are in the following terms. Section 6 provides:

(1) The Commission shall pay, as compensation to existing owners for the acquisition of their interests, sums ascertained in accordance with the provisions of this and the next succeeding section in respect of all coal and mines of coal, of all acquired property and rights, and of all rights to withdraw support that are to vest in the Commission under pt. II of sched. II to this Act. (2) The compensation shall be ascertained separately in accordance with the next succeeding section in respect of (a) all the said matters in respect of which compensation is to be payable, with the exception of (i) minerals . . . other than . . . coal . . . (ii) surface servitudes, which matters are in this Act referred to as "principal coal hereditaments"; (b) the matters within the exception aforesaid, in this Act referred to as "subsidiary coal hereditaments." (3) The aggregate amount of the compensation payable in respect of all principal coal hereditaments shall be the sum of £66,450,000. (4) The central valuation board established under sched. III to this Act shall prepare and deposit with the Board of Trade a map showing a division of the whole of Great Britain into regions (in this Act referred to as "valuation regions"), and shall allocate to each valuation region a part (in this Act referred to as a "regional allocation") of the said sum of £66,450,000, being a part bearing the same proportion to the whole of that sum as they may estimate the value of all principal coal hereditaments in the region to bear to the value of all principal coal hereditaments in Great Britain.

Section 7 provides:

(1) The sums to be paid for compensation as aforesaid shall be ascertained by valuation, in accordance with the provisions of this section, of the interests, other than retained interests, that subsist at the valuation date in coal, mines of coal and acquired property and rights (in this Act referred to as "acquired interests"). (2) The subject of each valuation shall be a unit (in this Act referred to as "a holding") consisting of an acquired interest, or of a group of such interests, that is under the provisions of sched. III to this Act to constitute a unit for compensation purposes.

Sub-section (3) is procedural and relates to the registration of claims or the registration of holdings. By sub-s. (4):

The value of a holding shall be taken to be the amount which the holding might have been expected to realise if this Act had not been passed and the holding had been sold on the valuation date in the open market by the existing owners thereof, selling as willing vendors to a willing purchaser, under a contract providing for completion thereof on the vesting date, so however that, where a right to withdraw support is to vest in the Commission with coal or a mine of coal in which a holding subsisted, it shall be valued as if each of the existing owners thereof, having power to grant that right to the purchaser for an interest corresponding to the existing owner's interest in the coal or mine, had agreed so to grant it in addition to any acquired rights in which the holding subsisted. (5) The said amount shall be ascertained, subject to the provisions of sched. III to this Act, by the regional valuation board established under sched. III to this Act, and where the premises in which a holding subsisted include subsidiary coal hereditaments, the regional valuation board shall also ascertain the parts of that amount that are attributable to principal and to subsidiary coal hereditaments respectively.

Subsection 6 provides for the certification by the regional valuation board of the amounts ascertained by them under the preceding sub-section in respect of each holding, dividing the amounts between principal and subsidiary coal hereditaments. Sub-section (7) provides for payment of the compensation :

There shall be paid in respect of each holding in any valuation region for which compensation is payable (a) a sum bearing to the amount certified in respect thereof as attributable to principal coal hereditaments the same proportion as the amount of the regional allocation for that valuation region bears to the aggregate of the amounts so certified in respect of all such holdings in that valuation region ; and (b) a sum equal to any amount certified in respect thereof as attributable to subsidiary coal hereditaments.

I do not think that there is anything else in the body of the Act to which I need refer, with the exception of some of the definitions contained in s. 44 (1) :

In this Part of this Act, unless the context otherwise requires, the following expressions have the meanings hereby assigned to them respectively, that is to say :—“ Acquired interest ” has the meaning assigned to it by s. 7 (1) of this Act ; “ Acquired property and rights ” has the meaning assigned to it by s. 4 (1) of this Act ; “ Claiming under ” shall be construed, in relation to a person referred to as claiming under the estate owner in respect of the fee simple, or under the estate owner in respect of a term of years, in any land, as referring to any person interested in that land in respect of (a) any equitable interest enforceable against that estate owner (other than an equitable term of years under a coal-mining lease or an interest created out of such a term of years) . . . “ Coal ” has the meaning assigned to it by s. 3 (4) of this Act . . . “ Existing owners ” means, in relation to any coal or mine of coal, all persons who have at the valuation date an acquired interest therein ; “ Interested ” shall be construed, in relation to a person referred to as interested in any coal or mine of coal, or in any other land, as referring to any person entitled to, or to exercise, or interested in, or in the exercise of, any estate, interest, charge or power (including an option or right of pre-emption, and including a contingent executory or future interest or a possibility coupled with an interest whether or not the object of the gift or limitation of such interest or possibility be ascertained) in, on or over that coal or mine or that other land, as the case may be, or in, on or over the rents and profits thereof, otherwise than in respect only of the benefit of a servitude or restrictive covenant adversely affecting that coal or mine or that other land, as the case may be, and “ interest ” has a corresponding meaning . . .

Schedule III is headed “ Provisions as to compensation payable under s. 6 of this Act,” and is divided into five parts, the second and fifth of which have no relevance to the question before me. In conformity with s. 7 (2), paras. 1 and 2 of pt. I prescribe what acquired interests or groups of such interests are to constitute units for compensation purposes, each such unit being, under the provisions of the last mentioned sub-section, the subject of a separate valuation and referred to in the Act as “ a holding.” Schedule III, pt. I, is headed “ Preliminary ” and the sub-heading is “ Units for compensation purposes.” Paragraph 1 says :

Subject to the provisions of para. 2 of this schedule, each of the following acquired interests, or groups of such interests, in coal, mines of coal, and acquired property and rights, shall constitute a unit for compensation purposes, (a) each freehold reversion (that is to say, in the case of all the coal and mines of coal that are on the valuation date comprised in a coal-mining lease derived immediately out of the fee simple and in the case of acquired property and rights annexed to any such coal or mine, the interest therein of the estate owner in respect of the fee simple in the coal and mines together with the interests therein of all persons claiming under him) . . . (c) each freehold in possession in any valuation region (that is to say, in the case of all the coal and mines of coal in any valuation region that are not on the valuation date comprised in any coal-mining lease, and are in the legal ownership as respects the fee simple of the same estate owner, and in the case of acquired property and rights annexed to any such coal or mine, the interest therein of the estate owner in respect of the fee simple in the coal and mines together with the interests therein of all persons claiming under him).

Paragraph 2 provides for a modification of the system of division into units in particular cases.

The application of these provisions in the present case resulted in the coal hereditaments comprised in the settlement being divided into nine distinct holdings, each of which, accordingly, became the subject of a separate valuation.

Schedule III, pt. III deals with valuation and is largely procedural. The general scheme is that (subject to certain requirements as to lodging of claims and so forth) each holding is to be valued by the regional valuation board in which it is situate, with a right for any claimant aggrieved by their valuation to have it reviewed in proceedings before a referee appointed as therein mentioned, and that each regional valuation board, when the valuations of all the holdings in its region have been settled, is to certify the amounts to the Coal Commission, such certificates, on publication as therein mentioned, becoming in effect conclusive, subject to a limited right of appeal to the High Court. Reference should perhaps be made to paras. 13 and 14, which are in the following terms :

(13) In the valuation of a holding regard shall be had to the following rules, that is to say (a) no allowance shall be made on account of the compulsory acquisition by the Commission of the premises in which the holding subsisted; and (b) the state in which the said premises were at the valuation date shall be taken into consideration; and also to such rules as may be prescribed for securing uniformity of valuation. (14) The Central Valuation Board shall have power to make, with the approval of the Board of Trade, rules as to the procedure to be followed in giving effect to the three last preceding paragraphs and for prescribing anything that is therein directed to be prescribed, and in those paragraphs the expression "prescribed" means prescribed by rules made under this paragraph: Provided that rules under this paragraph shall not be made until a draft thereof has been approved by a resolution passed by each House of Parliament.

Of the nine holdings to which the present case relates, two were in the North Midland Valuation Region, and the remainder were in the Yorkshire Valuation Region. The value of each holding for the purposes of the Act was duly settled, and agreed with the appropriate regional valuation board, apparently without any occasion arising for review by a referee under sched. III, pt. III. To arrive at the value of each holding, it was necessary for the regional valuation board concerned to proceed on the best estimates that could be formed of (a) the period of years from the vesting date, i.e., July 1, 1942, during which each holding would have been workable, which may be termed the estimated life of the holding, and (b) the royalty income which the holding would have produced during each year of its estimated life, which may be termed the estimated royalty income, and, in effect, to assess by reference to these estimates the price which a hypothetical purchaser on a sale falling to be completed on the vesting date (i.e., July 1, 1942), would have paid for the right to receive in each year during the estimated life of the holding the estimated royalty income for that year. It is obvious that this calculation necessarily involved the deduction of substantial discounts and allowances from the gross figures of estimated royalty income. Charges such as mineral rights duty, miners' welfare levy, and management expenses had to be allowed for in order to arrive at the estimated net return; the hypothetical purchaser's liability for income tax had to be taken into account; the estimated net return for each year had to be suitably discounted by reference to the interval of time between the date of completion and the date at which such return might be expected to come to hand; provision had to be made for a sinking fund for the replacement, over the estimated life of the holding, of the capital laid out by the hypothetical purchaser (express reference is made to this sinking fund provision in the Coal (Valuation Procedure) Rules, 1942, r. 12); and, furthermore, it had to be recognised, as a factor that would have been taken into account by the hypothetical purchaser, that there was a risk, relatively unimportant during the earlier part of the estimated life of the holding, but increasing with the years, that, owing to technical, geological, industrial, or economic causes, the estimated royalty income might never be realised. It is in evidence that, in the course of the valuations, allowance was made for this risk by the deduction from the estimated royalty income of a risk rate of 5 per cent. for the first 20 years and thereafter on a rising scale.

It is clear from the foregoing considerations that, while the values arrived at simply represented the present values as on the appropriate date of the entire freehold interests comprised in the respective holdings, as opposed to aggregations of separate valuations of the successive beneficial interests in the respective holdings under the limitations of the settlement, a dissection of the calculations on which the valuation of each holding was based would show that the proportion of the total value attributable to the estimated royalty income for the period corresponding to the probable duration of the plaintiff's interest as tenant for life in possession—say, the first 25 or 30 years from the vesting date (i.e., July 1, 1942)—represented a very much higher percentage of that estimated royalty income than the percentage of the estimated royalty income for the residue of the estimated life of the holding represented by the balance of such total value. It is further obvious that the estimates on which the valuations were based necessarily became increasingly speculative and unreliable as they advanced into increasingly remote future periods of time. There are limits to what can be done in the way of forecasting the future working of a mine and the financial results of such future working. The estimated lives of the holdings in the present case range from 68 to 150 years, and an estimate, however carefully prepared, of the coal to be worked and royalty income to be received from a given holding 50 or 100 or 150 years hence must depend on so many assumptions as to amount to little more than a guess. A further complication is introduced by the fact that the estimated royalty income from a given holding does not necessarily consist of a constant yearly figure throughout the period of its estimated life. On the contrary, there are or may be very substantial fluctuations, including periods in which, according to the estimate, there would have been no royalty income at all. These fluctuations, I understand, are due to the relation of the working plans, or assumed working plans, as regards direction of working, order of working of different seams and so forth, to the respective positions of, and areas and seams comprised in, the various holdings in lease to the colliery undertaking concerned.

The values placed by the regional valuation boards concerned on the several holdings to which this case relates, and the respective estimated lives of such holdings as accepted by those boards were as follows. The two in the North Midland Valuation Region were valued at £25,664 and £6,119 respectively, with lives of 150 years and 148 years respectively, so that £31,783 was the total valuation for those in the North Midland Valuation Region. The holdings in the Yorkshire Valuation Region were valued as follows. The first of them was valued at £45,000 odd and there was an estimated life of 150 years. The next one was valued at £105,000 odd, with an estimated life of 140 years. The next one was £10,000 odd, with an estimated life of 80 years. The next one was a small one, valued at £281, with an estimated life of 98 years. The next one was valued at £17,487, with an estimated life of 148 years. Then came one which was not effective at all; the valuation was nil and the life was nil, there being no prospect of working. Finally, there was another small one, valued at £77, with an estimated life of 68 years. That made a total in the Yorkshire Valuation Region of £178,000 odd, and a total for the two regions of some £210,000.

The proportions allocated to these two regions respectively of the total compensation of £66,450,000 payable under the Coal Act, 1938, s. 6 (3), were less than the respective aggregates of the amounts certified by the two regional boards under s. 7 (6), in respect of the holdings in their respective regions as attributable to principal coal hereditaments, the deficiency being slightly larger in the case of the North Midland region than it was in the case of the Yorkshire region. In the result, the compensation as finally ascertained was approximately 17s. 4d. in the £ of the values of the two holdings in the former, and 18s. 9d. in the £ of the values of the six effective holdings in the latter region. The aggregate scaled down value which represented the compensation was £195,210. Out of this total, a sum of £869 3s. 11d. has been paid or is payable to certain surface owners (£260 odd in respect of one holding, £42 odd in respect of another, and £566 odd in respect of a third holding), thus reducing the aggregate sum of compensation moneys with which I am concerned to £194,340 odd.

I now turn to sched. III, pt. IV, which deals with the payment and disposal of compensation. Part IV begins with para. 18, which contains provisions as to the ascertainment of persons entitled and is in the following terms :

For the purposes of any provision of this Act under which a payment is to be made at any date to the person entitled to the compensation for a holding, that person shall be ascertained as follows : (a) if the holding could at the valuation date have been sold and conveyed to a purchaser in such manner as to bind or over-reach all acquired interests comprised in the holding (either in the actual circumstances or if any requisite consent, approval, request or notice had been received or given) either (i) by, or by the direction of, a single person in whom the whole beneficial interest comprised in the holding was vested, (ii) under the powers conferred by the Settled Land Act, 1925, or under any additional powers conferred by a settlement, or (iii) by trustees for sale, or (iv) by a personal representative in the exercise of his paramount powers, or (v) under powers conferred by any other enactment, the person who could have given a valid discharge for the purchase money arising on such a sale if paid on the date in question shall be the person entitled . . .

It is clear from this paragraph that, in the circumstances of the present case, the proper person to receive the compensation moneys were the trustees for the purposes of the Settled Land Act, 1925, of the settlement created by the will of the tenth Duke of Leeds. It appears from the evidence that the bulk of the compensation moneys had, in fact, already been paid to such trustees by the time the present summons was issued, and I understand that the balance has since been similarly paid. It is further in evidence that the moneys so received have been invested so as to yield interest at the rate of 3 per cent. per annum. Paragraphs 19 and 20 of pt. IV contain provisions as to the making of payments on account of compensation moneys to the persons entitled. Paragraph 19 (1) provides :

At any time before the vesting date, or after that date but before the relevant certificates have become conclusive under para. 17 of this schedule, the Commission, if they are satisfied that the compensation for any holding, or the aggregate of the compensation for a number of holdings to which the same person is entitled, will be not less than a particular amount, may make payment of such sum not exceeding that amount as they may think fit on account of the compensation for the holding or holdings . . .

Paragraph 19 (3), the material sub-paragraph, provides :

A payment on account made under this paragraph before the vesting date, together with interest thereon for the period between the date on which the payment is made and the vesting date at the rate of £3 per cent. per annum less income tax at the standard rate, shall be treated in account as a payment on account of the capital of the compensation made on the vesting date, and the said interest shall be deemed for the purposes of the Income Tax Acts to be paid on each anniversary of the date of the payment on account that occurs before the vesting date and on the vesting date and accordingly shall be treated as a proper deduction from income.

Paragraph 21 contains provisions as to the "Disposal of compensation as between beneficial interests" and is in the following terms :

(1) The compensation for a holding when paid by the Commission to the person entitled to receive it from them, including any sum paid on account thereof under para. 19 or 20 of this schedule, and the income thereof, shall, in order to its being applied as compensation to the persons whose interests are comprised in the holding, be held and disposed of for the benefit of those persons, or their personal representatives or assigns, in accordance with the succeeding provisions of this paragraph. (2) In the case of a holding that consists of or comprises an estate or other interest subject to a settlement within the meaning of the Settled Land Act, 1925, or to a trust for sale the proceeds whereof are subject to a settlement by way of succession, the trustees of the settlement or any court having jurisdiction in relation to the execution of the trusts of the settlement, and in the case of the court on the application of any beneficiary under the settlement, may require and cause the compensation, or the part thereof attributable to that estate or other interest, as the case may be, to be laid out, invested, accumulated, and paid in such manner as, in the judgment of the trustees or of the court, as the case may be, will give to the beneficiaries under the settlement the like benefit therefrom as they might lawfully have had from that estate or other interest, or as near thereto as may be, regard being had to the terms of the settlement and to all relevant circumstances affecting the premises in which the holding subsisted, including (a) the terms of any subsisting coal-mining lease and the operation of any provision therein contained as to undergettings, short workings, and other like matters ; (b) the period within which coal being worked might have been expected to be worked out or coal not being worked might have been expected to come into working and to be worked out ; and (c) the extent to which, having regard to those circumstances, the premises ought to be regarded as property of a wasting character : Provided that (i) where a payment on account of the compensation for the holding has been made under para. 19 of this schedule before the vesting date, the net income accruing to the trustees before the vesting date from the investment of the sum paid, up to an amount sufficient to make good to the capital of the settlement the interest on that sum brought into account under para. 19 of this schedule against the capital of the compensation, shall be set aside as capital of the settlement ; (ii) subject as aforesaid no part of the income of the compensation shall be required or caused by virtue of this sub-paragraph to be set aside as capital of the settlement.

Sub-paragraph (5), which sets out the authorised range of investments, provides :
"Money representing compensation attributable to an estate or other interest subject to such a settlement or trust for sale as is mentioned in sub-para. (2) of this paragraph, or vested in trustees on or for charitable, ecclesiastical or public trusts or purposes, may, notwithstanding anything in the relevant trust instrument, be invested not only as authorised by law or by the trust instrument but also in or on " [a range of investments set out, and includes, for example] the ordinary or other stock or shares of any company incorporated as aforesaid [i.e., incorporated in Great Britain] being a company which has paid dividends upon its ordinary capital at the rate of at least 4 per cent. per annum for at least 10 years next before the time of investment (of which fact such a letter as aforesaid [i.e., a letter from a bank as to the interest of the previous years] shall be sufficient evidence).

Sub-paragraph (6) provides :

Subject as aforesaid the compensation for a holding and the income thereof shall be held and disposed of in such manner as to confer on the existing owners whose interests are comprised in the holding, their personal representatives or assigns, the like benefits, so far as may be, as they would have had from their respective interests in the premises in which the holding subsisted if those premises had not been acquired by the Commission.

The question which I have to decide turns mainly on the true construction and effect of para. 21 (2), as to which I have the assistance of a number of authorities on certain earlier enactments of a similar character. Before referring to these earlier enactments and the decisions on them, it will be convenient if I express my views on three particular matters which are, I think, peculiar to para. 21 (2) itself. First, it will be noted that, in providing for the disposal of compensation moneys, to which para. 21 (2) applies, the court is to have regard " to the terms of the settlement and to all relevant circumstances affecting the premises in which the holding subsisted, including " and then there are set out in sub-para. (a), (b) and (c) three specific matters, which I need not read again. Those are matters relevant to the holding. As to the terms of this settlement, they are as summarised at the beginning of this judgment. It will be remembered, in particular, that all life estates were thereby declared to be without impeachment of waste. It follows from this that, if the holdings had remained subject to the settlement, the proportion required by the Settled Land Act, 1925, s. 47, to be set aside as capital money of rents received under mining leases granted subsequently to the death of the testator, the tenth duke, otherwise than pursuant to agreements made in his lifetime, would have been one-fourth of such rents. It was not disputed before me and appears to be well settled that this section has no application to rents received under mining leases granted or agreed to be granted by the testator in his lifetime, the whole of which were, and, but for the compulsory acquisition, would, during the residue of the terms of those leases, have continued to be, applicable as income arising under the settlement. The evidence before me shows, by reference to the history of the various leases, the dates from which the obligation to capitalise one-fourth of the royalty income under s. 47 of the Act of 1925 commenced or would, but for the compulsory acquisition, have commenced as regards each holding. So far as the present and the immediate future are concerned, this factor appears to be of relatively small importance, but it is, nevertheless, a factor which should, in my opinion, be taken into account. As to the relevant circumstances affecting the premises in which the holding subsisted, including the matters specifically mentioned in para. 21 (2) (a), (b) and (c), all parties before me were agreed, and I think it is clear from the evidence, that all such relevant circumstances were sufficiently allowed for in the course of arriving at the estimates accepted by the regional valuation boards of the life of each holding and of the royalty income which each holding would have produced during each year of its estimated life. It will also be remembered that the settlement in the present case comprised nine, or, rather, eight effective, holdings. The question therefore arises whether the compensation received in respect of each holding should, in the application of para. 21 (2), be treated as a separate fund to be dealt with by reference to the relevant circumstances as regards estimated life and estimated royalty income affecting that particular holding, or whether the aggregate amount of compensation received in respect of all holdings should, for this purpose, be treated as one entire fund to be dealt with by reference to a combination of the relevant circumstances as regards estimated life and estimated income affecting the holdings individually.

In my judgment, the former is the correct course. In s. 7 and sched. III, pts. I and III, each holding is clearly treated as a separate subject of valuation and compensation, and para. 21 of sched. III, pt. IV, appears equally clearly to treat the compensation received in respect of any one holding as a separate subject of disposal. I, therefore, see no justification for treating the aggregate amount of compensation received in respect of several holdings as one fund for the purposes of para. 21 (2) merely because the several holdings in question happen to have been comprised in one and the same settlement. In view of the varying lives and fluctuating income of individual holdings, and the provision to which I am about to refer in regard to the disposal of the income of the compensation, it appears that it is, in general, to the advantage of the tenant for life under a settlement comprising several holdings (and I am told it is substantially to the advantage of the plaintiff in the present case) for the compensation received in respect of each holding to be separately dealt with. It may well be that in some cases the effect on the relative interests of successive beneficiaries of dealing separately with the compensation received in respect of each of several holdings would be insignificant as compared with the additional complication and expense involved in making a separate calculation in relation to each of the several amounts of compensation, instead of a single calculation comprising the aggregate sum. In such cases practical considerations might, no doubt, make it proper to dispense with separate calculations and treat the aggregate amount as one fund. Nevertheless, as indicated above, I regard the former as the strictly correct course.

The last of the three particular matters that I have mentioned concerns the interest on the compensation moneys. It will be noted that, while para. 21 (2) provides that the compensation may be required or caused, inter alia, "to be accumulated," provisos (i) and (ii) are to the effect that, except as regards income accruing before the vesting date on a payment on account made before that vesting date :

... no part of the income of the compensation shall be required or caused by virtue of this sub-paragraph to be set aside as capital of the settlement.

I take the effect of this to be that, while an accumulation may be directed of any income which, if it had been royalty income from the holding, would have fallen to be accumulated by virtue of an express or implied provision for accumulation in the settlement, the process of converting the successive beneficial interests formerly subsisting in the holding, under the settlement, into the like beneficial interests, "or as near thereto as may be," in the compensation moneys is not to involve any capitalisation of income during a period in which the holding, according to the estimates, would, in fact, have produced no royalty income, or would have produced royalty income smaller in amount than the income produced by the compensation during the like period. For example, the estimates in relation to a particular holding might show a completely unproductive period for, say, ten years from the vesting date. In such a case, were it not for the proviso to which I have referred, it might well have been held that the proper course under para. 21 (2) would be to allow the person entitled in possession no benefit at all from the compensation during that period, inasmuch as he would during that period have received nothing from the holding itself if it had not been compulsorily acquired, and in the meantime to accumulate the income so as to increase the fund available to provide as nearly as possible the equivalent of the royalty income which would have been received from the holding in subsequent years. Proviso (ii) makes it clear that this is not to be done and that the person entitled in possession is to receive in any event a yearly minimum payment consisting of the income actually produced by the compensation.

The earlier enactments of a similar character, to which the authorities I am about to mention relate, are the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, s. 74, and the Settled Land Act, 1882, s. 34, now substantially re-enacted by the Settled Land Act, 1925, s. 79. The Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, s. 74, provides :

Where any purchase money or compensation . . . shall have been paid in respect of any lease for a life or lives or years . . . or any estate in lands less than the whole fee simple thereof, or of any reversion dependent on any such lease or estate, it shall be lawful for the court . . . to order that the same shall be laid out, invested, accumulated, and paid in such manner as the . . . court may consider will give to the parties interested in such money the same benefit therefrom as they might lawfully have had from the lease, estate or reversion in respect of which such money shall have been paid, or as near thereto as may be.

The Settled Land Act, 1882, s. 34, was as follows :

Where capital money arising under this Act is purchase money paid in respect of a lease for years, or life, or years determinable on life, or in respect of any other estate or interest in land less than the fee simple, or in respect of a reversion dependent on any such lease, estate, or interest, the trustees of the settlement or the court, as the case may be . . . may . . . require and cause the same to be laid out, invested, accumulated, and paid in such manner as, in the judgment of the trustees or of the court, as the case may be, will give to the parties interested in that money the like benefit therefrom as they might lawfully have had from the lease, estate, interest, or reversion in respect whereof the money was paid, or as near thereto as may be.

The Settled Land Act, 1925, s. 79, is in substantially identical terms, but omitting, consequentially on the other real property legislation of the same year, the references to leases for lives.

As to the authorities, Re Phillips' Trusts (1) was a case where settled leaseholds had been compulsorily acquired under the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, and, on an application under s. 74 of that Act, LORD ROMILLY, M.R., said (L.R. 6 Eq. 251):

I think that the proper course will be to refer it to an actuary to ascertain what ought to be paid every year to the tenant for life out of capital and income. The fund may be invested in the names of the trustees, and they must make such annual payments to the tenant for life as shall be certified by the actuary to be proper.

Askew v. Woodhead (2) was another application under the same section in respect of the proceeds of sale of settled leaseholds compulsorily acquired. SIR GEORGE JESSEL, M.R., said (14 Ch.D. 34):

The question before us is, what is the proper construction of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, s. 74. I will first consider the simple case of a leasehold settled upon a person for life, with a limitation over on his death to another person absolutely. When a property so circumstanced is purchased by a company, what mode of dealing with the purchase money will give the parties interested the same benefit as nearly as may be as they would have had from the lease? This result would clearly be attained by investing the money in the purchase of an annuity having as many years to run as there were years remaining in the term, and by paying it to the tenant for life, and after his death, if the tenant for life dies within the term, then to the remainderman. Generally an annuity cannot thus be purchased which will bring in as large an income as the leasehold, but sometimes it can. The same principle, however, must apply whether the income is more or less. If an annuity is not actually bought, it must be referred to an actuary to calculate what yearly sum, if raised out of the dividends and corpus of the fund, will exhaust the fund in the number of years which the lease had to run, and the amount so ascertained must be paid to the tenant for life.

Then BRETT, L.J., said (14 Ch.D. 35):

The object of the statute evidently is to substitute the money for the lease, and give the parties interests in the money corresponding to their interests in the lease. This can only be done by converting the money into an annuity which will last as long as the lease, and by paying the annuity to the person who would for the time being have been entitled to the possession of the leasehold. There is nothing in the Act which authorises us to say that the tenant for life is only to have the same income as before.

Re Hunt's Estate (3) was a similar case, except that the application was made by the personal representatives of a deceased tenant for life who had, under a previous order, in fact only received the income of the proceeds of sale of the leaseholds. KAY, J., said that ([1884] W.N. 182) "the law had been settled by the decision in Askew v. Woodhead (2), and that he could, notwithstanding the order made on a former occasion, divide the fund amongst the representatives and the next of kin upon the principle of that case," and he made an order accordingly. He, therefore, treated the principle as settled by Askew v. Woodhead (2). Re Barrington (4) was an application under the same section by the tenant for life (subject to a mining lease) of settled minerals which had been compulsorily acquired by a railway company. KAY, J., held that the whole of the lessor's proportion of the purchase money, amounting to only £136, should be paid to the tenant for life, on the ground, apparently, that the whole of the minerals in question might reasonably have been expected to have been worked out in the lifetime of the tenant for life. Re Barrington (4) was distinguished in Re Robinson (5), a case in which it was held that no apportionment could be made under the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, s. 74, of the proceeds of sale of the fee simple interest (not subject to any lease) in settled minerals compulsorily acquired by a railway company. CHITTY, J., said ([1891] 3 Ch. 132) :

That section [s. 74] does not apply to this case, because the subject-matter of this sale does not come within the definition of the interests dealt with by that section. It is not necessary, therefore, that I should make any observations on the decision in Re Barrington (4) beyond saying that I am satisfied that KAY, L.J., did not intend to depart from the meaning of the words in that section, and in the case before him he considered that the sum of £136 0s. 2d., being that part of the compensation which was allotted to the lessor, would fairly represent the value of the reversion in the minerals which the tenant for life could have gotten but for the purchase by the railway company. There are expressions in the judgment which were laid hold of by Mr. Butcher to show that the learned judge took a different view, but, in my opinion, the argument that was founded on these expressions cannot be maintained. If any apportionment had to be made, the right mode of ascertaining the amount of compensation payable to the tenant for life would be, to ascertain the number of years within which the minerals could be worked out. Say, for instance, twenty years; then to divide the compensation money into twenty parts, and give the tenant for life one of such parts every year. That mode of payment would exactly correspond with his rights in the minerals if the railway company had not intervened; but, as I have already said, the 74th section does not, in my opinion, apply to this case.

In Re Fullerton's Will (6) settled minerals, subject to mining leases, had been compulsorily acquired under a waterworks Act, which incorporated the provisions of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845. SWINFEN EADY, J., followed Re Robinson's Settlement Trusts (5) and declined to follow Re Barrington (4). He said ([1906] 2 Ch. 141) :

It is then urged that, if the lessees are not entitled to the money in their own right, it has at all events been made over to them by the life tenant, who is entitled to it under Re Barrington (4), seeing that the coal would probably have been worked out in his life; but the true principle of apportionment between life tenant and remainderman in these cases is that stated by CHITTY, J., in Re Robinson's Settlement Trusts (5). He says: "If any apportionment had to be made, the right mode of ascertaining the amount of compensation payable to the tenant for life would be, to ascertain the number of years within which the minerals could be worked out. Say, for instance, twenty years . . ."

and he reads the rest of the passage which I have already quoted from CHITTY, J.'s judgment. In view of these two later cases, I can only regard the decision in Re Barrington (4) as confined to the special circumstances of that particular case and not as laying down any general principle. Finally, Re Simpson (7) was an application by a tenant for life under s. 74 of the Settled Land Act, 1882, in respect of the proceeds of sale of a leasehold house which she had sold under her Settled Land Act powers. SWINFEN EADY, J., said ([1913] 1 Ch. 282) :

The widow, who sold the lease as equitable life tenant under the Settled Land Act, 1882, contends that under s. 34 she is entitled to have the purchase money applied in such manner as will give her the like benefit as she might lawfully have had from the lease. This has now eleven years to run, and if the widow had remained in possession till it ran out, she would have obtained the full benefit. As she is entitled to the like benefit under s. 34, she must be paid during her widowhood such an annuity as will exhaust the proceeds of sale, capital and income, in eleven years. If she outlives that term without remarrying, she will obtain all. Otherwise she will obtain a proportion during her widowhood, and the residuary legatees will take what remains. This is the basis adopted in Askew v. Woodhead (2) and it is not disputed.

Consideration of the Coal Act, 1938, sched. III, para. 21 (2), in the light of these authorities, leads me to conclude that the compensation received in respect of a given holding must be treated as a wasting asset with a life corresponding to the estimated life of the holding, and that, subject to the special direction against capitalisation of income in proviso (ii) to the paragraph, the capital and income of such compensation must be applied in such manner as to ensure, so far as possible, that each successive beneficiary receives year by year during the continuance of his interest a rateable proportion of the estimated royalty income which he would have received from the holding during the like period, the proportion, arrived at by a uniform abatement of each year's estimated royalty income throughout the estimated life of the holding, being so calculated as to exhaust the entire capital and income by the end of the estimated life of the holding. More specifically, I think that the requirements of para. 21 (2) will be satisfied by the following procedure. (i) Take the estimated life of the holding (as accepted by the valuation board concerned) as the period during which the capital and income of the compensation received in respect of the holding must be completely consumed. (ii) Assume that the holding would have produced, during each year of its estimated life, the estimated royalty income, if any, for that year (as accepted by the valuation board concerned). (iii) Estimate the yearly rate of interest which the compensation, or the balance of it from time to time remaining in hand, can be reasonably expected to produce during the period represented by the estimated life of the holding, and assume for the purposes of calculation that the rate of interest so estimated (which I will term "the conventional rate") will be uniformly maintained throughout that period. (iv) Calculate what abatement, uniformly applied to the estimated royalty income for every year, must be made in the estimated royalty income for each year in order to ensure that the capital and income of the compensation will exactly suffice to provide for the payment in each year of the appropriate abated amount (which I will term "the abated royalty equivalent") to the person for the time being entitled in possession under the settlement during the whole of the period represented by the estimated life of the holding, and will, by means of such payments, be completely exhausted by the end of that period, on the footing that (a) there will be no appreciation or depreciation in the value of the investments representing the compensation; (b) the compensation will produce uniformly throughout the period no less and no more than the conventional rate of interest; and (c) the person for the time being entitled in possession is to receive in respect of each year the income of the compensation for that year or the abated royalty equivalent, whichever is the greater, and the excess, if any, of the abated royalty equivalent for any year over the income of the compensation for that year (which I will term "the capital supplement") is to be provided out of capital. (v) The compensation having been duly invested within the range of investments authorised by para. 21 (5), pay the person for the time being entitled in possession the resulting income, together with the capital supplement, if any, for each year, and continue this process until the compensation is exhausted or the balance of it becomes vested in possession in some person or persons absolutely entitled under the settlement, whichever event first happens. In the present case it will obviously be the latter. For the purposes of apportionment on the death of a tenant for life, the capital supplement attributable to any year should, I think, be treated as accruing from day to day during that year. (vi) If a proportion of the royalty income derived from the holding in any year, had it remained subject to the settlement instead of being compulsorily acquired, would, in view of the Settled Land Act, 1925, s. 47, have been liable to be set aside as capital money arising under the settlement, the like proportion (in this case one-fourth) of the abated royalty equivalent for the same year must be similarly set aside, but, in view of the prohibition against the capitalisation of income contained in the proviso to para. 21 (2) (which I regard as exempting the income of the compensation from accumulation except in so far as there may be an obligation to accumulate by virtue of the actual limitations of the settlement itself in any particular case), not exceeding the amount, if any, of the capital supplement for that year. Any amounts so set aside and the future income thereof will, thenceforth, cease to be subject to the special provisions applicable to the capital and income respectively of the compensation.

There is in evidence a calculation on the lines indicated in (iv) above (but treating the aggregate amount of compensation received in respect of all the holdings as one entire fund) which has been made by an actuary for the purposes of the present case. I am told, and can well believe, that this calculation is a matter of considerable complication and difficulty. If similar calculations are made separately in relation to the compensation received in respect of each of the eight respective holdings, the amount of work involved will be correspondingly multiplied, but the plaintiff claims that this would be substantially to his advantage as tenant for life in possession and, as already indicated, I regard it as the interest experienced in actual practice. If the capital supplement were to consist of the excess, if any, of the abated royalty equivalent for each year over the actual income for that year, the tenant for life would be underpaid if the actual income exceeded the conventional rate of interest and overpaid if the actual income fell short of the conventional rate of interest. Accordingly, I think that the capital supplement, if any, for each year must be fixed once and for all by reference to the conventional rate of interest. Thus, if the income actually earned is in excess of the conventional rate, the tenant for life will nevertheless receive, in addition to the actual income, the full amount of the capital supplement computed as if the income had been at the conventional rate only. Conversely, if the income actually earned is less than the conventional rate, the tenant for life will, nevertheless, receive by way of addition to the actual income no more than the amount of the capital supplement computed as if the conventional rate of interest had, in fact, been realised. I appreciate that this involves a slight departure from the theoretical perfection of the calculation as between tenant for life and remaindermen, but the calculation itself is only right if the actual rate of interest precisely accords with the conventional rate.

There remains the possibility of appreciation or depreciation in the investments representing the compensation. I can suggest no feasible method of providing for this and, therefore, think it must be accepted that the person or persons ultimately entitled must take their chance of gain or loss on this account according to the event. In any case, it may be said that this element of uncertainty is as nothing compared with the uncertainties in which the estimates concerning the life and productivity of the various holdings are inevitably involved.

formula necessarily produces the right result. In particular, bearing in mind the right of the person for the time being entitled in possession to receive the whole of the income accrued by the compensation, even in years wholly unproductive in terms of estimated income, it seems to me that the effect of fixing the proportion by reference to the present value of each year's estimated royalty income, on the basis of accumulation at the assumed rate of interest throughout the period from the vesting date to the year in question, might be unduly favourable to the tenant for life, inasmuch as the compensation would not be similarly accumulating for the purpose of meeting the proportion so fixed.

As regards the rate of interest to be assumed, I think that it should be 3 per cent. rather than 4 per cent. Mr. Winterbotham pointed out, and I agree, that 4 per cent. is still the rate applied by the court for the purpose of adjusting rights, for example, under the rule in Howe v. Lord Dartmouth (2), and he cited the recent case of Re Parry, Brown v. Parry (3). It seems to me, however, that the problem here confronting the court is more nearly analogous to the question which arises in cases under the Inheritance (Family Provision) Act, 1938, in regard to the estimation of the annual income of the net estate, which is defined by s. 5 (1) as "the income that the net estate might be expected at the date of the order, when realised, to yield in a year." The practice in such cases has, I think, generally been to assume a yield of 3 per cent. rather than 4 per cent. on the realised value of the net estate, and I think that for the present purpose also the more conservative estimate is to be preferred.

Mr. Wolfe's calculation is attractively simple. His suggestion is that the tenant for life should receive the whole income, plus a yearly payment out of capital bearing the same proportion to the estimated royalty income for the year as the amount of the compensation bears to the aggregate amount of the estimated royalty income for the whole period of the estimated life of the holding. This formula seems to me to be open to objection as unduly favourable to the tenant for life, since the income produced by the fund of compensation, which on this basis is left entirely out of account, must obviously become progressively smaller as the capital of the fund is consumed. Possibly some form of adjustment to meet this objection might be devised, but it does seem to me to be an objection of some substance to Mr. Wolfe's formula as it now stands. Accordingly, I am not prepared to accept either of the formulae proposed by Mr. Winterbotham and Mr. Wolfe, unless I can be satisfied by evidence, showing the results which would be produced by its application to the actual periods and figures involved in this case, that those results would give substantial effect to the requirements of para. 21 (2), according to the construction which I have placed on that paragraph in the Duke of Leeds case (1).

Solicitors: Ridsdale & Son, agents for Shipton, Halliwell & Co., Chesterfield (for the trustees); Ponsford & Devenish; C. R. Enever & Co.; Farrer & Co (for the beneficiaries); The Solicitor, National Coal Board.

[Reported by R. D. H. OSBORNE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

- I have now stated what appears to me to be a method—I do not say the only possible method—of giving effect to the requirements of para. 21 (2) and I think the method, which I have stated substantially accords with the submissions made to me at the hearing. The arrangements I have indicated must be treated as taking effect as from the vesting date, i.e., July 1, 1942, and the plaintiff as tenant for life in possession is, accordingly, entitled to immediate payment of the interest and income allowed on or earned by the compensation since that date,
- A together with the amount of such capital supplements as have accrued due since that date. I was asked to go further and, having, as it were, quantified the plaintiff's interest substantially as indicated, to direct an immediate payment to him out of the capital of the compensation, in commutation and satisfaction of all capital supplements accruing during the residue of his life, and it was strenuously contended that this course was authorised, if not enjoined, by para. 21 (2). The arguments advanced in support of this contention were, I think,
- B substantially to the following effect. (a) The proportion of the valuation, and consequently of the compensation, attributable to the earlier years in the estimated life of each holding, and, in particular, the years falling within the probable duration of the plaintiff's interest, was, relatively, far higher than the proportion attributable to the later years. I think that this is clearly so, as will be seen from what I have already said about the method of valuation. (b) The increasing
- C risk of failure to realise the estimated royalty income in the later as compared with the earlier years, recognised in the valuations, is not reflected in the method of disposal of the compensation stated above. (c) Inasmuch as the valuations allowed for income tax on the estimated royalty income and the plaintiff will be liable for tax on the abated royalty equivalent, the result of the method of disposal stated above will, in effect, be to make his interest suffer a two-fold diminution on account of tax. (d) The plaintiff could have sold his life
- D interest in the holdings at a price substantially in excess of the value of what he will get from the compensation moneys under the method of disposal stated above, while the proportion of the compensation moneys which, according to this method, will go to the persons ultimately becoming entitled to the absolute interest in remainder will be disproportionately large, both in relation to the provision made for the plaintiff and in relation to the present value of their future interest in this speculative asset.
- E I cannot regard these arguments as supporting the conclusion contended for. The subject-matter as regards each holding of the compulsory acquisition was, I think, quite clearly the entire freehold interest constituting the holding, and the valuation was made and the compensation paid simply in respect of that absolute interest. That being so, I think the steps taken in arriving at the value—the discounting of the estimated royalty income more heavily in later than in earlier
- F years, the allowance for tax, the increasing scale of risk allowance and so on—are wholly immaterial for the purposes of para. 21 (2). Different considerations would, no doubt, apply if the transaction had involved the separate acquisition for separate sums of compensation of the plaintiff's life interest in possession, on the one hand, and the interests in remainder, on the other, but that was not the case. The compensation, however arrived at and whatever its amount, must, in my judgment, simply be regarded as representing and as substituted
- G for the freehold interest constituting the holding formerly subject to the settlement. The compensation thus substituted is required by para. 21 (2) to be dealt with so as to “give to the beneficiaries under the settlement the like benefit therefrom as they might lawfully have had” from the freehold interest in the holding formerly subject to the settlement “or as near thereto as may be.” This I take to mean, first, that the benefits which the successive beneficiaries would have received from the holding must be estimated on the footing that,
- H apart from the compulsory acquisition, the holding would have remained subject to the settlement and the royalty income would have been applied in accordance with the limitations of the settlement, and, secondly, that the compensation must be applied in providing those beneficiaries with successive interests of a character and amount as nearly similar as may be. This seems to me to point clearly to disposal on the lines I have indicated and definitely to rule out the proposal I am now considering, as giving the plaintiff a benefit radically differing in kind from any benefit which he could lawfully have received from the holding as tenant for life under the settlement. The fact that, apart from the compulsory acquisition, he could have sold his life interest in the holding for a substantially larger sum than is represented by his interest in the compensation under the method of disposal I have indicated seems to me wholly irrelevant. The proceeds of such a sale would have been a benefit derived from the purchaser and not under the settlement. Moreover, the persons ultimately entitled in remainder under the settlement would still have been left with the full benefit of the absolute interest in the holding on its falling into possession so far as then remaining unrevoked. It is, of course, still open to the plaintiff to sell, if so minded, his abated life interest—if I may so describe it—in the compensation. I fully appreciate that such abated life interest, whether he retains or sells it, is of substantially less value to him than the interest he previously had in the holding under the limitations of the settlement, but I do not see how he can be given anything more, consistently with giving due effect to the interests of the persons interested in remainder. Nor do I see how para. 21 (2) can be construed as authorising the commutation, by means of an immediate capital payment, of his prospective right to the capital supplements accruing during his life by way of solatium for the fact that his abated life interest is of substantially less value than the interest which it replaces.

In view of the unanimity of all parties in supporting the plaintiff's contention, I suggested the possibility of authorising the proposed commutation by way of compromise, if it could truly be shown to be for the benefit of all infant or unborn or unascertained persons interested or possibly interested under the settlement. It appeared, however, that this suggestion was not acceptable, and I was asked to decide the point one way or the other as a matter of construction of the Coal Act, 1938, and, in particular, sched. III, para. 21 (2). This I have, accordingly, done. My decision against the plaintiff's contention as a matter of legal right does not, of course, rule out the possibility of giving effect to it as a compromise or arrangement if shown to the satisfaction of the court to fulfil the condition mentioned above.

There remains the question of costs. The Coal Act, 1938, sched. III, pt. IV, para. 22 (1), as amended by the Coal Act, 1943, s. 13, provides :

Subject to the provisions of this paragraph and of s. 39 of this Act, the Commission [now the National Coal Board] shall pay the costs reasonably incurred by any person . . . (c) in a case in which the compensation is paid otherwise than as aforesaid, in connection with any application to the court that may be requisite for the purpose of determining the manner in which the compensation ought to be held and disposed of.

Counsel for the National Coal Board agreed that this provision was applicable to the costs of the present proceedings. Accordingly, the costs reasonably incurred by all parties other than the National Coal Board in connection with these proceedings, up to and including this judgment, will be taxed and paid by the National Coal Board, and the costs of any party (other than the National Coal Board), up to and including this judgment, so far as not included in the costs to be paid by the National Coal Board as aforesaid, will be taxed as between solicitor and client and paid out of the compensation. I was asked to give a special direction as to the inclusion in the costs forming the subject of the second above mentioned taxation of the costs of all expert evidence or advice obtained in relation to the matters in question, although not ultimately used, and, in view of the complication and difficulty of the calculations involved, I think that this is a direction which I can properly give.

Declaration accordingly.

Solicitors : Lowe & Co. (for all parties other than the National Coal Board) ;
The Solicitor, National Coal Board.

[Reported by R. D. H. OSBORNE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

NATIONAL ANTI-VIVISECTION SOCIETY v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS

[HOUSE OF LORDS (Viscount Simon, Lord Wright, Lord Porter, Lord Simonds and Lord Normand), February 25, 27, 28, March 3, 4, July 2, 1947.]

A Income Tax—Exemption—Charity—“Established for charitable purposes only”
—Anti-vivisection society—Income Tax Act, 1918 (c. 40), s. 37 (1) (b).

B The appellant society claimed exemption from income tax on the income of its investments on the ground that it was “a body of persons established for charitable purposes only” within the meaning of s. 37 (1) (b) of the Income Tax Act, 1918. The Special Commissioners were satisfied that the main object of the society was the total abolition of vivisection and, for that purpose, the repeal of the Cruelty to Animals Act, 1876, and the substitution of a new enactment prohibiting vivisection altogether. Had they not regarded themselves as precluded from so doing by authority (in particular Re Foveaux, Cross v. London Anti-Vivisection Society (1) ([1895] 2 Ch. 501)), the commissioners would have held, on the evidence that any public benefit in the advancement of morals and education which would result if the society achieved its object would be far outweighed
C by the detriment to medical science and research, and, consequently, to the public health which would result, and that, on balance, the object of the society, so far from being for the public benefit, was gravely injurious thereto, with the result that the society could not be regarded as a charity :—

D HELD : (i) (LORD PORTER dissenting) in determining whether the object of the society was charitable, the overriding test was whether it was for the public benefit, and that question was to be answered by the court by forming an opinion on the evidence before it and weighing injury to the community against the ostensible charitable purpose of the society, and so, having regard, as the court should, to the finding of the commissioners that on balance the object of the society was detrimental to the public benefit, there could be no justification for saying that it was a charitable object.

E Re Foveaux, Cross v. London Anti-Vivisection Society ([1895] 2 Ch.
501) overruled.

Re Hummeltenberg, Beatty v. London Spiritualistic Alliance ([1923]
1 Ch. 237) approved.

(ii) (LORD PORTER dissenting) a main object of the society was political, (viz., the repeal of the Act of 1876), and for that reason also the society was not established for charitable purposes only and was not entitled to exemption from tax under the section.

F Per LORD SIMONDS : A purpose regarded in one age as charitable may in another be regarded differently, but this is not to say that a charitable trust, when it has once been established, can ever fail. If, by a change in social habits and needs, or, it may be, by a change in the law, the purpose of an established charity becomes superfluous or even illegal, or if, with increasing knowledge, it appears that a purpose once thought beneficial is truly detrimental to the community, it is the duty of trustees of an G established charity to apply to the court, or, in suitable cases, to the Charity Commissioners, or, in educational charities, to the Minister of Education, and ask that a cy-pres scheme may be established. There might be cases in which the Attorney-General would think it his duty to intervene to that end. A charity once established does not die, though its nature may be changed.

H Decision of the Court of Appeal, [1946] 1 All E.R. 205, affirmed.

[AS TO CHARITABLE PURPOSES, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 4, pp. 111-
127, paras. 147-168; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 8, pp. 241-265; Nos. 1-272.]

Cases referred to :

(1) Re Foveaux, Cross v. London Anti-Vivisection Society, [1895] 2 Ch. 501; 64
L.J.Ch. 856; 73 L.T. 202; 8 Digest 259, 206.

(2) Morice v. Durham (Bp.), (1805), 10 Ves. 522; 8 Digest 293, 705.

(3) Income Tax Special Purposes Comrs. v. Pensel, [1891] A.C. 531; 61 L.J.Q.B.
265; 65 L.T. 621; 55 J.P. 805; 3 Tax Cas. 53; 8 Digest 241, 1.

- (4) A.-G. v. National Provincial and Union Bank of England, [1924] A.C. 262; sub nom. Re Tetley, A.-G. v. National Provincial and Union Bank of England, 93 L.J. Ch. 231; 131 L.T. 34; Digest Supp.; affg. S.C. sub nom. Re Tetley, National Provincial and Union Bank of England, Ltd. v. Tetley, [1923] 1 Ch. 258.
- (5) Re Macduff, Macduff v. Macduff, [1896] 2 Ch. 451; 65 L.J. Ch. 700; 74 L.T. 706; 8 Digest 296, 731.
- (6) Chichester Diocesan Fund and Board of Finance (Incorporated) v. Simpson, [1944] 2 All E.R. 60; [1944] A.C. 341; 113 L.J. Ch. 225; 171 L.T. 141; Digest Supp. A
- (7) Bowman v. Secular Society, Ltd., [1917] A.C. 406; 86 L.J. Ch. 568; 117 L.T. 161; 8 Digest 265, 270.
- (8) Re Hummeltenberg, Beatty v. London Spiritualistic Alliance, [1923] 1 Ch. 237; 92 L.J. Ch. 326; 129 L.T. 124; Digest Supp.
- (9) Re Cranston, Webb v. Oldfield, [1898] 1 I.R. 431; 8 Digest 259, 214i.
- (10) Re Grove-Grady, Plowden v. Lawrence, [1929] 1 Ch. 557; 98 L.J. Ch. 261; 140 L.T. 659; Digest Supp.; C.A.; varied on appeal, sub nom. A.-G. v. Plowden, [1931] W.N. 89, H.L. B
- (11) Re Wedgewood, Allen v. Wedgewood, [1915] 1 Ch. 113; 84 L.J. Ch. 107; 112 L.T. 66; 8 Digest 259, 208.
- (12) London University v. Yarrow, (1857), 1 De. G. & J. 72; 26 L.J. Ch. 430; 29 L.T.O.S. 172; 21 J.P. 596; 8 Digest 258, 200.
- (13) Bourne v. Keane, [1919] A.C. 815; 89 L.J. Ch. 17; 121 L.T. 426; 8 Digest 250, 106. C
- (14) Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Temperance Council of Christian Churches of England and Wales, (1926), 136 L.T. 27; 10 Tax Cas. 748; Digest Supp.
- (15) Re Hood, Public Trustee v. Hood, [1931] 1 Ch. 240; 100 L.J. Ch. 115; 143 L.T. 691; Digest Supp.
- (16) De Themmines v. De Bonneval, (1828), 5 Russ. 288; 7 L.J.O.S. Ch. 35; 8 Digest 265, 268.
- (17) Re Douglas, Obert v. Barrow, (1887), 35 Ch. D. 472; 56 L.J. Ch. 913; 56 L.T. 786; 8 Digest 258, 205. D
- (18) A.-G. v. Marchant, (1866), L.R. 3 Eq. 424; 36 L.J. Ch. 47; 8 Digest 330, 1128.
- (19) Re Campden Charities, (1881), 18 Ch.D. 310; 50 L.J. Ch. 646; 45 L.T. 152; 8 Digest 343, 1359.
- (20) Thornton v. Howe, (1862), 31 Beav. 14; 31 L.J. Ch. 767; 6 L.T. 525; 26 J.P. 774; 8 Digest 250, 96.
- (21) Re Villiers-Wilkes, Bower v. Goodman, (1895), 72 L.T. 323; 8 Digest 351, 1458.
- (22) Da Costa v. De Pas, (1754), Amb. 228; Dick. 258; sub nom. De Costa v. De Pas, 2 Swan 487, n; 8 Digest 253, 141. E
- (23) Cary v. Abbot, (1802), 7 Ves. 490; 8 Digest 252, 133.
- (24) Marsh v. Means, (1857), 30 L.T.O.S. 89; 21 J.P. 725; 8 Digest 312, 933.
- (25) A.-G. v. Windsor (Dean and Canons), (1860), 8 H.L. Cas. 369; 30 L.J. Ch. 529; 2 L.T. 578; 24 J.P. 467.
- (26) Williams (Sir H. J.) Trusts, Trustees v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1947] 1 All E.R. 513.
- (27) Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Falkirk Temperance Cafe Trust, 1927 S.C. 261; 11 Tax Cas. 353; Digest Supp. F

APPEAL by the society from a decision of the Court of Appeal (MACKINNON and TUCKER, L.J.J., LORD GREENE, M.R., dissenting), dated Dec. 20, 1945, and reported [1946] 1 All E.R. 205.

The Special Commissioners, regarding themselves as bound by authority, in particular Re Foveaux (1), held that the society was "a body of persons established for charitable purposes only" within the meaning of s. 37 of the Income Tax Act, 1918, and, therefore, entitled to exemption from income tax on the income of its investments. On appeal by the Commissioners of Inland Revenue, MACNAGHTEN, J., reversed that decision, [1945] 2 All E.R. 529, and his judgment was upheld by the majority of the Court of Appeal. G

The society appealed to the House of Lords who, also by a majority, dismissed their appeal. H

Frederick Grant, K.C., Sir Valentine Holmes, K.C., and Senter for the society.

The Attorney-General (Sir Hartley Shawcross, K.C.), David Jenkins, K.C., J. H. Stamp and Reginald P. Hills for the Crown.

The House took time for consideration.

VISCOUNT SIMON: My Lords, in this very important and most difficult case, going as it does to the foundations of the conception of one kind of charitable trust, I have read and re-read the opinion which has been prepared by LORD SIMONDS. Notwithstanding views to a different effect which are to be found in the minority judgment of LORD GREENE, M.R., in the Court of Appeal, and in another opinion about to be pronounced in this House, I cannot escape from the course of argument contained in LORD SIMONDS' opinion, or from the conclusion at which he arrives. I, therefore, move that this appeal be dismissed with costs.

A LORD WRIGHT: My Lords, the issue in this case is whether the appellant society is entitled to exemption from income tax under s. 37 of the Income Tax Act, 1918, on the ground that it is a body established for charitable purposes only. The year of charge is the year ending Apr. 5, 1943, and the subject is the society's invested income aggregating £2,876 15s. 7d. The Special Commissioners before whom the matter came felt bound to allow the claim on the authority of Re Foveaux (1), in which CHITTY, J., had held that the society was a charity, though they would, apart from authority, have held that on balance the object of the society, so far from being for the public benefit, was gravely injurious thereto, and, therefore, that the society could not be regarded as a charity. They also, on the ground of the same authority, rejected the argument that the society could not claim to be a charity because the alteration of the law by means of legislation was a main object of the society. That decision was reversed by MACNAGHTEN, J., and his decision was affirmed on appeal by the Court of Appeal, by a majority, LORD GREENE, M.R., dissenting.

B The commissioners heard a great deal of evidence and their material conclusions in the Case they stated were :

C We are satisfied that the main object of the society is the total abolition of vivisection, including, in that term, all experiments on living animals, whether calculated to inflict pain or not, and (for that purpose) the repeal of the Cruelty to Animals Act, 1876, and the substitution of a new enactment prohibiting vivisection altogether . . . We think it has been conclusively proved that :—(a) a large amount of present day medical and scientific knowledge is due to experiments on living animals ; (b) many valuable cures for, and preventatives of, disease have been perfected by means of experiments on living animals, and much suffering both to human beings and to animals has been either prevented or alleviated thereby. We are satisfied if experiments on living animals were to be forbidden (i.e., if vivisection were abolished) a very serious obstacle would be placed in the way of obtaining further medical and scientific knowledge calculated to be of benefit to the public.

D They were also prepared, if it was to be assumed that any public benefit in the direction of the advancement of morals and education amongst men would or might result from the society's efforts to abolish vivisection, of which they had no express evidence, and if their function was to determine the case on the footing of weighing an assumed public benefit in the direction of the advancement of morals amongst men, which could, or might, result from the society's efforts to abolish vivisection, to hold, on the evidence, that any such assumed public benefit was far outweighed by the detriment to medical science and research, and, consequently, to the public health, that would result if the society succeeded in its object, and that on balance the object of the society, so far from being for the public benefit, was gravely injurious thereto, with the result that the society could not be regarded as a charity.

E I think the first thing to examine is whether Re Foveaux (1) was rightly decided and whether the commissioners were justified in regarding themselves as bound by the authority. Before examining Re Foveaux (1) it will be convenient to bear in mind, what is now generally accepted, that the decision that a gift or fund is charitable is a matter for the decision of the court on all the materials before it. "Charitable" in this context has reference to charitable in the legal sense. Charity indeed is here a word of art of precise and technical meaning. From very early times the decision was the function of the court. Thus, rules grew around the very sketchy list in the Statute of Elizabeth (43 Eliz., c. 4). Judicial precedents were established. An early attempt to simplify the problem by a classification under main heads was the summary under four heads submitted by SIR SAMUEL ROMILLY (then MR. ROMILLY) arguing in Morice v. Bishop of Durham (2) (10 Ves. 532). These heads were, first, relief of the indigent, second, advancement of learning, third, the advancement of religion, fourth, which is the most difficult, the advancement of objects of general public utility. This classification substantially was adopted by LORD MACNAGHTEN about 85 years later in his famous list of charitable purposes in Pemsel's case (3) ([1891] A.C. 583), which is too familiar to call for quotation here. LORD MACNAGHTEN had emphasised that he was discussing the legal meaning of charity; like SIR SAMUEL ROMILLY he remarked on the distinction between the popular and the legal meaning of the word. It is not necessary at this time of day, to observe that not every object which is beneficial to the community can be regarded as charitable. The legal significance is narrower than the popular. This was fully and explicitly held by this House in A.-G. v. National Provincial Bank (4), which followed Re Macduff (5), and was discussed more recently, but more in relation to the construction of general words than to specific instances, in Chichester Diocesan Fund v. Simpson (6). Even if the object were in some sense beneficial to the community, it would still be necessary to discover that it fell within the spirit and intendment of the instances given in the Statute of Elizabeth. Healthy and manly sports are certainly in fact beneficial to the public, but apart from special concomitants are not generally entitled to qualify as charitable objects. On the other hand, societies or institutes for scientific research would generally be charities, as being for the benefit of mankind under the fourth head, or, alternatively, as falling within the extended significance given to education or the advancement of learning which includes, in modern times, science. Even societies coming within the first three heads of LORD MACNAGHTEN'S classification would not be entitled to rank as legal charities if it was seen that their objects were not for the public benefit. Where a society has a religious object it may fail to satisfy the test if it is unlawful, and the test may vary from generation to generation as the law successively grows more tolerant. LORD PARKER in Bowman v. Secular Society (7) ([1917] A.C. 448, seq.), gives a long list illustrating this principle. It cannot be for the public benefit to favour trusts for objects contrary to the law. Again eleemosynary trusts may, as economic ideas and conditions and ideas of social service change, cease to be regarded as being for the benefit of the community, and trusts for the advancement of learning or education may fail to secure a place as charities, if it is seen that the learning or education is not of public value. The test of benefit to the community goes through the whole of LORD MACNAGHTEN'S classification, though, as regards the first three heads, it may be prima facie assumed unless the contrary appears.

Re Foveaux (1) was decided in 1895 by CHITTY, J. The headnote ([1895] 2 Ch. 501), is simply:

Societies for the suppression and abolition of vivisection are charities within the legal definition of the term "charity."

The particular societies in question were either the predecessors of the present society or were substantially identical for all relevant purposes. The object as stated by CHITTY, J. (ibid., 503) was the total suppression of the practice of vivisection. At the time when the decision was given an Act entitled the Cruelty to Animals Act, 1876, was in force. That Act made it unlawful and an offence to perform on a living animal any experiment calculated to give pain except subject to the restrictions imposed by the Act. One provision was that the particular experiment was to be performed with a view to the advancement by new discovery of physiological knowledge or of knowledge which will be useful for saving or prolonging life or alleviating suffering. It was generally required by the Act that the animal should be under a sufficient anaesthetic save in special circumstances in which case a certificate was necessary under stringent conditions and experimenters were to hold a licence. This Act has remained in force since then. Its repeal is the main object of the present society. CHITTY, J., (ibid., 504) refers to the Act as being the subject of controversy between the supporters and opponents of the practice of vivisection. The former, he said, argue that the practice under carefully guarded provisions is justifiable because it tends to promote the welfare of the human race and even animals. The latter argue that the practice is really unjustifiable. The judge seemed disposed to regard the issue as depending on how the element of the improvement of morality was to be considered, but he had already accepted the position that the court does not enter into or pronounce any opinion on the merits of the controversy between the two sides. Though he knew of the report of the Royal Commission on Vivisection, the court, he said, "stands neutral" (ibid., 503). Later in his judgment he said that the intention is to benefit the community: whether, if they achieved their object, the community would, in fact, be benefited is a question on which the court is not required to express an opinion (ibid., 507). Whatever else is clear, it is, I think, clear that the question he is proposing involves the balancing of utilities. I cannot understand how the judge could avoid deciding the very question necessary for his decision, viz., whether the society satisfies the fourth head, as being beneficial to the community. That I think is the test he proposes. He questions if the infliction of pain is necessarily cruelty. It may be justifiable, he concedes, but that, he thinks, is a question of morals on which men's minds may differ (ibid.). But he seems to conclude the matter by holding that the intention of the creator of the trust is to benefit the community. That he treats as decisive: he declines to determine whether the community would in fact be benefited.

This judgment has stood since it was delivered. Though it has not been reversed it has been severely criticised by a great authority, LORD RUSSELL OF KILLOWEN, though by way of dictum and not decision. There have also been other judicial pronouncements which may have to be considered. The earlier of the cases in which RUSSELL, J., as he then was, adverted to this question was Re Hummeltenberg (8); the matter in that judgment most material to the discussion of CHITTY, J.'s judgment is shortly expressed in the headnote ([1923] 1 Ch. 237):

The opinion of the donor of a gift or the creator of a trust that the gift or trust is for the public benefit does not make it so, the matter is one to be determined by the court on the evidence before it.

RUSSELL, J., at p. 242, rejected the contention on the lines of the views expressed in Re Cranston (9), and by CHITTY, J., in Re Foveaux (1). RUSSELL, J., clearly defined his opinion at p. 242:

If a testator by stating or indicating his view that a trust is beneficial to the public can establish that fact beyond question, trusts might be established in perpetuity for the promotion of all kinds of fantastic (though not unlawful) objects, of which the training of poodles to dance might be a mild example. In my opinion, the question whether a gift is or may be operative for the public benefit is a question to be answered by the court by forming an opinion upon the evidence before it.

I accept these observations as correctly stating the law. They were, in fact, adopted by the majority of the Court of Appeal in the next case I shall cite which is an "animal" case. It is Re Grove-Grady (10). It is sufficient here to record that the purpose of the society contemplated by the trust was the acquisition of land for the provision of refuges for the preservation of "all animals birds or other creatures not human." The principle of the decision was that there could not be a legal charitable trust unless its execution involved a benefit to the community. Hence, a trust for the benefit of animals would not merely on that ground be charitable. There must be a further element, in particular, that the discouragement of cruelty promotes humane sentiments in man towards the lower animals which involves moral benefit to the human community. RUSSELL, L.J., as he then was, reiterated ([1929] 1 Ch. 588) the proposition that:

... the court must determine in each case whether the trusts are such that benefit to the community must necessarily result from their execution.

He added significant words:

The authorities have, in my opinion, reached the furthest admissible point of benevolence in construing, as charitable, gifts in favour of animals, and for myself, I am not prepared to go any further.

The same warning had been uttered by LORD STERNDALE, M.R., in Re Tetley (4). He said ([1923] 1 Ch. 266):

I confess I find considerable difficulty in understanding the exact reason why a gift for the benefit of animals, and for the prevention of cruelty to animals generally, should be a good charitable gift, while a gift for philanthropic purposes, which, I take it, is for the benefit of mankind generally, should be bad as a charitable gift.

LORD STERNDALE, M.R., (ibid., 269) agreed with the principles stated by RUSSELL, J., (ibid., 261) which formed the basis of the decision of the Court of Appeal.

It is clear that Re Grove-Grady (10) was not inconsistent with the general view in favour of preventing cruelty to animals. The trust in that case did not protect the weaker animals from the cruelty of the stronger and more savage, because the idea of the testatrix was to provide a sanctuary in which animals might be free from the danger of being shot or trapped or otherwise maltreated by human beings, though left at liberty to indulge their natural instincts of inherent cruelty against each other. Re Wedgewood (11) was discussed in that case. The trust there was to apply the fund for the protection and benefit of animals. It was held to be valid on the ground that it was calculated to promote public morality by checking the innate tendency to cruelty. Much that was said in that case clearly went too far. The emphasis of the actual decision, however, was that the moral benefit to mankind consisted in promoting feelings of kindness towards animals and thus promoting feelings of humanity and morality generally; the limitation of the doctrine to animals useful to man which was prominent in the earlier of the animal cases, University of London v. Yarrow (12), was lost sight of or at least had fallen into the background in view of the wider and less specific doctrine of moral improvement, which was held to satisfy the requirement of benefit to the community under the fourth head of LORD MACNAGHTEN'S classification. It was held to be present in Re Wedgewood (11), but absent in Re Grove-Grady (10), but in neither case was it ignored.

I do not intend to make a complete anthology of the "animal" cases, but I must refer shortly to the most important of the Irish cases on gifts for the benefit of animals, viz., Re Cranston (9), a decision of the Irish Court of Appeal. There the bequest was in favour of a vegetarian society, whose purpose was to stop the killing of animals for food which was condemned as being inconsistent with the rights of animals and calculated to produce demoralising effects on men. The validity of the gift was upheld by the majority of the Irish Court of Appeal, largely for reasons taken to be derived from Re Foveaux (1), but a powerful dissenting judgment was delivered by HOLMES, L.J. ([1898] 1 I.R. 452). He was content, indeed, to distinguish Re Foveaux (1), but he demanded to know (ibid., 457) if a belief by the promoters in the utility of their project to eliminate the use of animal food could make it a charity in any sense which the law attaches to that term. "If so," he said, "every object not actually immoral or illegal must be held a charity." He enforced his opinion by giving instances of matters which might be conceived to be beneficent agencies by a few idealists or cranks.

The result so far has been that it is necessary for your Lordships to decide whether Re Foveaux (1) was rightly decided, or, perhaps more accurately, whether the commissioners were right in thinking that it governed the case before them. No doubt, CHITTY, J., had, in the report of the Royal Commission on Vivisection, which was before him, amply sufficient evidence of the utility of vivisection and hence of the mischief of any project aimed at making it unlawful, but it is not clear how far he had appreciated the full force of the evidence. The evidence now produced of the enormous advances in science and research which has been accepted by the commissioners in their findings of fact on the utility of vivisection is indeed such as no fair-minded man could refuse full credence. It is conclusive to my mind; besides the findings are binding on your Lordships. Re Foveaux (1) has been the subject of much discursive comment, but it has not been the subject of decision in this House until the present case. The fact that it has stood so long cannot bar this House from reversing it if your Lordships are satisfied that it is wrong. Bourne v. Keane (13) ([1919] A.C. 815), is sufficient authority as to the general powers of the House, or, as I should say, its duty. One of the most important aspects of the judicial functions of this House is to harmonise or correct the decisions of the lower courts, even though, as LORD BIRKENHEAD, L.C., said at p. 830, it would be "overruling decisions which have been treated as binding for generations."

In my opinion, Re Foveaux (1) was wrongly decided and should now be reversed. CHITTY, J., was wrong in taking the intention of the donor as a sufficient test that the gift was charitable. That is vital. He was wrong in holding that he could stand neutral and not decide, on the facts before him, the question whether the gift was for the public benefit. If he stood neutral, he could not decide in favour of one side and against the other side. He was inconsistent in holding that the gift was charitable while at the same time refusing to decide whether it was for the public benefit : unless he so decided in favour of the gift he could not decide that it was charitable. If he was not satisfied that the propaganda and expenditure for the suppression of vivisection were beneficial to the community, he could not hold that the activities of the society were charitable or that the society was entitled to exemption from income tax under s. 37 of the Income Tax Act, 1918, or to the benefit of a perpetuity. He was also wrong in deciding that he could not weigh against each other the detriment inseparable from suppressing vivisection, on the one hand, and, on the other hand, the benefit to the community of higher moral standards said to be due to enhanced regard for the well-being of animals. There is not, so far as I can see, any difficulty in weighing the relative value of what it called the material benefits of vivisection against the moral benefit which is alleged or assumed as possibly following from the success of the society's project. In any case the position must be judged as a whole. It is arbitrary and unreal to attempt to dissect the problem into what is said to be direct and what is said to be merely consequential. The whole complex of resulting circumstances of whatever kind must be foreseen or imagined in order to estimate whether the change advocated would, or would not be, beneficial to the community. The commissioners have abstained from any but the vaguest finding on the possibility of moral benefit. They had no evidence, they said, on the point, but, at the highest, the assumed or alleged benefit is indirect and problematical. There is clearly no general consensus of opinion or understanding against the practice of vivisection which has been permitted by Parliament as regulated under the Act of 1876. That Act has stood all these years substantially without any serious attack. It seems that people's moral feelings are not weakened nor their objections to cruelty to animals reduced by the existence of the Act. If they think about it at all they think of the immense and incalculable benefits which have resulted from vivisection. If that involves some measure of pain at times to some animals, notwithstanding the Act, they feel that it is due to a regrettable necessity. Similarly, a man who has a beefsteak for dinner, if he thinks at all about the slaughter of the beast, reflects that that is inevitable in the present constitution of society. I do not question that a high degree of regard for animals is a good thing, but it must be a regulated regard. Cruelty, that is purposeless cruelty, whether through brutality or through a purpose to satisfy our pleasure or our pride, cannot be forgiven. It is, indeed, also a penal offence at law, but it is impossible to apply the word cruelty to the efforts of high-minded scientists who have devoted themselves to vivisection experiments for the purpose of alleviating human suffering. HARVEY was only able to publish in 1628 his great work, De motu cordis, because he had been given deer from the Royal park for purposes of vivisection. Countless millions have benefited from that discovery. I do not minimise the sufferings of the unfortunate deer. The subject of vivisection is not a consenting party nor does it benefit, but I put against that the benefit to humanity. It has been argued that a court cannot weigh moral and material benefits against each other. This is not the place to accept or reject BENTHAM'S pronouncement that "measure for measure pushpin is as good as poetry," or debate whether utilitarian or intuitionist ethics is the truer theory, but in ordinary life people often have to decide between a moral and a material benefit. However, I do not think that is a fair statement of the issue. The scientist who inflicts pain in the course of vivisection is fulfilling a moral duty to mankind which is higher in degree than the moralist or sentimentalist who thinks only of the animals. Nor do I agree that animals ought not to be sacrificed to man when necessary. A strictly regulated amount of pain to some hundreds of animals may save and avert incalculable suffering to innumerable millions of mankind. I cannot doubt what the moral choice should be. There is only one single issue. I have great sympathy with much that LORD GREENE, M.R., has said in his powerful dissenting judgment. I have a great love for animals and some familiarity with certain classes. I am sorry that rabbits, a weak and an innocent but monstrously destructive race, should have to be destroyed in great numbers as they were and are being, to save our people from qualified starvation. I agree with the MASTER OF THE ROLLS that rats, beetles and other pests, if they have to be destroyed, should be destroyed with as little cruelty as possible, but destroyed they must be. The lives of animals at the best are precarious.

Millions have perished in the last frost. That is a regrettable necessity, but, however it is looked at, the life and happiness of human beings must be preferred to that of animals. Mankind, of whatever race or breed, is on a higher plane and a different level from even the highest of the animals who are our friends, helpers and companions. No one faced with the decision to choose between saving a man or an animal could hesitate to save the man.

I have turned for a while to considerations of fact because that is inevitable in balancing conflicting value. To my mind, the scale of the anti-vivisectionist mounts up and kicks the beam. A statesman is constantly weighing conflicting moral and material utilities. I must add that I have great doubt, even apart from the final argument which I shall advert to in a moment, that the object of abolishing vivisection can on any view be regarded as being in law a public charitable object. It is not analogous to any of the objects enumerated in the preamble to the Statute of Elizabeth. Its only claim to be admitted must rest on the fourth head. To get into that class it must be established that it is beneficial to the community. What it seems to do, however, is to destroy a source of enormous blessings to mankind. That is a positive and calamitous detriment of appalling magnitude. Nothing is offered by way of counterweight but a vague and problematical moral elevation. The law may well say that, quite apart from any question of balancing values, an assumed prospect, or possibility of gain so vague, intangible and remote cannot justly be treated as a benefit to humanity, and that the society cannot get into the class of charities at all unless it can establish that benefit. If it fails, it can still continue to carry on such lawful purposes as the members desire and its funds, exiguous as they are, permit. Apart from the "animal" cases I cannot find any precedent for such an object being held charitable. On the other hand, the vivisectionists, who are attacked, can fairly claim that their purpose is charitable and would generally be so recognised either under the fourth head of the accepted classification or under the head of advancement of learning. I think that the whole tendency of the concept of charity in a legal sense under the fourth head is towards tangible and objective benefits, and at least that approval by the common understanding of, enlightened opinion for the time being is necessary before an intangible benefit can be taken to constitute a sufficient benefit to the community to justify admission of the object into the fourth class. By this test the claim of the society would fail.

But there is another and essentially different ground on which, in my opinion, it must fail. That is because its object is to secure legislation to give legal effect to it. It is, in my opinion, a political purpose within the meaning of LORD PARKER's pronouncement in Bowman v. Secular Society, Ltd. (7) ([1917] A.C. 442). LORD PARKER was discussing in a different connection the same question of the true criterion for deciding if charitable gifts are for the benefit of the public in the legal sense. He was there referring to the objects enumerated in the memorandum of association of the Secular Society, Ltd. He said:

Now if your Lordships will refer for a moment to the society's memorandum of association you will find that none of its objects, except possibly the first, are charitable. The abolition of religious tests, the disestablishment of the Church, the secularisation of education, the alteration of the law touching religion or marriage, or the observation of the Sabbath, are purely political objects. Equity has always refused to recognise such objects as charitable. It is true that a gift to an association formed for their attainment may, if the association be unincorporated, be upheld as an absolute gift to its members, or, if the association be incorporated, as an absolute gift to the corporate body; but a trust for the attainment of political objects has always been held invalid, not because it is illegal, for everyone is at liberty to advocate or promote by any lawful means a change in the law, but because the court has no means of judging whether a proposed change in the law will or will not be for the public benefit, and therefore cannot say that a gift to secure the change is a charitable gift.

While I was preparing this part of my opinion LORD SIMONDS was kind enough to draw to my attention the passage which in due course your Lordships will hear quoted by him from a work of authority, TYSSON ON CHARITABLE BEQUESTS.* It is, I think, a very important contribution to this question. It appears to me to go to explain and justify LORD PARKER's opinion. I refer especially to TYSSON's words: "the law could not stultify itself by holding that it was for the public benefit that the law itself should be changed " and again : " Each court . . . must decide on the principle that the law is right as it stands." I am reminded of the words of a great common law judge who warned the courts against usurping the functions of the legislature. I regard the statements of LORD PARKER and TYSEN not as inconsistent, but as complementary.

vide* p. 232, 233 post.

In my opinion, the Crown's objection under this head is well founded. The commissioners held that :

. . . the alteration of the law by means of legislation is a main purpose of the society, but the repeal of the Act of Parliament [i.e., the Cruelty to Animals Act, 1876], was undoubtedly part of the society's object in 1895.

They, accordingly, felt bound to follow CHITTY, J., on this point as they had done on the first point. Your Lordships are not bound by the judgment of CHITTY, J., and I prefer the reasoning on the point of ROWLATT, J., in Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Temperance Council of Christian Churches of England and Wales (14). ROWLATT, J., held in respect of the respondent in that appeal that the purpose was, not charitable, but political within the meaning of the principle stated by LORD PARKER. He held that legislation occupied the greater part of the field in the description of the objects of the respondent. He held that any purpose of influencing legislation is a political purpose in this connection on the clear authorities, that the respondent's direct purpose was to effect changes in the law, and that was not a charitable purpose. He distinguished what he called the anti-vivisection cases (i.e., the cases which I have been discussing) on the ground that in them the alteration of the law was subsidiary and not a main purpose. While I agree with the decision of ROWLATT, J., I venture to think that he fell into error in distinguishing, as he did, the anti-vivisection cases, or, at least, that his assumed ground of distinction could not be applied in the present case.

The commissioners here held categorically, as already stated, that the repeal of the Cruelty to Animals Act, 1876, and the substitution of a new enactment prohibiting vivisection altogether was the main object of the society. I, accordingly, treat the judgment of ROWLATT, J., which I have just cited, as a precise authority from that very eminent judge to support my conclusion that, on this special ground, in addition to the others I have mentioned, the objects of the society were not charitable. ROWLATT, J.'s judgment was distinguished, but not disapproved, by LAWRENCE, L.J., in Re Hood (15). He said ([1931] 1 Ch. 252) :

. . . in that case the gift was not for the promotion of temperance generally, but was for the promotion of temperance mainly by political means . . .

These words, mutatis mutandis, can be applied aptly to the present case. The illustrations given by LORD PARKER in the passage quoted above show clearly what meaning he attached to the word "political." It was not limited to party political measures, but would cover activities directed to influence the legislature to change the law in order to promote or effect the views advocated by the society. Such a change would be in the same category as the instances given by LORD PARKER of what he regarded as political objects and would exclude the society from the category of charities. Its proposed object is of a public and very controversial character. The present capacity of the society is not great, but the possibilities of political agitation would be immensely increased if a few millionaires were to endow it with great financial resources. This conclusion does not in any way extend or affect the freedom of the society to promote their cause, which is lawful enough, by any legitimate or proper means, but it does prevent them from claiming the benefit of being immune from income tax, which would amount to receiving a subsidy from the State to that extent. LORD PARKER was, I think, merely enunciating a specific limitation on the extent of the legal definition of charitable trusts. There are in this case stronger grounds than LORD PARKER contemplated in his broader statement of principle for the court declining to say that a gift to secure the change is a charitable gift. I should dismiss the appeal.

LORD PORTER : My Lords, the question what is or is not a charity is always a difficult problem partly, I think, owing to the fact that the meaning now attributed to the word is derived from the preamble to the Act of Elizabeth, which, though the Act itself has been repealed, has been re-enacted and gives a kind of example of the class of matters then held to be charitable. From this beginning legal decisions have extended the meaning of the word to many matters which would not originally have been included. But the difficulty does not lie in the origin of the doctrine alone. It is, I think, inherent in the subject-matter under consideration. Whether any two persons would agree in all cases as to what "charity" should include is at least doubtful. It is not the law but the diversity of subjects which creates the difficulty. A step towards a closer definition was, however, reached in Pemsel's case (3) in LORD MACNAGHTEN's well-known speech dividing charitable objects into four classes, with the result that, at the present day, all claims to embrace an object under the head of a charity must assert that it comes within one of the four classes. In the present case the society claims to come under the fourth head. LORD MACNAGHTEN says ([1891] A.C. 583):

Charity in its legal sense comprises four principal divisions—trusts for the relief of poverty: trusts for the advancement of education: trusts for the advancement of religion: and trusts for other purposes beneficial to the community not falling under any of the preceding heads.

In this language it might well have been argued that trusts for any of the first three objects were charitable whether they were beneficial to the community or not, but that inclusion in the fourth class is only permissible if such benefit can be shown. I cannot, however, find that such a contention has been put forward. It was expressly repudiated by both sides in the present case and rejected by RUSSELL, J., in Hummeltenberg's case (8) ([1923] 1 Ch. 240). One must take it, therefore, that in whichever of the four classes the matter may fall, it cannot be a charity unless it is beneficial to the community or to some sufficiently defined portion of it.

The difficulties of the present case arise firstly in determining what is of benefit to the public and who is to determine that question, but a not less difficult, though perhaps less subtle, question is whether the objects of the society are political within the meaning of that word as used by LORD PARKER in Bowman's case (7) ([1917] A.C. 442). The facts are fully stated by LORD SIMONDS, and he quotes the material passages from the findings of the commissioners. In so far as those findings are for them and are determinative of the matter in issue, your Lordships are of course bound by their decision. The only questions, therefore, are (1) whether the finding of the commissioners that "the main object of the society is the total abolition of vivisection . . . and (for that purpose) the repeal of the Cruelty to Animals Act, 1876, and the substitution of a new enactment prohibiting vivisection altogether" amounts to a finding that the society's object is political in the sense in which that word is used when it is said that political objects are not charitable, and (2) whether the finding that "any assumed public benefit in the direction of morals and education is far outweighed by the detriment to medical science and research, and, consequently, to the public health, which would result if the society succeeded in achieving its object and that, on balance, the object of the society, so far from being for the public benefit, is gravely injurious thereto" is a finding of fact as a result of which your Lordships ought to hold that the objects of the society are not charitable.

My Lords, before dealing with the first question, I would desire to point out that, read strictly, the second finding would appear to contrast moral and educational advancement with the public health and so to contrast an ethical with a material benefit. It was, however, strenuously and, I think, successfully urged by the Crown that this was not an accurate summing up of the position. The object of curing human or even animal illness and suffering itself aims at a moral end and the question is not fairly stated as a conflict between material and moral benefits, but, as counsel for the society was prepared to accept, as a conflict between one ethical outlook and another. His point was not that the material must give place to the moral but that the commissioners or the court are not empowered to decide such a question. In the words of CHITTY, J., in Foveaux's case (1) ([1895] 2 Ch. 503) the court "stands neutral." The commissioners, against their own judgment, felt themselves bound to follow the opinion of CHITTY, J., in that case. MACNAGHTEN, J., however, and the majority of the Court of Appeal (the MASTER OF THE ROLLS dissenting) took a contrary view. In both cases the decision turned on the second point. Neither tribunal decided the first though it is obviously important and, as I understand, in the view of the majority of your Lordships, is determinative of the present case in favour of the Crown.

A 1. As LORD SIMONDS points out, it is curious how scanty the authority is for the proposition that political objects are not charitable, and the only case quoted by LORD PARKER in Bowman's case (7), viz., Re Themmines v. De Bonneval (16), turned upon public policy and not upon what, apart from that question, is or is not a charity. Moreover, the illustrations given by LORD PARKER ([1917] A.C. 442), of the political matters which he had in mind, "The abolition of religious tests, the disestablishment of the Church, the secularization of education, the alteration of the law touching religion or marriage, or the observation of the Sabbath," are, I think, primarily matters which could not be effected without an alteration of the law. The object in each case is to do away with a positive B injunction to which an end can only be put by repealing the law; an Act of Parliament is required in order to do so. An example may be taken from the first illustration given by LORD PARKER. No agreement come to by individuals or groups could dispense with the obligation of complying with the provisions of the Test Acts, whereas slavery or vivisection could be put an end to without disobedience to the law if all members of the community could be induced to desist from these practices. It is in the narrower sense in which I think the C phrase "purely political objects" is rightly used, i.e., as applicable to objects whose only means of attainment is a change in the law. I cannot accept the view that the anti-slavery campaign or the enactment of the Factory Acts or the abolition of the use of boy labour to sweep chimneys, would be charitable so long as the supporters of these objects had not in mind, or, at any rate, did not advocate, a change in the laws, but became political and, therefore, non-charitable, if they did so. To take such a view would to me be to neglect D substance for form. The object was to stop slavery or the use of boy chimney sweeps, and to ensure that certain minimum requirements were carried out in factories. All this could be done by common consent, though no doubt the only effective method would be to alter the law. But persuasion, not force, was a possible means of effecting the desired purpose. So, in the case of members of the society, a conceivable, though a very unlikely, way of effecting its purpose E would be to persuade mankind to cease from experiments on animals, and it is possible that its members would prefer success by that means, though I have no doubt they would frankly admit that they saw no possibility of such an event. They would not, however, be asking anyone to break the law by refraining from vivisection. Their primary object, as I see it, is to prevent animal suffering caused by vivisection, though a main method of effecting that end is to repeal the present Act and such repeal is in that sense a main object of the F society. As the commissioners say:

We are satisfied that the main object of the society is the total abolition of vivisection and (for that purpose) the repeal of the cruelty to Animals Act, 1876, and the substitution of a new enactment prohibiting vivisection altogether.

And again:

G We agree that the alteration of the law by means of legislation is a main purpose of the society.

In so far as the decision of ROWLATT, J., in Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Temperance Council (14) is inconsistent with this view, I do not agree with it, though a distinction might be made between that case and this inasmuch as there legislation is put in the forefront of the object of the council, and some support for this view may perhaps be gained from the decision in Re Hood (15). Moreover, as the commissioners point out, this point was as open and as valid in Re Foveaux (1) as in this case and yet it was never taken. For these reasons, which H perhaps differ a little from those presented by the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, I agree with his view upon this point and inasmuch as none of the other members of the court below dealt with it do not find myself at difference with any of their expressed views.

2. On the second point the Crown says that the object, if it is to be charitable, must, like any other charitable object, be for the benefit of the public; the commissioners have held that "on balance the object of the society, so far from being for the public benefit, is gravely injurious thereto": that that finding was one of fact and conclusive of the case as against the society. The society, on their part, maintain that trusts inculcating humanity towards animals are (as has frequently been held) for the public benefit and that it is not for the commissioners or a court to enter into what may be fine distinctions as to the question of the quantum of benefit as opposed to the disadvantages. The conflict, as I see it, is between the view held by CHITTY, J., in Re Foveaux (1) and the criticisms or suggested criticisms of that view to be found in the judgment of RUSSELL, J., as he then was, in Re Hummeltenberg (8), and the Court of Appeal of whom RUSSELL, L.J., formed one in Re Grove-Grady (10). Any observations of that learned judge, whether in the court of first instance or the Court of Appeal or in your Lordships' House, even though not strictly an essential part of his decision, could only be differed from with great diffidence and it is therefore necessary to consider their exact bearing in the cases in which they are found. One thing is certain and was not contested by counsel for the society—the intention of the donor in making the gift cannot affect the result. The question must be judged independently of his idea of what is or is not charitable, but, undoubtedly, as has been pointed out more than once, a gift for the protection of animals is prima facie at any rate a good charitable gift. It is enough in this connection to refer to the observations of SWINFEN-EADY, L.J., in Re Wedgewood (11) ([1915] 1 Ch. 122). Such a gift then being prima facie charitable must remain charitable unless its charitable nature is taken away because on the whole it does more harm than good in the eyes of some tribunal authorised to determine that question. CHITTY, J., as I understand him, said in Re Foveaux (1) ([1895] 2 Ch. 503) that that question was not one which the tribunal of fact was entitled to decide. The court or the commissioners, as the case may be, were authorised to determine whether the object was one of a class which was or had been held to be charitable, i.e., whether it was one of a class which prima facie benefited the public. After that the tribunal remained neutral. It was not for it, in a conflict of opposed opinions, to analyse further the beneficial or injurious results of the gift.

Foveaux's case (1) has more than once been quoted since its decision and apparently accepted without criticism, except in so far as LORD RUSSELL can be said to disapprove of it, and save for such qualifications of the acceptance of its doctrine as may have been implied in the earlier case of Re Douglas (17). In Re Wedgewood (11) it appears to have been accepted without comment by KENNEDY and SWINFEN-EADY, L.JJ., and LORD HANWORTH, M.R., cites it without criticism in Re Grove-Grady (10). Moreover, its principle does, I think, receive support from such a case as A.-G. v. Marchant (18). It is quite true that in that case KINDERSLEY, V.-C., refused to increase a gift of doles proportionately with the increase which he granted to a number of other charitable objects on the ground that doles, though for the relief of poverty, were harmful rather than beneficial, but he acted in this way only with regard to accretions to the original gifts on the ground that the court had a discretion, where the original gift has been unexpectedly augmented, to add or not to add to the sum originally given to any one of the different objects. The original gift itself presumably was just as harmful as the accretion would have been, but that portion of the dole he did not, and indeed it was not suggested that he could, touch. Re Campden Charities (19) also turned upon the discretion which the court was given of varying the objects of a charity, where, but only where, a scheme was settled cy-pres by the Charity Commissioners as a result of a complete change in the character of the neighbourhood and in the value of the gift. The judgment deprecated the giving and denied the benefit to be obtained from doles but nowhere said or attempted to say that to give them would not be a good charity. All it decided was that where the court was bound to administer the funds cy-pres it had a discretion as to the object to be included in the scheme and was under no obligation to perpetuate doles.

There remains for consideration LORD RUSSELL's two warnings. In Hummeltenberg's case (8) he was discussing the question whether the intention of the giver plays any part in making the object charitable or not, decides that it has no effect, and adds ([1923] 1 Ch. 242):

In my opinion the question whether a gift is or may be operative for the public benefit is a question to be answered by the court by forming an opinion upon the evidence before it.

It will be observed that the opinion which the court has to form is as to whether the gift is or may be for the benefit of the public, not as to whether on the balance of evidence the scale inclines one way or the other. If the latter were the true meaning I do not know why the words "or may be" were added. The phraseology is at least capable of the interpretation that the court has to determine whether the gift comes within the category of things beneficial to the public, not whether, on balance, the tribunal holds that the disadvantages attached to

- A it outweigh its benefits. Re Grove-Grady (10) was concerned with this very point, viz.: was the gift in question within that class which could be held to be a charity? The Court of Appeal differing from ROMER, J., held by a majority that it could not, because there was no benefit to the community in a devise to form a reserve for animals of all kinds, wild or tame, free from the interference of man and with no provision even for his observation of the result: see [1929] 1 Ch. 572. LORD HANWORTH, M.R. ([1929] 1 Ch. 572), after citing the language of RUSSELL, J., in Re Hummeltenberg (8) follows Re Wedgewood (11) in quoting the words of FITZGIBBON, L.J., in Re Cranston (9) ([1898] 1 I.R. 448):

Any gift which proceeds from a philanthropic or benevolent motive, and which is intended to benefit an appreciably important class of our fellow creatures (including, under decided cases, animals) and which will confer the supposed benefit without contravening law or morals will be "charitable."

- C He adopts the views of KENNEDY and SWINFEN-EADY, L.JJ., in the former case. The statement of FITZGIBBON, L.J., undoubtedly requires qualification in that it appears to make the intention of the donor the deciding factor and fails to point out that it is the stimulation of humane and generous sentiments in man and not the protection of animals per se which is important but this fact does not affect the view adopted by LORD HANWORTH, M.R. RUSSELL, L.J., however ([1929] 1 Ch. 582), contemplates the possibility of anti-vivisection societies being removed from the class of charities in the light, as he says, of later knowledge in regard to the benefits accruing to mankind from vivisection. In answer to this suggestion it is immaterial to consider the evidence which CHITTY, J., had before him in Re Foveaux (1), since the principle which he adopts is not that he is constrained by the evidence to hold the society charitable when he came to weigh the advantages of vivisection against the benefits to be obtained by a crusade against it. RUSSELL, L.J., on the contrary, appears
- E to take the view that the case for and against the benefits to be conferred is to be decided by some tribunal which shall determine whether the humane and generous sentiments exhibited in a desire to save animals from suffering may not be outweighed by the benefits conferred by inflicting it.

I find it difficult to accept the view that, once an object has been held to be included in the class of charities, it is then for the court to hear the evidence of witnesses on the one side and on the other as to whether it is in fact beneficial.

- F I can imagine the severest contest between two sets of witnesses in the case of a gift for a religious purpose, the one saying that it is most beneficial and the other that it is very harmful. Is the tribunal to make up its mind between these two views whether on balance the gift is beneficial to the community or not? Yet if the argument be that the tribunal is to make up its mind on the evidence called before it, I cannot see where it can stop short of determining the matter
- G on the ordinary principle upon which courts act in deciding upon a conflict of evidence, nor can I see any method of determining what preponderance of weight is to incline the scale sufficiently to one side or the other. This view is, I think, in accordance with the opinion of SIR JOHN ROMILLY, M.R., in Thornton v. Howe (20) (the Joanna Southcote case) when he says (inter alia) (31 Beav. 20):

- H . . . if the tendency were not immoral and although this court might consider the opinions sought to be propagated, foolish or even devoid of foundation, it would not, on that account . . . take it out of the class of legacies which are included in the general terms charitable bequests.

Undoubtedly the object must not be a mere fad or contrary to public policy, but no argument against the claim of the society was presented to your Lordships on either of these points, and fads can be dealt with by the method suggested by KENNEDY, L.J., in Re Wedgewood (11).

In my view, the object of this society is the protection of animals from the sufferings believed to be involved in vivisection; that object is, in accordance with the decisions in what may be called the animal cases, charitable and does not cease to be charitable, in spite of the finding of the commissioners that its success would be gravely injurious to the public benefit. For these reasons, which are substantially those expressed by LORD GREENE, M.R., as well as because I do not think the objects of the society are political in the sense which would prevent them being charitable, I should allow the appeal.

LORD SIMONDS: My Lords, the question raised in this appeal is whether the National Anti-Vivisection Society, which I will call "the society," is a body of persons established for charitable purposes only within the meaning of s. 37 of the Income Tax Act, 1918, and accordingly entitled to exemption from income tax upon the income of its investments. The Commissioners for the Special Purposes of the Income Tax Acts, thinking that they were bound by authority so to do, answered this question in the affirmative. From their decision the Commissioners of Inland Revenue appealed to MACNAGHTEN, J., who reversed it, holding that the society is not a body of persons established for charitable purposes only. His judgment was upheld by the Court of Appeal (MACKINNON and TUCKER, L.JJ., LORD GREENE, M.R. dissenting). Hence the appeal of the society to this House. I think that it is important to set out the decision contained in the Case stated by the commissioners. It is amply supported by the findings of fact which therein appear. The material parts of the decision are as follows :

The object of the society, as set out in its book of rules, is stated to be "to awaken the conscience of mankind to the iniquity of torturing animals for any purpose whatever ; to draw public attention to the impossibility of any adequate protection from torture being afforded to animals under the present law ; and so to lead the people of this country to call upon Parliament totally to suppress the practice of vivisection." An explanatory resolution was passed by the council of the society on Feb. 9, 1898, in the following terms :—"The council affirm that, while the demand for the total abolition of vivisection will ever remain the object of the National Anti-Vivisection Society, the society is not thereby precluded from making efforts in Parliament for lesser measures having for their object the saving of animals from scientific torture." The quotations set out above are taken from the book of rules of the society as reprinted in 1938. We are satisfied that the main object of the society is the total abolition of vivisection, including in that term all experiments on living animals, whether calculated to inflict pain or not, and (for that purpose) the repeal of the Cruelty to Animals Act, 1876, and the substitution of a new enactment prohibiting vivisection altogether. Dr. Fielding-Ould, in his evidence before us, suggested that there were some experiments on living animals to which the society did not object, and that the society was only opposed to such experiments as caused pain and suffering to the animals, but we find it difficult to reconcile this evidence with the statements contained in the literature produced by the society, or indeed with the speeches of Dr. Fielding-Ould, as reported in THE ANIMALS' DEFENDER, a paper of which he is the editor. We are satisfied that the members of the society are actuated by an intense love of animals, and that the work of the society is to a large extent directed towards the prevention of cruelty to animals. Part of its propaganda literature is directed towards inculcating a love of animals in the young. A number of very distinguished men were called as witnesses by the Crown with the object of proving the great benefits which had accrued to the public by reason of the medical and scientific knowledge which had been obtained through experiments on living animals. We think it has been proved conclusively that :—(a) a large amount of present day medical and scientific knowledge is due to experiments on living animals ; (b) many valuable cures for and preventatives of disease have been discovered and perfected by means of experiments on living animals, and much suffering both to human beings and to animals has been either prevented or alleviated thereby. We are satisfied that if experiments on living animals were to be forbidden (i.e., if vivisection were abolished) a very serious obstacle would be placed in the way of obtaining further medical and scientific knowledge calculated to be of benefit to the public. We were very impressed by the evidence of Major General Poole, Director of Pathology at the War Office, as to the great value of experiments on living animals in connection with the successful carrying on of the present war by the maintenance of the health of the troops and the avoidance or minimizing of many diseases to which soldiers in the field are particularly liable. There was no express evidence before us that any public benefit in the direction of the advancement of morals and education amongst men (or in any other direction) would or might result from the society's efforts to abolish vivisection, but if it must be assumed that some such benefit would or might so result, and if we conceived it to be our function to determine the case on the footing of weighing against that assumed benefit the evidence given before us, and of forming a conclusion whether, on balance, the object of the society was for the public benefit, we should hold, on that evidence, that any assumed public benefit in the direction of the advancement of morals and education was far outweighed by the detriment to medical science and research, and, consequently, to the public health, which would result if the society succeeded in achieving its object, and that, on balance, the object of the society, so far from being for the public benefit, was gravely injurious thereto, with the result that the society could not be regarded as a charity. But, upon the authorities, we regard ourselves as precluded from so holding.

- A The commissioners then referred to the authorities which it will be my task to examine and came to the conclusion which I have already stated. Before I refer to the cases and to the judgments in the courts below I will state the two questions which appear to me to be raised in this appeal. The first and shorter point is whether a main purpose of the society is of such a political character that the court cannot regard it as charitable. To this point little attention was directed in the courts below. It is mentioned only in the judgment of LORD GREENE, M.R. As will appear in the course of this opinion, it is worthy of more serious debate. The second point is fundamental. It is at the very root of the law of charity as administered by the Court of Chancery and its successor, the Chancery Division of the High Court of Justice. It is whether the court, for the purpose of determining whether the object of the society is charitable may disregard the finding of fact that "any assumed public benefit in the direction of the advancement of morals and education was far outweighed by the detriment to medical science and research, and, consequently, to the public health, which would result if the society succeeded in achieving its object, and that, on balance, the object of the society, so far from being for the public benefit, was gravely injurious thereto." The society says that the court must disregard this fact, arguing that "evidence of disadvantages or evils which would or might result from the stopping of vivisection is irrelevant and inadmissible."

My Lords, on the first point LORD GREENE, M.R., cites in his judgment ([1946] 1 All E.R. 214), a passage from the speech of LORD PARKER in Bowman v. Secular Society, Ltd. (7) ([1917] A.C. 442):

... a trust for the attainment of political objects has always been held invalid, not because it is illegal ... but because the court has no means of judging whether a proposed change in the law will or will not be for the public benefit ...

- E LORD PARKER is here considering the possibility of a valid charitable trust, and nothing else, and when he says "has always been held invalid" he means "has always been held not to be a valid charitable trust." The learned MASTER OF THE ROLLS found this authoritative statement upon a branch of the law, with which no one was more familiar than LORD PARKER, to be inapplicable to the present case for two reasons, first, because he felt difficulty in applying the words to "a change in the law which is in common parlance a 'non-political' question," and, secondly, because he thought they could not in any case apply when the desired legislation is "merely ancillary to the attainment of what is ex hypothesi a good charitable object." My Lords, if I may deal with this second reason first, I cannot agree that in this case an alteration in the law is merely ancillary to the attainment of a good charitable object. In a sense, no doubt, since legislation is not an end in itself, every law may be regarded as ancillary to the object which its provisions are intended to achieve. But that is not the sense in which it is said that a society has a political object. Here the finding of the commissioners is itself conclusive. "We are satisfied," they say, "that the main object of the society is the total abolition of vivisection . . . and (for that purpose) the repeal of the Cruelty to Animals Act, 1876, and the substitution of a new enactment prohibiting vivisection altogether." This is a finding that the main purpose of the society is the compulsory abolition of vivisection by Act of Parliament. What else can it mean? And how else can it be supposed that vivisection is to be abolished? Abolition and suppression are words that connote some form of compulsion. It can only be by Act of Parliament that that element can be supplied. Upon this point I must with respect differ both from LORD GREENE, M.R., and from CHITTY, J., whose decision in Re Foveaux (1), I shall later consider. Coming to the conclusion that it is a main object, if not the main object, of the society, to obtain an alteration of the law, I ask whether that can be a charitable object, even if its purposes might otherwise be regarded as charitable. My Lords, I see no reason for supposing that LORD PARKER, in the cited passage, used the expression "political objects" in any narrow sense or was confining it to objects of acute political controversy. On the contrary, he was, I think, propounding familiar doctrine, nowhere better stated than in a text book, which has long been regarded as of high authority, but appears not to have been cited for this purpose to the courts below (as it certainly was not to your Lordships), TYSSON ON CHARITABLE BEQUESTS. The passage which is at p. 176 [in the original 1898 ed.] is worth repeating at length:

It is a common practice for a number of individuals amongst us to form an association for promoting some change in the law, and it is worth our while to consider the effect of a gift to such an association. It is clear that such an association is not of a charitable nature. However desirable the change may really be, the law could not stultify itself by holding that it was for the public benefit that the law itself should be changed. Each court in deciding on the validity of a gift must decide on the principle that the law is right as it stands. On the other hand, such a gift could not be held void for illegality.

LORD PARKER uses slightly different language, but means the same thing, when he says that the court has no means of judging whether a proposed change in the law will or will not be for the public benefit. It is not for the court to judge and the court has no means of judging. The same question may be looked at from a slightly different angle. One of the tests, and a crucial test, whether a trust is charitable, lies in the competence of the court to control and reform it. I would remind your Lordships that it is the King as parens patriae who is the guardian of charity, and that it is the right and duty of his Attorney-General to intervene and inform the court, if the trustees of a charitable trust falls short of their duty. So too it is his duty to assist the court, if need be, in the formulation of a scheme for the execution of a charitable trust. But, my Lords, is it for a moment to be supposed that it is the function of the Attorney-General, on behalf of the Crown, to intervene and demand that a trust shall be established and administered by the court, the object of which is to alter the law in a manner highly prejudicial, as he and His Majesty's Government may think, to the welfare of the State? This very case would serve as an example, if upon the footing that it was a charitable trust it became the duty of the Attorney-General on account of its maladministration to intervene. There is, undoubtedly, a paucity of judicial authority on this point. It may fairly be said that De Themmines v. De Bonneval (16), to which LORD PARKER referred in Bowman's case (7), turned on the fact that the trust there in question was held to be against public policy. In Comrs. of Inland Revenue v. Temperance Council (14), the principle was clearly recognised by ROWLATT, J., as it was in Re Hood (15), ([1931] 1 Ch. 250, 252). But in truth the reason of the thing appears to me so clear that I neither expect nor require much authority. I conclude upon this part of the case that a main object of the society is political and for that reason the society is not established for charitable purposes only. I would only add that I would reserve my opinion upon the hypothetical example of a private enabling Act, which was suggested in the course of the argument. I do not regard Re Villers-Wilkes (21), as a decision that a legacy which had for its main purpose the passing of such an Act is charitable.

The second question raised in this appeal, which I have already tried to formulate, is of wider importance, and I must say at once that, I cannot reconcile it with my conception of a court of equity, that it should take under its care and administer a trust, however well-intentioned its creator, of which the consequence would be calamitous to the community.

I would not weary your Lordships with a historical excursion into the origin of the equitable jurisdiction in matters of charity, one of the "heads of equity" as LORD MACNAGHTEN called it in Pemsel's case (3), ([1891] A.C. 580). Undoubtedly the favour shown by the civil law to gifts in pious usus had some part in it. So too had the conception, to which I have already referred, that the King as parens patriae took under his special care charitable gifts as he took also infants and lunatics. But, whatever its origin, from the fact of its existence arose the necessity of definition, and so both before and after the Statute of 43 Elizabeth it became the duty of the Court of Chancery to determine what objects were and what were not charitable. I will refer to TYSEN again. He says at p. 5 :

One by one the question of the validity of such trusts was brought before the Court of Chancery . . . It considered only this : Having regard to all legislative enactments and general legal principles, is it or is it not for the public benefit that property should be devoted for ever to fulfilling the purpose named ? If the court considered that it was not for the public benefit, it held the trust altogether void . . .

The learned author proceeds to illustrate his statement by reference to various trusts which the court held to be invalid, as trusts to say masses for the donor's soul, to keep in repair a tomb outside a church, or to teach religious opinions for which penalties were inflicted by statute. The task of the court was in some degree simplified by the Statute of Elizabeth, which made it clear that at least the purposes enumerated in the preamble were charitable, but from the beginning it appears to have been assumed that the enumeration was not exhaustive, and that those purposes also were charitable which could be fairly regarded as within its spirit and intendment. This view enabled the court to extend its protection to a vast number of objects which appeared both to the charitable donor and to it to be for the benefit of the community. Nowhere, perhaps, did the favour shown by the law to charities exhibit itself more clearly than in the development of the doctrine of general charitable intention, under which the court, finding in a bequest (often, as I humbly think, on a flimsy pretext) a general charitable intention, disregarded the fact that the named object was against the policy of the law and applied the bequest to some other charitable purpose. Thus in Da Costa v. De Pas (22), LORD HARDWICKE applied a bequest for instructing the people in the Jewish religion (then regarded as an illegal purpose) for the benefit of the Foundling Hospital, and in Cary v. Abbot (23), SIR W. GRANT, M.R., directed that the residue of an estate, which had been bequeathed for the instruction of children in the Roman Catholic faith, should be applied as the King by sign manual should direct. I refer to this doctrine in a brief review of the equitable jurisdiction only because, as I think, it has been the cause of some confusion in the argument which has been presented to the House. It would be very relevant if the society, conceding that the campaign against vivisection was not a charitable purpose, argued that there was yet a general charitable intention and that its funds were applicable to some other charitable purpose. That is not the argument. If it were, I should not entertain it, though it might in an earlier age have succeeded.

My Lords, this then being the position, that the court determined "one by one" whether particular named purposes were charitable, applying always the overriding test whether the purpose was for the public benefit, and that the King as parens patriae intervened pro bono publico for the protection of charities, what room is there for the doctrine, which has found favour with LORD GREENE, M.R., and has been so vigorously supported at the Bar of the House, that the court may disregard the evils that will ensue from the achievement by the society of its ends ? It is to me a strange and bewildering idea that the court must look so far and no farther, must see a charitable purpose in the intention of the society to benefit animals, and thus elevate the moral character of men, but must shut its eyes to the injurious results to the whole human and animal creation. I will readily concede, that, if the purpose is within one of the heads of charity forming the first three classes in the classification which LORD MACNAGHTEN borrowed from SIR SAMUEL ROMILLY's argument in Morice v. Bishop of Durham (2), the court will easily conclude that it is a charitable purpose. But even here to give the purpose the name of "religious" or "educational" is not to conclude the matter. It may yet not be charitable, if the religious purpose is illegal or the educational purpose is contrary to public policy. Still there remains the overriding question : Is it pro bono publico ? It would be another strange misreading of LORD MACNAGHTEN's speech in Pemsel's case (3) (one was pointed out in Re Macdruff (5)), to suggest that he intended anything to the contrary. I would rather say that, when a purpose appears broadly to fall within one of the familiar categories of charity, the court will assume it to be for the benefit of the community and therefore charitable unless the contrary is shown, and further that the court will not be astute in such a case to defeat upon doubtful evidence the avowed benevolent intention of a donor. But, my Lords, the next step is one that I cannot take. Where upon the evidence before it the court concludes that, however well-intentioned the donor, the achievement of his object will be greatly to the public disadvantage, there can be no justification for saying that it is a charitable object. If and so far as there is any judicial decision to the contrary, it must, in my opinion, be regarded as inconsistent with principle and be overruled. This proposition is clearly stated by RUSSELL, J., in Re Hummeltenberg (8), (1923 1 Ch. 242). He said :

In my opinion the question whether a gift is or may be operative for the public benefit is a question to be answered by the court by forming an opinion upon the evidence before it.

This statement of that very learned judge follows immediately upon some observations on the cases of Re Foveaux (1), and Re Cranston (9) which were the mainstay of the appellant's argument. In Re Foveaux (1), a testatrix had bequeathed legacies to two societies, described briefly by CHITTY, J., as the two defendant anti-vivisection societies, one of them being the appellant society under the name which it then bore. The question as stated by the learned judge was whether they were charities in the technical sense in which the term "charity" is used in law. That is the same question as that which your Lordships have to decide here. CHITTY, J., decided that they were charities. His judgment concludes with these words ([1895] 2 Ch. 507) :

The purpose of these societies, whether they are right or wrong in the opinions they hold, is charitable in the legal sense of the term. The intention is to benefit the community ; whether, if they achieved their object, the community would, in fact, be benefited is a question on which I think the court is not required to express an opinion. The defendant societies may be near the border line, but I think they are charities.

These words, which appear to be in direct opposition to the passage that I have cited from the judgment of RUSSELL, J., in effect repeat what CHITTY, J., said earlier in his judgment (ibid. 503) :

In determining this question of charity the court does not enter into or pronounce any opinion on the merits of the controversy which subsists between the supporters and opponents of the practice of vivisection. It stands neutral.

My Lords, in the passages that I have cited from the judgments of CHITTY, J. and RUSSELL, J. the issue is clear cut. Which of them is right ? Your Lordships will now see why I have thought it proper, however briefly, to consider the origin of this equitable jurisdiction. For at once this question arises. If indeed CHITTY, J., is right, if it is not the duty of the court to express an opinion whether the community will in fact be benefited, should the object of those, who intend to benefit it, be achieved, at what point in its long history did it cease to be its duty ? One by one the purposes enumerated in the preamble to the Statute of Elizabeth were held to be charitable by a court which performed just this duty and applied this overriding test. And since the statute the court has performed the same duty in determining whether objects alleged to be charitable are within the spirit and intendment of the preamble. May I not cite CHITTY, J. himself in this very case ? He said ([1895] 2 Ch. 504) :

After all, the best that can be done is to consider each case as it arises, upon its own special circumstances.

Is there a more special circumstance than this, that the fact is proved that "on balance the object of the society, so far from being for the public benefit, was gravely injurious thereto ?" Nor do I understand why, in his concluding words, CHITTY, J., said that the defendant societies might be near the border line, if he looked only at their intention and formed no opinion upon the result of their efforts if they were successful. For there could be no doubt upon the authority of such cases as University of London v. Yarrow (12), and Marsh v. Means (24), that a gift for the protection of animals is prima facie a charitable gift for the reason later stated by SWINFEN-EADY, L.J., in Re Wedgewood (11) ([1915] 1 Ch. 122). Upon this line of authority CHITTY, J., founded his judgment and, if intention only was looked at, the defendant societies could fairly claim to be in the heart of the province of charity. If the learned judge had a doubt, it could only have been due to the passing thought that perhaps result as well as intention was material. It is worthy of notice that the same doubt, so strong indeed that final opinion was reserved, was entertained by COTTON, LINDLEY and BOWEN, L.JJ. in Re Douglas (17). In that case it was unnecessary to determine whether the same anti-vivisection society in its then form was a charity, but the learned Lords Justices expressly reserved their opinion upon the point. I see no reason why they should have done so, unless they held, as I invite your Lordships to hold, that injury to the community must be weighed with the ostensible charitable purposes of the society.

- A LORD GREENE, M.R., from whose opinion on a broad question of principle such as this I differ with great reluctance, supports his decision by reference to such cases as A.-G. v. Marchant (18), and Re Campden Charities (19). In the former case a testator had, in the year 1640, left real estate upon trust to pay £50 per annum to four charitable objects, viz., £20 for the salary of a schoolmaster, £20 to a college for the purchase of books and £5 each to the poor of two parishes, with a direction that any deficiency should be borne rateably. It appears to have been assumed that any excess of the rents and profits of the real estate over £50 was applicable for charitable purposes. There was in fact a substantial surplus and the question submitted to the court was whether it should be divided rateably between the charities named in the will, or should be appropriated for the benefit of one or more of them to the exclusion of the others. KINDERSLEY, V.C., after referring to the rule of law laid down by LORD KINGSDOWN in A.-G. v. Dean & Canons of Windsor (25) (8 H.L. Cas. 452) that the accretion was prima facie to be applied and apportioned pro rata among the objects of the testator's bounty, but subject to the discretion of the court to be exercised in certain cases and within certain limits, thus expressed himself (L.R. 3 Eq. 430):

- D So, I apprehend, if it should appear that the directions of the testator with respect to a particular object, if carried out in these days, so far from being beneficial, would be detrimental to the objects he meant to benefit: in that case, a good reason would exist for exercising the discretion.

Then he applies this principle to the gifts to the poor of the two parishes and says (ibid. 431):

- E I think, by common consent, it is established at the present day that there is nothing more detrimental to a parish, and especially to the poor inhabitants of it, than having stated sums periodically payable to the poor of that parish by way of charity. The poorest class of all is not allowed to participate in such charities, because the court, in such cases, always excludes those who are in receipt of parochial relief, inasmuch as that would be a relief to the poor rates, and so a charity to the ratepayers and not to the poor. The only effect of such gifts is to pauperise the parish . . .

Accordingly the Vice Chancellor declined to increase pro rata the gifts to the poor and directed that the whole of the surplus revenue should be divided between the other two objects of the testator's bounty. My Lords, I find in this decision nothing contradictory to the principles that I have asserted. A purpose deemed charitable in 1640 was no longer deemed charitable in 1866; therefore the court declined to give effect to it in regard to surplus revenues. It does not follow from this that, if, in 1640, the court had thought that nothing could be more detrimental to a parish than such doles, it would nevertheless have supported the gift as a good charitable gift.

- G Re Campden Charities (19) is an authority of some importance in a difficult branch of the law of charity relating to the cy-pres application of charitable funds and the jurisdiction of the Charity Commissioners, and it is often cited in that connection. Substantially the same question had arisen as in Attorney-General v. Marchant (18). There, too, a bequest had been made for the purchase of lands of the annual value of £10, half of which was to be applied towards the better relief of the most poor and needy people of good life and conversation in the parish of Kensington. The value of the lands so purchased had greatly increased; so had the parish of Kensington. It became necessary to establish a scheme for the administration of the charity, and the Charity Commissioners did so. Taking the view expressed by KINDERSLEY, V.C., that doles to the poor were detrimental to the parish they in substance diverted to educational purposes a gift which was in part eleemosynary. The Court of Appeal held that they were entitled to do so. JESSEL, M.R., said (18 Ch.D. 324):

The habits of society have changed . . . and in consequence of the change of ideas there has been a change of legislation; laws have become obsolete or have been absolutely repealed, and habits have become obsolete and have fallen into disuse which were prevalent at the times when these wills were made.

and, later (ibid., 327) :

With our present ideas on the subject, and our present experience, which has been gathered as the result of very careful enquiries by various committees and commissions on the state of the poor in England, we know that the extension of doles is simply an extension of mischief.

Again, my Lords, I find nothing in this reasoning which is opposed to what I have said. If, to-day, a testator made a bequest for the relief of the poor, and required that it should be carried out in one way only, and the court was satisfied by evidence that that way was injurious to the community, I should say that it was not a charitable gift, though three hundred years ago the court might, upon different evidence, or in the absence of any evidence, have come to a different conclusion. I have been careful to add the condition that the testator required the gift to be carried out in one way only. For I would again remind your Lordships how much confusion has been introduced by the doctrine of general charitable intention, which is itself the substantial justification of the cy-pres doctrine.

The two cases to which I have last referred both fall within one of the three determinate categories in LORD MACNAGHTEN'S classifications, the relief of poverty. In a case, which it is sought to bring within the indeterminate fourth category, it is, I think, even more difficult to pause at a certain stage in the enquiry to say, e.g., that the purpose is to protect animals, that kindness to animals is conducive to the moral advancement of man, and to conclude that the purpose is charitable without looking to the end of the matter. Thus in Re Grove-Grady (10) a testatrix left her residuary estate to trustees to found an institution which should have as one of its objects the acquisition of land for the provision of refuges for the preservation of "all animals birds or other creatures not human." The Court of Appeal by a majority held that the trust, not having been shown to be for purposes beneficial to the community, was not a good and valid charitable trust. It is instructive to see why not. LORD HANWORTH, M.R., thus states the law. Having formulated the test in the two familiar questions (1) Is the trust for a purpose beneficial to the community ? (2) If it satisfies that first test, is it charitable ? he then asks ([1929] 1 Ch. 572) :

Who is to decide these questions ? I agree with HOLMES, L.J., that the answer does not depend on the view entertained by any individual—"either by the judge who is to decide the question, or by the person who makes the gift" : Re Cranston (9). The test is to be applied from evidence of the benefit to be derived by the public or a considerable section of it ; though a wide divergence of opinion may exist as to the expediency, or utility, of what is accepted generally as beneficial. The court must decide whether benefit to the community is established.

The learned MASTER OF THE ROLLS then expressly approved the passage that I have cited from the judgment of RUSSELL, J., in Re Hummeltenberg (8). The same view is reiterated by that learned judge (RUSSELL, L.J., as he then was), at p. 588 :

In my opinion, the court must determine in each case whether the trusts are such that benefit to the community must necessarily result from their execution.

Counsel for the society sought to distinguish this case on the ground that the initial step was not there taken, there was not found to be any benefit to the community, so that no question arose of weighing advantage against disadvantage. In this view, presumably, however slight the benefit, the court must disregard injury however great. Such a view is repellant alike to common sense and to the principles upon which the equitable jurisdiction has been founded.

I ought not to let Re Cranston (9) ([1898] 1 I.R. 431) pass unnoticed. In that case the court had to consider whether a bequest to two vegetarian societies was a good charitable bequest, and, though there was no such evidence of injury to the community arising from the activities of the societies as was adduced in this case, yet there were observations in the judgments of the very learned judges who took part in the decision upon which counsel for the society properly relied. But they must not be pressed too far. Thus when PORTER, M.R. (who first heard the case) felt bound "to give effect to the intention unless there is coercive reason to the contrary" (ibid., 433), it is at least open to doubt whether he would not have been coerced to a contrary view if he had found upon the evidence that injury to the community was the necessary result of the societies' work. It may indeed be said that even, the possibility of a coercive reason to the contrary is fatal to the contention that the court may not look to the end of the chapter. LORD ASHBOURNE, L.C., perhaps went further. For he observed (ibid., 445) that, though the vast majority be opposed to it and it might be disapproved by medical men, yet he did not feel at liberty to sit in judgment upon objects and purposes or to measure the success which they might then have or might thereafter attain to. If by this the learned Lord Chancellor meant that it was not a matter for his individual opinion, I should not dissent, but I cannot accept it if he meant that the court could abrogate its duty of deciding upon evidence whether the test of charitable purpose was satisfied. FITZGIBBON, L.J., uses words which I think it worth citing at length. He says (ibid., 446):

What is the tribunal which is to decide whether the object is a beneficent one? It cannot be the individual mind of a judge, for he may disagree, toto coelo, from the testator as to what is or is not beneficial. On the other hand, it cannot be vox populi, for charities have been upheld for the benefit of insignificant sects, and of peculiar people. It occurs to me that the answer must be—that the benefit must be one which the founder believes to be of public advantage, and his belief must be at least rational and not contrary either to the general law of the land, or to the principles of morality.

Your Lordships see how inevitably some qualification slips in. Here we have the test of rationality, of conformity with the general law, of the principles of morality. These are tests which the court must examine and, so far as they depend on facts, come to a conclusion upon relevant evidence. I do not understand FITZGIBBON, L.J., to support the view of the society that, given a measure of public advantage, the public disadvantage can be ignored. WALKER, L.J., appears more strongly to favour the society. He says (ibid., 451):

The idea may be erroneous and may be visionary, but it was entertained honestly by the giver, and her gift was designed for the benefit of mankind, and I think it was charitable . . .

I can hardly think that the learned Lord Justice intended to say that the honest opinion of a donor is conclusive. At least an exception must be made in the case of an illegal purpose or a purpose contrary to public policy. The question here, with which he did not purport to deal, is whether it is as fatal to the charitable nature of a gift that it is shown specifically to be to the public detriment as that it is regarded generally as contrary to public policy. From the dissenting judgment of HOLMES, L.J., your Lordships may get some assistance. That learned Lord Justice is careful to say that there is nothing illegal or contrary to public policy in the propagation of the doctrines of vegetarianism. The question remained whether the object of the societies was charitable and after stating that the object must be one by which the public, or a section of the public, benefits, the Lord Justice proceeds (ibid., 454, 455):

. . . but what is the test or standard by which a particular gift is to be tried with a view of ascertaining whether it is beneficial in this sense? I am of opinion that it does not depend upon the view entertained by any individual—either by the judge who is to decide the question or by the person who makes the gift.

And he answers the question by saying:

There is probably no purpose that all men would agree is beneficial to the community: but there are surely many purposes which everyone would admit are generally so regarded, although individuals differ as to their expediency or utility. The test or stand is, I believe, to be found in this common understanding.

He then applies this standard to the gift there in question, and, applying it, finds that the object does not benefit mankind and therefore is not charitable. It is, I think, instructive to see how he contrasts the vegetarian and the anti-vivisection claims. Of anti-vivisection he says (ibid., 458):

. . . there is a great body of well-informed opinion, holding that it would be for the true interests of mankind to put an end to it [i.e., vivisection] altogether. I think that there is no analogy between a practice such as this pursued by only a few individuals, attended with the severest suffering and productive of very doubtful benefit, and the universal habit of killing animals for human food in a manner that causes at the most but momentary pain.

It may well be that if the finding of the Special Commissioners in this case had been in similar terms, I should accede to the society's claim. But the value of the observations of the Lord Justice is that he looks first and last to the true interests of mankind. That is the test. Be the intention of the donor what it will, let him label his gift by what name he likes, he cannot draw a line and say to the court that it shall go thus far and no farther. I have dealt at some length with Re Cranston (9), partly because it was relied on by the society, partly because it is, I think, one of the most important cases in this branch of the law of charity. I do not express any opinion whether it was rightly decided. Still less do I express an opinion whether upon such evidence as might to-day be available a similar conclusion would be reached. I use it for the purpose of emphasising a view, too often, I fear, reiterated, that the court must still in every case determine by reference to its special circumstances whether or not a gift is charitable.

My Lords, what I have said is enough to conclude this case. But there is an important passage in the judgment of LORD GREENE, M.R., which I ought not to ignore. He says ([1946] 1 All E.R. 212) :

I do not see how at this time of day it can be asserted that a particular exemplification of those objects is not beneficial merely because in that particular case the achievement of those objects would deprive mankind of certain consequential benefits, however important those benefits may be. If this were not so, it would always be possible, by adducing evidence which was not before the court on the original occasion, to attack the status of an established charitable object to the great confusion of trustees and all others concerned. Many existing charities would no doubt fall if such a criterion were to be adopted.

I venture with great respect to think that this confuses two things. A purpose regarded in one age as charitable may in another be regarded differently. I need not repeat what was said by JESSEL, M.R., in Re Campden Charities (19) (18 Ch.D. 324). A bequest in the will of a testator dying in 1700 might be held valid upon the evidence then before the court, but, upon different evidence, held invalid if he died in 1900. So, too, I conceive that an anti-vivisection society might at different times be differently regarded. But this is not to say that a charitable trust, when it has once been established, can ever fail. If, by a change in social habits and needs, or, it may be, by a change in the law, the purpose of an established charity becomes superfluous or even illegal, or if, with increasing knowledge, it appears that a purpose once thought beneficial is truly detrimental to the community, it is the duty of trustees of an established charity to apply to the court, or, in suitable cases, to the Charity Commissioners, or, in educational charities, to the Minister of Education, and ask that a cy-pres scheme may be established. And I can well conceive that there might be cases in which the Attorney-General would think it his duty to intervene to that end. A charity once established does not die, though its nature may be changed. But it is wholly consistent with this that in a later age the court should decline to regard as charitable a purpose, to which in an earlier age that quality would have been ascribed, with the result that (unless a general charitable intention could be found) a gift for that purpose would fail. I cannot share the apprehension of LORD GREENE, M.R., that great confusion will be caused if the court declines to be bound by the beliefs and knowledge of a past age in considering whether a particular purpose is to-day for the benefit of the community, but, if it is so, then I say that it is the lesser of two evils.

My Lords, in a speech which I recently delivered in this House [in Williams (Sir H. J.) Trust, Trustees v. Inland Revenue Comrs. (26) ([1947] 1 All E.R. 519)] I had occasion to say that the cases decided on this branch of the law were legion in number and were not easy to reconcile. This is the first time, so far as I am aware, that the issue in the form in which I have endeavoured to state it has reached this House. If your Lordships are satisfied that the law as laid down by RUSSELL, J. (as he then was) in Re Hummeltenberg (8) is correct, and the decision of this House confirms it, I believe that it will be a useful landmark in the history of the law of charity.

LORD NORMAND : My Lords, the society claims exemption from income tax on its investment income on the ground that it is a body of persons established for charitable purposes only within the meaning of s. 37 of the Income Tax Act, 1918. The trust purposes are to be found in resolutions passed by a general meeting of the society held on July 31, 1897, and by the council on Feb. 9, 1898. Of these resolutions the first declares that the object of the society is to awaken the conscience of mankind to the iniquity of torturing animals for any purpose whatever; to draw public attention to the impossibility of any adequate protection from torture being afforded to animals under the present law; and so to lead the people of this country to call upon Parliament totally to suppress the practice of vivisection. By the second resolution, which is described as an explanatory resolution, the council affirmed that, while the demand for the total abolition of vivisection would ever remain the object of the society, the society was not thereby precluded from making efforts in Parliament for lesser measures, having for their object the saving of animals from scientific torture.

The first question in the appeal is whether these purposes do not demonstrate that the society is an association for political purposes and not an association or trust for charitable purposes. The distinction between a political association and a charitable trust has not been defined and I doubt whether it admits of precise definition. The Attorney-General, however, submitted that any association which included among its objects the passing by Parliament of any legislation, unless it were an uncontroversial enabling Act, was to be considered a political association, and must be refused the privileges which the law allows to charities. But no authority was cited which would warrant so extreme a proposition. The formation of voluntary associations for the furtherance of the improvement of morals is familiar, and such associations are a well recognised sub-division of the fourth of LORD MACNAGHTEN'S divisions of charities in Pemsel's case (3). It is also familiar that trusts for preventing cruelty to animals or for improving the conditions of their lives have found a recognised place in that sub-division. Trusts for the benefit of animals are allowed to be charitable because, to quote the language of SWINFEN-EADY, L.J., in Re Wedgewood (11) ([1915] 1 Ch.D. 122), they tend :

... to promote and encourage kindness towards them, to discourage cruelty, and to ameliorate the condition of the brute creation, and thus to stimulate humane and generous sentiments in man towards the lower animals, and by these means promote feelings of humanity and morality generally, repress brutality, and thus elevate the human race.

Societies for the amelioration of the condition of animals like other societies for the improvement of human morals do not as a rule limit their activities to one particular method of advancing their cause. Commonly they hope to make voluntary converts, and they also hope to educate public opinion and so to bring its influence to bear on those who offend against a humane code of conduct towards animals. But they seldom disclaim and frequently avow an intention of inducing Parliament to pass new legislation if a favourable opportunity should arise of furthering their purpose by that means. A society for the prevention of cruelty to animals, e.g., may include, among its professed purposes, amendments of the law dealing with field sports or with the taking of eggs or the like. Yet it would not, in my view, necessarily lose its right to be considered a charity, and if that right were questioned, it would become the duty of the court to decide whether the general purpose of the society was the improvement of morals by various lawful means including new legislation, all such means being subsidiary to the general charitable purpose. If the court answered this question in favour of the society, it would retain its privileges as a charity. But, if the decision was that the leading purpose of the society was to promote legislation in order to bring about a change of policy towards field sports, or the protection of wild birds, it would follow that the society should be classified as an association with political objects and that it would lose its privileges as a charity. The problem is, therefore, to discover the general purposes of the society and whether they are in the main political or in the main charitable. It is a question of degree of a sort well known to the courts. The appellant society is a society for the prevention of cruelty to animals, and it is not disputed that by the vigilance of its members it does much to prevent the infliction of cruelty on animals undergoing experiments. But it has chosen to restrict its attack upon cruelty to a narrow and peculiar field, and it has adopted as its leading purpose the suppression of vivisection by legislation. This is apparent from the resolutions which I have quoted. In the first of them the society condemns the existing legislation as an insufficient protection against the torture of animals, and sets forth as its object the total suppression of vivisection by new legislation passed by Parliament under pressure from an enlightened people. By the second resolution the council affirms that the total abolition of vivisection remains the object of the society but intimates that lesser Parliamentary measures for the protection of animals from scientific torture will also be pursued by the society. The society seems to me to proclaim that its purpose is a legislative change of policy towards scientific experiments on animals, the consummation of which will be an Act prohibiting all such experiments. I regard it as clear that a society professing these purposes is a political association and not a charity. If for legislative changes a change by means of government administration was substituted the result would be the same. In Bowman v. Secular Society (7) ([1917] A.C. 442) LORD PARKER said :

... a trust for the attainment of political objects has always been held invalid, not because it is illegal . . . but because the court has no means of judging whether a proposed change in the law will or will not be for the public benefit.

That was said in a case in which the society was advocating a very important change in the relations of the State and the community towards religion. I respectfully agree with the comment of LORD GREENE, M.R. ([1946] 1 All E.R. 214) that LORD PARKER's words do not apply when the legislation is merely ancillary to the attainment of what is ex hypothesi a good charitable object. For the charitable purpose, being dominant, would prevail as it did in Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Falkirk Temperance Cafe Trust (27) and in Public Trustee v. Hood (15), where it was held that, the main object of the gift being charitable, the gift was none the less valid because the testator had pointed out one of the means by which, in his opinion, the main object could best be attained and which in itself might not have been charitable if it had stood alone. But I regret that I cannot agree with LORD GREENE, M.R., in limiting the scope of LORD PARKER's words to matters of acute political controversy. Whether a project for new legislation excites acute political controversy may depend on the prudence and good management of the promoters. If they have patiently prepared the way by a gradual education of the public they may succeed in eliminating much of the opposition. But I cannot imagine that it is probable that a measure for the suppression of the kind of research which is impugned by this society would pass without acute controversy. It excites little or no controversy at present because the immediate prospects of its success are negligible, but, if the efforts of the society were to bring success near, acute and bitter controversy would, it is almost certain, become inevitable. But in my opinion it is not relevant to inquire whether the change of policy, for such it would be, represented by the prohibition of experiments on animals, might be accompanied by controversy or not. The relevant consideration is that it would be a change of policy, and that this society makes the achievement of that change by legislation its leading purpose. That in my opinion settles the issue in this case. I think that the same reason explains the decision of Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Temperance Council of Christian Churches of England and Wales (14), and I adopt the words used of that case by LAWRENCE, L.J., in Public Trustee v. Hood (15) ([1931] 1 Ch. 252) :

... in that case the gift was not for the promotion of temperance generally, but was for the promotion of temperance mainly by political means . . .

The appellant society is similarly not a society for the prevention of cruelty to animals generally, but a society for the prevention of cruelty to animals by political means.

It would not, however, be right to pass by in silence the other question which occupied so much of the debate. This question, which in my opinion only arises on the assumption that the society is held not to be a political body, is in brief whether it is sufficient for it to prove that its purpose is to alleviate or prevent the suffering of animals or whether it must prove that on balance its purpose is beneficial to mankind. I confess that my opinion has wavered and that I was for long inclined to agree with the judgment of LORD GREENE,

M.R. But after careful consideration of the speech of LORD SIMONDS, which I have had the advantage of reading in print, I have come to agree with it. I do not propose to attempt to add anything to what LORD SIMONDS has said on this part of the case.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors: Shield & Son (for the society); Solicitor of Inland Revenue (for the Crown).

[Reported by C. St.J. NICHOLSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

STENOR, LTD. v. WHITESIDES (CLITHEROE), LTD.

[HOUSE OF LORDS (Viscount Simon, Lord Macmillan, Lord Porter, Lord Simonds and Lord Uthwatt), April 17, 18, 21, 22, 24, July 2, 1947.]

Designs—Registration—“New or original design” —“Mere mechanical device” —Design for fuse for use in vulcanising machine—Novelty claimed only for shape of fuse—Shape already anticipated in other articles in same class—Fuse only for use in a particular type of machine—Shape dictated solely by functional considerations—Patents and Designs Act, 1907 (c. 29), (as amended up to May 26, 1938), ss. 49 (1), 93.

The design for a metal cut-out or fuse for use in a vulcanising apparatus was registered by S., Ltd., in Jan., 1939, under the Patents and Designs Acts, 1907-1938, in class I of sched. III to the Designs Rules, 1932-1938, which consists of “Articles composed wholly of metal or in which metal predominates, and jewellery.” In an action brought by S., Ltd., against W. (C.), Ltd., for infringement of their copyright in the design, W. (C.), Ltd., challenged the validity of the design and counterclaimed for rectification of the register of designs by its removal therefrom on the grounds (i) that it was not a “new or original design,” as required by s. 49 (1) of the Act of 1907, because other articles in class I, though used for quite a different purpose, were already known to be made according to a design with substantially the same features of shape; (ii) that it was not a “design” within the definition in s. 93 of the Act (as amended), because it was “in substance a mere mechanical device,” since the shape shown on the registered design was dictated solely by functional considerations and the fuses to which it was applied were intended solely to operate a vulcanising machine which could be operated only by fuses of this shape. In regard to (i) S., Ltd., contended that “design” meant, not the features of shape appearing in an article, but a particular kind of article having a particular shape, and that registration of a design was not invalidated by the prior existence of articles of a different kind which were included in the same class merely because they were made of the same substance:—

HELD: (i) in determining whether or not a design had been anticipated, it must be compared with previous designs applied to all other articles in the same class, and a difference of purpose or use in articles of the same class was immaterial, and, accordingly, the design was not a “new or original design” as required by s. 49 (1) of the Act of 1907.

Re Clarke’s Design ([1896] 2 Ch. 38) considered.

(ii) since the shape of the article had no significance other than that, by reason of the features indicated, it would function in a certain machine, the design was “in substance a mere mechanical device” and was, therefore, not a “design” within the definition in s. 93 of the Act of 1907 (as amended), and was not a proper subject for registration under the Acts.

Kestos, Ltd. v. Kempat, Ltd., and Vivian Fitch Kemp, Re Kestos, Ltd. Registered Design (No. 725,716) (53 R.P.C. 139) approved.

Decision of the Court of Appeal ([1946] 1 All E.R. 176) affirmed.

[AS TO REGISTRABLE DESIGNS, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 32, pp. 682-688, paras. 994-999; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 43, pp. 245-251, Nos. 881-914, and Supplement.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Re Clarke’s Design, [1896] 2 Ch. 38; 65 L.J.Ch. 629; sub nom. Re Clarke’s Registered Design, Clarke v. Sax & Co., Ltd., 74 L.T. 631; 13 R.P.C. 351; 43 Digest 248, 896.

- (2) Re Bach's Design, (1889), 42 Ch.D. 661; 61 L.T. 765; 6 R.P.C. 376; 43 Digest 250, 912.
- (3) Re Read & Greswell's Design, (1889), 6 R.P.C. 471; 42 Ch.D. 260; 58 L.J.Ch. 624; 61 L.T. 450; 43 Digest 250, 911.
- (4) Kestos, Ltd. v. Kempat, Ltd., and Vivian Fitch Kemp, Re Kestos, Ltd. Registered Design (No. 725,716), (1935), 53 R.P.C. 139; Digest Supp.
- (5) Tecalemit, Ltd. v. Ewarts, Ltd. (No. 2), (1927), 44 R.P.C. 503; 43 Digest 247, 892.
- (6) Walker, Hunter & Co. v. Falkirk Iron Co., (1887), 4 R.P.C. 390; 14 R. (Ct. of Sess.) 1072; 43 Digest 245, g.
- (7) Saunders v. Wiel, [1893] 1 Q.B. 470; 62 L.J.Q.B. 341; 68 L.T. 183; 10 R.P.C. 29; 43 Digest 250, 910.
- (8) Hecla Foundry Co. v. Walker, Hunter & Co., (1889), 14 App. Cas. 550; 59 L.J.P.C. 46; 61 L.T. 738; 6 R.P.C. 554; 43 Digest 258, 970.
- (9) Re Gutta Percha and Rubber (London), Ltd. (No. 789,574) Application, (1935), 52 R.P.C. 383; Digest Supp.

APPEAL by the plaintiffs from a decision of the Court of Appeal (LORD GREENE, M.R., DU PARCQ and MORTON, L.JJ.), dated Dec. 11, 1945, and reported [1946] 1 All E.R. 176, affirming an order of ROMER, J., dated May 18, 1945, whereby he ordered the removal from the Register of Designs of the plaintiffs' design No. 833,097. The House of Lords affirmed these decisions. The facts appear in the opinions of their Lordships.

Shelley, K.C., and James Mould for the appellants.

Lloyd-Jacob, K.C., and Stuart Bevan for the respondents.

The House took time for consideration.

July 2. The following opinions were delivered.

VISCOUNT SIMON: My Lords, this is an appeal from an order of the Court of Appeal (LORD GREENE, M.R., DU PARCQ and MORTON, L.JJ.), which confirmed (though for different reasons) the judgment of ROMER, J., whereby he ordered the removal from the Register of Designs of the appellants' design No. 833,097. The action was brought in the Chancery Division of the High Court by the present appellants against the respondents, claiming relief in respect of alleged infringement by the respondents of the appellants' copyright in this registered design. By their defence, the respondents denied the infringement, and further relied on the provisions of the Patents and Designs Act, 1907, s. 54 (1). They also alleged that the registration of the said design was invalid and counter-claimed for the rectification of the register accordingly. On the issues of infringement and on the defence raised under s. 54 (1), the judge found as a fact that the sale by the respondents of articles alleged to infringe the appellants' copyright occurred in circumstances which would, in any case, disentitle the appellants to recover any penalty or damages, and he further held (a) that at the time of its registration the design was not a "new or original design not previously published in the United Kingdom" within s. 49 (1) of the Act, and (b) that it was not a "design" at all within the meaning of the Act because it was so minute that its shape could not be adequately apprehended by ordinary human vision, unassisted by a magnifier. As to this second reason, it is enough to say that the drawings annexed to the certificate of registration 833,097 do not include any indication of dimensions, nor do existing regulations so require, but that the drawings themselves measure several inches in length, while the actual object produced by the appellants as embodying the design, though very small, being about the length of an ordinary thumb-nail, was not found by the Court of Appeal to be so tiny that its shape could not be apprehended by the eye. The Court of Appeal, therefore, did not agree with the view of the trial judge that the alleged design was not registrable because it was intended to be applied to an article of so small a size. This topic has not been the subject of argument before us. The question how far, if at all, minuteness in the object to which a design is applied affects the registrability of the design must be regarded as reserved for decision if and when a future case raises the point. Before the Court of Appeal the appellants did not seek to challenge the decision of ROMER, J., that their action should be dismissed, but confined themselves to appealing against the order on the counterclaim directing that the Register of Designs should be rectified by removing from it design No. 833,097. The judge's view that this order should be made because the design was not "new or original" was, of course, discussed on the appeal, but the ground on which the Court of Appeal decided to uphold the cancellation was a different one, raised in the pleadings but not dealt with by ROMER, J., viz., that the alleged design was not registrable because, as applied to the article specified in the certificate, it was something "which is in substance a mere mechanical device," and thus was not included in the definition of "design" in s. 93 of the Act.

A Before this House both the ground taken by ROMER, J., and the ground taken by the Court of Appeal have been fully examined, and, though a decision adverse to the appellants on one of these grounds would render it unnecessary to deal with the other, I think, in the circumstances, it would be of value if the House were to deal with both.

First, as to the contention that the design is not "new or original." The definition in s. 93 states that "design" means only:

B "... features of shape, configuration, pattern or ornament applied to any article by any industrial process or means ... which in the finished article appeal to and are judged solely by the eye. ...

C In the present case it is the "features of shape" which are relevant. The drawing attached to the certificate shows a cylindrical rod carrying at each of two places along its length a bevelled collar, which increases the diameter of the rod where it occurs by about a third. The two collars are similar to one another and are placed symmetrically from one or other end of the rod at a distance which is somewhat less than a third of the rod's length. The middle section of the rod is slightly thicker between the two collars than it is where it protrudes beyond either of them. The certificate of registration describes the design as "in class I" and as being:

D "... in respect of the application of such design to a metal cut-out or fuse for use in a vulcanising apparatus.

E The statement that the design is applied to a metal cut-out or fuse satisfies the requirement of the statutory definition that "design" means the "features of shape ... applied to any article." The additional statement that the article is "for use in a vulcanising apparatus" is no part of the statutory requirements, but r. 17 of the Designs Rules, 1932, made under s. 86 (1) (a) of the Act, purports to authorise the Comptroller to require the applicants to state for what purpose the article to which the design is to be applied is used. In the present case, they did so voluntarily.

Class I in the classification of goods contained in sched. III to the Designs Rules, 1932, consists of:

Articles composed wholly of metal or in which metal predominates, and jewellery.

F There is thus a vast variety of objects included in the class, and, inasmuch as the features of shape in the registered design are substantially the same as the features of shape in rollers in rolling mills or in a bicycle crank axle, both made of steel and thus in the same class, which were well known at an earlier date, the respondents contended at the trial that this was enough to prove that the appellants' design was not "new or original." If it be enough to disprove novelty or originality to show that any other article in class I, though used for quite a different purpose, was already known to be made according to a design with the same or substantially the same features of shape, then this is clearly proved in the present case and the appellants' claim to retain their design on the register fails on this ground. The appellants contend, however, that identity of shape previously applied to articles of quite a different type, though falling within the same class, is not enough to destroy the validity of their claim that the design they have registered is "new or original." Counsel H for the appellants seeks to limit the field within which it is relevant to ask whether a design as defined in the Act has been anticipated to an area which is not so wide as that of the class, though I have found it difficult to grasp with precision what are, according to him, the metes and bounds of the relevant field within the class. His contention, as I understand, is that no previous application of the design to another article in class I should be regarded as an anticipation unless this previous article is "analogous" to the article mentioned in the certificate, and by analogous is meant made for a similar use or purpose. Similarly, the contention is that there is no infringement of the appellants' monopoly unless another person subsequently makes an article of readily fusible metal in the same shape adapted for the same use, viz., for use in a vulcanising apparatus. In other words, the shape may have been already applied to other articles in the same class, but that is (according to the argument of counsel for the appellants) no reason why registration should not be granted in respect of the novel application of the same shape to another and different article in that class.

In deciding whether this contention is correct, our first duty is to examine the language of the statute itself. By s. 53 the registration of a design gives copyright in it to the proprietor during five years from the date of registration. By s. 93, copyright means the exclusive right to apply a design to any article in any class in which the design is registered—in the present case in class I. Indeed, it is not obvious what is the purpose of providing for a classification of goods unless it be to indicate the area within which the monopoly would exist. I cannot construe the words "any article in any class" otherwise than as embracing all the articles in that class whatever may be the differences of use or purpose among them. If this is so, the bicycle crank axle must be an example of "any article" in class I and the copyright which would be given to the appellants by registering the design 833,097 would include the exclusive right to apply their design to a bicycle crank axle. But this shape as applied to a bicycle crank axle has been used and published long before 1939, and it follows that the appellants' design is not "new or original." I am fully alive to the fact that this construction greatly cuts down the instances in which, on another view, a design may be validly registered, but the truth is that this particular design is of the most ordinary character. Its general features of shape are to be found in numerous and well-known products of engineering. It has no significance whatever except in connection with the use to which the object to which it is to be applied is to be put. The shaping of collars on metal bars and rods has long been practised for various purposes and is a matter of common knowledge. The only ground on which, as it seems to me, such a design could be regarded as "new or original" would be if it is legitimate to regard designs applied to articles in the same class as different from one another according to the use to which the article is put, or is intended to be put, but there is nothing in the definition of design in s. 93 (save in the final words of exclusion, which are not relevant on the issue of novelty, but have to be considered on the second aspect of the case) which suggests that one design is to be distinguished from another by the feature of the use to which the article to which the design is applied is to be put. On the contrary, the definition states that the word means "only" the features of shape, etc. It seems to me, therefore, that on the words of the statute a design, in order to be entitled to copyright, must run the gauntlet of comparison with previous designs applied to all other articles in the same class.

Counsel for the appellants contends that the construction which I feel compelled to adopt runs counter to previous decisions, and, in particular, to the well-known judgment of LINDLEY, L.J., ([1896] 2 Ch. 43), in deciding Re Clarke's Design (1). Even if it were so, the House would still be obliged to give a construction to the statute which it believes to be correct, but, in fact, the judgment of LINDLEY, L.J., when carefully examined, will be found not necessarily to be in conflict with the construction I have suggested. The question in that case arose under the Act of 1883, and LINDLEY, L.J., expressly mentioned that among the sections to be considered was s. 50 of that Act, which contained a definition of copyright in terms which do not materially differ from the present definition. It is impossible to suppose that he did not keep in mind the statement that copyright was the exclusive right to apply the design to any article "in the class or classes in which the design is registered," but he chose to decide the case on the wider ground that, even if the articles to be compared were in different classes (which they apparently were not), a design applied to an article in one class cannot be said to be "new or original" if it is already being applied to articles of an analogous character even though they are in another class. His references ([1896] 2 Ch. 44, 45) to Re Bach's Design (2) and to Re Read and Greswell's Design (3), make this perfectly plain. In the latter case CHITTY, J., said (6 R.P.C. 474, 475):

No doubt the copyright that is conferred by the Act of Parliament . . . is a copyright only in respect to the goods comprised in the class in which the registration takes place . . .

But he then went on to explain that a want of novelty or originality may exist if a design applied to an article in one class is merely imitated in the application of it to a similar article made in a different material in another class. The result of the decisions is, in effect, to establish that the claim of a design to novelty or originality may fail in either of two ways, (i) because there is another article in the same class to which the shape has been already applied, or, (ii) because the shape has already been applied to another article of an analogous character even though it is included in a different class. In both cases, of course, the earlier application must have been "published in the United Kingdom." When the two articles to be compared as embodying the same design are in the same class, a difference of purpose or use appears to me to be immaterial. If monopoly exists, it is monopoly in respect of features of shape and the like which appeal to and are judged solely by the eye, and this excludes the idea that monopoly is established by considering, within the same class, how far the use of one article differs from the use of another article with the same features of shape.

Secondly, as to the respondents' contention that the excluding words at the end of the definition of "design" in s. 93 of the Act apply, and that the appellants cannot have a monopoly because what they are claiming is a thing "which is in substance a mere mechanical device," this is the ground on which the Court of Appeal ordered the removal from the register of design No. 833,097. The definition in s. 93 concludes by stating that "design":

. . . does not include any mode or principle of construction, or anything which is in substance a mere mechanical device.

These words of exclusion first appeared in the Patents and Designs Act, 1919, though it may be that they only express what was previously implied in the true conception of a design in the statute law relating to the subject. The meaning of the exclusion is fairly clear, though it is not altogether easy to define with accuracy. LUXMOORE, J., in Kestos, Ltd. v. Kempat, Ltd. and Vivian Fitch Kemp (4) explained the relevant phrase thus (53 R.P.C. 151):

A mere mechanical device is a shape in which all the features are dictated solely by the function or functions which the article has to perform . . .

He cited in support of this view the decision of ROMER, J., in Tecalemit, Ltd. v. Ewarts, Ltd. (No. 2) (5). I think that the words of LUXMOORE, J., may be accepted as a useful and accurate test. The configuration of a key, for example, is what it is solely because it has to operate a lock with appropriate wards, and (apart altogether from want of novelty) would be a "mere mechanical device" within this definition. It is to be noted that in the provisional specification 522,543 of 1938, respecting the patent for a vulcanising machine using a fusible member of another pattern, the statement is made that:

. . . the correct fuse will therefore constitute a kind of key for operating the switch mechanism, which cannot be operated by an incorrect key.

The first meaning of "mechanical" in THE OXFORD DICTIONARY is: "Concerned with the contrivance and construction of machines or mechanism," and a device which is in substance a mere mechanical device in this sense seems to me to be what is excluded by the words of the Act. MORTON, L.J., in the Court of Appeal in the present case reached the conclusion ([1946] 1 All E.R. 180):

. . . that the plaintiffs' design is a shape in which all the features are dictated solely by the function which is to be performed by the article to which the shape is applied and that that shape possesses no features beyond those necessary to enable the article to fulfil its function.

I have come to the same conclusion. If one looks at the drawing annexed to the patent specification 533,816 of 1939, which relates to improvements in vulcanising machines for repairing motor vehicle tyres, one sees depicted in figure 5 exactly the same two-collared rod as is shown in registered design 833,097, and the reason for so shaping it is plainly due to the function which it is to perform, namely to fit into the correspondingly shaped orifice of the machine, and so to find its way into the position where it will constitute a fusible element. Indeed, the specification itself describes one advantage of the mechanism which it is sought to cover by the patent as lying in the fact "that the circuit can only be closed with the aid of the fusible element and only fusible elements of the pre-determined correct shape." It further describes the insertion slot as one which "corresponds in profile with the shape of the fuse member." In fact, the shape of the article has no significance other than that, if it has the features indicated, it will function in the machine. Counsel for the appellants addressed to us an ingenious and detailed argument designed to show that the features of shape applied to the article in question were decided on first and the machine in connection with which it was to be used came into existence afterwards, but it is plain that one was conceived of in connection with the other and I cannot think that this case should be determined by inquiring whether the particular vulcanising machine which would take through its orifice an article of this shape was already made at the date of the registration of the design, or existed only in Mr. Steiner's mind, or was already in at least an experimental condition. In any case, I agree with MORTON, L.J., that, on a close examination of Mr. Steiner's evidence, there is nothing in his replies to negative the existence, at the time when the application to register the design was made, of an experimental machine which was intended to be worked by fuses made according to the registered design. For both the above reasons, therefore, I am of opinion that the appeal fails and should be dismissed with costs.

My Lords, I am authorised by my noble and learned friend, LORD C
MACMILLAN, to say that he concurs in this opinion.

LORD PORTER : My Lords, the only issue left for your Lordships' decision in this case is to be found in the counterclaim in which the respondents claimed rectification of the Register of Designs by the removal therefrom of the appellants' design. They attack the validity of the registration for two reasons, (i) that it has been anticipated, and (ii) that it is a mere mechanical device and as such not the subject of registration. On the first question the respondents say that, by the terms of the Act, the Board of Trade are given power to divide all types of articles into classes, that they have done so, and that any design which has been anticipated in any article, whatever its type, in one of the classes is an anticipation of any design in any other article in that class, however much the two articles may differ in type or object. The appellants, on their part, say that there is a cross division. One division is into the classes which the Board of Trade have prescribed, and the other is that between articles of different types, e.g., a coalscuttle and a bicycle frame may both be made of metal, and, therefore, within class I, but a design registered, or to be registered, in respect of one is not necessarily anticipated by a similar design in respect of the other, because the types of the two articles differ one from the other.

The determination of the question which of these two views is right depends, and must depend, on the provisions of the Act itself and of any rules made thereunder. Those provisions are to be found in the Patents and Designs Act, 1907 (as amended), pt. II, "Designs," beginning at s. 49. The more important of those provisions are contained in ss. 49 (1) and (2), 53 (1), 60 (1) (a), 86 (1) (b) and (2), and finally the definition section—s. 93—under the headings "Design," "Article" and "Copyright" :

Registration of Designs.

49 (1) The Comptroller may, on the application made in the prescribed form and manner of any person claiming to be the proprietor of any new or original design not previously published in the United Kingdom, register the design under this part of this Act. (2) The same design may be registered in more than one class, and, in case of doubt as to the class in which a design ought to be registered, the Comptroller may decide the question.

Copyright in registered Designs.

53 (1) When a design is registered, the registered proprietor of the design shall, subject to the provisions of this Act, have copyright in the design during 5 years from the date of registration.

Legal Proceedings.

60. (1) During the existence of copyright in any design it shall not be lawful for any person (a) for the purposes of sale to apply or cause to be applied to any article in any class of goods in which the design is registered the design or any fraudulent or obvious imitation thereof, except with the licence or written consent of the registered proprietor or to do anything with a view to enable the design to be so applied . . .

Powers, etc., of Board of Trade.

86 (1) The Board of Trade may make such general rules and do such things as they think expedient, subject to the provisions of this Act . . . (b) for classifying goods for the purposes of designs . . . (2) General rules shall, whilst in force be of the same effect as if they were contained in this Act.

Definitions.

93 In this Act, unless the context otherwise requires . . .

A "Design" means only the features of shape, configuration, pattern or ornament applied to any article by any industrial process or means, whether manual, mechanical, or chemical, separate or combined, which in the finished article appeal to and are judged solely by the eye; but does not include any mode or principle of construction, or anything which is in substance a mere mechanical device:

"Article" means (as respects designs) any article of manufacture and any substance artificial or natural, or partly artificial and partly natural:

B "Copyright" means the exclusive right to apply a design to any article in any class in which the design is registered.

C The Designs Rules, 1932-1938, on their part, contain a classification of goods drawn in the widest terms by the Board of Trade. In these sections of the Act, and, indeed, in the Act and the rules generally, it is notable that, throughout, the differentiation of class from class is insisted on, but, in terms at any rate, no distinction is drawn between different types of article. In particular, this is manifest in the definition of "copyright" in s. 93 as "the exclusive right to apply a design to any article in any class in which the design is registered," by which the proprietor of the design appears to be protected against any user of his design in respect of any article in the same class, however widely that type of article may differ from others in that class. This reading of the definition is, I think, borne out by the provisions of s. 60 (1) making it unlawful to apply the design to any article in any class of goods in which the design is registered.

D I should myself have thought that this language in clear terms protected the copyright in the registered design against the use of that design in respect of any article in the same class, however varied the type of the different articles in that class might be, but it was said, in answer, that no such view has ever been taken, that it is inconceivable that, because two articles were made of metal, a design which was quite unknown in one should be prohibited in any other, however divergent they might be, and, finally, that what was prohibited
E was the use of a design, i.e., a shape applied to any article, that use of the shape itself was not forbidden except when applied to an article, and that must mean applied to an article of the same type.

F My Lords, I find great difficulty in apprehending exactly why "features of shape applied to any article" should be confined to articles of the same type, even if one is to break off the definition of design at the word "article" and not continue to the end of the definition. That definition seems to me to be
G drawn without reference to type of article or even to distinction of class. It seems merely to insist on two things: (i) that the design must be used for an industrial process, and (ii) that it must not include any mode or principle of construction or be a mere mechanical device. This reading, moreover, is borne out if one reads the definition in full and appreciates why the words "applied to any article by any industrial process," etc., are inserted. Their object, as I see it, is solely to ensure that registration is confined to an industrial article and not used to protect (say) reproductions of pictures or artistic designs to which no industrial reproduction is to be applied.

Roughly, I think that for this purpose one might read the definition of copyright as meaning the exclusive right to apply an industrial design (i.e., a design devised for reproduction by an industrial process) to any article in any class in which the design is registered. I recognise at once that such a construction
H of the Act prevents the acquisition of copyright in a design by any person ingenious enough to adapt a design used with or without his knowledge in one type of article to another type of article in the same class, though they may be widely different in origin, use and appearance. One answer, in my view, is that the wording of the Act, combined with the power given to the Board of Trade to classify goods for the purposes of designs, brings about this result, but, I think, there is also another answer. Primarily, the object of the Act is to protect what one may call artistic decoration, though the artistry may be bad and the decoration common-place or worse, and I should agree with Mr.

RUSSELL-CLARKE when he says in the preface to his book on COPYRIGHT IN INDUSTRIAL DESIGNS :

Though a design need not be artistic, this form of protection is meant to cover cases where the object is to please the eye.

Design in the other sense is ruled out by the exclusion of any mode or principle of construction, i.e., it must be adapted to the shape, pattern or ornament of the article and not to its use, and, from this point of view, features of shape in one article do not differ so much one from another as they would if they were devised to some constructional end. This consideration, however, is only a minor matter, since an adaptation of the same design from one class to another may still be protected, as it was in Walker, Hunter & Co. v. Falkirk Iron Co. (6), and in Saunders v. Wiel (7), and, indeed, this approach to the subject is more germane to the question of what is, or is not, a mechanical device. I am content to say that the wording of the Act is unambiguous and, therefore, any argument based on an alleged inconvenience of adopting the construction it plainly bears is ruled out.

It is asserted, however, that such a view is inconsistent with the decision of, and reasons given by, LINDLEY, L.J., in Re Clarke's Design (1). The decision itself does not appear to give rise to any difficulty. It determines no more than that a design in a particular class may be anticipated by a similar design adapted for use in an article of the same type even though it be in a different class, but the expressions used do, I think, give rise to some difficulty. It is true that the wording of the Patents, Designs and Trade Marks Act, 1883, under which that decision was given, differs somewhat from the phraseology used in the Act of 1907 which it falls to your Lordships to construe, but, in substance, I think their meaning is the same, and, therefore, it is necessary to consider the reasoning of LINDLEY, L.J. ([1896] 2 Ch. 45). After saying: "In . . . Hecla Foundry Co. v. Walker, Hunter & Co. (8), a design for the shape of an iron furnace-door was protected, although wooden doors of the same shape for sideboards and other articles were old. The things shaped were for such different purposes and their uses were so dissimilar that the design for one of such things was held to be new or original, although it was old for the other," he asked the question: "What then is the test to be applied to a case such as that before us?" and answered:

The design must be new or original with reference to the kind of article not the class of article for which it is registered, meaning by kind of article, not the class of article mentioned in the schedule to the rules, but the kind of article having regard to its general character and use. A design may be new for a coal-scuttle, but not for a bonnet.

In terms, this language in no way affects the construction of the Act which has been suggested above. It merely decides that a design, though registered or used in one class of articles, may still be an anticipation if applied to a similar type of article in another class. It does not say that a design registered in a particular class does not protect its application to any article in that class, but, as was pointed out, the articles in question were almost certainly both in class I and, therefore, it would have been an answer to the claim that the design had been anticipated in that class, yet no such argument was presented. The answer is, I think, that what was being argued was that the design was new, whether in class I or in any other class, and LINDLEY, L.J., was considering this aspect of the case and this only. He was not deciding that a design protected a type of article only. He was deciding that an anticipation of the design in a similar article in another class might yet be a ground for refusing or expunging registration.

This view would of itself determine the case, but the question what is the meaning of "a mere mechanical device" has been fully argued before your Lordships and it is proper that a decision on it should be given. For the appellants it was argued that nothing, whatever functional part it might play as part of an article, was a mere mechanical device if its shape was not required for working all articles of the type in which it was embodied. A yale key, it was said, might be cut in all sorts of shapes, each of which would open a different yale lock, and each different shape would be a registrable design though it was devised for use with a particular type of lock only—at any rate, if the shape of the key was first devised and the lock, on which it was to operate, was thought out and constructed later. The only non-registrable design would be a key of a shape which must be adopted in order to open any yale lock. The respondents, on the other hand, maintained that any article the shape of which was required to perform a functional purpose was a mere mechanical device: it did not matter that different shapes and different devices could be adopted to perform a similar purpose—in each case the shape is required for

A operational purposes: its ward shape is determined by its function. I do not know that the question is capable of much argument. In the present case the fuse is constructed in the shape shown that it may be used in connection with a particular type of vulcanising machine, and for this purpose I do not think it matters whether the machine was devised to fit the fuse or the fuse to fit the machine. No doubt, another shape of fuse and another type of machine could be invented to perform the same task. However that may be, the only

B object of using the registered shape now under discussion is to perform the functional purpose of making the machine work. Such a design is, to my mind, a mechanical device because it has in view the object of successfully performing a mechanical act. It is “a more mechanical device” because, substantially, that is its only object. No doubt, it is easily recognisable, must be capable of acting as a fuse, and, if that view of the facts be accepted, was conceived before

C the machine into which it was to be fitted was invented. A device, as it appears to me, is none the less mechanical whether the mechanism with which it is to be used is devised before or after the device. As to the two earlier reasons, they appear not to make the design less mechanical, but only to make its mechanism more ingenious and more successful. Primarily, the object of the Act is to protect shape, not function, and not to protect functional shape. I agree that the appeal should be dismissed.

D LORD SIMONDS: My Lords, the question raised in this appeal is whether a design which was numbered 833,097 and registered as of Jan. 25, 1939, under the Patents and Designs Acts, 1907-1938 is valid. By ROMER, J., and the Court of Appeal it has for different reasons been held to be invalid.

The design was registered in the name of Leonard Steiner, the predecessor in title of the appellants, in class I in the classification contained in sched. III

E to the Designs Rules, 1932, made by the Board of Trade under s. 86 of the Patents and Designs Acts then in force. This class consists of:

Articles composed wholly of metal or in which metal predominates, and jewellery.

The certificate issued in respect of the design certified that it had been registered “in respect of the application of such design to a metal cut-out or fuse in a vulcanising apparatus.” A copy of the design is annexed to the certificate,

F and the drawings therein contained are accurately thus described by ROMER, J.:

The drawings annexed to the design show in perspective view, profile view and end view a circular bar or rod. The centre part of the rod is somewhat thicker than the two end parts and is divided or separated therefrom by bevelled collars. The central portion of the rod is slightly longer than the two end parts. The design as shown in the drawings possesses a definite appearance, but, as no scale is shown, no idea is afforded of the size of the object drawn other than what can be gathered from the verbal

G description of the application of the design which is contained in the certificate. In fact the fuse to which the design is applied is a minute object, its length being little more than half of that of the average thumb nail.

The respondents challenged and challenge the validity of the registration on three grounds: (a) that the design does not contain any feature applied to an article by any industrial process or means which in the finished article appeals to or is judged solely by the eye: (b) that, if it does contain any such feature,

H that feature is a mode or principle of construction, or, alternatively, is in substance a mere mechanical device: (c) that the design was neither new nor original at the date thereof. ROMER, J., held the registration invalid on the first and third grounds, the Court of Appeal on the second ground. Before looking further at the facts of this case, I think it convenient to call attention to the statutory provisions which now prescribe the limits within which a monopoly of design can be claimed.

The main Act is the Patents and Designs Act, 1907, which repealed previous enactments on this subject, but this Act has itself been from time to time amended, and, when in this opinion I refer to "the Act," I mean that Act as amended up to Feb. 26, 1942. I must first refer to certain definitions which are of paramount importance. Section 93 of the Act enacts (inter alia) as follows :

"Design" means only the features of shape, configuration, pattern or ornament applied to any article by any industrial process or means, whether manual, mechanical, or chemical, separate or combined, which in the finished article appeal to and are judged solely by the eye ; but does not include any mode or principle of construction, or anything which is in substance a mere mechanical device ; "Article" means (as respects designs) any article of manufacture and any substance artificial or natural, or partly artificial and partly natural : "Copyright" means the exclusive right to apply a design to any article in any class in which the design is registered.

I turn back to the substantive enactment of the Act, bearing in mind that its purpose is to create and define monopoly in design and that prima facie the ambit of the monopoly is, by the definition of copyright, to be found in the class in which the design is registered.

Section 49 of the Act enacts by sub-s. (1) that the Comptroller may, on the application of any person claiming to be the proprietor of any new or original design not previously published in the United Kingdom, register the design under that part of the Act. The key words in this sub-section are "new or original." I do not venture an opinion what is the distinction between those alternatives. Section 49 (2) provides that the same design may be registered in more than one class, and, in case of doubt as to the class in which a design ought to be registered, the Comptroller may decide the question.

I pause to observe that it is the "class" which is of importance, and this is emphasised by s. 50 which provides for the registration in certain cases of old designs in new classes. Thus, by s. 50 (1), it is provided that, where a design has been registered in one or more classes, the application of the proprietors of the design (but of no other person) to register it in another class is not to be refused nor the registration invalidated (a) on the ground of the design not being a new or original design, by reason only that it was so previously registered ; or (b) on the ground of the design having been previously published in the United Kingdom, by reason only that it has been applied to goods of any class in which it was so previously registered. And by s. 50 (2) it is provided that where the proprietor of a registered design applies for the registration in the same class of goods of a design consisting of the registered design with modifications or variations not sufficient to alter the character or substantially to affect the identity thereof, the application shall not be refused, nor shall the registration of that other design be invalidated for reasons comparable to those referred to in sub-s. (1).

Sections 51 and 52 provide for the grant of a certificate of registration and for the keeping of a register of designs. Section 53 provides for the term of copyright. I can pass over ss. 54, 55 and 56, but note that in s. 57 provision is made for information being given by the Comptroller whether registration still exists in respect of a design and, if so, in respect of what classes of goods. I come to a very important section, s. 60, which is headed "Legal Proceedings." It is important because, if there is any ambiguity as to the nature and extent of the monopoly conferred by the Act, i.e., as to what is intended by saying that the registered proprietor of a design shall have copyright in the design, it cannot fail to be useful to see in respect of what acts he may take proceedings to protect his monopoly.

Section 60 (1) enacts that during the existence of copyright in any design it shall not be lawful for any person (I put it shortly) (a) for the purposes of sale to apply or cause to be applied to any article in any class of goods in which the design is registered the design or any fraudulent or obvious imitation thereof except as therein mentioned, or (b) knowing that the design or any such imitation thereof has been so applied, to publish or expose for sale that article. Sub-s. (2) of the same section prescribes the relief recoverable by the proprietor of the design. Once more the reference to "class" is significant. The proprietor of a design registered in any class has the right to prevent its application to any article in that class.

It will be observed that, while the reference to classes is frequent, the Act does not itself define that expression or provide what the classes shall be. This is left to be dealt with by rules, for s. 86 (1) provides :

The Board of Trade may make such general rules and do such things as they think expedient, subject to the provisions of this Act, (a) for regulating the practice of registration under this Act : (b) for classifying goods for the purposes of designs . . .

In exercise of this power, the Board of Trade have from time to time made rules, those now in force being the Designs Rules, 1932 (as amended in 1934 and 1938) to which I have already referred. I need refer only to r. 2 (1) which defines "set" as meaning a number of articles of the same general character ordinarily on sale together or intended to be used together all bearing the same design with or without modifications or variations not sufficient to alter the character or substantially to affect the identity thereof ; to r. 6 which provides that, for the purposes of the registration of designs and of those rules, goods are classified in the manner set out in sched. III thereto, and that, if any doubt arises as to the class to which any particular description of goods belongs, it shall be determined by the Comptroller ; to r. 16, which provides that an application shall state the class in which the design is to be registered, and that, where it is desired to register the same design in more than one class, a separate application shall be made in respect of each class ; and to r. 17, which provides that every application shall state the article or articles to which the design is to be applied and that, where the Comptroller so requires, the applicant shall further state for what purpose the article to which the design is to be applied is used and the material or the predominating material of which the article is made. The classification of goods in sched. III contains 15 classes and is largely based on differences of material. Thus class I, with which this case is concerned, is :

Articles composed wholly of metal or in which metal predominates, and jewellery.

Class II is :

Books and bookbinding of all materials.

Classes III, IV, V and VI all commence with the words "Articles composed wholly of" and then different materials are stated.

I can now state in a few words what is the problem raised by the third ground of challenge by the respondents, which I find it convenient to take first, i.e., that the design was neither new nor original. While it was not contended that the design in question had previously been applied to a fuse, as I will without prejudice call the appellants' article, it was alleged, and, as I think, clearly established by the evidence, that it was common in mechanical engineering practice to provide collars on bars or rods of metal, such as rollers used in rolling mills, or shafts for gear boxes, or bicycle cranks, all of them metal articles falling within class I. In particular, a bicycle crank was exhibited at the trial, and your Lordships have had the advantage of seeing a full scale drawing of it, which left it beyond doubt that the features of shape and configuration which distinguish the design applied to the appellants' fuse had been anticipated in other metal articles. This being so, it would appear to me to follow that the appellants' design was not new or original and that the registration of it was invalid. The appellants seek to avoid this conclusion by a contention which I state as nearly as I can in the language of their formal Case. Design, they say, is defined to mean "features of shape, etc., applied to" an article, and, therefore, the word "design" when used in the Act does not mean "features of shape, etc.," but "a particular kind of article having a particular shape, etc.," and that, accordingly, the words of s. 60 (1) (a), "apply . . . to any article . . . the design" mean "make an article of that particular kind (as specified in the certificate of registration) and having that particular shape, etc." Accordingly, the argument proceeds, registration gives a monopoly only in respect of articles of the particular kind specified in the certificate of registration and such registration neither covers, nor is invalidated by the prior existence of, articles of a different kind which may be fortuitously included in the same class, e.g., because they are also made of metal. It was sought to justify this interpretation of the Act by reference to judicial authority. That I will presently examine, but, since the monopoly is purely a statutory creation, I must first ask what support the appellants' contention finds in the language of the statute. The question that at once occurs to me to ask is : Why, if the monopoly is defined by reference to classes of goods, a matter on which the definition of "copyright" and the provisions of s. 60 are conclusive, some other area of monopoly, which is nowhere to be found in the Act, is to be substituted? It will be observed that, in the language of their formal Case which I have cited, the monopoly is alleged to be limited to articles "of the particular kind," presumably in whatever class they may fall. In the argument before the House other language was used: the monopoly was limited to "similar" articles, or to articles "in the same field," or "of the same type," or "of a similar type." All these expressions have two things in common, the first that they are not to be found in the Act of Parliament, and the second that they are of a vagueness which I should be unwilling to ascribe to the legislature in the creation of a monopolistic right. A

But, my Lords, the further question arises why, if the area of monopoly is not defined by class but by something else, it is necessary to have any classification at all. To this question no satisfactory answer was given. It must, I think, be difficult in this field to reconcile the reward to be given to an inventor of design with industrial freedom. The solution found by the legislature was to give to the Board of Trade the power to make a classification of goods and to control the monopoly by reference to that classification. The Board might have exercised their power by defining classes in the language used by the appellants. Fortunately, as I think, they did not. The classification, which they have in fact adopted, may be considered somewhat arbitrary, e.g., by including all articles composed of metal and jewellery in one class. But so, I think, any classification was bound to be. If from the point of view of industry and manufacture it is unsatisfactory and is capable of improvement, new rules can be made and a new classification substituted. However this may be, I think that, on the plain, unambiguous language of the Act, a design applied to any article in class I, if validly registered, gives a monopoly for that design in respect of any other article in that class, and, as a necessary corollary of that, a design is not new or original and cannot be validly registered in respect of any article in class I if it has already been applied, whether registered or not, to any article in that class. I have, as I have already said, been unable to find any ambiguity in the language of the Act. In particular, the definition of "copyright" leaves no room for doubt. It was suggested that assistance might be got from the fact that articles, to which a design has been applied, are sometimes to be found in sets. For that reason I referred to the definition of "set" in the rules. I have not been able to follow this argument, which does not appear to have been considered in the courts below and there I must leave it. C D E

But, my Lords, counsel for the appellants relied on authority, and particular reliance was placed on what was said by LINDLEY, L.J., in Re Clarke's Design (1). I think that this case has been misread and that ROMER, J., himself fell into error in thinking that he was precluded by it, or by any other case, from holding that:

... any metal object (whatever its purpose) designed to a particular shape is necessarily an anticipation of any other metal object (whatever its purpose) created subsequently in the same shape so as to deprive the latter object of any claim to novelty. F

Your Lordships' attention has not been called to any case (except a case before the Patents Appeal Tribunal) in which it has been expressly decided that a design was registrable within a certain class, notwithstanding that it had already been published in respect of another article within the same class, or to any case in which the contrary had been expressly decided. The respondents urged that every decision proceeded on the basis that the Act and its predecessors were absolutely clear in the sense which I have already put before your Lordships: the appellants countered by saying that the opposite view was implicit in the decisions of the court in such cases as Re Clarke's Design (1). My Lords, I find nothing in the decision of Re Clarke's Design (1) which in any way justifies the appellants' contention. The question there was whether a design which had been registered in class I for a "Lamp for electric lighting, applicable for its shape" was valid. It was challenged on the ground that the design was not new or original in that it was substantially in the old form of lampshade which had been commonly used for gas lights, and this challenge was upheld. From beginning to end of the case I find no reference to what I assume to have been the fact, that the registered design had been previously published in respect of an article falling within the same class I. The single question was whether there were such differences between the registered and the earlier designs that G H novelty or originality could be claimed for the registered design. In the view of the Court of Appeal they could not, but in the course of his judgment LINDLEY, L.J., made certain observations on which the appellants rely. After an examination of the Act then in force, viz., the Act of 1883 as amended by the Act of 1888, LINDLEY, L.J., made a reference, which I think is instructive, to Re Bach's Design (2). In that case, as he pointed out ([1896] 2 Ch. 44), a lampshade in the shape of a rose and made in linen was registered for goods in class XII, and it was held that a lampshade of the same shape, but made in china, which had been registered for goods in class XIV was not entitled to protection. Here was a clear decision approved by LINDLEY, L.J., that, where a design has already been published in respect of goods in one class, novelty cannot be claimed for the same design in respect of the same goods merely because they are made of a different material and fall within another class. To the same effect was Re Read & Greswell's Design (3), but though LINDLEY, L.J., thus thought fit to expound the law in relation to novelty—though, indeed, it may be said that, if the construction of the Act which I have suggested to your Lordships is right, he might easily have disposed of the case by saying that the design could not be novel since it had already been registered in the same class—yet I cannot read his words as rejecting that construction and substituting for the monopoly limited by class a monopoly limited by the nature of the article. I cannot doubt that, if that had been his intention, he would have explained by what process of reasoning he arrived at an interpretation which appears to find no support in the plain language of the statute. I would not throw any doubt on his decision that a design may not be novel though it has not been published in the same class, but I would hold—and I do not think he meant to decide the contrary—that it cannot be novel if it has been published in the same class. Any observations to the contrary cannot, in my opinion, be regarded as good law and the decision of LUXMOORE, J., sitting as judge of the Patents Appeal Tribunal, in Re Gutta Percha and Rubber (London), Ltd. (No. 789,574) Application (9), cannot be supported. Thus, my Lords, I agree with the conclusion reached by ROMER, J., on this part of the case, though I reach it by a somewhat different road.

On the first ground of challenge, which I understand to be based on the contention that the design as applied to the article in question is on so small a scale as to make no appeal to the naked eye (a contention which also found favour with ROMER, J.), I do not think it necessary to express any views. I am not satisfied that on the facts such an issue arises. For the shape or configuration of the appellants' fuse appeared at least to my eye to have very definite characteristics which I recognised as having been anticipated by the earlier published designs. In the circumstances I will reserve my opinion on what may be a difficult question of law, whether the eye, to which alone appeal must be made, is the natural eye unaided by a magnifier.

On the second ground, with which your Lordships have dealt, I will content myself with saying that I fully concur in the reasoning and conclusion of MORTON, L.J.

LORD UTHWATT : My Lords, three objections were taken to the appellants' design—(i) that it is not new or original, (ii) that it is in substance a mere mechanical device, and (iii) that the article in respect of which the design was registered was too minute that the design applied to it did not make an appeal to the eye.

The first objection, on the facts proved, raises the question whether the existence of a design, old as applied to some one article falling within a particular statutory class, necessarily precludes the attribution, for the purposes of the Act, of novelty or originality to that design when newly applied to any other article in the same statutory class, however different the two articles may be in nature and purpose. The matter in issue is not novelty or originality as a general conception, but novelty or originality for the purposes of the Act. A consideration of the relevant provisions of the Act may impose on the words "new or original" occurring in the phrase "a new or original design," as used in the Act, a limitation not suggested by the words themselves. The scheme of the Act is that goods are to be classified for the purposes of design in accordance with rules made by the Board of Trade (s. 86) and that a new or original design submitted by an applicant and accepted for registration is to be registered in some one class and may be registered in more classes than one, the appropriate class or classes being determined by the nature of the article in respect of which the design is submitted by the applicant. No registration other than registration in a class is permissible. The effect of registration is that the registered proprietor obtains for a period of years copyright in the design. Copyright is defined in s. 93 as :

... the exclusive right to apply a design to any article in any class in which the design is registered.

Section 60 (dealing with piracy of a registered design) provides [by sub-s.(1) (a)] that during the existence of copyright in any design it shall not be lawful to apply or cause to be applied to :

... any article in any class of goods in which the design is registered the design or any fraudulent or obvious imitation thereof, except with the licence or written consent of the registered proprietor ...

Unauthorised application of a registered design may be restrained by injunction.

Those are the relevant provisions. It is obvious that the Act cannot be construed so as to permit of there being two or more competing designs registrable in the same class if each such design carried a monopoly as respects the application of the design to all articles falling within that class. That is an impossible position. The fact that only a new or original design may be registered, the circumstance that a design must be registered in a class, and the terms of the definition of copyright and of the provision as to piracy leave but two ways of escape from it. Either (i) novelty and originality for the purposes of the Act must be denied to a design proposed to be registered in a particular statutory class when it is old in its application to any article falling within that class, or (ii) the monopoly conferred by a registered design must be limited by reference to the particular article to which on registration the design is applied. The point at issue, therefore, may be approached by considering whether the definition of copyright and the provision as to piracy, when fairly read, enable the monopoly to be so limited. In my opinion, they do not.

The appellants sought to secure that limitation by putting a particular construction on the definition of design contained in the Act. Design is defined in s. 93 as meaning :

... only the features of shape, configuration, pattern or ornament applied to any article by any industrial ... means ... which in the finished article appeal to and are judged solely by the eye ...

In the appellants' submission, design means, not the features of shape appearing in an article, but a particular kind of article having a particular shape. The article referred to in a design when registered accordingly entered into and formed part of the registered design. In my view, that is not the true construction of the definition. Its whole point is the isolation of the specified features. The use of the word "applied" in the definition is dictated by the reference to the means of application and is not directed to the inclusion in the design of the article featuring the design, but, even if one accepts the appellants' construction of the word "design," the phrase "any article in any class in which the design is registered" appearing in the definition of "copyright" and the provision as to piracy is not susceptible of a meaning which excludes any article that is in the class. All, indeed, that results from considering the appellants' construction of the word "design" in connection with the definition of "copyright" and the provision as to piracy is that an additional argument is furnished for rejecting that construction. The monopoly conferred by a registered design, therefore, in my view, extends to all articles in the class in which the design is registered, and, in my opinion, it follows that a design is not new or original for the purposes of registration in any class if it is old in its application to any article in that class. Judged by that test, the design of the appellants was not "new or original" for the purposes of class I in which it was registered.

The appellants placed much reliance on the judgment of LINDLEY, L.J., in Re Clarke's Design (1). That judgment, when read as a whole, does not afford any solid basis for their contention. LINDLEY, L.J., dealt only with the question which arises when a design, old as regards an article falling within one of the statutory classes, was sought to be registered as respects an article falling within some other statutory class. Some novelty or originality had to be shown in the new application. That novelty might be found if the old design was applied to a different kind of article. Registration of the design in some other class or, without registration, use of the design as regards any article in that other class, would not, therefore, of itself deny novelty or originality to the design in its new application. LINDLEY, L.J., did not at any stage concern himself with discussing the question whether prior use of a design as regards any article falling within a particular statutory class permitted novelty or originality being attributed to that design when applied to any other article in the same statutory class, but it would appear that he thought the answer obvious. I quote the relevant passage ([1896] 2 Ch. 44) :

From the wording of ss. 47, 58 and 60 [which correspond in substance with the relevant sections here, ss. 49, 60 and 93 of the Act of 1907, as amended], it might be thought that if a design had never been applied to articles comprised in one of the classes of goods into which manufactured articles are divided for the purposes of the Act, such design might be protected for that class even if it had been previously applied to goods of a different class.

The suggestion is that novelty in the application of the design to any article falling within the particular statutory class, at any rate, was necessary.

On the second objection I respectfully agree with the observations of the noble and learned Lord on the Woolsack and my noble and learned friend LORD PORTER. With them and the Court of Appeal, I see no reason for excluding from the facts proper to be taken into account the knowledge of the designer of the objects which the design is fitted to serve. His own intentions as to the use to which the design is to be put—and here I differ from some expressions appearing in the judgments of the Court of Appeal—are, taken alone, irrelevant, but those intentions may throw considerable light on the substantive nature of the features appearing in the device represented in the design. The design may give working effect to them. In the present case the designer's intentions throw a flood of light on those features. Every feature in the design was apt to serve a mechanical object and no feature had any other substantial quality. In the sum of the qualities of the design there was a mechanical device and nothing else.

As regards the third objection—which was not argued before this House—I observe only that the design, as registered, depicts merely the relative sizes of its various features and not the actual size of any one of them, and that in the design as used the characteristic features are readily discernible to the naked eye. This objection did not arise on the facts and it is unnecessary to express any opinion on the question of construction raised by it. I would dismiss the appeal.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors : Warren & Warren (for the appellants) ; Stocken, May, Sykes & Dearman, agents for Baldwin, Weeks & Baldwin, Clitheroe (for the respondents).
[Reported by C. ST.J. NICHOLSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

GREENHALGH v. MALLARD.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Somervell and Evershed, L.JJ.), June 16, 17, 1947.]

Conspiracy—Res judicata—Allegation that purpose unlawful—Subsequent action alleging means unlawful.

Practice—Striking out pleading—Statement of claim—Action frivolous and vexatious—Conspiracy—Allegation that purpose unlawful—Subsequent action alleging that means unlawful.

Any series of concerted acts damaging to a plaintiff can give rise to only one cause of action for conspiracy. The unlawfulness resides in the fact of combination. A plaintiff who believes he has a cause of action in conspiracy must, therefore, decide whether he is going to say either (i) that the purpose was unlawful but not that the means were unlawful, or (ii) that the means were unlawful but not that the purpose was unlawful, or, that both purpose and means were unlawful. If he has chosen to put his case in one of the first two ways, he cannot, thereafter, bring the same transactions before the court, put his case in the other way, and say he is relying on a new cause of action. In such circumstances he can be met with a plea of res judicata, or the statement of claim may be struck out on the ground that the action is frivolous and vexatious and an abuse of the process of the court.

[AS TO STRIKING OUT PLEADINGS, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 25, pp. 253-256, paras. 419, 420; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Pleading, pp. 71-92, Nos. 623-777].

Cases referred to :

- (1) Henderson v. Henderson, (1843) 3 Hare 100; 1 L.T.O.S. 410; 21 Digest 174, 276.
- (2) Macdougall v. Knight, (1890) 25 Q.B.D. 1; 59 L.J.Q.B. 517; 63 L.T. 43; 54 J.P. 788; 21 Digest 205, 473.
- (3) Crofter Hand Woven Harris Tweed Co., Ltd. v. Veitch, [1942] 1 All E.R. 142; [1942] A.C. 435; 111 L.J.P.C. 17; 166 L.T. 172; Digest Supp.
- (4) Green v. Weatherill, [1929] 2 Ch. 213; 98 L.J.Ch. 369; 142 L.T. 216; Digest Supp.
- (5) Hoystead v. Commissioner of Taxation, [1926] A.C. 155; 94 L.J.P.C. 79; 134 L.T. 354; Digest Supp.
- (6) Brunsdon v. Humphrey, (1884) 14 Q.B.D. 141; 53 L.J.Q.B. 476; 51 L.T. 529; 49 J.P. 4; 21 Digest 207, 480.
- (7) Mulcahy v. R., (1868), L.R. 3 H.L. 306; 42 Digest 983, 137.

INTERLOCUTORY APPEAL by the defendants from an order of CASSELS, J., dated May 22, 1947, reversing an order of the master that the statement of claim in the action be struck out on the ground that the causes of action alleged therein were res judicata and that the action was frivolous and vexatious and an abuse of the process of the court. The Court of Appeal allowed the appeal. The facts appear in the judgment of SOMERVELL, L.J.

Russell Vick, K.C., and Milmo for the defendants.

R. F. Levy, K.C., and A. S. Diamond for the plaintiff.

SOMERVELL, L.J. : This is an appeal from CASSELS, J., who reversed an order made by a master, that the statement of claim in these proceedings be struck out on the ground that "the causes of action therein alleged are res judicata and that the same are frivolous and vexatious and an abuse of the process of the court." The master based his decision on what was said in Henderson v. Henderson (1) to which I will refer later. The learned judge reversed the decision of the master on the ground that there was a triable issue, and he referred to certain observations made by LORD GREENE, M.R., in earlier proceedings between the parties. The application with which we are concerned is made under R.S.C. Ord. 25, r. 4, and I have borne fully in mind what has so often been said—that, in dismissing an action under that order, the court must be satisfied that there is no chance of the statement of claim succeeding. In Macdougall v. Knight (2), FRY, L.J., said (25 Q.B.D. 10), that in dismissing an action under this procedure on the ground of a plea of res judicata, the court must be satisfied "that a plea of res judicata, if put on the record, must succeed."

As part of an agreement under which the present plaintiff advanced money to assist a company called the Arderne Cinemas, Ltd., in which the defendants had at that time substantial interests as shareholders, the defendants agreed, by what was called a collateral agreement, to vote with and support the plaintiff who became a substantial shareholder. The effect was that, with his own shares and with the shares held by those whom he was entitled to call on to support him, he had control of the company. Troubles arose between the parties in connection with the company, and on July 1, 1941, the plaintiff started proceedings for a declaration that the so-called collateral agreement was valid and enforceable. He succeeded in those proceedings, and judgment was delivered to that effect by MORTON, J., on Oct. 3, 1941. After that judgment the plaintiff sought to take certain steps to which the defendants objected, and the defendants then did that of which the plaintiff complains and with which we are concerned. In Jan., 1942, the plaintiff started proceedings in the Chancery Division against the present defendants and others. In those proceedings the plaintiff alleged that the present defendants "wrongfully and fraudulently conspired together to defeat the said judgment"—i.e., the judgment of MORTON, J., to which I have referred—"and to deprive the plaintiff of the benefits thereof and of his rights under the collateral agreement mentioned in para. 3 hereof." The substance of the alleged conspiracy was that the defendants had transferred most of their shares to others, and thereby reduced the shares which the plaintiff, for voting purposes, could control under the collateral agreement to an extent which deprived him of control of the company. It was also alleged in those proceedings that the defendants, "or some or one of them . . . caused a meeting of directors of the defendant company to be called for Nov. 12, 1941."

A The notice convening the meeting is set out, and it is said that "Prior to the date of such meeting each of them the plaintiff and the said Harold Brooks endeavoured to obtain from the defendant, Harold Titterton"—who is a defendant in the present proceedings—"some information concerning the purpose for which such meeting had been convened and the business proposed to be transacted thereat, but the said defendant in reply wrongfully refused to give such information and untruthfully represented to them that he had no knowledge of such purpose of business." It is, therefore, plain that an untruthful statement in that matter by the defendant, Titterton, was alleged as a relevant allegation in the proceedings which were then taken.

B That case came on before UTHWATE, J., who decided against the plaintiff, and I need only read one sentence from his judgment. The case was put on the basis that this was an unlawful conspiracy to injure the plaintiff, and the learned judge, referring to Crofter Hand Woven Harris Tweed Co., Ltd. v. Veitch (3) said he had "no hesitation in finding that the predominant purpose was not to damage the plaintiff or his property." That disposed of the case as it had been presented to him. The plaintiff appealed from that judgment, and the appeal was dismissed.

C The present statement of claim admittedly deals with the same transactions. It is not suggested that there is any further fact that is relied on. The paragraph setting out the conspiracy is as follows: "Thereupon between Oct. 3 and Nov. 12, 1941, the defendants conspired to deprive the plaintiff of the benefit of the said judgment and of his rights under the collateral agreement by means of fraud, namely, causing a meeting of directors of the company to be called, but procuring the absence of the plaintiff therefrom and attempting to procure the absence of the said Harold Brooks therefrom by fraudulently misrepresenting to them and concealing from them the nature of the business to be transacted thereat, and thereby enabling certain transfers to be done. Counsel for the plaintiff says that this is a different cause of action. It is, of course, true that in the authorities dealing with conspiracy it is pointed out that there are cases in which the conspiracy is unlawful in that its purpose is unlawful, viz., to injure the plaintiff, in a way which cannot be justified by any legitimate purpose of the defendants in what they do, and that in other cases the conspiracy may give rise to a cause of action because the means used are unlawful. In other words, a conspiracy may give rise to a claim for damages if either the end or the means, or both, are wrongful, but, in my opinion, a plaintiff who believes he has a cause of action in conspiracy must make up his mind whether he is going to rely on one or other or both of these allegations—whether he is going to say that the purpose was unlawful, but he does not suggest that the means are unlawful, or that the means were unlawful, but he does not suggest that the purpose was unlawful; or that both are unlawful. But if he has chosen to rely on, and put his case in, one of those ways, he cannot, in my view, thereafter bring the same transactions before the court and say that he is relying on a new cause of action."

D That, I think, would be enough to dispose of this case, but counsel for the defendants put his case in two ways, and I will deal with them. He relied, first, on res judicata, and then said that, if there was any doubt about that, he was entitled to succeed on the ground that it would be vexatious and an abuse of the process of the court to allow this transaction to be brought before the court again on the basis of the present statement of claim. I think that on the authorities to which I will refer it would be accurate to say that res judicata for this purpose is not confined to the issues which the court is actually asked to decide, but that it covers issues or facts which are so clearly part of the subject-matter of the litigation and so clearly could have been raised that it would be an abuse of the process of the court to allow a new proceeding to be started in respect of them.

In Green v. Weatherill (4) ([1929] 2 Ch. 221), MAUGHAM, J., quoted some observations by WIGRAM, V.C., in Henderson v. Henderson (1) (3 Hare 114):

I believe I state the rule of the court correctly, when I say, that where a given matter becomes the subject of litigation in, and of adjudication by, a court of competent jurisdiction, the court requires the parties to that litigation to bring forward their whole case, and will not (except under special circumstances) permit the same parties to open the same subject of litigation in respect of matter which might have been brought forward as part of the subject in contest, but which was not brought forward only because they have, from negligence, inadvertence, or even accident, omitted part of their case. The plea of res judicata applies, except in special cases, not only to points upon which the court was actually required by the parties to form an opinion and pronounce a judgment, but to every point which properly belonged to the subject of litigation and which the parties, exercising reasonable diligence, might have brought forward at the time.

MAUGHAM, J., goes on to refer to the fact that that passage had been approved by the Privy Council in Hoystead v. Commissioner of Taxation (5) ([1926] A.C. 170). Applying that principle here, and, perhaps, having particular regard to the second sentence in it, it seems to me that one could not find an issue or a way of putting a case which more clearly came within the principle as there laid down. Counsel for the plaintiff relied on Brunsdon v. Humphrey (6). That was a case in which damage to goods and injury to the person were occasioned by the same act of negligence, and the plaintiff brought an action in the county court for damage to his goods (in that case a cab), and recovered the amount he claimed, and later he brought an action in the High Court of Justice against the defendant claiming damages for personal injury. LORD COLERIDGE, C.J., dissented, so it may be regarded as a somewhat border-line case, but the majority held "that the action in the High Court was maintainable, and was not barred by the previous proceedings in the county court." It is, however, to be observed that in that case there were, so far as I can see, two separate causes of action in the ordinary sense in which that word is used, in that, at any rate, the cases could have been put as trespass to the person and as trespass to goods, and it seems to me that for that reason counsel for the plaintiff cannot successfully put forward that case as covering as a matter of law the circumstances which we have to consider. In the present proceedings, as in the former proceedings, the plaintiff is alleging a conspiracy to injure. In the first proceedings he alleged that the defendants fraudulently conspired. In these proceedings he alleges that they conspired by means of fraud. I will accept fully what was said by LORD GREENE, M.R., in a passage to which I will refer, that that is a different way of putting forward or basing the issue of conspiracy in respect of the transactions which are complained of, but the means of fraud now relied on were expressly pleaded in the first action, viz., the untruthful statement by the secretary, and if there ever was a point which was apparent and open to be raised if it was desired to raise it it is this point which counsel now seeks to make the basis of fresh proceedings. Counsel relied on some observations by LORD GREENE, M.R., at the hearing of the appeal. Mr. BEYFUS, who appeared for the plaintiff in the Court of Appeal, sought to advance an argument that, while accepting the judge's finding as to the purpose of the defendants, the plaintiff ought to succeed on the basis of a conspiracy to effect a legal purpose by unlawful means, and the unlawful means or illegal means suggested were two. It was said there was a breach by the defendants of their statutory duty in failing to call a meeting that the plaintiff had requisitioned. That matter was not pleaded and it is not relied on in the present proceedings. Secondly, it was said that there was the statement which was dishonestly made by the secretary of the company to the plaintiff. That is the statement to which I have already referred and which was referred to in the original statement of claim. LORD GREENE, M.R., said that this way of putting the case—that the conspiracy was based not on the purpose, but on the alleged unlawful means—could and should have been properly pleaded as an alternative conspiracy and clearly put before the court and investigated in the evidence, and that it was too late to raise it in the Court of Appeal. I, of course, agree that that way of putting the case should have been pleaded and clearly put before the court, but reading and reading carefully, as I have, what the MASTER OF THE ROLLS said—and no one suggests that he had the present point in mind—I agree with counsel for the defendants in that I think the general tenor of his remarks is that this was a way of putting the case which it was clearly open to the plaintiff to put forward on the series of transactions which he was asking the court to investigate, and, if that is the general tenor of what was in the MASTER OF THE ROLLS's mind, it seems to me to support the conclusion to which I have come. For these reasons I think this appeal must be allowed and the order of the master restored.

A EVERSHED, L.J.: I agree. CASSELS, J., thought that the observations of the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, to which SOMERVELL, L.J., has referred, were directed to the very point which has been argued before us on this appeal. I do not so interpret the language of the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, and I agree with what has fallen from SOMERVELL, L.J., upon that point. It is, of course, true that in so far as a breach of statutory duty on the part of a director was sought to be relied on by MR. BEYFUS, that was a matter that had not been pleaded at all in the first action. It was a point which was born and lived and flourished and died, so far as I know, in the course of MR. BEYFUS's argument. It was not pleaded in the present case either. It is also clear that at the trial before UTHWATT, J., the use which the plaintiff sought to make of the facts constituting, or alleged to constitute, evidence of conspiracy was that from those facts the court should infer that the conspirators combined to do something unlawful in its purpose or end, and it is now sought, as it was argued by MR. BEYFUS, to make, as it were, a re-deployment of those facts and to put the case thus—that, whatever the justification for the purpose, the means, or some of the means, employed were unlawful. The MASTER OF THE ROLLS pointed out that that was a different case in the sense of a different way of seeking to make use of the facts pleaded. That I think, if I may say so, is plain when one considers the judgment of UTHWATT, J., and the inference one must draw from it as to the way in which the case was fought, but that, in my judgment, has nothing to do with the present question, whether it is right now, according to principle, that the plaintiff should be allowed in another action to rely on the same series of facts, deployed differently, to assert a conspiracy and to recover the same damage which he has sought to recover in the first action. Mr. Levy's argument assumes, I think, that a series of concerted acts may give rise to two quite separate causes of action, each called a conspiracy, viz., one where the end or predominant purpose of the concert lacks justification, and is, therefore, unlawful, and the second where, the predominant object or the end being lawful or justifiable, unlawful means are employed. In my judgment, that is a fallacy. Any series of concerted acts damaging to a plaintiff can, in my view, only give rise to one cause of action for conspiracy. The unlawfulness resides in the fact of combination. Such a combination willfully to do acts injurious to another's interest, and, in fact, damaging to him, may be actionable as a conspiracy. Such a combination may, however, be justified if the predominant purpose of the parties to the combination is legitimate: for example, the promotion of their own business interests. On the other hand, such a justification may not be available to the parties to the combination if the means which they employ to gain their end are unlawful. In his speech in Crofter Hand Woven Harris Tweed Co., Ltd. v. Veitch (3) ([1942] 1 All E.R. 157), LORD WRIGHT cites the classical definition of "conspiracy"—that is, of criminal conspiracy—by WILLES, J., in Mulcahy v. R. (7) (L.R. 3 H.L. 317):

"A conspiracy consists not merely in the intention of two or more, but in the agreement of two or more to do an unlawful act, or to do a lawful act by unlawful means." This must be supplemented by observing that, though the crime is constituted by the agreement, the civil right of action is not complete unless the conspirators do act, in pursuance of their agreement to the damage of the plaintiff.

H The essence of any claim is the fact of combination. If, therefore, in any case conspiracy is alleged, the subject of the litigation consists, in my view, of the acts done in combination, and whether it is alleged that these acts, lacking justification in their object, have caused damage to the plaintiff, or that, notwithstanding a legitimate purpose, unlawful means have been employed and the plaintiff has been consequently damaged, both the cause of action and the damage flowing therefrom are the same in each case. In my view, therefore, and without the need for further analysis, if in one action for damages for conspiracy acts done in combination are alleged, it is an abuse of the process of the court, and contrary to the principle that in the public interest there should be an end to litigation which may be regarded as an extension of the strict rule of res judicata, to rely in the second action on the same concerted acts, even though in the first action the claim was formulated on the basis of absence of justification in the end only, without regard, or particular regard, to the means, and in the second action the means are impugned as unlawful without challenge to the legitimacy of the end or purpose. For these reasons, in addition to those given by SOMERVELL, L.J., I think this appeal should be allowed.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors: S. A. Bailey & Co. (for the plaintiff); Pritchard, Englefield & Co., agents for Field, Cunningham & Co., Manchester (for the defendants).

[Reported by R. L. ZIAR, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

WOOLF v. COLLIS REMOVAL SERVICE.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Cohen and Asquith, L.JJ.), June 3, 4, July 8, 1947.]

Arbitration—Stay of legal proceedings—Deviation from terms of contract—Whether arbitration clause displaced—Application of clause to claim framed in tort—Arbitration Act, 1889 (c. 49), s. 4.

In his statement of claim the plaintiff alleged that the defendants had contracted to remove his furniture and effects from London to their store in M., and there safely to keep and take care of them, and that, in breach of that contract, they had removed the goods to a different destination, a farm in B., where some of them were lost and others damaged. Further, or alternatively, the plaintiff alleged that the goods were lost and damaged owing to the negligence of the defendants in using, when the goods arrived at B., an unsuitable place in which to store them and guarding them inefficiently. The contract was in the form of a written estimate providing for the removal of the goods to M. Indorsed on its back were a number of conditions; "exceptions clauses," mainly limiting the liability of the defendants; and an arbitration clause in the following terms: "If the customer makes any claims upon or counterclaim to any claim by the contractors, the same shall in case of difference be referred to the decision of two arbitrators . . . and the making of an award shall be a condition precedent to any right of action or counterclaim." Before taking any step in the action the defendants applied, under s. 4 of the Arbitration Act, 1889, for a stay, which was granted by the master, and his decision was upheld by the judge in chambers. On appeal:—

HELD: (i) although, if the "deviation" alleged were proved, the "exceptions clauses" would become inapplicable and inoperative (Lilley v. Doubleday (1881) (7 Q.B.D. 510) and Gibaud v. Great Eastern Railway Co. ([1921] 2 K.B. 426) applied), there were radical distinctions between "exceptions clauses" (inserted for the protection or benefit of one party) and arbitration clauses, (inserted as a method of settling disputes), and the "deviation" did not necessarily displace the whole contract, including the arbitration clause (Heyman v. Darwins, Ltd. ([1942] 1 All E.R. 337) and Hain SS. Co., Ltd. v. Tate & Lyle, Ltd. ([1936] 2 All E.R. 597) applied).

(ii) the fact that the arbitration clause was one-sided did not divest it of its character as an arbitration clause.

(iii) even if the claim in negligence was a claim in tort and not under the contract, yet there was a sufficiently close connection between that claim and the transaction to bring the claim within the arbitration clause. (Polemis v. Furness Withey & Co., Ltd. (5) ([1921] 3 K.B. 426) applied).

[AS TO STAY OF LEGAL PROCEEDINGS, see HALSBURY, Vol. 1, pp. 637-644, paras. 1084-1092; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 2, pp. 361-377, Nos. 311-411.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Gibaud v. Great Eastern Ry. Co., [1921] 2 K.B. 426; 90 L.J.K.B. 535; 125 L.T. 76; Digest Supp.
- (2) Lilley v. Doubleday, (1881) 7 Q.B.D. 510; 51 L.J.Q.B. 310; 44 L.T. 814; 46 J.P. 708; 3 Digest 77, 163.

- (3) Heyman v. Darwins, Ltd., [1942] 1 All E.R. 337; [1942] A.C. 356; 111 L.J.K.B. 241; 166 L.T. 306; Digest Supp.
 (4) Hain SS: Co., Ltd. v. Tate & Lyle, Ltd., [1936] 2 All E.R. 597; 155 L.T. 177; 55 Lloyd L.R. 159; Digest Supp.
 (5) Re Polemis & Furness, Withy & Co., Ltd., [1921] 3 K.B. 560; sub nom. Polemis v. Furness, Withy & Co., Ltd., 90 L.J.K.B. 1353; 126 L.T. 154; 41 Digest 419, 2620.

A INTERLOCUTORY APPEAL by the plaintiff from an order of SELLERS, J., dated Apr. 22, 1947, staying further proceedings under s. 4 of the Arbitration Act, 1889. The facts appear in the judgment of the court delivered by ASQUITH, L.J. The appeal was dismissed.

Heathcote-Williams for the plaintiff.

A. W. Roskill for the defendants.

B Cur. adv. vult.

C July 8. ASQUITH, L.J., read the following judgment of the court. This is an appeal from an order of SELLERS, J., affirming an order of a master directing that all further proceedings in this action should be stayed, under s. 4 of the Arbitration Act, 1889. In the first two paragraphs of his statement of claim the plaintiff alleges that the defendants contracted to remove certain furniture and other effects from his house in London to the defendant's "Quarry" Store, Marlow, Buckinghamshire, and there safely to keep and take care of the same, and that, in breach of such contract, they removed the goods to a different destination, i.e., Hawes Hill Park, Braywood, Berkshire, where some of them were lost and others were damaged. Further or alternatively, he alleges that the goods were lost and damaged owing to the negligence of the defendants in using, when the goods had arrived at Hawes Hill Farm, Braywood, an unsuitable place (a disused piggery) in which to store them and guarding them inefficiently. He claims damages. Before taking any step in the action, the defendants applied, under s. 4 of the Arbitration Act, for a stay which was granted by the master, his decision being upheld by the judge in chambers. The plaintiff argues that there was in effect no jurisdiction to stay the action and to refer these issues to arbitration, and this, as we understand it, on two broad grounds.

E The contract takes the form of a written "estimate," providing for removal of the goods to the Quarry Store, Marlow. Indorsed on its back are a number of conditions, practically all of them limiting the liability of the removers. No. 20 of the indorsed conditions is, however, an arbitration clause, the precise terms of which we indicate later. The plaintiff's first broad point is that the second paragraph of the statement of claim alleges a "deviation" or fundamental departure from the contract, and that, if such an allegation were proved, the effect would be to deprive the defendants of the benefit of the indorsed conditions, including, as he contends, the arbitration clause. In other words, he argues that the issue raised in these paragraphs is one which, if determined in his favour, would make the arbitration clause inoperative or, put slightly differently, his proposition is that a dispute cannot be referred to arbitration under an arbitration clause the continued existence of which is itself the subject, or necessarily involved in the subject, of the dispute. The plaintiff's case was, indeed, put higher, it being argued that "deviation" displaced the whole contract, ab initio and for all purposes.

G In the words of SCRUTTON, L.J., in Gibaud v. Great Eastern Ry. Co. (1) ([1921] 2 K.B. 435), it is a familiar principle of law that :

H "... if you undertake to do a thing in a certain way, or to keep a thing in a certain place, with certain conditions protecting it, and have broken the contract by not doing the thing contracted for in the way contracted for, or not keeping the article in the place in which you have contracted to keep it, you cannot rely on the conditions which were only intended to protect you if you carried out the contract in the way in which you had contracted to do it.

The learned judge cites Lilley v. Doubleday (2), where GROVE, J., said (7 Q.B.D. 511) :

If a bailee elects to deal with the property entrusted to him in a way not authorised by the bailor, he takes upon himself the risks of so doing, except where the risk is independent of his acts and inherent in the property itself.

In Lilley v. Doubleday (2) the facts were that warehousemen contracted, under a contract which limited their liability to loss by specified causes, to keep the plaintiff's goods in store A., but, in fact, kept them in store B. When in store B. they were in part lost and in part damaged by fire, without negligence by the warehousemen. It was held that the latter could not rely on the conditions limiting their liability, since these applied only to goods kept in the store authorised by the contract.

The facts alleged in the statement of claim in this case are very similar. The goods, according to the pleading, were carried to and stored in a place and a store unauthorised by the contract. If so, any "exceptions clauses" (as, for brevity, we will call clauses limiting the carrier's or warehouseman's liability) would, no doubt, become inapplicable and inoperative. It is, however, important to observe that the argument which we are considering makes the vital assumption that arbitration clauses are, or at all events, this arbitration clause is, on the same footing for the relevant purpose as "exceptions clauses" and in the event of a "deviation" share their fate. This, we think, is a fallacy. Leaving aside for the moment the special wording of this particular arbitration clause, we are satisfied that "deviation" or its equivalent in contracts not for carriage—we will, for brevity, call both "deviation"—will not in itself displace an arbitration clause. "Deviation" is a very common phenomenon in contracts of carriage, especially in carriage by sea, and the theme of a vast number of reported cases. In a large proportion at least of these there were (a) an "exceptions clause" or "exceptions clauses" and (b) an arbitration clause. Yet counsel for the plaintiff was unable to cite any case in which the fact or averment of "deviation" was held to displace the arbitration clause and to afford a ground for refusing a stay of the action. This, it may be said, is negative and inconclusive. Affirmatively, however, it appears to us to emerge from two decisions of the House of Lords (a) that "deviation" does not necessarily displace the whole contract, including any arbitration clause, and (b) that there are radical distinctions for this purpose between "exceptions clauses" and arbitration clauses.

This last point appears in the following passages in Heyman v. Darwins, Ltd. (3) ([1942] 1 All E. R. 337) from the speeches of LORD MACMILLAN and LORD PORTER. At p. 347 LORD MACMILLAN is speaking of repudiation of a contract, in the sense, not of a denial of the existence of the contract, but of conduct evincing an intention no longer to be bound by it. He is speaking of a repudiation in this sense, and, no doubt, of such a repudiation which has been accepted, for it is well settled that an unaccepted repudiation has no legal consequences whatsoever. So speaking, he says:

The contract is not put out of existence, though all further performance of the obligations undertaken by each party in favour of the other may cease. It survives for the purpose of measuring the claims arising out of the breach, and the arbitration clause survives for determining the mode of their settlement. The purposes of the contract have failed, but the arbitration clause is not one of the purposes of the contract.

LORD PORTER, at p. 361, accepts LORD MACMILLAN's statement and for himself also emphasises the distinction between "exceptions clauses" (stipulations inserted for the protection or benefit of one party) and arbitration clauses:

As my noble and learned friend LORD MACMILLAN has said, the arbitration clause is inserted as a method of settling disputes, and is not imposed as a term in favour of one party or the other.

Ergo, in the event of a repudiation, the arbitration clause, subject to any exceptional wording, will survive. This is spoken in relation to repudiation. Does it apply to "deviation"? We think that it does. That "deviation" whatever else it may be, is repudiation of the contract, and repudiation in an extreme form, appears to us plain both in principle and from the decision of the House of Lords in Tate & Lyle, Ltd. v. Hain Steamship Company, Ltd. (4). LORD ATKIN's opinion (concurring in by LORDS THANKERTON and MACMILLAN and not, we think, materially dissented from by LORD WRIGHT or LORD MAUGHAM) is concerned largely with the question whether, assuming a "deviation" is a kind of repudiation, it needs, like an ordinary repudiation, to be accepted by the party not in fault in order that it may have legal consequences. He holds that it does and that, if, and only if, it is accepted, do the exceptions clauses become inoperative, but nowhere does any doubt appear that deviation is a species of repudiation. Indeed, it is hardly possible to imagine a clearer way in which a carrier can "evince the intention of not being bound" to perform the transit contracted for than his act in performing a different and inconsistent transit and putting it out of his power to perform the stipulated one.

A If "deviation" equals repudiation, then, under the decision in Heyman v. Darwins, Ltd. (3) which is binding on this court, the arbitration clause survives, although exceptions clauses, if the implied repudiation is accepted, may become a dead letter. It is argued, however (and this is the last point under this branch of the case), that this particular arbitration clause is in effect an "exceptions clause," since it is one-sided in its operation and confers advantages or liberties on the defendants which it denies to the plaintiff. The clause reads as follows :

B If the customer makes any claims upon or counterclaim to any claim made by the contractors, the same shall in case of difference be referred to the decision of two arbitrators (one to be appointed by each party). All the provisions of the Arbitration Act, 1889, or any modification in force for the time being, shall apply. The arbitration shall, unless otherwise agreed, be held in the town in which the contractor's office at or from which the contract was made is situate, and the making of an award shall be a condition precedent to any right of action or counterclaim.

C It is argued for the plaintiff that, while the clause purports to compel the customer to refer to arbitration claims against the carrier, it leaves the carrier free, as the customer is not, to pursue claims on his part against the customer by action at law. It is, therefore, so the argument runs, in substance a clause protecting the carrier and so far analogous to an exceptions clause.

D We think that the answer of counsel for the defendants to this contention prevails, viz., that the clause is in essence mere machinery, even if it be one-sided machinery. There is nothing in its unequal operation to divest it, in our view, of the character attributed to arbitration clauses in general in the speeches of LORDS MACMILLAN and PORTER in Heyman v. Darwins, Ltd. (3) as distinguishing them from "exceptions clauses."

E The second broad point on which the plaintiff relied was that, although in his statement of claim a claim sounding in contract is given pride of place, yet there is a further or alternative claim for negligence, and that such alternative claim cannot be referred to arbitration under the arbitration clause since it is not made under the contract of which that clause forms part. It is contended that this alternative claim is made either in pure tort or quasi-contract, but, at all events, not under the contract itself. The reasoning which led us to our conclusion on the first point is, in our view, equally fatal to this one. While

F it is true that, without any special contract, the mandatory, when once he had entered on the execution of the task which he has undertaken, is bound, apart from special contract, to exercise reasonable care and diligence, none the less, where there is a special contract, that contract defines the measure of the obligation. In the present case there is an obligation of diligence in the contract itself, pleaded in para. 2 of the statement of claim, and apparently co-extensive with the non-contractual obligation of diligence. The effect of "deviation,"

G as we have seen, is not to put an end to the contract for all purposes, but, when accepted, to deprive the mandatory of the benefit of any exceptions in that contract limiting the liability of the mandatory under it. The deviation in the present case, if it took place as alleged, was accepted as a repudiation by the issue of the writ, but the claim in negligence, like the alternative claim in this action, arose out of acts done before the issue of the writ, i.e., before the acceptance of the repudiation. The arbitration clause remains in force to settle all

H such claims if they fall within its ambit.

The arbitration clause in the present case is, as to the subject-matter of claims within its ambit, in the widest possible terms. That clause is not in terms limited to claims arising "under" the contract. It speaks simply of "claims." This, of course, does not mean that the term applies to claims of every imaginable kind. Claims which are entirely unrelated to the transaction covered by the contract would no doubt be excluded; but we are of opinion that, even if the claim in negligence is not a claim "under the contract," yet there is a sufficiently close connection between that claim and that transaction to bring the claim within the arbitration clause even though framed technically in tort. A claim so framed was treated in Polemis v. Furness, Withy & Co., Ltd. (5) as falling within an arbitration clause in the contract, which provided that, should any dispute arise between the owners and charterers, the matters in dispute should be referred to three persons in London. For these reasons, the appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors: Chamberlain & Co. (for the plaintiff); Zabell & Co. (for the defendants).

[Reported by C. N. BEATTIE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

HYETT v. GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Tucker, Somervell and Evershed, L.JJ.), July 1, 2, 1947.]

Negligence—Invitee—Duty of owner of premises to secure safety thereof—Novus actus interveniens—Voluntary assumption of risk—Attempting to put out fire on invitor's property.

The plaintiff, who was employed by a firm of repairers of privately owned railway wagons, was issued, by the defendants, with an authority to enter on their premises to carry out his duties. While engaged, at a siding, in repairing a privately owned wagon, which, being subject to requisition and forming part of a "pool" of rolling stock, could have been used by the defendants for their own purposes, the plaintiff and a companion saw smoke arising from one of the defendants' own wagons in the same siding and went to investigate. They found the floor of the wagon, which contained drums of paraffin oil, in flames, and after they had tried without success to extinguish the fire, the companion went for assistance, while the plaintiff tried to get some of the drums out of the wagon by using the skids. While he was doing so, one of the drums exploded, and the plaintiff suffered injury. The defendants, by their servants, had known there was a paraffin leakage in the wagon and had allowed the wagon to remain in the siding for some days in that condition:—

HELD: (i) the plaintiff, being on the premises on business in which both he and the defendants had an interest, was an invitee, and the defendants, knowing of the existence of the leaking paraffin, failed to take reasonable steps to secure the safety of the premises on which the plaintiff was working.

(ii) the act of the plaintiff was not novus actus interveniens breaking the chain of causation, but was the kind of act which the defendants might reasonably have anticipated as likely to follow from their act of negligence in leaving the leaking paraffin at the siding.

Haynes v. Harwood ([1935] 1 K.B. 146), and Steel v. Glasgow Iron and Steel Co., Ltd. (1944 S.C. 237) applied.

[EDITORIAL NOTE.] It has for long been established that when the plaintiff has, under an exigency caused by the defendant's misconduct, consciously and deliberately faced a risk, even of death, to rescue another person from imminent danger of injury or death, whether the person endangered is one to whom he owes a duty of protection as a member of his family, or is a mere stranger to whom he owes no such special duty, he is not deemed to have voluntarily assumed a risk, nor will he be deemed guilty of contributory negligence. The present case would seem to be the first case in which the principle has been applied to an attempt to save property.

As to EFFECT OF IMMINENT DANGER JUSTIFYING UNUSUAL COURSE, see HALSBURY, Halsham Edn., Vol. 23, p. 688, para. 971.]

Cases referred to:

(1) Haynes v. Harwood, [1935] 1 K.B. 146; 104 L.J.K.B. 63; 152 L.T. 121; Digest Supp.

(2) Hadley v. Baxendale, (1854) 9 Exch. 341; 23 L.J. Ex. 179; 23 L.J.O.S. 69; 17 Digest 93, 101.

(3) Steel v. Glasgow Iron and Steel Co., Ltd., 1944 S.C. 237; Digest Supp.

APPEAL by the plaintiff from a decision of HILBERY, J., given at Monmouth Assizes on Nov. 11, 1946. The facts appear in the judgment of TUCKER, L.J.

Beney, K.C., and H. Salter Nichols for the plaintiff.

Melford Stevenson, K.C., and R. C. Hutton for the defendants.

TUCKER, L.J. : This is an appeal by the plaintiff from a judgment of HILBERY, J., given at the Monmouth Assizes, on Nov. 11, 1946. The plaintiff claimed damages for negligence in respect of an injury that he had suffered on the defendants' railway sidings, known as "cripple sidings," at Gloucester on Mar. 5, 1945. The plaintiff was employed by a firm of wagon repairers called Wagon Repairs Ltd., who repaired privately owned wagons. On Mar. 5, 1945, the plaintiff, in the course of his duty to his employers, Wagon Repairs, Ltd., went to do some repairs to a privately owned wagon, i.e., a wagon not belonging to the defendant railway company on the cripple sidings. The evidence was that he was directed or requested so to do by one of the defendants' officials, and, having done some of the repairs at midday, he, with another man named Price, knocked off work. As they went off, they saw some smoke coming from a wagon which belonged to the defendants and was situated on the same sidings some 22 or 23 yards away from the wagon on which they had been working. The plaintiff and Price climbed into the wagon which contained drums of paraffin oil, and found that there were flames on the floor. Price endeavoured to put the fire out with his coat, but failed to do so. The plaintiff sent Price to get help, and, as the fire was getting control, tried to get some of the drums out of the truck by opening the side of the truck and using the skids. As he was doing so, owing to heat from the fire, a drum of paraffin which he was handling exploded and he received injuries to his leg.

In the court below the case proceeded very largely on the issue whether the plaintiff was an invitee or a licensee. It appeared that the plaintiff was provided by the defendants with a card, which is in this language :

Subject to the conditions and limitations shown on the back hereof, wagon repairer Herbert Hyett in the employ of Wagon Repairs, Ltd., is authorised to enter and be upon the following property.

Then there is a description of the property, and on the back there are certain conditions. In view of the terms of that document and the nature of the business on which the plaintiff was engaged, the learned judge came to the conclusion that he was a mere licensee. In this court counsel for the defendants brought to our notice the fact that on the date in question the wagon on which the plaintiff was working was subject to requisitions and formed part of a pool of rolling stock, and one of the features of the pool was that the defendants could have used this private wagon and other private wagons for their own purposes. It is unfortunate that that position was not brought to the notice of the learned judge who tried the case, but, in my view, that fact makes it quite clear that the relationship of invitor and invitee existed between the defendants and the plaintiff. Manifestly he was on the defendant company's premises on business in which both he and the defendants had an interest. It was, therefore, the duty of the defendants to take reasonable steps to see that the premises on which he had to work were reasonably safe.

The plaintiff, therefore, has to establish that the defendants have been guilty of negligence in that they failed to take reasonable steps to secure the safety of the premises. It is said, first, that the evidence shows that on Friday, Mar. 2, the defendants, by their servants or servant, were made aware of the fact that there was paraffin leaking from one of their own trucks which they had put on the cripple sidings and that they allowed the truck to remain there over the week-end in that condition, and, furthermore, there were engines shunting in the locality, sparks from which would be potentially dangerous in view of the leaking paraffin. If it is established that the defendants knew, or if the facts are such that the only reasonable inference is that their servants must have known, that during this week-end there was leaking paraffin coming from one of their trucks in the vicinity of the lines on which engines were shunting and in an area where men might be expected to be smoking and discarding their cigarettes and matches, it seems to me that they must be taken to be aware that the premises were not reasonably safe in that there was a real probability of fire resulting from the leaking paraffin. If the evidence is as I have indicated, the defendants were guilty of negligence, and the conclusion I have drawn is that, knowing of the existence of this leaking paraffin, the defendants failed to take reasonable steps to secure the safety of the premises on which the plaintiff was working. Therefore, subject to the question whether the act of the plaintiff in trying to put out the fire was novus actus interveniens, which would break the chain of causation, resulting from the defendants' negligence, I should be disposed to hold that the plaintiff has established his cause of action.

With regard to the novus actus interveniens, the position is put very concisely in the judgment of GREER, L.J., in Haynes v. Harwood (1) in a passage in which he says ([1935] 1 K.B. 156) :

If what is relied upon as novus actus interveniens is the very kind of thing which is likely to happen if the want of care which is alleged takes place, the principle embodied in the maxim is no defence. The whole question is whether or not, to use the words of the leading case, Hadley v. Baxendale (2), the accident can be said to be "the natural and probable result" of the breach of duty. If it is the very thing which ought to be anticipated by a man leaving his horses, or one of the things likely to arise as a consequence of his wrongful act, it is no defence; it is only a step in the way of proving that the damage is the result of the wrongful act.

In Steel v. Glasgow Iron & Steel Co. (3), the Lord Justice-Clerk (Cooper) said (1944 S.C. 251) :

... my conclusion ... is ... that, taking the whole circumstances into consideration, his intervention, looked at as a whole, was reasonable and justifiable and a natural and probable consequence of the defender's negligence which ought reasonably to have been foreseen.

In my opinion, those are the tests which are to be applied to the facts of any particular case. It is, no doubt, material to consider in every case whether or not it is life or property which is in danger. It is material to consider the relationship of the plaintiff who intervenes in the matter to the property or person in peril. It is relevant to consider the degree of danger and risk, and so forth. Those are all matters to be weighed in the balance in applying these tests. The conclusion at which I have arrived is that, if a man, who is working on premises as of right, sees a fire starting on those premises, whether or not the property of his employers is in immediate peril, it is reasonable to anticipate that he will take the necessary steps to put out the fire. Of course, it is always very material to consider how far the fire has advanced, and so forth. In the present case the evidence was that the plaintiff and his companion merely saw smoke coming from the wagon, they climbed up, saw flames on the floor, and tried to put them out, and when one man had gone for help, the plaintiff tried to get the barrels out of the wagon. I do not think that any of those steps were unreasonable or were such as should not have been anticipated as likely to follow in the case of a fire. I have taken into account the facts relied on by the defendants that some 90 or 100 yards away there was assistance which could have been obtained, but, if a man is going to act at all in a case of fire, he must act swiftly, and applying the tests laid down in the two cases to which I have referred, the conclusion I have reached is that the act of the plaintiff was not novus actus interveniens breaking the chain of causation, but was the kind of act which the defendants might reasonably have anticipated as likely to follow from their act of negligence in leaving the leaking paraffin on this siding.

For these reasons I have come to a different conclusion from that arrived at by the learned judge, but I would repeat again that the case was fought before him on a totally different issue, viz., whether or not the plaintiff was an invitee or a licensee. In my opinion, the appeal succeeds.

SOMERVELL, L.J. : I agree.

EVERSHED, L.J. : I also agree.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors : Rowley Ashworth & Co. (for the plaintiff) ; M. H. B. Gilmour (for the defendants).

[Reported by R. L. ZIAR, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

LANCASTER v. LONDON PASSENGER TRANSPORT BOARD.
 [COURT OF APPEAL (Tucker, Somervell and Evershed, L.JJ.), June 30,
 July 1, 1947.]

Master and Servant—Common employment—Linesman and trolley omnibus driver.

While on a tower wagon, engaged in repairing the overhead gear which supplied current to the defendants' trolley omnibuses, the plaintiff, who was employed by the defendants as a linesman, was injured through the negligence of the driver of one of the defendants' trolley omnibuses.

HELD: the plaintiff's safety depended to a special degree on the care and skill of the drivers of all trolley omnibuses proceeding along the route, and the mere fact that there might be other vehicles which would constitute a danger to the plaintiff did not make the danger from a trolley omnibus an "ordinary traffic risk." The plaintiff was, therefore, in common employment with the driver of the trolley omnibus, and the defendants were not liable.

Dictum of LORD SIMON in Miller v. Glasgow Corporation ([1947] 1 All E.R. 1) applied.

Decision of HENN COLLINS, J. ([1946] 2 All E.R. 612) affirmed.

[AS TO COMMON EMPLOYMENT, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 22, pp. 191-194, paras. 322-328; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 34, pp. 207-220, Nos. 1697-1824.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Miller v. Glasgow Corporation, [1947] 1 All E.R. 1; 176 L.T. 142; [1947] L.J.R. 239.
- (2) Radcliffe v. Ribble Motor Services, Ltd., [1939] 1 All E.R. 637; [1939] A.C. 215; 108 L.J.K.B. 320; 160 L.T. 420; Digest Supp.
- (3) Metcalf v. London Passenger Transport Board, [1939] 2 All E.R. 542; 108 L.J.K.B. 733; 160 L.T. 599; 103 J.P. 246; Digest Supp.
- (4) Morgan v. Vale of Neath Ry. Co. (1865), L.R. 1 Q.B. 149; 5 B. & S. 736; 35 L.J.Q.B. 23; 13 L.T. 564; 30 J.P. 36; 34 Digest 212, 1750.

APPEAL by the plaintiff from a judgment of HENN COLLINS, J., without a jury, dated Nov. 6, 1946, and reported [1946] 2 All E.R. 612.

The plaintiff was injured on Sept. 10, 1945, while he was working on the platform of a tower wagon, repairing wires which supported the wires suspended along the highway from which trolley omnibuses derived motive power. The tower wagon was a vehicle having attached to it a tall, ladder-like structure supporting a platform which could be swivelled into the required position. When the accident occurred the platform was projecting from the side of the wagon and it was struck by a trolley omnibus which was too high to pass underneath the platform. There was nothing to prevent the driver from steering to one side and avoiding the platform, and his failure to do so constituted negligence. The plaintiff was working for the Overhead Electrical Department (Maintenance) of the defendants, the London Passenger Transport Board, and the driver was working for the Traffic Department of the Board. These departments were separate. The plaintiff and the driver were members of different trades unions. HENN COLLINS, J., found that the trolley omnibus driver was in common employment with the plaintiff, who, therefore, could not recover against the defendant Board in respect of injuries suffered by him as a result of the driver's negligence. The Court of Appeal affirmed this decision.

Russell Vick, K.C., and Aarvold for the plaintiff.

Paull, K.C., and Armstrong-Jones for the defendants.

TUCKER, L.J.: [having stated the facts]: The question arises whether or not the defendant Board have established that the plaintiff was in common employment with the negligent driver of the trolley omnibus. Cases of this kind have been before the courts on several occasions recently, and we have been referred to most of them, but I think that for the ascertainment of the principle which is to be applied to the facts of a particular case it is only necessary to refer to Miller v. Glasgow Corporation (1), a Scottish appeal to the House of Lords. I quote from a passage in the speech of LORD SIMON ([1947] 1 All E.R. 4), and it is to be observed that that speech received the express concurrence of LORD THANKERTON, LORD SIMONDS and LORD DU PARCQ:

The criterion is often expressed by saying that, to make good the defence of common employment, it is not enough that the plaintiff was a fellow-servant of the person by whose fault he was injured, but it is also necessary that the two should have been engaged at the time of the injury in a "common work." But this last expression also needs definition, or, at any rate, explanation. "Common work" is not limited to the sharing of the same task, like the task of two sawyers in a saw-pit, or of engine-driver and stoker on the footplate of a locomotive. The phrase covers the case where the work of one is so related to the work of the other that the risk of injury to the one, due to the carelessness of the other, is not merely fortuitous, but is a special risk involved in the relationship itself, so that that risk must be deemed to have been in contemplation of the injured servant when he entered into his contract of service. Radcliffe's (2) case, therefore, does not support the broad proposition that the defence of common employment is never available when two vehicles driven by fellow-servants of the same employer collide in the high road. If the risk of collision between them is merely the ordinary risk arising from contiguity in traffic, i.e., the risk of being run into by another vehicle, whoever is its driver, then the injured party has no special interest in the skill and caution of a driver who is his fellow-servant. The risk he runs is a mere risk of the road in the sense that he might equally well be run into by anyone else driving in his vicinity, but, if the relation between the work of the two fellow-servants is such that one of them depends for his safety from harm in a special degree on the care and skill of the other, then they are engaged in a "common work" and the term in the contract of employment exonerating the common employer from liability has to be implied.

We have to apply that principle to the facts of the present case, and the conclusion which I have reached is that on those facts, applying this principle, the defendant Board have succeeded in showing that the plaintiff was in common employment with the negligent trolley omnibus driver. I have come to that conclusion for these reasons. The plaintiff was performing an operation which was a hazardous one with regard to all vehicles of a height, at any rate, of 11ft. 8ins. from the ground. He was going to perform his work on a route along which a large number of vehicles of that height would pass on their normal, ordinary, appointed way, and it appears to me that there was a special risk attached to this work, and that it cannot be regarded as merely fortuitous. I further think that there was a special risk involved in the relation between the work of the two men within LORD SIMON's statement (ibid.):

... if the relation between the work of the two fellow-servants is such that one of them depends for his safety from harm in a special degree on the care and skill of the other, then they are engaged in a "common work" ...

I think the safety of the plaintiff while working on this platform did depend in a special degree on the care and skill of the drivers of all trolley omnibuses proceeding along that route. It is true that there were other vehicles using the road besides trolley omnibuses—vehicles belonging to other members of the public, pantechicons, vans and so forth, so constructed that they would constitute a danger to men working in the position in which the plaintiff was working, but, none the less, I cannot regard his risk as what has been described as an ordinary traffic risk. I think that there was a special risk attached to the plaintiff of suffering injury from the stream of trolley vehicles which was passing throughout the day along this defined route, and the mere fact that there might occasionally be other vehicles which would constitute some danger to the plaintiff would not make his risk an ordinary traffic risk. For those reasons, I think that this case, which is not without difficulty, does come within the doctrine of common employment, and is to be distinguished from such a case as Metcalf v. London Passenger Transport Board (3), and, therefore, this appeal fails.

SOMERVELL, L.J. : I agree and have little to add except to express my complete concurrence, first of all, with what TUCKER, L.J., has said as to the passage which he read from Miller v. Glasgow Corporation (1). It seems to me that in that passage LORD SIMON enunciated more fully and more clearly the principles which are to be applied in this branch of the law in this class of case than had been done by previous decisions of their Lordships' House. That being so, the task of this and other courts is to apply the principles as there laid down to particular sets of facts, and for the reasons which TUCKER, L.J., has given I think, applying that principle, the defendants make out the defence of common employment. I agree that the appeal fails.

EVERSHED, L.J. : I also agree. In this case it has been proved or admitted that a trolley omnibus of the defendant Board is supplied with peculiar apparatus for giving it motive power consisting (i) of a pole or trolley normally connected with the overhead gear on which the plaintiff was, under his contract of employment, called upon to work, and (ii) of a platform structure of such a height above the roof of the trolley omnibus that the trolley omnibus when on the road was incapable of passing under the platform on which the plaintiff stood for the purpose of doing his work. Applying, therefore, the principles enunciated by LORD SIMON, to which my Lords have referred, in my judgment, the plaintiff had a special interest in the care and skill of the trolley omnibus drivers of the London Passenger Transport Board who would, to the plaintiff's knowledge, be proceeding in the course of their duties along the roads where he worked, at least to the extent of the care and skill required of them to avoid the risk of contact between any part of the apparatus referred to and the platform on which the plaintiff did his work. It may well be that once a special interest is shown to exist in the care and skill of trolley omnibus drivers, the rule of common employment must apply to all acts of negligent driving on the part of the trolley omnibus drivers though unrelated to the risks peculiar to the apparatus in question, for prima facie the plaintiff and the trolley omnibus drivers, when doing their appointed tasks, either were or were not doing common work. It is, however, unnecessary in the present case to express a concluded opinion on the broader question. For present purposes it is sufficient that the plaintiff's injury was due to a collision, caused by the driver's negligence, between the plaintiff's platform and some part of the apparatus of the trolley omnibus, the presence of which gives rise to the plaintiff's special interest in the omnibus driver's skill and care.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: William Gorringe & Co. (for the plaintiff); A. H. Grainger (for the defendants).

[Reported by C. ST. J. NICHOLSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

NOTE.

DAILEY v. DAILEY (otherwise SMITH).

[COURT OF APPEAL (Tucker and Asquith, L.JJ.), May 15, July 8, 1947.]

Divorce—Nullity—Maintenance—Conduct of parties—Matters to be taken into consideration—Refusal of intercourse by wife without contraceptives—Assent of husband—Ignorance of parties of legal position—Age of wife at time of decree—Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925 (c. 49), s. 190 (1).

INTERLOCUTORY APPEAL by the husband from an order of WILLMER, J., in Chambers, dated Apr. 2, 1947, and reported [1947] 1 All E.R. 847.

The parties went through a form of marriage on Dec. 22, 1926, and on Aug. 16, 1946, the husband's decree nisi of nullity on the grounds of the wife's refusal to consummate the marriage (granted by BARNARD, J., at Liverpool Assizes in Feb., 1946) was made absolute. The husband, whose petition was based on the wife's refusal to permit sexual intercourse without the use of contraceptives, had reluctantly agreed to this course for the first 2 years, and afterwards had always desired full intercourse, but the wife had persistently refused, and intercourse with the use of contraceptives continued. The husband had an income of about £1,500 a year, mainly derived from his business, and the wife was able to earn £260 a year as a shorthand typist. In his report on an application by the wife for maintenance, the registrar submitted that the husband should secure to the wife, for her life dum sola, the nominal sum of £52 less tax, and, in addition, should pay her during their joint lives dum sola, or till further order, maintenance at the rate of £75 a year, less tax. On a motion to affirm the registrar's order WILLMER, J., held that, in considering the conduct of the parties, as directed by s. 190 (1) of the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925, it was necessary to have regard to the whole history of the case, including the facts that for 19 years the husband had assented to the conditions made by the wife and had taken advantage of such limited intercourse as she would permit; that the wife, at the age of 43, having devoted 19 years of her life to her husband, found herself, after all, still a single woman, having lost, or, at any rate, had gravely impaired, such opportunities as she might otherwise have had of contracting another marriage or of following another career; that until the decision in Cowen v. Cowen ([1945] 2 All E.R.

197), the conduct of the wife was not known to either party to be a ground for relief, and this was relevant both to the degree of "guilt" on the part of the wife, which it was material to consider, and to the true appreciation of the husband's conduct for so many years. The learned judge said both parties were unfortunate victims of their ignorance as to their true rights and obligations, and it would be unjust to treat the case as a simple one of a "guilty" wife, who, by her conduct, had forfeited any right to ask for more than a compassionate allowance to save her from utter destitution. In affirming the registrar's report, the learned judge said the husband should make some substantial provision for the wife. The husband appealed, and the case was now remitted for the re-consideration of WILLMER, J.

Ormrod for the husband.

H. S. Law for the wife.

TUCKER, L.J. (with whom ASQUITH, L.J., agreed), having reviewed the facts and the judgment of WILLMER, J., said that it appeared from the transcript of the shorthand notes of the original trial before BARNARD, J., that both parties had throughout used contraceptives; that from quite an early stage in the marriage they had occupied separate rooms; that when intercourse did take place the wife was inclined to get into a hysterical condition whenever the question of having intercourse in a way which was likely to result in the birth of a child was discussed; that the husband took medical advice with regard to that matter; that he felt so acutely the position in which he found himself, and the injustice of the law on the subject as he understood it, that he wrote to various prominent people, including the Archbishop of Canterbury and the Prime Minister; and, finally, that for some years before the separation in Sept., 1945, the parties had not even been having their meals together. These additional matters, which, apparently, were not known to the registrar and the learned judge, gave a somewhat different picture of the married life from that given by the learned judge in his judgment on the material before him. In the opinion of the court, WILLMER, J., took the right view in saying that in these matters there were degrees of guilt and varying degrees of conduct, and that the submission made to him, on behalf of the husband, that the wife should be put into the category of an adulterous wife and only be given a compassionate allowance was erroneous. As, however, the court felt some doubt whether or not those additional matters might have influenced the learned judge's mind to some degree as to the quantum, which was entirely a matter for his discretion, they thought that the proper course was to remit the matter to him for re-consideration in the light of the material now disclosed in the shorthand note of the trial.

Order accordingly.

Solicitors: Layton & Co. (for the husband); Whitfield, Byrne & Dean, agents for Whitley & Co., Liverpool (for the wife).

[Reported by R. L. ZIAR, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

MOORE v. HEWITT.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., Macnaghten and Lynskey, JJ.), July 10, 11, 1947.]

Bastardy—Application proceedings—Evidence—Corroboration—Association on terms of close affection—Letters from putative father produced by complainant. Magistrates—Appeal—Case stated—Case stated out of time—Whether fatal objection—No fault of either party—Summary Jurisdiction Rules, 1915 (S.R. & O. 1915, No. 200), r. 52.

(1) Rule 52 of the Summary Jurisdiction Rules, 1915, which provides that a Special Case should be stated within three months of the date of the application to the justices to state a Case, is directory and not mandatory. It is not a fatal objection that the Case was not stated within the stipulated time, and the court has power in its discretion to allow the Case to be heard.

Hughes v. Wavertree Local Board (58 J.P. Jo. 654) followed.

Gregory v. Cattle ([1943] 1 All E.R. 654) explained.

(2) In bastardy proceedings where there is evidence that over a long period, including the time of conception, the alleged father has associated with the mother on terms of close affection, and there is no evidence that the mother was associating with other men, there is material which the justices are entitled to treat as corroboration of the mother's statement.

Dunn v. Chalmers (1875) 3 R. (Ct. of Sess.) 286 approved.

Burbury v. Jackson ([1917] 1 K.B. 16) criticised and distinguished, and Thomas v. Jones ([1921] 1 K.B. 22) distinguished.

(3) In bastardy proceedings letters written by the alleged father to the complainant and produced by her cannot be treated as corroboration.

Johnson v. Pritchard (97 J.P. Jo. 754) followed, but doubted.

[AS TO EVIDENCE IN AFFILIATION PROCEEDINGS, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 2, p. 589, para. 812; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 3, pp. 394-398, Nos. 317-330.]

AS TO LIMITATION OF TIME FOR SPECIAL CASE, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 21, p. 725, para. 1256; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 33, p. 414, No. 1241 and Supp.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Hughes v. Wavertree Local Board, (1894), 58 J.P. 654; 33 Digest 414; 1241.
- (2) Lane v. Rendall, [1899] 2 Q.B. 673; 33 Digest 411, 1214.
- (3) Gregory v. Cattle, [1943] 1 All E.R. 654; [1943] 1 K.B. 412; 112 L.J.K.B. 620; 168 L.T. 376; 107 J.P. 122; Digest Supp.
- (4) Young v. Bristol Aeroplane Co., Ltd., [1944] 2 All E.R. 293; [1944] 1 K.B. 718; 113 L.J.K.B. 513; 171 L.T. 113; Digest Supp.
- (5) Johnson v. Pritchard, (1933), 97 J.P. Jo. 754; 176 L.T. Jo. 389; Digest Supp.
- (6) Burbury v. Jackson, [1917] 1 K.B. 16; 86 L.J.K.B. 255; 115 L.T. 713; 80 J.P. 455; 3 Digest 397, 323.
- (7) Thomas v. Jones, [1921] 1 K.B. 22; 90 L.J.K.B. 49; 124 L.T. 179; 85 J.P. 38; Digest Supp.
- (8) Dunn v. Chalmers, (1875), 3 R. (Ct. of Sess.) 236; 3 Digest 395, 317 xxiv.
- (9) Richardson v. Standish, (1933), unreported.

CASE STATED by Hinckley (Leicester) justices.

On a complaint preferred by the respondent against the appellant under the Bastardy Laws Amendment Act, 1872, the justices determined that the appellant was the father of the respondent's child and ordered him to pay 12s. 6d. maintenance and other sums. On the present appeal to the Divisional Court a preliminary objection that the Case was not stated within the time limited by r. 52 of the Summary Jurisdiction Rules, 1915, failed and the finding of the justices was upheld.

Marshall, K.C. for the appellant.

Herrick Collins for the respondent.

LORD GODDARD, C.J.: Counsel for the respondent has taken a preliminary objection to the hearing of this appeal on the ground that the Case was not stated within three months of the application to the justices to state a Case, pursuant to r. 52 of the Summary Jurisdiction Rules, 1915. There is nothing before the court to show why the justices did not state the Case. We only know that they did not state it for five months, and what I am about to say is to be taken to apply where there are no facts before the court to show that the delay in stating the Case was due to the conduct of the appellant. If the appellant, by taking frivolous objections to the Case and continually sending it back to the justices with a request for re-statement, or by some action of that sort, had been responsible for the failure of the justices to state this Case within three months, I am far from saying that he might not have been met with this rule, but where the circumstances are no more than that, an application having been made to justices to state a Case, they fail to do it within three months, as might well happen, for instance, if the chairman of the justices or the clerk to the justices were taken ill, it is clear that the court has power in its discretion to allow the Case to be heard on the ground that the limitation in the rules is directory and not mandatory.

The matter was first considered in 1894, and the exact point was decided by CAVE, J. and WRIGHT, J. in Hughes v. Wavertree Local Board (1). They held in terms that the rule was only directory, and, therefore, it was not a fatal objection that the justices had not stated the Case within three months. That decision was followed in Lane v. Rendall (2), where counsel of considerable experience in these matters, took the objection that the Case had not been stated in time. It was met at once, without calling on the other side, by Hughes v. Wavertree Local Board (1), and counsel did not continue his objection after that somewhat abrupt intimation from the Bench. Confusion has been caused by the fact that in 1943, when Gregory v. Cattle (3), came before the court and the same objection was taken, counsel was not prepared with these authorities and so he never cited them to the court. The only question which the court was considering there was whether, when the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1857, did not contain any limitation as to time, but the rules made under the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, did, it could be said that the Case was stated under the Act of 1857 and not under the later Act so that no limitation applied. The court held that the two Acts had to be read together and the rules made under the Act of 1879 applied equally to proceedings under the Act of 1857. The attention of the court was never called to Hughes v. Wavertree Local Board (1), and the court, therefore, acted per incuriam. It was laid down in Young v. Bristol Aeroplane Co., Ltd. (4), that the Court of Appeal is bound by its own judgments with certain exceptions, and one of those exceptions is where the court gives a decision per incuriam because the provisions of a statute or the authority of a case have not been brought to their attention. I should be sorry to hold that where the delay is due to the action of the justices and not due to that of either party, it was a fatal objection. I am not sure that one could not apply the maxim actus legis nulli facit injuriam—the act of the law does wrong to no man. For reasons, whether they be good or bad, the justices here failed to send the Case to the parties within three months, and if that were to prevent the appellant bringing his case before the court, it would be a serious matter. In my opinion, the preliminary objection ought not to prevail. I think we have jurisdiction to hear this case.

MACNAGHTEN, J. : I agree.

LYNSKEY, J. : I agree.

THE COURT then heard the appeal.

LORD GODDARD, C.J. : The question which arises is the familiar one whether the evidence of the respondent was corroborated in some material particular. In my opinion, it was and this appeal fails. The evidence of the respondent was that she and the appellant had been associating for some months before any sexual intercourse which could have resulted in a child. She said she met him in Sept., 1943, and that sexual intercourse took place in Dec., 1943, and June, July, Aug., Sept., and Oct., 1944. The child was born on June 6, 1945, so it was probable that the sexual intercourse in Aug. or Sept., was that which caused the respondent to become pregnant. The justices found :

On the evidence of the respondent, corroborated by other witnesses, the appellant and the respondent visited cinemas, licensed houses and dances together between Sept., 1943, and Oct., 1944, and were in the company of each other at certain hours in the evening on days during the said period of time and that the appellant visited the respondent's home on four or five occasions during the said period of time.

Their conclusion is :

We, being of the opinion that the letters produced could not in law be regarded as corroboration of the respondent's evidence and that the principle in Johnson v. Pritchard (5), applied, disregarded the said letters, but, being also of the opinion that the evidence of the respondent was true and that the evidence of the other witnesses called on behalf of the respondent established that the appellant and the respondent were seen together in such circumstances and on such terms of intimacy or affection as would corroborate the respondent's evidence, therefore, determined that the respondent's said complaint was proved to our satisfaction in fact and in law.

For many years it has been the practice—often it is the only way in which corroborative evidence can be given in these cases—to prove that the parties were a courting couple or, at any rate, associating on terms of “intimacy and affection.” I do not use the word “intimacy” as meaning sexual intercourse. The justices were satisfied that the appellant and the respondent had for a long time been on courting terms. There was no suggestion that the respondent had associated with any other man. It is said that this evidence amounts to no more than proof of opportunity. The main argument of counsel for the appellant was based on the authority of Burbury v. Jackson (6) ([1917] 1 K.B. 16), the headnote of which, in my opinion, goes too far. It is :

On the hearing of a bastardy summons evidence of mere opportunity is not sufficient corroboration of the evidence of the mother to satisfy s. 4 of the Bastardy Laws Amendment Act, 1872.

The facts in Burbury v. Jackson (6), were very different from the facts here. There the mother and the alleged father were both workers on a farm. They were living at the farm, and, in the course of their ordinary duties they were in and out of the cowsheds, barns and other places, and the court held that evidence of their being constantly together in those circumstances could not be taken as corroborating the fact that connection took place. So, too, in Thomas v. Jones (7), the alleged putative father was the employer of the woman, who was his housekeeper and so naturally was living in the house. In such circumstances one cannot say that there is evidence of an association from which one can draw any adverse inference against the man, because the parties are associating in the ordinary and natural course of things, but in the present case we have a young man and a young woman who were sweethearts. It seems to me that, it being proved by independent evidence, that these young people were associating at different hours of the day and night, being in each other's company for various periods of time, and so forth, that is evidence which the justices could regard as corroboration. That is amply supported by a case in the Court of Session, Dunn v. Chalmers (8). It would, I think, be going far beyond any case which has ever yet been decided to say that justices were not entitled to take the circumstances of the present case into consideration, more especially when there is no suggestion that the girl was associating with anyone else. The parties were associating in circumstances which might naturally lead to them having sexual intercourse. I do not think it would be possible in those circumstances to hold on the facts found by the justices that there was no evidence which would tend to make it probable—that is the test—that the respondent's story was true and that the appellant, therefore, was the father of the child.

The only other thing I want to say is this. Two letters were produced by the respondent which if they were written by the appellant, show, beyond possibility of doubt, that he was the father of the child. The justices rejected those letters as corroboration on the authority of Johnson v. Pritchard (5). In that case there was no other evidence of corroboration except some letters produced by the complainant herself and she swore they were in the reputed father's handwriting. It was held "disapproving of the passage in STONE'S JUSTICES' MANUAL (65th ed., p. 409),* that a complainant in bastardy proceedings cannot corroborate herself by saying that a letter produced by her was written to her by the alleged father, and the appeal must be allowed."

It seems from a note in STONE'S JUSTICES' MANUAL, 78th ed., p. 461, that it has been held that, if there be other corroboration, the complainant may prove the letters, and the authority which is given for that is Richardson v. Standish (9), an unreported case heard in this court in Dec., 1933. I have sent for the Special Case therein, but it bears no note except that the appeal was dismissed, and I can find no indication whether this statement in STONE did form part of the judgment of the court (I am sure, knowing how carefully STONE is edited, there must be some reason for it). If Johnson v. Pritchard (5), was rightly decided, I find some difficulty in understanding how the letters in Richardson's case (9) could become admissible as corroboration merely because some other fact was corroborated. I hope that Johnson v. Pritchard (5), may be considered in a higher court. Sitting in this court, I think I am bound by it, although the court has not got the advantage of any report which shows the reasoning leading to the decision. The difficulty which I feel in accepting the case is that the statute does not require the whole of the complainant's evidence to be corroborated. If the whole of the complainant's evidence had to be corroborated, it would mean that in a great many cases the case could be proved without calling the complainant herself. The complainant's evidence in Johnson v. Pritchard (5), seems to have been, first, that the respondent was the father of the child, and, secondly, that two letters which she had received were in the respondent's handwriting. If those letters were

*"While, as a matter of prudence, it is desirable that the handwriting should be proved by other testimony than that of the woman, we are of the opinion that her evidence alone, if credible, is sufficient for the purpose, and that letters, when thus proved may furnish the corroboration required by the statute."

admissible on her evidence, the statements in the letters, being written by the respondent himself, were at once evidence against him. While the production of those letters did not corroborate the evidence of the complainant that he wrote them, they corroborated the complainant's evidence that he was the father of the child. That was a material particular, and, therefore, it seems to me that the production of the letters afforded corroboration of the complainant's story in a material particular. However, as long as that decision stands, in this court, I suppose, we are bound by it and the letters cannot be treated as corroboration. In the present case the appellant might have been put into the box by the respondent, the letters could have been handed to him, and he could have been asked whether they were in his handwriting or not. If he said that they were, the letters could have been admitted, but, as it is, this court must not pay any attention to the letters, any more than the justices did. On the grounds I have endeavoured to express, however, the justices, in my opinion, came to a decision to which they were entitled to come because there was evidence which could, if they believed it, amount to corroboration. This appeal must be dismissed with costs.

MACNAGHTEN, J. : I am of the same opinion.

LYNSKEY, J. : I agree.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors : Callingham, Griffith & Bate, agents for Varley, Hibbs & Co., Coventry (for the appellant); Field, Roscoe & Co., agents for Pounall, Teebay & French, Nuneaton (for the respondent).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

THOMSON AND ANOTHER v. BECKENHAM RATING AUTHORITY.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., Atkinson and Lewis, JJ.), July 1, 2, 1947.]

Rates and Rating—Distress for rates—Rating period not expired—Poor Relief Act, 1601 (c. 2), s. 2.

A general rate is payable as soon as it is made and published, and, therefore, a distress warrant in respect of it may be issued although the period covered by the rate has not expired.

Davis v. Burrell and Lane (1851) (10 C.B. 821) applied.

[AS TO DISTRESS FOR RATES, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 27, pp. 526-528, paras. 976, 977; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 18, pp. 403, 404, Nos. 1434-1444.]

Cases referred to :

- (1) R. v. Price, (1880) 5 Q.B.D. 300; 49 L.J.M.C. 49; 42 L.T. 439; 44 J.P. 248; 33 Digest 369, 782.
- (2) Tracy v. Talbot, (1704) 6 Mod. Rep. 214; Holt, K.B. 581; 2 Salk. 532; 3 Salk. 260; Sett. and Rem. 237; 38 Digest 452, 191.
- (3) Davis v. Burrell and Lane, (1851) 10 C.B. 821; 31 Digest 207, 3475.
- (4) Gill v. Mellor, Gill v. Monday, [1924] 1 K.B. 97; 93 L.J.K.B. 55; 130 L.T. 211; 87 J.P. 190; 38 Digest 625, 1454.

CASE STATED by Bromley (Kent) justices.

A complaint was preferred before the justices by the rating authority for Beckenham that the appellants, George Wilfred Russell Thomson and Nora Elizabeth Frances Thomson were persons duly rated and assessed to the general rate for the borough in and by a rate made on Sept. 23, 1946, for the half-year ending Mar. 31, 1947, in the sum of £16 15s. 5d., which they had neglected or refused to pay. On Feb. 20, 1947, the justices determined that the appellants were jointly rated and assessed to the general rate in the said sum, that the sum was due, and that, the appellants having neglected or refused to pay for seven days after it had been lawfully demanded of them, a distress warrant against their goods and chattels should be issued. The appellants now appealed to the Divisional Court which dismissed the appeal. The facts appear in the judgment of LORD GODDARD, C.J.

Borders for the ratepayers.

Squibb for the rating authority.

LORD GODDARD, C.J.: The appellants, George Wilfred Russell Thomson, who is a solicitor, and his sister, were found by the Bromley justices to be persons duly rated and assessed to the general rate for the borough of Beckenham in and by a rate made on Sept. 23, 1946, for the half year ending Mar. 31, 1947, in the sum of £16 15s. 5d. The appellants did not pay that comparatively small amount, preferring, apparently, to raise points which, no doubt, they considered to be of high juristic principle, but which, if effect were given to them, would upset the whole practice and law in connection with the payment of rates which has been in force since the passing of the Poor Relief Act, 1601.

The point taken is that a distress for rates cannot be levied until the expiration of the period for which the rate was made. A rate is made—until s. 4 (1) of the Rating and Valuation Act, 1925, came into operation it was allowed by justices—and thereupon, as I think has been always understood to be the law, it becomes due. If any authority is required for that proposition, which I thought every ratepayer knew, it can easily be found in R. v. Price (1), where COCKBURN, C.J., said (5 Q.B.D. 301): “The rate itself is the order,” i.e., the order to pay. If one turns to the Act of 1601, which is the foundation of the whole law of rating, one finds it is provided by s. 2 that ... it shall be lawfull aswell for the present as subsequent churchwardens and overseers, or any of them, by warrant from any two suche justices of peace as is aforesaide to levie aswell the saide sumes of money, and all arrerages, of every one that shall refuse to contribute accordinge as they shalbe assessed, by distresse and sale of the offender's goodes, as the sumes of money or stocke whiche shalbe behinde upon any accompte to be made as aforesaide, rendringe to the parties the overplus ; . .

By s. 1 of the Act, the overseers, at the end of their period of office, which lasts for one year, are to render an account to the justices showing receipts of money by them and expenditure and money they have in their hands. I think that counsel for the rating authority is right when he says that the words in s. 2 “as the sumes of money or stocke whiche shall be behinde upon any accompte to be made as aforesaide,” show that distress can be levied, not only against the defaulting ratepayers, but also on overseers and churchwardens who have not handed over any money remaining in their hands at the end of the accounting period.

It appears that in Tracy v. Talbot (2), which related to whether a general warrant made before a rate was a lawful warrant under which overseers could distrain for a current rate, HOLT, C.J., said (2 Salk. 532) that a distress would not be taken for a quarter's rate before the quarter was ended. That was an observation which was not necessary for the decision of the case. It seems to have caused some surprise, because the jury before whom the case was tried appear to have immediately protested and said that the custom, by which, I suppose, they meant the practice, was otherwise, and it appears in another report of the case (6 Mod. Rep. 214) that HOLT, C.J., resiled from the position he had taken up. In BOTT'S POOR LAW (vol. I, p. 250) a note is contained of a subsequent decision (Charlwood v. Best (1748)) which was not in accordance with the Chief Justice's observation.

So far as this court is concerned, the point is put beyond all doubt by Davis v. Burrell (3) in which JERVIS, C.J., who was a very great authority on all matters relating to poor law, said (10 C.B. 825):

The question resolves itself into one of fact. If the rates were due, and were not paid, the defendant Burrell was lawfully in possession of the premises at the time the plaintiff made the forcible attempt to get in. When a rate is duly made and published, it is the duty of the parties assessed to seek out the collector and to pay it.

In other words, JERVIS, C.J., there laid down in the clearest possible terms that a rate is due and payable at the moment it is made, and that, I think, has been generally understood by every ratepayer and local authority in this country, at any rate, for two hundred years. If the rate is due and payable when it is made, it follows that, if the ratepayer does not pay, a distress warrant can be applied for. That was done in this case, and, in my opinion, the justices were perfectly entitled to issue the warrant when they did. There is no doubt that a rate is payable as soon as it is made. This court has no hesitation in laying down that, as soon as a rate is made and published, the rate is payable. Naturally, local authorities do not at once apply for a distress warrant. They only seek warrants against recalcitrant ratepayers who refuse to pay, and they can take that action before or after the rate has expired, as has been shown by Gill v. Mellor (4).

ATKINSON, J. : There are before us two text books in which it is said plainly that a rate becomes payable as soon as it has been made and published : BURNS' JUSTICE OF THE PEACE, 30th ed., vol. IV, p. 1077, and RYDE ON RATING, 8th ed., p. 943. Then there are the cases referred to by my Lord—R. v. Price (1), where COCKBURN, C.J., said (5 Q.B.D. 301) that the rate itself is the order, and Gill v. Mellor (4) which seems to me to put the matter beyond argument, because there it was argued that the rate could not be demanded after the year had expired, and that, if payment was evaded for a year, the ratepayers were free, but it was taken for granted that it could be demanded during the year. I read ss. 1 and 2 of the Act of 1601 as meaning that the outgoing overseers had to be ready with their accounts in four days. In those accounts they had to state what they had received, what they had not received, and the amount of the arrears, and s. 4 gives the new overseers power to recover as arrears those rates which are shown in the accounts as unpaid. The Act seems to me to treat those sums which the account shows have not yet been received as already being in arrears. I must say I have felt that the matter was too clear for argument.

LEWIS, J. : I agree.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors : G. W. R. Thomson (for the ratepayers) ; C. Eric Staddon, town clerk, Beckenham (for the rating authority).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

R. v. SURREY (NORTH EASTERN AREA) ASSESSMENT COMMITTEE, Ex parte SURREY COUNTY VALUATION COMMITTEE.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., Atkinson and Lewis, JJ.),
July 2, 3, 1947.]

Rates and Rating—Valuation list—Amendment—Appearance before assessment committee—County valuation committee—Officer authorised by general resolution of valuation committee—Rating and Valuation Act, 1925 (c. 90), s. 31 (9). Statutes—Construction—Headings and marginal notes—Reference to.

A ratepayer made a proposal under s. 37 of the Rating and Valuation Act, 1925, for the amendment of the valuation list, contending that his factory should be derated, and at the same time the rating authority made a proposal to the assessment committee that the valuation should be increased. On both these matters coming before the assessment committee at their meeting, the county valuation officer appeared, and claimed the right to represent the views of that committee by virtue of a general resolution passed by the county valuation committee. The assessment committee refused to hear the valuation officer on the ground that the proposals had not been expressly before the county valuation committee, and they had not specially authorised the valuation officer to appear at the hearing. On motions for orders of certiorari and mandamus directed to the assessment committee :

HELD : although the marginal note to s. 31 of the Act read : " Appeals to quarter sessions," and the section mainly dealt with such appeals, sub-s. (9) of the section was not confined to those appeals, but gave the valuation committee power by general resolution to authorise any officer to institute, carry on and defend any proceedings whatsoever in relation to the valuation list, and, consequently, orders for certiorari and mandamus must go.

[FOR THE RATING AND VALUATION ACT, 1925, s. 31 (9), see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 14, p. 659.

AS TO REFERENCE TO HEADINGS AND MARGINAL NOTES IN INTERPRETATION OF STATUTES, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 31, pp. 464, 465, paras. 565-567 ; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 42, pp. 654-656, Nos. 634-649.]

Cases referred to :

- (1) Hammersmith and City Ry. Co. v. Brand, (1869), L.R. 4 H.L. 171 ; 38 L.J.Q.B. 265 ; 21 L.T. 238 ; 34 J.P. 36 ; 42 Digest 655, 638.
- (2) Fletcher v. Birkenhead Corpn., [1907] 1 K.B. 205 ; 76 L.J.K.B. 218 ; 96 L.T. 287 ; 71 J.P. 111 ; 42 Digest 652, 597.

A MOTIONS for an order of certiorari to quash the determination of an assessment committee to refuse to hear the county valuation officer who had been appointed to appear before them by a general resolution of the county valuation committee, and for an order of mandamus directing the assessment committee to hear and determine the matter according to law. The Divisional Court made the orders.

Simes, K.C., and C. E. Scholefield for the applicants (the valuation committee).

B Rowe, K.C., and Geoffrey Lawrence for the respondents (the assessment committee).

C LORD GODDARD, C.J. : In this case leave was obtained to move for orders of certiorari and mandamus addressed to the Assessment Committee of the North Eastern Area of Surrey to bring up and quash the determination by them of an application by the county valuation committee made by their officer, the county valuation officer, in the matter of the assessment of certain premises in the current valuation list. The assessment committee refused to hear the officer, and on that ground certiorari is sought to quash that determination and a mandamus to hear and determine the matter according to law.

The matter arises in this way. Section 37 of the Rating and Valuation Act, 1925, provides :

D Any person (including the county valuation committee and any local authority) who is aggrieved by the incorrectness or unfairness of any matter in the valuation list for the time being in force, or by the inclusion therein or omission therefrom of any matter, or by the valuation as a single hereditament of a building or a portion of a building . . . may make in manner provided by this section a proposal for the amendment of the list . . .

E It appears that a ratepayer in the district for which the assessment committee acts made a proposal for the amendment of the list, contending that his factory should be derated. At the same time the rating authority made a proposal to the assessment committee that the valuation should be increased, and on both of those matters coming before the assessment committee at their meeting, the county valuation officer appeared and claimed the right to represent the views of the county valuation committee. It is not disputed that the county valuation committee has the right to appear and be heard on proposals or objections, but before the assessment committee objection was made that the county valuation committee had not specially authorised the valuation officer to appear on the hearing of this objection or proposal. The county valuation officer claimed to appear and be heard by reason of a general resolution which had been passed by the body which appointed him in these terms :

G That the clerk of the county council and the county valuation officer be and they are hereby authorised on behalf of the county valuation committee to institute, carry on or defend any proceedings in relation to any valuation lists which this committee are themselves authorised to institute, carry on or defend in accordance with the Rating and Valuation Act, 1925, and any other power them enabling.

H Objection was taken that that was a general authority, it being said that the law did not permit the county valuation officer to appear for the county valuation committee unless it was shown that the county valuation committee had applied their minds to the particular objection or proposal. It was not disputed that, if they had done that, they could, by a special resolution, or possibly, without any resolution, but by a direction or some other method, have appointed the county valuation officer to represent them before the assessment committee.

In the long run this case comes down simply to a question of the construction of s. 31 of the Rating and Valuation Act, 1925. Several proceedings may take place before assessment committees in regard to valuation lists. There can be objections to the draft list, which can be made by the county valuation committee, or by the rating authority, or by a ratepayer who is assessed, and there are various provisions relating to the meetings of the assessment committee, and so forth. If a party does not get from the assessment committee the relief to which he considers himself entitled, he may appeal to quarter sessions. Sections 19 to 24 of the Act come under a cross-heading "Valuation lists," and ss. 25 to 30, under "Preparation of valuation lists." "Appeals" are dealt with in ss. 31 to 36, and the "Revision of current lists," to which these applications related, in s. 37. There is no question that s. 31 deals primarily with appeals to quarter sessions. The marginal note, if one is entitled to look at it at all, shows that, but so do the clear terms of the section. Sub-section (1) is :

Any person who appeared before the assessment committee on the consideration of an objection made before the committee under this Part of this Act may, if he is aggrieved by the decision of the committee on the objection, appeal against the decision, in manner provided by this Part of this Act, to the court of quarter sessions . . .

Sub-section (2) provides :

Any person on whom a copy of a notice of an appeal to a court of quarter sessions under this part of this Act is required to be served may, if he thinks fit, appear as respondent to the appeal . . .

By sub-s. (4) :

On an appeal under this section the court shall, as it thinks just, either confirm the valuation list or alter the valuation list . . .

Sub-section (5) deals with an appeal to the High Court on a point of law, and provides :

On the determination of an appeal under this section any party to the appeal may, if dissatisfied with the decision of the court as being erroneous in point of law, make an application in writing at any time within 21 days after the date of the decision to have a Case stated for the opinion of the High Court . . .

Then sub-s. (6) substitutes certain provisions for those in Baines' Act with regard to referring appeals of this character to arbitration :

Sections 12, 13 and 14 of the Quarter Sessions Act, 1849 (which relate to arbitration) shall not apply in the case of an appeal under this section . . .

and certain provisions are then made. In sub-s. (7) provision is made for the award of an arbitrator to whom the matter is referred being enrolled as an order of quarter sessions. Sub-section (8) is :

A writ of certiorari for questioning any decision of a court of quarter sessions on an appeal under this Act shall be sued out within three months after the decision is given.

Sub-section (10) is :

Where the decision on an appeal under this section or any award of an arbitrator or judgment of a superior court which has been enrolled at quarter sessions involves an alteration of the valuation list, the clerk of the court . . .

shall perform certain functions.

It is to be observed that every one of the sub-sections I have read, except sub-s. (7), which is merely complementary to sub-s. (6), all refer to appeals under this Act or under this section. When one comes to sub-s. (9), it is in these terms :

Any officer of an assessment committee, rating authority, or county valuation committee acting under any special or general resolution of the committee or authority may authorise the institution, carrying on or defence of any proceedings in relation to the valuation list which the committee or authority are themselves authorised to institute, carry on or defend.

Admittedly, if that sub-section stood alone or in another part of the Act, it could not be doubted that it gives the county valuation committee power, by a general resolution, to authorise their officer to institute, carry on and defend any proceedings in relation to the valuation list, but it is said that we are bound to read this sub-section as relating only to appeals to quarter sessions because it is found in a section which, except for this sub-section, deals entirely with appeals to quarter sessions and proceedings consequent thereon or in substitution therefor. While, however, the court is entitled to look at the headings in an Act of Parliament to resolve any doubt they may have as to ambiguous words, the law is clear that those headings cannot be used to give a different effect to clear words in the section where there cannot be any doubt as to the ordinary meaning of the words. The leading authority for that is Hammersmith & City Ry. Co. v. Brand (1), and the matter has been more recently considered in Fletcher v. Birkenhead Corpn. (2). There SIR RICHARD HENN COLLINS, M.R., said ([1907] 1 K.B. 213) :

A The headnote to the report of the case of Hammersmith and City Ry. Co. v. Brand (1), seems to me to state fairly the result of that decision, as being that "the headings of different portions of a statute are to be referred to, to determine the sense of any doubtful expression in a section ranged under any particular heading." LORD CHELMSFORD said, in giving judgment : "The sections of the Railways Clauses Acts are, as your Lordships know, arranged in order under different heads, which indicate the general object of the provisions immediately following : and these may be usefully referred to, to determine the sense of any doubtful expression in a section ranged under a particular heading."

B It seems to me clear that the House of Lords and the Court of Appeal emphasised that reference can be made to headings only where the construction is doubtful. What doubt can there be about such words as those in s. 31 (9) : "the institution, carrying on or defence of any proceedings in relation to the valuation list ?" The proposals and objections in the present case are certainly proceedings in relation to the valuation list. I have not referred specifically to the terms of the Railways Clauses Acts which were considered in Hammer-smith & City Ry. Co. v. Brand (1), but it is to be noticed that in this Act, C as is often the case in modern Acts of Parliament which have to deal with a big subject and many sections, is divided into parts, and Part II deals with valuation. It is true there are sub-headings such as "Areas," "Authorities," "Valuation lists," "Preparation of valuation lists," "Appeals," and so forth, but this is all contained in a part of the Act which deals with valuation, and one of the matters dealing with valuation which is provided for in the various sections is the preparation of the valuation list, the objections to the D draft valuation list, the valuation list and the current list.

In my opinion, we do not require to refer to the headings to ascertain the construction of such clear words as these. It is possible, and, indeed, it may be probable, that the draughtsman of the Act, when dealing with appeals to quarter sessions, recognising that it would be necessary or desirable to make some special provision with regard to an officer having what I may call charge E of the appeal, saw that there were other matters of which it would be desirable that the officer should be put in charge by a general resolution, and, therefore, used the words he did. Those words seem to me to be incapable of any other meaning than that the committee may, by a special or a general resolution, authorise any officer they choose to carry on and defend any proceedings whatever. As these are proceedings in relation to the valuation list, it seems to me to follow that the county valuation committee were given express statutory F power to authorise their officer by a general resolution to do what he sought to do in this case, and it is unnecessary to consider what the position would have been if there had not been this special provision in the Act of Parliament. I base my decision entirely on the fact that sub-s. (9) of s. 31 cannot be restricted to the matter of appeals to quarter sessions, and an overwhelming or conclusive reason, as it seems to me, is that in every other sub-section of the section one finds the words "appeal under this Act," or "appeal under G this section." Those words are left out of sub-s. (9), and it must be assumed that they were deliberately left out, and, therefore, it remains a sub-section of entirely general application. For these reasons I think the orders both for certiorari and mandamus must go.

ATKINSON, J. : I agree.

H LEWIS, J. : I agree.

Orders accordingly.

Solicitors : Wyatt & Co., agents for Dudley Aukland, Clerk to the Surrey County Council (for the applicants) ; Clement G. Lawrence, agent for Durham & Co., Kingston-on-Thames (for the respondents).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

WESSEL v. CARTER PATERSON AND PICKFORDS CARRIERS, LTD.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., Macnaghten and Lynskey, JJ.), July 7, 1947.]

Criminal Law—Aiding and abetting—Receiving stolen goods—Thief convicted as a receiver—Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848 (c. 43), s. 5.

A person who aids and abets the commission of an offence is a principal in the second degree and, under the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848, s. 5, he can be convicted, charged and punished as a principal in the first degree.

Where a thief gives or sells goods, which he has stolen, to a receiver, or leaves them with him, he can properly be convicted as a receiver, under s. 5 of the Act of 1848, because he has procured the commission of the offence by the receiver.

[AS TO AIDERS AND ABETTORS, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 9, pp. 28-40, paras. 28-40; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 14, pp. 91, 92, Nos. 605-616.]

CASE STATED by the Recorder of Nottingham.

Leslie James Wessel appealed to Nottingham Quarter Sessions against a conviction by justices of receiving property knowing it to have been stolen, contrary to the Larceny Act, 1916, s. 33. The recorder held that while, on the facts, Wessel might have been convicted of stealing, he could not be convicted of receiving, and he, therefore, quashed the conviction. The prosecution now appealed from the decision of the recorder, to the Divisional Court who allowed the appeal. The facts appear in the judgment of LORD GODDARD, C.J.

Anthony Hawke for the prosecution.

The respondent did not appear.

LORD GODDARD, C.J.: This is a Case stated by the recorder of Nottingham on the appeal of one Wessel, against whom an information had been preferred by his employers, Carter Paterson & Pickfords Carriers, Ltd., alleging (i) that between Oct. 6 and 7, 1946, he, being a servant of the company, stole from them a quantity of women's and children's underwear to the value of £69 ls. 3d., contrary to the Larceny Act, 1916, s. 17 (1) (a); and (ii) that, together with one Walter Lawrence, on Oct. 6, he received a quantity of women's and children's underwear to the value of £69 ls. 3d., the property of the said Carter Paterson & Pickfords Carriers, Ltd., knowing it to have been stolen, contrary to the Larceny Act, 1916, s. 33. The justices convicted Wessel of receiving, but found him Not Guilty of stealing, and he appealed against the conviction. On the hearing of the appeal, the recorder came to the conclusion that, while Wessel might have been convicted of stealing, he could not be convicted of receiving, and he, therefore, quashed the conviction. Although [under the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, s. 31 (1) (vii) as substituted by the Summary Jurisdiction (Appeals) Act, 1933, s. 1] he had jurisdiction to vary the order of the justices, he could not exercise that power which the section gives him by recording a finding of larceny because the justices themselves had acquitted the man of larceny.

Wessel was one of Carter Paterson's drivers. On a certain day some bales of goods were put on his van, two parcels by mistake not being entered on the consignment sheets. Knowing that this had taken place, Wessel determined to steal the goods, and on a journey from Leicester to Nottingham he stopped, took off a bale and a carton from the van, and put them at the side of the road. Having finished his journey, he met his co-defendant, Walter Lawrence, and he and Lawrence returned in a car and took possession of the goods. That case having been proved to the satisfaction of the justices, I do not know why, they acquitted Wessel of the offence of larceny as a servant, but they convicted him of receiving. So far as the offence of receiving was concerned, it would be impossible to treat Wessel as a principal in the first degree because he was the thief. He had not parted with felonious possession of the goods, and he certainly did not receive them from any person after they had been stolen. He was constructively in possession of the goods although it was felonious possession all the time.

Therefore, the recorder was right in the view which he took, but for one thing. His attention was not called to the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848, s. 5, which is in the same terms as the Accessories and Abettors Act, 1861. I think, as counsel for the prosecution said, that the Accessories and Abettors Act, 1861, is really only declaratory of the common law, because, if two people are concerned in the commission of an offence, they are both equally guilty. Under the old law, if a man was not present at the time an offence was committed, but aided, abetted, counselled or procured the commission of it, he was called an accessory before the fact. If he was present at the time the offence was committed, he was called an aider and abettor, and s. 5 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848, applies whether a person is technically an accessory or technically an abettor. Section 5 is in these terms :

Every person who shall aid, abet, counsel, or procure the commission of any offence which is or hereafter shall be punishable on summary conviction shall be liable to be proceeded against and convicted for the same, either together with the principal offender, or before or after his conviction, and shall be liable on conviction to the same forfeiture and punishment as such principal offender is or shall be by law liable, and may be proceeded against and convicted either in the county, riding, division, liberty, city, borough, or place where such principal offender may be convicted, or in that in which such offence of aiding, abetting, counselling, or procuring may have been committed.

This deals with offences which may be dealt with summarily, and one of the offences which may be dealt with summarily is an offence under the Accessories and Abettors Act, 1861, s. 8. The result of the section is that a person who aids and abets the commission of an offence is a principal in the second degree, and he can be convicted, charged and punished as a principal in the first degree. In this case, which is the first time this has ever happened, in my opinion, Wessel ought to have been convicted of receiving. He ought to have been convicted, of course, of stealing, but having been convicted of receiving, the appeal ought to have been dismissed on the ground that, although he was not a principal in the first degree, he was a principal in the second degree, and the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848, s. 5, covers the case. If ever there was a case in which a person "aided, abetted, counselled or procured the commission of" the offence of receiving, surely this is that case. Wessel fetched Lawrence, who was the principal receiver, brought him there in the car, and thereby enabled the offence to be committed by him. In the ordinary course, if a man is convicted of stealing and another man is convicted of receiving, one does not trouble to consider whether the thief aided and abetted the receiver, but that is the position, in fact, if it is the thief who hands or sells the goods to the receiver, because, except for the action of the thief, in those cases where the thief hands the goods or leaves them with the receiver or sells them to him, the receiver would not have been able to receive the goods. Therefore, although this point has not arisen before, it seems to me to be clear that a man who acts in this way can properly be convicted as a receiver, although he is also the thief, because he has procured the commission of the offence by the receiver. In those circumstances, and on that ground, the recorder could and ought to have upheld the conviction. We send this case back to him with an intimation that the conviction of receiving ought not to have been quashed inasmuch as the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848, s. 5, enabled him to convict Wessel of receiving because he had been aiding, abetting, counselling or procuring the commission of the offence by Lawrence. The appeal is allowed. I am reminded that it is not a question of restoring the order. The case will go back to the recorder with an intimation that the appeal should be dismissed on the ground that I have indicated, and it will then be for the recorder to consider what the appropriate penalty is which he should inflict on the respondent. He has the same powers as the Court of Criminal Appeal in that respect.

MACNAGHTEN, J. : I am of the same opinion.

LYNSKEY, J. : I agree.

Appeal allowed with costs.

Solicitors : Sharpe, Pritchard & Co., agents for J. E. Richards, Town Clerk, Nottingham (for the appellants).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re POWER'S WILL TRUSTS, PUBLIC TRUSTEE
v. HASTINGS AND OTHERS.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Jenkins, J.), June 26, 1947.]

Wills—Construction—Investment clause—Trustee empowered to invest trust moneys in purchase of freehold property—Whether empowered to purchase freehold house as home for widow and children.

By his will, a testator empowered his trustee to invest "all moneys requiring to be invested" under the will "in any manner in which he may in his absolute discretion think fit in all respects as if he were the sole beneficial owner of such moneys including the purchase of freehold property in England or Wales." The question to be determined was whether the trustee was empowered to purchase out of the trust fund a freehold house to be occupied by the testator's widow and children:—

HELD: on the true construction of the will, the trustee was not empowered to purchase a freehold house as a home for the widow and children, because he was authorised to purchase freehold property only as an investment, and the purchase of a house with vacant possession to permit someone to occupy it was not a purchase by way of investment.

[AS TO INVESTMENT BY TRUSTEES, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 33, pp. 233-235, paras. 416-418; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 43, pp. 927, 928, Nos. 3648-3663.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Re Wragg, Wragg v. Palmer, [1919] 2 Ch. 58; 88 L.J. Ch. 269; 121 L.T. 78; 43 Digest 928, 3662.
- (2) Dilworth v. Stamps Comrs., Dilworth v. Land and Income Tax Comrs., [1899] A.C. 99; 79 L.T. 473; sub nom. Dilworth v. New Zealand Stamps Comrs., 68 L.J.P.C. 1; 19 Digest 586, 182.

ADJOURNED SUMMONS to determine whether the trustee of the testator's will was empowered by the will to purchase out of the trust funds a freehold house as a home for the tenant for life (the testator's widow) and the testator's children. It was held that he was not. The facts and the relevant clause of the will appear in the judgment.

T. A. C. Burgess for the Public Trustee.

Winterbotham for the tenant for life.

A. W. L. Franklin for the testator's children.

JENKINS, J.: The question raised by this summons is whether the Public Trustee, as sole trustee of the will of the testator, is empowered by the will to apply part of the trust fund in the purchase of a freehold house, to be occupied as a home by the tenant for life (the testator's widow, who has since his death remarried) and the testator's children, on suitable terms as to repair, insurance, and so forth. This question turns entirely on cl. 8 of the will, which is in the following terms:

All moneys requiring to be invested under this my will may be invested by the trustee in any manner in which he may in his absolute discretion think fit in all respects as if he were the sole beneficial owner of such moneys including the purchase of freehold property in England or Wales.

It has been argued by counsel for the tenant for life that this clause authorises the purchase of a house as a home for the family for the following reasons. In the first place, he points out that, if one looks at cl. 8 independently of the final provision introduced by the word "including," it is wide enough to authorise the purchase of freehold property as an investment. In support of that contention, he referred me to Re Wragg, Wragg v. Palmer (1), where the wording of the clause was, if anything, narrower than the wording in the present case, and P. O. LAWRENCE, J. held that it would authorise the purchase of real estate as an investment. I agree with counsel for the tenant for life that the words of this clause, without regard to the final provision introduced by the word "including," would be wide enough to authorise the purchase of real estate as an investment. That really follows from the decision in Re Wragg (1).

A Having established that proposition, the next step of counsel for the tenant for life is to argue that the addition of the words "including the purchase of freehold property in England or Wales" must be construed as extending the effect of the clause so as to authorise the purchase of freehold property otherwise than as an investment, because, he says, if that were not so, these words would be meaningless. He has referred me to Dilworth v. Stamps Comrs., Dilworth v. Land and Income Tax Comrs. (2), in support of the proposition that where the word "including" introduces expressions explanatory of the meaning of a word, prima facie it enlarges the meaning of that word, but it seems to me that these words, "including the purchase of freehold property in England or Wales," can be sufficiently accounted for by regarding them as having been inserted by the draftsman ex abundanti cautela to make sure that no one would suggest that the clause did not extend to purchasing freehold property as an investment. It is pressing the argument altogether too far to say that the effect of inserting these words must be to introduce some process which is not investment at all. If one looks at the wording of the clause, one finds that "including" refers back to "in any manner." One thus gets "moneys . . . may be invested . . . in any manner . . . including" a particular manner. B That leads to the conclusion that the modes of investment authorised are to include investment in the purchase of freehold property. Therefore, it seems to me that this clause, on its true construction, only authorises the purchase of freehold property as an investment. C

I think it is clearly stated by P. O. LAWRENCE, J., in Re Wragg (1), that for this purpose there is a distinction between purchasing freehold property for the sake of the income which will be obtained from it and purchasing freehold property to occupy it or permit somebody else to occupy it: ([1919] 2 Ch. 64, 65). In the former case, the purchase is accurately described as an "investment." In the latter case, it is not necessarily an investment, for it is a purchase for some other purpose than the receipt of income, and it may be a purchase which, from the financial point of view, will not be beneficial, because part of the price may be attributable to the special need to acquire a suitable place in which to live. It seems to me, therefore, to follow that the clause does not authorise the purchase of a freehold house with vacant possession as a home for the tenant for life and the testator's children, because such a purchase would not be a purchase by way of investment, or, perhaps, more accurately, might not be a purchase by way of investment, inasmuch as part of the money would or might be paid for the advantage of vacant possession and the benefit which the family would get by living in the house. D E

F For those reasons, I propose to declare that the Public Trustee has no power under the will to purchase a freehold residence and premises in England or Wales, not as an investment, but with vacant possession and for the occupation of the tenant for life as a home for herself and for the testator's children.

Declaration accordingly.

G Solicitors: Woodcock, Ryland & Co., agents for Preston & Redman, Bournemouth (for all parties).

[Reported by R. D. H. OSBORNE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

ROBIN & RAMBLER COACHES, LTD. v. TURNER.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Hilbery, J.), May 20, 21, June 23, 24, 1947.]

Sale of Goods—Contract—Voidable contract—Fraud—Hire purchase of motor car—Hirer selling car for cash and another car—Resale of second car—Title to second car—Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (c. 71), ss. 12 (1), 23.

On Jan. 5, 1946, B. entered into a hire purchase agreement with W. to purchase a Hillman motor car for £686. On Apr. 4, 1946, after paying a deposit of £200 and one instalment of £40 10s. 0d. he purported to sell the car, in return for £275 and a Jaguar motor car, to the plaintiffs. On Apr. 10, 1946, B. purported to sell the Jaguar car to the defendant for £525, and subsequently the defendant sold it to F. for £550. W. repudiated the hire purchase agreement on the ground that B. had ceased to pay the instalments, and, having claimed the car back from the plaintiffs, agreed to sell it to them for £455 10s. 0d. (being the balance of the purchase price plus their costs). The plaintiffs then claimed from the defendant the return of the Jaguar car or damages for its conversion or detention :—

HELD : B.'s contract with the plaintiffs was induced by the fraudulent misrepresentation of B. and was voidable at the instance of the plaintiffs, but not void, and, as it was not avoided before the transaction between B. and the defendant, and as the defendant bought in good faith, the property in the Jaguar car passed to the defendant.

[AS TO SALE UNDER A VOIDABLE TITLE, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 29, pp. 108-110, para. 131; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 39, pp. 532-535, Nos. 1443-1460.]

Case referred to :

(1) Peirce v. London Horse & Carriage Repository, Ltd., [1922] W.N. 170.

ACTION for the return of a motor car or damages for its conversion or detention.

The facts appear in the headnote. HILBERY, J., gave judgment for the defendant.

Tilling for the plaintiffs.

S. Rees for the defendant.

HILBERY, J., [after stating the facts] : Counsel urges on behalf of the plaintiffs that the first transaction which took place between Mr. Messenger, the managing director of the plaintiff firm, and Mr. Berry on Apr. 4, when Mr. Berry purported to sell the Hillman car to Mr. Messenger, was a void transaction. I think that is the point in this case which must determine the matter in one way or the other : Was the transaction voidable or was it void ?

I hope I am not misrepresenting or failing to do justice to counsel for the plaintiffs if I seek to summarise his contentions. He says that this transaction purported to be a sale of goods. In a sale of goods transaction the essential thing about which the parties are contracting is the property in the chattel which is the subject of the transaction. If, therefore, one party purports to sell an article in which he has no property, the mere fact that the article is passed over and the form of making a contract is gone through does not result in there being a contract. It merely results in a void transaction. Here then, says counsel, Berry had no property in the Hillman car. The whole transaction was in form one of a sale of goods, but it was, in fact and in truth, void. I do not think that that argument is well founded. The first question to be decided is whether Berry was fraudulent when he entered into the transaction with Mr. Messenger. If Berry were not fraudulent—if at that time he had an honest intention, having sold the Hillman to Mr. Messenger and having added to the price realised the amount for which he could sell the Jaguar, to perfect his title under the hire purchase agreement by paying off the balance out of the proceeds—then there was no fraud. If, on the other hand, the inference to be drawn is that he intended not to perfect his title to the Hillman, but merely to take the proceeds of the sale of what he knew belonged to the hire purchase company and the proceeds of the sale of the Jaguar and use those for his own purposes, he was fraudulent at the time he sold the goods.

I think that the inference, in the whole of the circumstances, is that he was fraudulently minded, so I approach the problem from that standpoint. What is the result? It seems to be that Mr. Messenger was induced to enter into the contract by the fraudulent misrepresentation which Berry was making. That fraudulent misrepresentation, on the strength of which Mr. Messenger took the Hillman from Berry and paid him £275 cash and handed over the S.S. Jaguar, was that Mr. Berry had property in the Hillman car and was in a position to sell it—in other words, could warrant his title to it. That warranty, or “condition” as it is under the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, was intended, I think, to be a condition of that contract. In the receipt given at the time the parties stated: “It is understood that this car is free from any lien in any shape or form.” It is true, if that is the correct view, that Mr. Messenger could have avoided that contract on discovering the fraud, and, if he had done so before the Jaguar had passed to the defendant, the latter could not have obtained any title to the Jaguar, but Mr. Messenger did not do that. Mr. Turner bought the Jaguar on Apr. 10, and at that time Mr. Messenger had not discovered the fraud or avoided his contract with Mr. Berry.

It is not, as counsel for the plaintiffs suggests, that there was a mutual mistake over the identity of the subject-matter of the transaction between Berry and Mr. Messenger, which was the property in the car. The fact that Berry was fraudulent shows that there was no mistake on his part about the property in the car not being in him. The very fact that he was fraudulently representing that the property was in him when he knew it was not excludes the contention that he was acting under any mistake whatever. He acted deliberately in misrepresenting the facts. Whatever mistake there was about where the property in the car lay, it was the unilateral mistake made by Mr. Messenger, induced by the fraud of Berry.

In this connection one case is important—Peirce v. London Horse & Carriage Repository (1), and it is impossible to conceive why, if the right view in such circumstances is that the contract is void and not merely voidable, both the Court of Appeal and the judge of first instance in that case should never have considered that point.

I have come to the conclusion, therefore, that this contract induced by fraud was a voidable contract and, until it was avoided, the property in the car passed under it sufficiently to give the buyer of the Jaguar car, Mr. Turner—who bought without knowing there was any fraud—a good title.

I am fortified in that view by the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, ss. 12 and 23 of which, in my opinion, support the view which I have adopted. It is observable that under s. 12:

In a contract of sale, unless the circumstances of the contract are such as to show a different intention, there is—(1) An implied condition on the part of the seller that in the case of a sale he has a right to sell the goods, and that in the case of an agreement to sell he will have a right to sell the goods at the time when the property [in the goods] is to pass . . .

Section 23 provides:

When the seller of goods has a voidable title thereto, but his title has not been avoided at the time of the sale, the buyer acquires a good title to the goods, provided he buys them in good faith and without notice of the seller's defect of title.

In the circumstances I think that, as Mr. Turner bought from Mr. Berry the Jaguar car in good faith and before the voidable contract between Mr. Berry and Mr. Messenger had been avoided by Mr. Messenger, Mr. Turner got a good title to the Jaguar and passed it, when he did so, to Mr. Farquharson.

The plaintiffs claim must fail, which will mean that the loss has to fall upon them. There will be judgment for the defendant.

Judgment for the defendant with costs.

Solicitors: G. A. Elkin (for the plaintiffs); Walker, Rowe & Clark, agents for Close & Son, Camberley (for the defendant).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

OKEN v. PERRATON.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Hilbery, J.), June 3, 4, 5, July 1, 1947.]

Emergency Legislation—Registration of living accommodation—"Dwelling"—"Living accommodation"—Premises let for business purposes—Previous occupation as residence—Defence (General) Regulations, 1939 (S.R. & O., 1939, No. 927, as amended), reg. 68 CB (1).

By a tenancy agreement, dated Dec. 11, 1945, the tenant undertook to use the leased premises only for his business of a photographic studio, and not for residential purposes, and not to assign, underlet, share, or part with possession of the premises or any part thereof. The premises consisted of two floors of a building above shop premises. The tenant had lived on the premises under a previous tenancy agreement, but, in Nov., 1940, the building had been damaged by enemy action, and he had disclaimed the agreement. In Jan., 1946, the tenant applied to the local housing authority as a person "having in [a] dwelling . . . occupied by him living accommodation which he is willing to make available . . . without furniture for use therein, for occupation by tenants . . ." within the Defence (General) Regulations, 1939, reg. 68 CB (1), to register three rooms on the top floor of the premises as such "living accommodation." The rooms were duly registered and sublet, and the landlord sought possession on the ground that the tenant was in breach of his tenancy agreement.

HELD: as, at the time of his application for registration of the rooms, the right of the tenant to occupy the premises was limited under the tenancy agreement of Dec. 11, 1945, to a right to occupy them for business, and not residential, purposes, he was not tenant of a "dwelling" within the meaning of the regulation, nor, for the same reason, had he "living accommodation" to offer, with the result that reg. 68 CB (1) had no application to the premises, the tenant had broken his agreement, and the landlord was entitled to possession. It is at the time when the application for registration is made that the person applying for it must have in a "dwelling" the "accommodation" which he is willing to make available, and, therefore, the fact that the premises had originally been constructed and used as a dwelling did not prevent the terms on which they were subsequently let from divesting them of that character.

[FOR THE DEFENCE (GENERAL) REGULATIONS, 1939, reg. 68 CB (1), see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 39, pp. 1045, 1046.]

ACTION by the landlord for possession of premises let to the tenant for the purposes of his business of a photographic studio. The tenant registered three rooms as "living accommodation" under reg. 68 CB (1) of the Defence (General) Regulations, 1939, despite his covenant in the tenancy agreement not to use the premises otherwise than for his business purposes. He claimed that reg. 68 CB (4) had the effect of rendering his action lawful. HILBERY, J., made an order for possession.

Millner for the landlord.

F. Whitworth for the tenant.

Cur. adv. vult.

July 1. HILBERY, J., read the following judgment. The plaintiff is the owner of premises known as 199, High Street, Penge, which consist of a lock-up shop on the street level and two floors above. Access is had to the floors above the shop by entrances and staircases at the front and at the rear of the building. The defendant is the tenant of these two floors above the shop on the terms of a tenancy agreement in writing dated Dec. 11, 1945, for a term of three years from Aug. 13, 1945, at a net rent of £97 10s. 0d. per annum, payable by weekly instalments of £1 17s. 6d. in advance, on Monday in each week. By cl. 2 (6) of this agreement the tenant agreed to use the premises for the business of a photographic studio and for no other purpose whatsoever, and not for residential or sleeping purposes, and by cl. 2 (9):

. . . not to assign underlet share or part with possession of the said premises or any part thereof.

By cl. 4 (1) it was, inter alia, agreed that the landlord might determine the tenancy and re-enter on the premises in the event of the tenant failing to observe any of the stipulations on his part therein contained.

A Since Aug. 13, 1945, the tenant has occupied the premises pursuant to the terms of this tenancy agreement. Until the end of Jan., 1946, he used them for the business of a photographic studio which his wife carried on there. Then, by letters of Jan. 9 and 11, 1946, he applied to the Penge Urban District Council to register the three rooms on the top floor under reg. 68 CB (1) of the Defence (General) Regulations, 1939, as unfurnished living accommodation available for occupation by a tenant at £1 a week. By a letter dated Jan. 26, 1946, the clerk to the council informed the tenant's wife that he had registered these rooms for letting at an inclusive weekly rent of £1. The clerk to the council was not informed that the premises were let to the tenant and occupied by him as business premises only. The tenant's object in taking this course was not to provide living accommodation for an unfortunate citizen, who, because of the housing shortage, was unable to find any place to live in, but, as he has admitted in the witness box, it was to take advantage, if he lawfully could, of the regulations so as to reduce his overhead expenses by the £1 a week which he would get from this sub-letting, without incurring any liability for breach of his express contract.

C The landlord now claims that the tenant had no legal right under reg. 68 CB (1), to apply for the registration of this accommodation, and asserts that, the registration being unlawful, the sub-letting which the tenant has effected is a breach of the tenant's undertakings in the tenancy agreement not to use the premises otherwise than for the business of a photographic studio, not to use them for residential or sleeping purposes, and not to underlet, share or part with the possession of any part of the premises. The landlord claims, therefore, to have the tenancy agreement terminated, and to be entitled to an order for possession. The tenant asserts that he was entitled as a matter of law to act as he has done in procuring the registration of part of the premises as accommodation for occupation by a tenant, and that by reg. 68 CB (4) such action on his part is rendered lawful, notwithstanding the express provisions of his tenancy agreement. By way of counterclaim the tenant prays that if, contrary to his contention, he has acted illegally and in breach of the terms of his tenancy agreement, he may be relieved of the forfeiture, and by his counsel at the trial he offered, if the court should decide against his contention, forthwith to apply to the local housing authority for cancellation of the registration in question and to cause the tenant, to whom he has sub-let, to vacate the premises, and to abide by such other terms as to costs or otherwise as the court might order.

F [His LORDSHIP referred to the evidence, and stated that, until Nov., 1940, the tenant had lived on the premises, but at that date the premises were damaged by enemy action and he disclaimed the tenancy and lived elsewhere, and continued:—]. The question which, therefore, arises for determination is one of construction of reg. 68 CB (1), which provides :

G Where a local housing authority have established a register for the purposes of this regulation, any person having in any dwelling in the area of the authority occupied by him living accommodation which he is willing to make available, whether with or without furniture for use therein, for occupation by tenants or lodgers, may apply to the authority for registration of the accommodation and of the terms on which the householder is willing to make it available as aforesaid.

H Whether the tenant, occupying the premises in question in the circumstances which I have related, was a person who had in a dwelling "living accommodation" which he was willing to make available for occupation by a tenant, within the meaning of that regulation, is the question which the parties raise for my decision. In my view, the tenant was not such a person. To come within the regulation he must show two things. In the first place, he must show that at the time when he applied for the registration of the accommodation which he was willing to make available for a tenant, he was a person who had in "a dwelling" the accommodation which he was asking should be registered, and he must show that it was "living accommodation" in that dwelling which he was willing to make available. The tenant was not in occupation of premises which were a dwelling. When he made his application they were business premises, the only right to occupy which was limited to a right to occupy for a business purpose only and excluded their use for residential or sleeping purposes. Used in the context in which it occurs in this regulation, the word "dwelling" is intended to refer to a building which is a place of residence, and support for this view is to be found in the fact that what a person in any dwelling is empowered to apply to have registered is "living accommodation" in the dwelling. I see no reason to give the word "dwelling," when so used in the regulation, any other than its normal and popular meaning.

I am, further, of opinion that the tenant, occupying, as he did, for a business purpose only, could not be said to have "living accommodation" which he was willing to make available. He had expressly agreed that his occupation should be for a business purpose only and not for residential or sleeping purposes. Unless, therefore, the fact that the premises had originally been constructed as a dwelling-house, and used for residential purposes, prevented the subsequent terms on which they were let and were occupied from divesting them of that character, they were not a dwelling and there was no living accommodation in a dwelling at the time when the tenant procured the registration of the top floor as living accommodation available for a tenant and sublet that accommodation, as he did. It appears to me to be reasonably clear on the wording of the regulation in question that it is at the time when the application for registration is made that the person applying for the registration must have the accommodation available in what is at that time a dwelling. Many buildings in London, and in some cases in whole districts in London, which were constructed as dwellings or places of residence, in the course of time have come to be let and occupied solely as business premises and have in this way changed what was their original character. So it is with the premises in question in this action. Their character has been changed. That it has been comparatively recently changed makes no difference. They have become business premises and are not a "dwelling" interpreting that word, as I do, as meaning a place of residence. No one has dwelt in the premises since the tenant disclaimed his tenancy in 1940.

In my opinion, the regulation in question has no application to the premises I am here concerned with, and the tenant offered for registration accommodation which the housing authority had no power to register. The tenant is, therefore, in breach of his tenancy agreement, and the landlord is entitled to the relief she claims. In the circumstances, however, I think the tenant should be granted relief against his forfeiture.

Judgment for plaintiff.

Solicitors: Maltz, Mitchell & Co. (for the landlord); Kingsford, Dorman & Co. (for the tenant).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

FRANKLIN AND OTHERS v. MINISTER OF TOWN AND COUNTRY PLANNING.

[HOUSE OF LORDS (Lord Thankerton, Lord Porter, Lord Uthwatt, Lord du Parcq and Lord Normand), June 23, 24, 26, July 24, 1947.]

Town and Country Planning—New town—Duty of Minister—Administrative capacity—Need to support proposed order by public inquiry—"Bias"—New Towns Act, 1946 (c. 68), s. 1 (1), sched. I (3).

Pursuant to the New Towns Act, 1946, sched. I, para. 3, the Minister of Town and Country Planning held a public local inquiry into objections to a proposed order under s. 1 (1) of that Act, called the Stevenage New Town Designation Order, 1946, by which Stevenage was designated as a "new town" within the Act. In a speech at a public meeting prior to the passing of the Act, the Minister had stated that the Bill would become law, that Stevenage was a most suitable site and should be the first scheme under the Act, and that the Stevenage project would go forward. At the inquiry, no evidence in support of the order was adduced, and the objections then made were subsequently considered and rejected by the Minister. He dealt in writing with the substance of all objections except that directed to the difficulties of water supply and sewage disposal, with regard to which he said he was taking advice, having in mind a scheme which representatives of the Metropolitan Water Board and the Lee Conservancy had agreed would meet the difficulty. The appellants, who were local residents and landowners, challenged the order under s. 16 of the Town and Country Planning Act, 1944, on the grounds that (i) before considering the objections the Minister stated that he would make the order, and was thereby biased in any consideration of the objections which the Act of 1946 impliedly required should be fairly and properly considered, and (ii) the inquiry did not comply with the statutory requirements for such a public local inquiry in respect that no evidence in support of the draft order was led on behalf of the Minister:—

HELD: (i) no judicial or quasi-judicial duty was imposed on the Minister in the discharge of his statutory duties, those duties being purely administrative; the only question was whether he had complied with the statutory direction to appoint a person to hold the public inquiry and to consider that person's report; and the appellants had not established either that in his speech he had prejudged any genuine consideration of the objections or that he had not genuinely considered the objections at a later stage when they were submitted to him.

(ii) the words "in respect thereto" in para. (3) of sched. I to the Act of 1946 meant "in respect to the objections"; they definitely limited the scope of the inquiry, and none of the general procedural provisions of s. 290 of the Local Government Act, 1933, could be held to extend its scope; the object of the inquiry was further to inform the mind of the Minister and not to consider any issue between the Minister and the objectors, which was for the Minister thereafter to consider and decide; and, therefore, there was no need for the Minister to lead evidence at the inquiry in support of the draft order.

Per LORD THANKERTON: The proper significance of the word "bias" is to denote a departure from the standard of even-handed justice which the law requires from those who occupy judicial office, such as an arbitrator.

[EDITORIAL NOTE. This decision finally determines the powers and position of the Minister of Town and Country Planning under the New Towns Act, 1946. HENN COLLINS, J., took the view that under the statute the Minister acted in a quasi-judicial, and not merely in an administrative, capacity, and on the facts he found that the Minister had not come to the matter with an open mind, but had shown bias. The Court of Appeal held that the only obligation which rested on the Minister after the inquiry was fairly and bona fide to consider the report of the person by whom the inquiry was held, and, after consultation with any local authorities concerned, to decide whether it was expedient in the national interest that the new town should be developed as proposed, and they held that the objectors had failed to show that this obligation had not been carried out and to provide any evidence of bias. The House of Lords now make it clear that the Act imposes no judicial or quasi-judicial duty on the Minister and that any reference in the present case to "bias" was irrelevant. The Minister's duties are purely administrative. All he is bound to do is genuinely to consider any objections to a proposed scheme and the report of the inquiry, i.e., not to come to those matters with a "foreclosed mind." The position, therefore, of the Minister of Town and Country Planning under the Act of 1946 is different from that of the Minister of Health under the Housing Acts. In Errington v. Minister of Health ([1935] 1 K.B. 249; 99 J.P. 15), and a number of later cases it has been held that the Minister of Health exercises a quasi-judicial function in confirming clearance and compulsory purchase orders under the Housing Acts and so must act judicially in arriving at his decision.

FOR THE NEW TOWNS ACT, 1946, s. 1 (1), SCHED. I (3), see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 39, pp. 664, 683.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Ranger v. Great Western Railway Co., (1854), 5 H.L. Cas. 72; 24 L.T.O.S. 22; 2 Digest 400, 580.
- (2) R. v. Sussex JJ., Ex p. McCarthy, [1924] 1 K.B., 256; 93 L.J.K.B. 129; 88 J.P. 3; sub nom. R. v. Hurst, Ex p. McCarthy, 130 L.T. 510; 33 Digest 294, 97.
- (3) R. v. Essex JJ., Ex p. Perkins, [1927] 2 K.B. 475; 96 L.J.K.B. 530; 137 L.T. 455; 91 J.P. 94; Digest Supp.
- (4) Re the Trunk Roads Act, 1936, and Re the London-Portsmouth Trunk Road (Surrey) Compulsory Purchase Order (No. 2), 1938, [1939] 2 All E.R. 464; [1939] 2 K.B. 515; 108 L.J.K.B. 555; 160 L.T. 554; Digest Supp.

APPEAL from a decision of the Court of Appeal (LORD OAKSEY, MORTON and TUCKER, L.J.J.), dated Feb. 20, 1947, and reported [1947] 1 All E.R. 612, reversing a decision of HENN COLLINS, J., dated Feb. 20, 1947, and reported ibid., 396.

On Nov. 11, 1946, the Minister of Town and Country Planning, after having held a public local inquiry, made the Stevenage New Town Designation Order, 1946. The objectors, who were residents and landowners of Stevenage, opposed the order and appealed to the court, under s. 16 of the Town and Country Planning Act, 1944, on the grounds that (1) the Minister had not acted within his powers in making the order, and that (2) in considering the objections to the proposed order, he failed to carry out his duty to give the objections fair and proper consideration. HENN COLLINS, J., held that the order was not ultra vires, but that the Minister had been biased in his consideration of the objections, and he, therefore, quashed the order. The Court of Appeal held that the only obligation which vested in the Minister after the inquiry was fairly and bona fide to consider the report of the person by whom the inquiry was held, and, after consultation, under s. 1 of the Act, with any local authorities who appeared to him to be concerned, to decide whether it was expedient in the national interest that the new town should be developed as proposed. The Court of Appeal held that the objectors had failed to discharge the onus which was on them to show that this obligation had not been carried out and to provide evidence of bias. They, therefore, reversed the decision of HENN COLLINS, J. The objectors appealed to the House of Lords.

The House took time for consideration and affirmed the decision of the Court of Appeal.

Capewell, K.C., and Squibb for the appellants.

The Attorney-General (Sir Hartley Shawcross, K.C.) and H. L. Parker for the respondent.

LORD THANKERTON: My Lords, the appellants, who are the owners and occupiers of dwelling-houses and land situate at Stevenage, challenge the validity of the Stevenage New Town (Designation) Order, 1946, made on Nov. 11, 1946, by the respondent, under the New Towns Act, 1946, which had received the Royal Assent on Aug. 1, 1946. This challenge is made under s. 16 of the Town and Country Planning Act, 1944, which provides by sub-s. (1) (b) that the court, if satisfied that the order or any provision therein is not within the powers of the Act or that the interests of the applicant have been substantially prejudiced by any requirement of the Act or of any regulation made thereunder not having been complied with, may quash the order or any provision contained therein, either generally or in so far as it affects any property of the applicant.

The relevant provisions of the New Towns Act, 1946, are as follows :

1.—(1) If the Minister is satisfied, after consultation with any local authorities who appear to him to be concerned, that it is expedient in the national interest that any area of land should be developed as a new town by a corporation established under this Act, he may make an order designating that area as the site of the proposed new town. (2) The provisions of sched. I to this Act shall have effect with respect to the procedure to be followed in connection with the making of orders under this section ; and ss. 16 and 17 of the Town and Country Planning Act, 1944 (which relate respectively to the validity and date of operation of orders under s. 1 of that Act, and to the registration of such orders in the register of local land charges) shall apply to an order made under this section as they apply to an order made under s. 1 of that Act.

The relevant provisions of sched. I as to orders under s. 1 are as follows :

1. Where the Minister proposes to make an order under s 1 of this Act, he shall prepare a draft of the order, describing the area to be designated as the site of the proposed new town by reference to a map, either with or without descriptive matter (which in the case of any discrepancy with the map, shall prevail except in so far as may be otherwise provided by the draft order) together with such statement as the Minister considers necessary for indicating the size and general character of the proposed new town. 2. Before making the order the Minister shall publish in the LONDON GAZETTE, in one or more newspapers circulating in the locality in which the proposed new town will be situated, and in such other newspapers, if any, as he considers appropriate in the circumstances, a notice— (a) describing the area to be designated as the site of the proposed new town ; (b) stating that the draft of an order under s.1 of this Act has been prepared by the Minister in relation thereto and is about to be considered by him ; (c) naming a place within the said area where a copy of the draft order (including any map or descriptive matter annexed thereto) and of the statement required by the foregoing paragraph, may be seen at all reasonable hours ; and (d) specifying the time (not being less than twenty-eight days from the publication of the notice in the GAZETTE) within which, and the manner in which, objections to the proposed order may be made, and shall, not later than the date on which the notice is published in the GAZETTE, serve a like notice on the council of the county and of the county district in which the land, or any part of the land, to which the order relates is situated, and on any other local authority who appear to him to be concerned with the order. 3. If any objection is duly made to the proposed order and is not withdrawn, the Minister shall, before making the order, cause a public local inquiry to be held with respect thereto, and shall consider the report of the person by whom the inquiry was held. 4. Subject to the provisions of the last foregoing paragraph the Minister may make the order in terms of the draft or subject to such modifications as he thinks fit : Provided that, except with the consent of all persons interested, the Minister shall not make the order subject to a modification including in the area designated as the site of the proposed new town any land not so designated in the draft order.

Section 16 of the Town and Country Planning Act, 1944, thus incorporated by s. 1 (2) of the Act of 1946, restricts the remedy open to any person desiring to challenge the validity of an order, or of any provision therein, to the ground that it is not within the powers of the Act or that some requirement of the Act has not been complied with, so that he must proceed by application to the High Court, as therein provided, and he requires to satisfy the court that the order is not within the powers of the Act, or that his interests have been substantially prejudiced by any requirement of the Act not having been complied with.

On Aug. 3, 1946, the respondent prepared the Draft Stevenage New Town (Designation) Order, 1946, and, on or about Aug. 6, 1946, he caused the same to be published and notices to be given as prescribed by para. 2 of sched. I to the Act of 1946. Thereafter, objections were received from a number of persons, including the appellants. Accordingly, the respondent instructed Mr. Arnold Morris, an inspector of the Ministry of Town and Country Planning, to hold a public local inquiry, as prescribed by para. 3 of the said schedule. Mr. Morris held the inquiry at the Town Hall, Stevenage, on Oct. 7 and 8, 1946, and on Oct. 25 made a report to the respondent, in which he set out a summary of the submissions made and the evidence given by and on behalf of the objectors and attached thereto a complete transcript of the proceedings, which began with an opening statement by Mr. Morris giving a brief recapitulation of the reasons that had led to the designation of Stevenage as the site of a new town. As already stated, on Nov. 11, 1946, the respondent made the order, which is under challenge. On Dec. 9, 1946, the appellants, by notice of motion, applied to the High Court to have the order quashed, on the following grounds :—

(1) That the said order is not within the powers of the New Towns Act, 1946, or alternatively that the requirements of the said Act have not been complied with and the interests of the applicants have been thereby substantially prejudiced in that—
 (a) before considering the objections of the applicants the Minister stated that he would make the said order, and was thereby biased in any consideration of the said objections; and
 (b) the Minister did not before making the said order cause a public local inquiry to be held with respect thereto; and

(2) that the New Towns Act, 1946, impliedly requires that the objections of the applicants should be fairly and properly considered by the Minister and that the Minister should give fair and proper effect to the result of such consideration in deciding whether the said order should be made and that such implied requirements were not complied with.

There does not appear to be much dispute as to the facts, but a great deal rests on the proper inference to be drawn from these facts, which may be stated chronologically as follows. On Jan. 21, 1946, a committee appointed in 1945 by the respondent, as Minister of Town and Country Planning, and the Secretary of State for Scotland, known as the "Reith Committee," made an interim report, dated Jan. 21, 1946, and published as Command Paper 6759, in which it is stated in para. 16:

(1) Stevenage is suggested in the Greater London Plan, 1944, as one of the new towns in the outer ring round London. We are informed that the development of this town is a matter of urgency, and that the agency must be chosen before legislation can be obtained. (2) It is possible that by a special arrangement with the Hertfordshire County Council, at the request of the Minister of Town and Country Planning, the necessary land may be acquired for the county council under s. 35 of the Town and Country Planning Act, 1932, the Exchequer providing the necessary finance. We recommend that there shall be an arrangement between the county council and a government sponsored corporation established by Royal Charter, which will enable the latter to proceed in advance of legislation. (3) A draft charter for this corporation, drawn up at our request by the Treasury Solicitor, is in Appendix 4 (Note: Charters for corporations established after legislation has been passed would derive from that legislation and be different in content).

The committee recommended in the 9th place:

Stevenage. Arrangements should be made for setting up immediately a public corporation for the development of a new town at Stevenage to proceed with the necessary work in advance of legislation—para 16.

The New Towns Bill was introduced by the respondent in the House of Commons on Apr. 17, 1946, and was ordered to be printed. On or about Apr. 24, 1946, the respondent sent letters to 179 owners of land at Stevenage inquiring whether they were prepared to sell land to the respondent, with a view to the development of the area as a garden city, as provided by s. 35 of the Town and Country Planning Act, 1932. There is no evidence that any land was acquired by the respondent as the outcome of these letters, and we are entitled to assume that the Minister was acting on the suggestion of the Reith Committee and that the proposal was superseded by the passage of the New Towns Act. On May 6, 1946, the respondent attended and spoke at a public meeting in Stevenage Town Hall, called to consider a proposal for designating an area of land in the neighbourhood of Stevenage as the site of a new town. The appellants base their case mainly on the statements made in an advance Press notice issued by the respondent prior to the meeting, and statements made by the respondent in the course of his speech, as evidence that the respondent had by that time completely made up his mind that the designation of Stevenage as a new town would be carried through, whatever was said at the meeting or subsequently. Both the Press notice and the speech gave a somewhat detailed statement of the development of the plans for relief of density of the population of London by the formation of new towns, and the particular advantages of the Stevenage area for such a purpose, but it is unnecessary to do more than quote the passages founded on by the appellants as demonstrating the state of the respondent's mind along with some of the immediate context. All such passages in the Press notice are to be found in the respondent's speech, but the speech contains one short additional passage, and the report of the speech also gives some of the interruptions of the audience, and the reactions of the respondent thereto, and records that the respondent, on rising to begin his speech, was greeted with cheers from the platform and some booing from the hall. It seems that the meeting might fairly be described as a lively one. The relevant passages are as follows :

(1) After review of the Abercrombie Plan for Greater London, the interim reports of the Reith Committee, the unanimous approval given to build the first new town at Stevenage, and the consideration of the matter by the government and inter-departmental committees, the respondent said :

A I have now had the advantage of two interim reports—both unanimous—from this committee (the Reith Committee) and based upon these reports the government has decided to introduce legislation to facilitate the creation of these new towns. The New Towns Bill, published twelve days ago, will receive its second reading on Wednesday, and I am here to-day—(Voice : You are leaving it a bit late.) In anticipation of the passage of the Bill—and I have no doubt that it will go through—certain preliminary steps have been taken regarding Stevenage by way of discussion with local authorities concerned—(Voice : There has been no discussion with the Stevenage local authority)—
B and the preparation of a plan, and the giving of notices for the acquisition of land under powers which I already have in pursuance of the Town and Country Planning Act, 1932.

(2) In reference to the choice of the Stevenage area :

I think you will agree that, if we are to carry out our policy of creating a number of new towns to relieve congestion in London, we could hardly have chosen for the site of one of them a better place than Stevenage. Now I know that many objections have
C been raised by the inhabitants of Stevenage, perhaps not unnaturally.

(3) Later the respondent said, in two passages :

I want to carry out in Stevenage a daring exercise in town planning—(Jeers). It is no good your jeering : it is going to be done —(Applause and boos). (Cries of " Dictator "). After all this new town is to be built in order to provide for the happiness and welfare of some 60,000 men, women and children . . . For a number of years we in this country
D stood together and suffered together, whilst fighting for an ideal, for a democracy in which we believed. I am sure that this spirit is not dead in Stevenage, and if you are satisfied that this project is worth while, and for the benefit of large numbers of your fellow human beings, you will be prepared to play your part to make it a success. The project will go forward because it must go forward. It will do so more surely and more smoothly and more successfully with your help and co-operation. Stevenage will in a short time become world famous—(Laughter). People from all over the world
E will come to Stevenage to see how we here in this country are building for the new way of life.

(4) In answer to a question whether the rates would be increased by the development, the respondent said :

No, in due course Stevenage will gain. Local authorities will be consulted all the way through. But we have a duty to perform, and I am not going to be deterred from that duty. While I will consult as far as possible all the local authorities, at F the end, if people become fractious and unreasonable, I shall have to carry out my duty—(Voice : Gestapo!)

The New Towns Bill received a second reading in the House of Commons on May 8, 1946, and received the Royal Assent on Aug. 1, 1946. The statutory duty of carrying out the designation of new towns thus became imposed on the respondent as Minister of Town and Country Planning. Under para. 1 of G sched. I to the Act, the respondent prepared, on Aug. 3, 1946, a draft order for the designation of the Stevenage area, and on or about Aug. 6, 1946, caused the Draft Stevenage New Town (Designation) Order, 1946, to be published and notices to be given as prescribed by para. 2 of the schedule. As already stated, objections were thereafter received, and on the instructions of the respondent, a public local inquiry was held by Mr. Morris on Oct. 7 and 8, 1946, and Mr. Morris made a report to the respondent on Oct. 25, 1946. It was conceded
H by the appellants that there was no evidence of any person having been deterred from lodging objections by any of the facts already stated, and there is no criticism of the conduct of the inquiry by Mr. Morris except that which is involved in the other contention of the appellants as to the range of the inquiry, which is claimed by them not to have been in compliance with the statutory requirements. On Nov. 8, 1946, the respondent caused a letter to be sent to the objectors, in which, after stating that he had considered Mr. Morris' report, and that, after giving careful consideration to the various submissions made to him on behalf of the interested local authorities and statutory undertakings and by private individuals affected by the proposals, he had decided to make the order, the respondent, in fourteen paragraphs, dealt in turn with the main objections raised. The appellants sought to maintain that, in para. 13, the respondent had not effectively dealt with the objections raised by the Metropolitan Water Board, the Lee Conservancy Board and the Lee Conservancy Catchment Board as to water supply and sewage disposal, which the appellants contended were vital to the practicability of the whole proposal, but only stated that he had appointed a consultant to examine the possibilities of a scheme which will apply to a much wider area than that of the immediate vicinity of Stevenage. In my opinion, this contention of the appellants was correctly disposed of by LORD OAKSEY, L.J., ([1947] 1 All E.R. 616), who pointed out that none of these authorities had ever suggested that it was an entirely unpracticable scheme, and that it really raised a question of expense. The respondent said that these problems had been taken into account from the beginning and had been the subject of discussions with the Ministry of Health from an early stage and subsequently with the Metropolitan Water Board and the Lee Conservancy Board. (The appellants seek to throw doubt on the statement as to discussion with these two Boards). The respondent added that he felt justified in going forward with the establishment of a properly planned community and would maintain close contact with the Ministry of Health and the statutory undertakers at every stage of the development. From this it is clear that the respondent, after very long and full consideration of the matter, came to the conclusion that these objections were in no degree fatal to the scheme, but were matters to be examined and determined during the stage of development of the new town, which comes after the making of the order, when the development corporation is established under s. 2 of the Act. The appellants admit that, if the respondent did so decide, his decision is not open to challenge by them. It may further be observed that, during this later stage, the Minister of Health, under s. 9 of the Act, has the power, on his own initiative, of constituting larger areas than the designated area for the purposes of public health. It appears to me that the respondent's letter of Nov. 8 not only does not support the appellants' contention, but that it is evidence that the Minister had properly considered the objections.

As already stated, the Stevenage New Town (Designation) Order was made by the respondent in terms of para. 4 of sched. I to the Act, and its validity is the subject of challenge in these proceedings. HENN COLLINS, J. ([1947] 1 All E.R. 399) upheld the first contention of the appellants on the ground that the respondent's functions in considering the report of Mr. Morris' inquiry were quasi-judicial, that he did not consider the objections with an open mind, and that "he did not consider or decide the question Aye or No should the order be confirmed with an open mind, but that he meant to confirm it whatever the force of the objections might be, trusting that some solution would be found." The learned judge based his view on the respondent's speech of May 6, 1946, and on para. 13 of the respondent's letter of Nov. 8. As regards the former he says (ibid., 398):

If I am to judge by what he said at the public meeting which was held very shortly before the Bill, then published, became an Act of Parliament, I could have no doubt but that any issue raised by objectors was forejudged. The Minister's language leaves no doubt about that. He was not saying that there must be and shall be satellite towns, but he was saying that Stevenage was to be the first of them. But, when he made that speech, and gave his answers to questions which were asked, he had no administrative functions in relation to the Act in question, for the Act had not then been passed. Though that was his attitude two days before the Bill received its second reading, it is upon the objectors to prove that the Minister was in a like mind, or, at least, had not an open mind, from and after, at latest the inception of the public inquiry, which was held in Oct. 1946.

As regards the letter of Nov. 8, 1946, he says (ibid., 399):

In this case, however, as was then only to be expected of him, the Minister has dealt, in writing, with the substance of the objections—with one exception, namely, that directed to the difficulties of water supply and sewage disposal. It is obvious that those difficulties must be met before the scheme can go through. The Minister acknowledges that they have not been met, and that he is taking advice as to how it can be done. Non constat that any way will be found, and yet, with that fundamental problem still outstanding, the Minister confirms his order. How can it be said that he weighed the objection with an open mind when he acknowledges that he did not and does not know the force of it? When, therefore, I ask myself whether the objectors have satisfied me that from and after the inception of the inquiry up to and including the moment at which the Minister decided to confirm his order, he had not an open mind, my answer is that they have.

A It is clear that, had the learned judge appreciated, as was pointed out in the Court of Appeal, that no witness had suggested that the scheme could not go through unless the suggested difficulties of water supply and sewage disposal had been met, and had he realised that he had put a wrong construction on para. 13 of the letter of Nov. 8, 1946, he would not only have been left without any evidence that from and after the inception of the inquiry up to and including the confirmation of the order the respondent had not an open mind, but he would have had the evidence of the letter of Nov. 8, 1946, that the respondent had so considered the report, and he should also have taken account of the B unchallenged affidavit of the respondent on Jan. 21, 1947, referred to by the Court of Appeal ([1947] 1 All E.R. 616) that :

“ Before causing the said order to be made, I personally considered all the objections made by the objectors, including the present applicants, together with the submissions made and evidence given on their behalf as appearing in the said transcript. I also carefully considered the report of the said Arnold Morris.”

C The learned judge makes no reference to this affidavit. In that aspect of the evidence it appears that the learned judge, in view of his reasoning, as above quoted, would not have quashed the order.

D The Court of Appeal accepted this view of the reasoning of the learned judge, and, while assuming that his inference from the respondent's speech of May 6, 1946, that the respondent had not then an open mind and that any issue raised by the objectors was forejudged was well-founded, held that the learned judge's statement of the evidence of the objectors as to water supply and sewage disposal was incorrect, it not having been suggested that the scheme was entirely unpracticable, and on his erroneous construction of the letter of Nov. 8, 1946, set aside the decision of HENN COLLINS, J., and restored the Stevenage New Town (Designation) Order of the respondent.

E My Lords, I agree with the decision of the Court of Appeal, but I am of opinion that an incorrect view of the law applicable in this case was taken by the learned judge, and I feel bound, despite the assumption of its correctness by the Court of Appeal, to examine the correctness of the learned judge's view as to the proper inference from the respondent's speech of May 6, 1946. While the fact that the speech was made just before the second reading of the Bill, and some months before the statutory duties as to designation of new towns was imposed on the respondent has some bearing on the fair construction of the speech, I am prepared F to assume in favour of the appellants that, under the Bill as introduced, it was proposed to impose these duties on the respondent, as Minister of Town and Country Planning, and that these duties presented no material difference from those contained in the Bill when passed into law. It could hardly be suggested that, prior to its enactment, he was subject to any higher duty than is to be found in the statute.

G In my opinion, no judicial, or quasi-judicial, duty was imposed on the respondent, and any reference to judicial duty, or bias, is irrelevant in the present case. The respondent's duties under s. 1 of the Act and sched. I thereto are, in my opinion, purely administrative, but the Act prescribes certain methods of, or steps in, the discharge of that duty. It is obvious that, before making the draft order, which must contain a definite proposal to designate the area concerned as the site of a new town, the respondent must have made elaborate inquiry into the matter, and have consulted any local authorities who appear H to him to be concerned, and, obviously, other departments of the government, such as the Ministry of Health, would naturally require to be consulted. It would seem, accordingly, that the respondent was required to satisfy himself that it was a sound scheme before he took the serious step of issuing a draft order. It seems clear also, that the purpose of inviting objections, and, where they are not withdrawn, of having a public inquiry, to be held by someone other than the respondent, to whom that person reports, was for the further information of the respondent, in order to the final consideration of the soundness of the scheme of the designation, and it is important to note that the development of the site, after the order is made, is primarily the duty of the development corporation established under s. 2 of the Act. I am of opinion that no judicial duty is laid on the respondent in discharge of these statutory duties, and that the only question is whether he has complied with the statutory directions to appoint a person to hold the public inquiry, and to consider that person's report. On this contention of the appellants no suggestion is made that the public inquiry was not properly conducted, nor is there any criticism of the report by Mr. Morris. In such a case the only ground of challenge must be either that the respondent did not, in fact, consider the report and the objections, of which there is here no evidence, or that his mind was so foreclosed that he gave no genuine consideration to them, which is the case made by the appellants. Although I am unable to agree exactly with the view of the respondent's duty expressed by the learned judge, or with some of the expressions used by the Court of Appeal in regard to that matter, it does appear to me that the issue was treated in both courts as being whether the respondent had genuinely considered the objections and the report, as directed by the Act. A

My Lords, I could wish that the use of the word "bias" should be confined to its proper sphere. Its proper significance, in my opinion, is to denote a departure from the standard of even-handed justice which the law requires from those who occupy judicial office, or those who are commonly regarded as holding a quasi-judicial office, such as an arbitrator. The reason for this clearly is that, having to adjudicate as between two or more parties, he must come to his adjudication with an independent mind, without any inclination or bias towards one side or other in the dispute. As LORD CRANWORTH, L.C., says in Ranger v. Great Western Railway Co. (1) (5 H.L. Cas. 89): B

... a judge ought to be, and is supposed to be, indifferent between the parties. He has, or is supposed to have, no bias inducing him to lean to the one side rather than to the other. In ordinary cases it is a just ground of exception to a judge that he is not indifferent, and the fact that he is himself a party, or interested as a party, affords the strongest proof that he cannot be indifferent. C

To this may be added the statement by LORD HEWART, C.J., in R. v. Sussex Justices, Ex p. McCarthy (2) ([1924] 1 K.B. 258): D

It is said, and, no doubt, truly, that when that gentleman [the deputy clerk] retired in the usual way with the justices, taking with him the notes of the evidence in case the justices might desire to consult him, the justices came to a conclusion without consulting him, and that he scrupulously abstained from referring to the case in any way. But while that is so, a long line of cases shows that it is not merely of some importance but is of fundamental importance that justice should not only be done, but should manifestly and undoubtedly be seen to be done. The question, therefore, is not whether in this case the deputy clerk made any observation or offered any criticism which he might not properly have made or offered; the question is whether he was so related to the case in its civil aspect as to be unfit to act as clerk to the justices in the criminal matter. The answer to that question depends not upon what actually was done but upon what might appear to be done. E

This was followed in R. v. Essex Justices, Ex p. Perkins (3), but, in the present case, the respondent having no judicial duty, the only question is what the respondent actually did, i.e., whether, in fact, he did genuinely consider the report and the objections. F

Coming now to the inference of the learned judge from the respondent's speech on May 6 that he had not then a mind open to conviction, the learned judge states it thus ([1947] 1 All E.R. 398): G

If I am to judge by what he said at the public meeting which was held very shortly before the Bill, then published, became an Act of Parliament, I could have no doubt but that any issue raised by objectors was forejudged. The Minister's language leaves no doubt about that. He was not saying that there must be and shall be satellite towns, but he was saying that Stevenage was to be the first of them. H

It seems probable that the learned judge's mind was influenced by his having already held that the respondent's function was quasi-judicial, which would raise the question of bias, but, in any view, I am clearly of opinion that nothing said by the respondent was inconsistent with the discharge of his statutory duty, when subsequently objections were lodged, and the local public inquiry took place, followed by the report of that inquiry, genuinely to consider the report and the objections. The only passages in the speech quoted in the appellants' Case are contained in the third quotation I have made from the speech, and are as follows :

A I want to carry out in Stevenage a daring exercise in town planning (jeers). It is no good your jeering : it is going to be done . . . After all, this new town is to be built in order to provide for the happiness and welfare of some 60,000 men, women and children . . . The project will go forward, because it must go forward. It will do so more surely and more smoothly and more successfully with your help and co-operation. Stevenage will in a short time become world famous. People from all over the world will come to Stevenage to see how we here in this country are building for the new way of life.

The only two additional passages founded on by the appellants' counsel at the hearing before this House were the sentence in my first quotation :

B In anticipation of the passage of this Bill—and I have no doubt that it will go through, and, in my fourth quotation :

But we have a duty to perform, and I am not going to be deterred from that duty. While I will consult as far as possible all the local authorities, at the end, if people become fractious and unreasonable, I shall have to carry out my duty—(Voice : Gestapo!)

C My Lords, these passages in a speech, which was of a political nature, and of the kind familiar in a speech on second reading, demonstrate (1) the speaker's view that the Bill would become law, that Stevenage was a most suitable site and should be the first scheme in the operation, and that the Stevenage project would go forward, and (2) the speaker's reaction to the hostile interruptions of a section of the audience. In my opinion, these passages are not inconsistent with an intention to carry out any statutory duty imposed on him by Parliament, although he intended to press for the enactment of the Bill, and thereafter to carry out the duties thereby involved, including the consideration of objections which were neither fractious nor unreasonable. I am, therefore, of opinion D that the first contention of the appellants fails, in that they have not established either that in the respondent's speech he had forejudged any genuine consideration of the objections or that he had not genuinely considered the objections at the later stage when they were submitted to him.

E The remaining contention of the appellants is that the inquiry held by Mr. Morris did not comply with the statutory requirements for such a public local inquiry, in respect that no evidence in support of the draft order was led on behalf of the respondent. This contention rests on para. 3 of sched. I to the Act of 1946, read along with s. 19 (3) of the Act, which incorporates inter alia as to local inquiries s. 41 of the Town and Country Planning Act, 1944, which, in turn, incorporates sub-ss. (2) to (5) of s. 290 of the Local Government Act, 1933, which relate to the giving of evidence on, and defraying the costs, of local inquiries. The terms of para. 3 of sched. I to the Act of 1946, may conveniently F be recalled :

If any objection is duly made to the proposed order and is not withdrawn, the Minister shall, before making the order, cause a public local inquiry to be held with respect thereto, and shall consider the report of the person by whom the inquiry was held.

G It has been held in both courts below that the words "with respect thereto" mean "with respect to the objections," and the appellants did not challenge that construction in this House. In the only analogous case of Re the Trunk Roads Act, 1936, and the London-Portsmouth Trunk Road (Surrey) Compulsory Purchase Order (No. 2) 1938 (4), generally known as the Kingston Bypass case, it was held that, under similar statutory provisions, other than the absence of the words "in respect thereto," it was not the duty of the Minister to call evidence before the inquiry, but the duty of the objectors to state their objections and H call such evidence as they might be advised. While I find no reason to doubt the correctness of that decision, which was admittedly contrary to the present appellants' contention, the words "in respect thereto," here present, definitely limit the scope of the inquiry, and none of the general procedural provisions of s. 290 of the Local Government Act, 1933, can be held to extend its scope. As I have already pointed out, the object of the inquiry is further to inform the mind of the Minister, and not to consider any issue between the Minister and the objectors. That is for the Minister thereafter to consider and decide. Accordingly, I am of opinion that this contention of the appellants also fails.

In my opinion, the appeal should be dismissed and the judgment of the Court of Appeal should be affirmed. The appellants should pay the respondent's costs of this appeal.

My Lords, LORD PORTER and LORD UTHWATT have desired me to express their concurrence in the opinion which I have just delivered.

LORD DU PARCQ : My Lords, I concur.

LORD NORMAND : My Lords, I also concur.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors : Sharpe, Pritchard & Co. (for the appellants) ; Treasury Solicitor (for the respondent).

[Reported by C. St.J. NICHOLSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Affirmed. H.L. [1948] 2 All E.R. 509.

SHORT AND ANOTHER v. TREASURY COMMISSIONERS.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Tucker, Somervell and Evershed, L.JJ.), June 25, 26, July 22, 1947.]

Emergency Legislation—Control of undertaking—Compulsory acquisition of company—Transfer of shares to government nominees—Price to be paid for shares—Defence (General) Regulations, 1939 (S. R. & O., 1939, No. 927, as amended), reg. 78 (5).

By orders made under regs. 55 (4) and 78 (1) of the Defence (General) Regulations, 1939, the Minister of Aircraft Production took control of the undertaking of a company and directed that the shares thereof should be transferred to his nominees to hold on his behalf. By a further order made under reg. 78 (5) of the Defence Regulations, the price of the shares so transferred was fixed at 22s. 3d. or 29s. 3d. per share according to class, figures which were arrived at simply by reference to the prices of the shares of those classes ruling on the Stock Exchange at the date of the transfer. The shareholders contended that, as the transfer was of all the shares in the company, the appropriate mode of fixing the price of the shares was either (1) to ascertain the value of the whole undertaking and then to determine the proportionate value of the separate classes of shares and of individual shares within each class, or (2) to apportion the value of the totality of the shares in one hand, so as to comprehend the value of the complete control thereby conferred.

HELD : the effect of the order under reg. 78 was to transfer shareholdings from individual shareholders to the competent authority or its nominees, and the ordinary and reasonable construction of reg. 78 (5) led to the conclusion that the price to be paid to each holder was to be not less than the value of his shares on the basis of a separate bargain of sale by a willing individual seller to a willing individual buyer of those shares.

Per cur : Apart from any special words in the regulation, each shareholder was entitled to get only the value of what he possessed, and, while it might well be that an individual shareholding, being such as to give the holder effective control of the company's affairs, was of a value exceeding the sum reached by aggregating the market value of each of the shares, neither claimant in this case had such a holding. The fact that a purchaser might be prepared, if he could thereby acquire the whole of the shares, to pay more than the "market" value of each individual share, did not affect the principle that the claimants were only entitled to the value of what they had, and the regulation could not be construed as entitling the claimants to be paid for something more than that to which they were severally entitled immediately before the appropriate date.

Semble : the Stock Exchange quotation need not necessarily be the value adopted and it is open to any shareholder to seek to displace by evidence such quotations, provided such evidence is directed to the value as between a willing buyer and a willing seller of the particular holding per se.

[FOR THE DEFENCE (GENERAL) REGULATIONS, 1939, regs. 55 and 78, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 39, pp. 985 and 1057 respectively.]

APPEAL by the claimants from a decision of MORRIS, J., reported [1947] 1 All E.R. 22.

MORRIS, J., held that when the order was made transferring the shares each shareholder was divested of the value of the shares which he held and the rights to which the shares entitled him, and not of some aliquot part of the property of the company, and, therefore, the basis of valuation adopted for which the Treasury contended, viz., the Stock Exchange quotations, was correct. The Court of Appeal now dismissed the appeal. The relevant facts appear in the judgment.

Sir David Maxwell Fyfe, K.C., and Cecil W. Turner for the claimants.

Sir Cyril Radcliffe, K.C., and H. L. Parker for the Treasury.

Cur. adv. vult.

July 22. EVERSHED, L.J., read the following judgment of the court. This appeal turns on the construction of the Defence (General) Regulations, 1939, reg. 78. which provides :

(1) Where, by an order made under para. (4) of reg. 55 of these regulations, a competent authority has authorised an authorised controller to exercise functions of control on behalf of His Majesty with respect to any undertaking or part of an undertaking carried on by a company, then, if the competent authority is satisfied that it is necessary for the purpose of securing effective control of the undertaking or part so to do, the competent authority may exercise either or both of the following powers, that is to say : . . . (b) if it appears to the competent authority that it is expedient that all the shares in the company should be held on behalf of that authority, the competent authority may by order made with the consent of the Treasury transfer the shares of the company to such nominees of the competent authority (in this regulation referred to as "the transferees") as may be specified in the order . . .

(4) Where an order is made by a competent authority under para. (1) of this regulation transferring the shares in any company—(a) the shares shall on such date as may be specified in the order (in this regulation referred to as "the date of transfer"), vest in the transferees on behalf of the competent authority free from any mortgage, pledge, or charge, and the transferees shall be entitled to be entered in the register of members in respect of the shares without the delivery to the company of any instrument of transfer ; (b) it shall be the duty of the former holder of any of the shares, and of any other person having the custody of any certificate or warrant relating thereto, to deliver the certificate or warrant to the competent authority or to such person as that authority may direct ; (c) the transferees shall on the date of transfer become exclusively entitled to all the rights and advantages of members of the company notwithstanding that they are not entered in the register of members ; . . .

(5) The price to be paid by a competent authority in respect of any shares transferred by virtue of such an order as aforesaid shall be such price as may be specified in an order made by the Treasury, being a price which, in the opinion of the Treasury, is not less than the value of those shares as between a willing buyer and a willing seller on the date of the order made by that authority under para. (4) of the said reg. 55 ; . . .

(7) Without prejudice to the provisions of s. 3 of the Rules Publication Act, 1893, any order made by the Treasury under para. (5) of this regulation shall as soon as may be after the making thereof be published in such manner as appears to the Treasury to be most suitable for bringing the order to the notice of persons affected thereby ; and if within three months after the date on which any such order is made, or within such further time as the Treasury may in special circumstances allow, any person who immediately before the date of transfer had an interest in any of the shares to which the order relates gives notice in writing to the Treasury claiming that the price specified in the order is less than the value aforesaid, the value of the shares in which that person had an interest shall be determined by the arbitration of a qualified accountant . . .

On Mar. 17, 1943, the Ministry of Aircraft Production (hereinafter referred to as "the competent authority") made an order under reg. 55 (4) appointing a controller of Short Brothers (Rochester and Bedford) Ltd. (hereinafter referred to as "the company"). On Mar. 22, 1943, the competent authority made an order under reg. 78 transferring all the shares in the company to named nominees. The validity of those orders is not challenged.

The issued shares of the company were 230,475 5 per cent. redeemable cumulative preference shares of £1 each, 250,000 "A" ordinary shares of 5s. each, and 581,302 ordinary shares of 5s. each. On May 31, 1943, the Treasury made an order under para. (5) of reg. 78 specifying the prices of the above different classes of shares at 22s. 3d., 29s. 3d., and 29s. 3d., respectively. The first claimant was at the material date holder of 22,958 "A" ordinary shares, and the second claimant was holder of 3,000 ordinary shares. The claimants gave notices in writing under para. (7) of reg. 78 claiming that the prices specified in the order in respect of the shares held by them were less than their "value" as provided for in para. (5), and the matter went to arbitration. The arbitrator stated his award in the form of a Special Case. I read paras. 10 to 15 and 17 of that Case :

10. In the course of the evidence it appeared that the figure of 29s. 3d. per share which was the price mentioned in the said order of May 31, 1943, was fixed simply by reference to the prices of such shares ruling on the Stock Exchange on the date of transfer of the shares, namely, Mar. 23, 1943. 11. On behalf of the [Treasury] it was contended that the proper basis of valuation under reg. 78 of the Defence (General) Regulations (S.R. & O. 1941, No. 1023) was to assume that the Minister had acquired all the shares in individual blocks from individual shareholders on the date of transfer, and on this assumption to fix the value of all the shares on the basis of the prices ruling on the Stock Exchange on such date. 12. On behalf of the claimants it was contended that, the transfer effected by the above-mentioned order of Mar. 22, 1943, being a transfer of all the shares in Short Brothers (Rochester and Bedford), Ltd., it was improper to fix the value on the hypothesis of the purchase of individual blocks of shares from individual shareholders, and that the appropriate mode of fixing the price of the shares would be, first, to ascertain the value of the whole undertaking and then to determine the proportionate value of the separate classes of shares, and of individual shares within each class. Following this mode of valuation, I came to the conclusion, after considering the evidence, that a fair price for the "A" ordinary shares and for the ordinary shares in Short Brothers (Rochester and Bedford), Ltd., at the date of transfer would be 41s. 9d. per share. 13. The question for the opinion of the court concerns the mode of valuation which is proper to be followed in fixing the price of the shares. 14. If the court be of opinion that the contention of the [Treasury] is correct, then I award and determine that the respondents do pay or cause to be paid to the respective claimants the sum of 29s. 3d. in respect of each of the said 22,958 "A" ordinary shares and the sum of 29s. 3d. in respect of the said 3,000 ordinary shares. 15. If the court be of opinion that the contention of the claimants is correct, then I award and determine that the respondents do pay or cause to be paid to the respective claimants the sum of 41s. 9d. in respect of each of the said 22,958 "A" ordinary shares and the sum of 41s. 9d. in respect of each of the said 3,000 ordinary shares. 17. If either party shall fail to set down the award for argument before the court as a Special Case within 21 days, then I award and direct as follows, that the respondents shall pay or cause to be paid to the respective claimants the sum of 41s. 9d. in respect of each of the said 22,958 "A" ordinary shares and the sum of 41s. 9d. in respect of each of the said 3,000 ordinary shares.

Although the findings of fact and the issues of law might, perhaps, have been somewhat more clearly stated, it is, in our view, sufficiently plain that the Crown submitted that, as a matter of law (that is, as a matter of construction of para. (5) of the regulation), the "value" in every case of shares transferred under the regulation was the value to the shareholder of his individual holding—the price which would be obtained from a willing buyer on a sale of that holding to him, such sale being a distinct transaction without regard being had to the fact or assumption that all the other shareholders in the company were selling their individual holdings at the same time to the same buyer. The claimants, on the other hand, submitted as a matter of law (that is, of the construction of the regulation) that it is impossible in fixing "the value" of the shares transferred to exclude the consideration that the whole of the shares in the company are—as they necessarily are under the powers of the regulation—being transferred at the same time to the same purchaser, and that, this being so, the total price to be paid is the value of all the shares in one hand. On this basis (according to the claimants' submission) the value of any shares is an appropriate part, having regard to the number of and the rights attached to those shares, of the value of the whole undertaking.

The arbitrator has, we think, found as a fact that, if the Crown's contention in law is right, the prices specified in the order are correct. If, on the other hand, the claimants' contention in law is right, then he has found as a fact that the value of each class of ordinary shares is £2 1s. 9d., this figure being, we were told, based on the value of the whole undertaking and an apportionment of that value to each ordinary share. The findings of the arbitrator appropriate to the claimants' submissions proceeded, as we have said, on the basis of the statement

A of their case. It does not, however, follow that, if the claimants are entitled to succeed, that basis of calculation is necessarily correct. Shareholders are not, in the eye of the law, part owners of the undertaking. The undertaking is something different from the totality of the shareholdings. The claimants recognised this difficulty, and in this court their main argument was, we think, addressed to an alternative statement of their case, that is, that the value of their shares must be calculated on the basis of an apportionment of the value of the totality of the shares in one hand, so as to comprehend the value of the complete control thereby conferred. This alternative is not in terms set out in the award, but, as we have already indicated, the real issues between the parties are, in our judgment, sufficiently raised by the award.

B It is said, on the one hand, that it is of the essence of the matter that the Crown is, as it is bound to do, acquiring all the shares of the company. That is true, but, on the other hand, it is also the fact that the Crown is acquiring shares from a number of individual shareholders. Prima facie, as it seems to us, and apart from any special words in the regulation, each shareholder is entitled to get and to get only the value of what he possesses, for that is all he has to sell or transfer. If an individual shareholder in a company owns such a number of shares in that company as gives him effectual control of the company's affairs, it may well be that the value to be attributed to that holding, upon a sale of it as a separate transaction, is a figure greater than the sum arrived at by multiplying the number of his shares by the "market" value for the time being of a single share. In such a case the shareholder in question has, it may be said, got, and is able to sell, something more than a mere parcel of shares, each having the rights as to dividend and otherwise conferred on it by the company's regulations. In the present case neither of the claimants has such a holding of shares as confers effective control of the company's affairs. No claim on the part of either is made on that basis. The claim of each is to have added to the value appropriate to his individual parcel of shares, it being sold separately, a rateable proportion of the added or "control" value belonging to the totality of the shares—an item of value which he, as an individual, does not, in fact, possess. On Mar. 17, 1943, the first claimant, on the facts as found in the Case, could have got 29s. 3d. for each of his ordinary shares from a willing buyer. He is claiming 41s. 9d. The difference represents his share of the extra value which a purchaser, it is said, is prepared to give if he can get hold of all the shares. We can ourselves see no reason in principle why the first claimant should receive more than the value of what he has. We observe that, if some third shareholder, in fact, held a controlling interest in the company's capital, the effect of the claimants' contention would appear to be to appropriate to their own holdings some part of the "control," value which the third shareholder might well allege was an item of value belonging to him. In any case, the argument would, as it seems to us, involve necessarily the view that the claimants would be entitled on the construction of the regulation to be paid for something more than, and added to, the particular item of property which immediately before the appropriate date they, in fact, severally enjoyed. In our judgment, it would need clear language to produce such a result.

F Turning to the language of para. (5), we agree with the judge's view of the "ordinary and reasonable construction" of the words used. He said ([1947] 1 All E.R. 25):

I In my view, the ordinary and reasonable construction of the regulation leads to the conclusion which I have indicated. The compensation or the price to be paid to each holder is to be not less than the value of his shares, assuming that at the specified date he, as a willing seller, was selling his shares to a willing buyer. This is the view which was put forward before me on behalf of the Treasury and which was put forward at the arbitration.

The formula "as between a willing buyer and a willing seller" is a common one, and, in our judgment, when applied to a transfer of any shares, imports, according to its ordinary and natural meaning, the conception of a separate bargain of sale by an individual seller to an individual buyer of those shares.

The effect of the order is to transfer shareholdings from individual shareholders to the competent authority or its nominees. The language of the section seems to us the language which one would expect on the Crown's contention. What is the value of a share or of a number of shares of a certain class belonging to an individual shareholder as between willing buyer and willing seller of these shares? That is what is to be specified. If a shareholder has 1,000 shares, then prima facie the price to be paid to him is 1,000 times the value of a single share. We doubt, indeed, whether para. (5) is, in any case, capable of the construction which the claimants seek to put on it. The principle underlying that construction would have been difficult to apply, though, at least, it would have been easy to indicate. It would at once raise the question how, when the price attributable to the whole shareholding had been arrived at, it was to be apportioned between different classes of shares. There is no reference to any such apportionment. One would have expected provision for cases in which a shareholder of a particular class, though accepting the total figure, wished to argue that his class of share had not had a sufficient proportion assigned to it. This issue would be one in which all other classes would be interested, but not the Treasury.

We, therefore, come to the conclusion that the judge was right on the question of construction. Paragraph 11 of the Case might be read as meaning that, as a matter of law, the Stock Exchange quotation, if there was one, must be the value. Counsel for the Crown disclaimed any such proposition. He did not dispute the right of any shareholder to seek to displace by evidence such quotations, provided such evidence was directed to the value as between willing buyer and willing seller of the particular holding per se. In the present case it appears to have been admitted throughout that, if the Crown's contention as to the law was correct, then on the material before the arbitrator the Stock Exchange quotation would be the best value. In the result, we are of opinion that the appeal should be dismissed and the award should be upheld in the terms of para. 14.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors: William Charles Crocker (for the claimants); Treasury Solicitor (for the Crown).

[Reported by R. L. ZIAR, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re SANDYS' WILL TRUST, SANDYS v. KIRTON.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Lord Greene, M.R., Cohen and Asquith, L.JJ.), June 11, 12, 13, July 8, 1947.]

Trusts and Trustees—Professional trustee—Will—Charging clause—Construction—Testator having property in England and Canada—Trust company with separate English and Canadian scales of charges—Scale intended by testator.

A testator, domiciled in England, died in France possessing property in England, Canada and other countries. By his will, which was made in English form and executed in England, he appointed a company to be one of the executors and trustees, the charging clause providing: "My trustees may in the execution of the trusts hereof or of any codicil hereto act by their proper officers who as well as the trustees may employ and pay such agents as may be thought fit without being responsible for the default of any agent so employed and in addition to such reimbursement of expenses incurred in the execution of the trusts as my trustees may be entitled to in equity shall be entitled to remuneration in accordance with their rates or mode of charging for trust business for the time being including the customary share of brokerage on any sale or purchase of marketable securities." The testator described the company as having its head office in Canada and a branch in England. The administration charges made by the company in Canada and in England were set out in two separate booklets, neither of which had been seen by the testator. The charges in the Canadian booklet were higher than those in the English one, which provided, however, for a charge in respect of foreign property, and also for a share of brokerage which was not within the Canadian charges. The testator expressed in his will the desire that an English firm of solicitors should be employed. The will was proved in England and not in Canada:—

HELD: on the true construction of the charging clause, the testator had in mind one rate or mode of charging, and, having regard to the facts—particularly the English form of the will and its execution in England, the reference to the employment of an English firm of solicitors, and the form of the charging clause which was substantially that in the English booklet—the rate intended was that applied by the English branch.

[As TO REMUNERATION OF TRUSTEES, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 33, pp. 277-280, paras. 490-494; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 43, pp. 773-776, Nos. 2136-2160.]

APPEAL by the plaintiff from an order of VAISEY, J., dated Jan. 16, 1947.

VAISEY, J., held that the English booklet governed the charges in respect of the business in England and that the Canadian booklet governed the charges with regard to Canadian business. The plaintiff's appeal was allowed by the Court of Appeal which considered that only the English scale of charges was contemplated by the testator. The facts appear in the judgment.

Christie, K.C., and R. E. Megarry for the plaintiff.

Andrew Clark, K.C., and Winterbotham for the defendant company.

Cur. adv. vult.

July 8. COHEN, L.J., read the following judgment of the court. This appeal raises a question as to the rate or mode of charging to be applied in calculating the remuneration to which the defendant company, the Royal Trust Co. (Montreal, Canada), is entitled as one of the executors nominated by the will of Captain George John Sandys, who died on Sept. 3, 1937, in France.

His will was in English form. It was executed in England and bore date Sept. 11, 1936. By it he declared that he was domiciled and resident in the Principality of Monaco and appointed the defendant company and his wife, the plaintiff (now Mrs. Roberts), to be executors and trustees of his will. He described the company as a "body politic having its head office at 105, St. James Street, in the city of Montreal in the Dominion of Canada, and having a branch and being authorised to carry on business at 3, St. James Square in the county of London." Clause 3 of his will, on which in the main the determination of the question before us turns, is in the following terms:

My trustees may in the execution of the trusts hereof or of any codicil hereto act by their proper officers who as well as the trustees may employ and pay such agents as may be thought fit without being responsible for the default of any agent so employed and in addition to such reimbursement of expenses incurred in the execution of the trusts as my trustees may be entitled to in equity shall be entitled to remuneration in accordance with their rates or mode of charging for trust business for the time being including the customary share of brokerage on any sale or purchase of marketable securities.

By cl. 4 he desired that the solicitors to be employed in connection with the administration of his estate should, if possible, be Joynson-Hicks & Co., of Lennox House, Norfolk Street, London. On Nov. 3, 1937, letters of administration with the will annexed were granted to Mr. Kirton and Mr. Stopford, respectively secretary and trust officer of the London branch of the defendant company, for the use and benefit of the said company and until further representation be granted. The plaintiff renounced probate.

The effect of the will was that substantially the only persons interested were the testator's son (Mr. Edwin Duncan Sandys), and the plaintiff, and, by a deed of family arrangement, dated May 14, 1938, and made between the said son and the plaintiff, it was, among other things, agreed that the will should operate and have full force and effect as therein modified. Under the deed the plaintiff was to have a power of appointment in her lifetime by deed or deeds revocable or irrevocable as well as by will or codicil. On July 13, 1938, the plaintiff exercised that power of appointment and irrevocably appointed that the residuary estate of the testator should belong to and be vested in herself absolutely.

In the early stages the administration was complicated by two matters. First, a claim was made in France on behalf of Mlle. Quennesson that she was the natural child of the testator and she obtained a default judgment in an action for declaration of paternity before the Civil Tribunal of Nice on Dec. 14, 1938. A claim was also made that, on the basis of that declaration, she was entitled to a share in the estate of the testator under the law of the Principality of Monaco, the validity of the latter claim depending on the domicile of the testator. Accordingly, proceedings were commenced in England for the determination of the question of domicile, to which proceedings all the interested persons, including the French infant, were made parties. This matter came before SIMONDS, J., on June 13, 1940, and he made an order declaring that the testator was, at the date of his death, domiciled in England. As a large part of the estate was situate in Canada, similar proceedings were commenced in the province of Quebec, and on Aug. 3, 1945, an order was made by CASGRAIN, J., directing the company to deliver up the testator's Canadian assets to Mr. Kirton and Mr. Stopford as the administrators in England with the will annexed and declaring that the plaintiff, Mr. Edwin Duncan Sandys, and Mlle. Quennesson were bound by the order. We were informed that the legacies had been paid and that the plaintiff was now absolutely entitled to the residue, subject to a few small questions of administration which remain to be settled.

Accounts were from time to time supplied by the company to the plaintiff, and they were examined by her accountants on Jan. 9, 1946. The plaintiff's then solicitors wrote to Mr. Stopford a letter dealing with a number of points on the accounts and concluding by saying: "the remaining query on the accounts at the moment is in connection with your company's fees" and asking for a list of the scales of the remuneration to which the company claimed to be entitled. Correspondence continued to pass between the plaintiff's solicitors and Mr. Stopford or the company's solicitors down to May 13, 1946. Throughout the plaintiff's solicitors were pressing for information which would enable them to advise their client as to the propriety of the remuneration which the company were seeking to charge. They were supplied with a copy of the company's booklet on the administration of estates in England and a copy of the company's booklet entitled "Approximate charges for administration of estates in the province of Quebec," but they were never given information—to which, in our opinion, the plaintiff was clearly entitled—which would enable her to ascertain how the remuneration, aggregating some £8,500, which the company were claiming was calculated. In the result, on May 13, 1946, the plaintiff's solicitors wrote to the company's solicitors stating that, unless they received an undertaking within three days to supply the information within four weeks, proceedings would be taken. This undertaking was not forthcoming and on May 21, 1946, the summons in this matter was issued. Substantially, it asks for a declaration that, on the true construction of the testator's will, the company was not entitled to make any charge for remuneration otherwise than in accordance with the terms set out in the above mentioned English booklet and for an account of the remuneration, out of pocket legal costs and all other payments whatsoever properly chargeable and due to the company in respect of the administration of the testator's estate.

The summons having been issued, evidence was filed on both sides, from which it appeared that the testator left assets in England, Scotland, Ireland, France, Monaco, Gibraltar, the provinces of Quebec and Saskatchewan and in the United States, of a total value of about £380,000. The affidavits do not show how that amount was distributed among the various countries, but by agreement between the parties a statement was put in before us from which it appeared that the approximate value of the English estate was £81,500; of the American estate, £125,600; and of the Canadian estate, £174,600; the small balance being distributed between Monaco, Gibraltar and Ireland. It also appeared that by far the largest portion of the estate consisted of what may be shortly described as Stock Exchange investments. There was no evidence that the testator had seen either the Canadian or the English booklets.

The first edition of the English booklet was not published until Apr. 1, 1937, that is, after the date of the testator's will, but Mr. Foreman, the assistant manager of the London branch of the company, deposed that in the case of normal estates in which administration ran on the usual lines, the English booklet did represent something like the charges that would have been made for such administration during the years immediately preceding the publication of the booklet. The English booklet gave a list of the principal officers of the London branch, including Mr. Stopford and Mr. Kirton, and of an advisory board. It stated that the company might be appointed, both in England and in Canada, as the executors and trustees of a will, and that the advisory board of the company met regularly to consider recommendations by the company's officers in the administration of estates and trusts. It also contained this paragraph under the heading "Canadian Property":

To estates and trusts owning land or other property in Canada the appointment of the company with its branches and agencies throughout the Dominion offers particular advantages.

- A It then proceeded to set out the fees which would be charged by the company for acting as executor and trustee. Paragraph 1 of this part of the booklet provided for an acceptance fee, the amount of which varied according to the size of the estate, the charge being £1 per cent on gross capital value for the first £5,000, and a lower rate on the excess over £5,000, decreasing rateably until on the excess over £50,000 it was only two shillings per cent. Paragraph 2 provided for an income fee of 2 per cent up to £2,000, and 1 per cent. on any excess over £2,000. That fee was to be calculated on the actual income received, but on a date which was agreed as being June 15, 1941, "gross income" was substituted for "actual income received." Paragraph 3 provided for a withdrawal fee calculated at the average rate per cent. borne by the whole trust fund on acceptance. Paragraph 4 provided for an investment fee. It declared that the company should be entitled to the customary share of brokerage on the sale and purchase of marketable securities. Paragraph 5, so far as material, is in the following terms:—

- In addition to the foregoing, special fees may be payable in the following cases; the charges will be commensurate with the special services rendered, or may be subject to arrangement. (i) Where an estate or trust holds mortgages, real estate or ground rents, for collection of income and the general management of the property... (iii) Where an estate or trust is involved in litigation... (v) Where an estate or trust holds property situate abroad... (vii) Where information, etc., is supplied for the purpose of any dealing (actual or intended) with a beneficial interest in trust property.

- The Canadian booklet provided for charges on capital and on revenue and for a commission on sales and investments. On capital it provided for a reasonable charge to be made for preliminary administration, including taking over the assets and establishing the liabilities, settling the succession duties, paying the debts and cash legacies, and services in connection with the preparation of the inventory and transmission of assets, etc., and for 1 per cent. on distributions of capital among the heirs. On revenue it provided for a charge of 4 per cent. or 5 per cent., according to the nature of the property from which the revenue was derived. It also contained a note that there would be special rates for large estates. As regards commission on sales and investments, it provided for a brokerage of one-eighth of 1 per cent. on purchases and sales of stocks, stock rights and bonds, and for other commissions not material to the case before us. It declared that all the company's charges were, of course, in addition to out of pocket expenses.

- It will be observed that, so far as charge on revenue is concerned, the charges in the Canadian booklet were much in excess of the charges in the English booklet. As regards capital, the distribution fee (which is the equivalent of "withdrawal fee" in the English booklet), the charge on large estates must necessarily work out much higher on the Canadian scale than on the English scale. So far as preliminary administration (which is the equivalent of the acceptance fee in the English booklet) is concerned, there was no fixed Canadian scale, but it was plain from Mr. Foreman's affidavit that, if the practice hitherto applied by the company in dealing with preliminary administration in Canada was applied to the present case, the charges would be much higher than the acceptance fee payable under the English booklet. So far as the question of commission was concerned, it is to be observed that the Canadian booklet provides for a fixed rate whereas the English booklet provides for "the customary share of brokerage."

On this evidence, the case came before VAISEY, J. Counsel for the plaintiff argued that, on the true construction of the testator's will, he must be taken to have directed that the company were entitled to be remunerated in accordance with the practice of their English branch. Counsel relied, among other points, on the fact that the will was executed in England and was in English form; that the testator went out of his way to describe the defendant company, not only by its Canadian address, but also as having a branch and carrying on business at its English address; that cl. 3 was substantially in the form suggested in the English booklet, and, in particular, that it referred to the customary share of brokerage which was, in fact, a charge provided for by the English booklet and not to be found in the Canadian booklet. He also stressed that the testator expressed a desire that an English firm of solicitors should be employed in connection with the administration of the estate, and he emphasised that the scheme of the will did not contemplate two different scales or modes of charging in force at one and the same time, but one rate or mode of charging which might vary from time to time. Counsel for the defendant company, on the other hand, argued that the testator was contemplating two separate scales of charges, one to be found in the Canadian booklet and to be applicable to work done through the head office in relation to property in Canada and the U.S.A., and the other applicable to work done through the London office in relation to property in Europe. He relied on the fact that the testator mentioned both head office and London branch and that the testator had, and must be taken to have, known that he had by far the largest portion of his estate in Canada or the U.S.A. In these circumstances, said counsel, the testator, who had been a client of the head office from 1905 until his death, must be taken to have contemplated that the larger portion of the work would have to be done through the head office and to have intended that the defendant company should be entitled to charge for such work the rates which the company were accustomed to charge for such work in the administration of estates in the province of Quebec. This argument was, in substance, accepted by VAISEY, J., in the following passage from his judgment, which was delivered on Jan. 16, 1947:

In the absence of other information I think that I must assume that the English booklet governs, more or less, what is done in English trusts and I think the Canadian booklet shows, more or less, what is done in regard to trust business which has to be transacted in Canada, or rather from the Head Office.

VAISEY, J., then proceeded to make an order to give effect to his conclusions. By para. 1 the order declared: (a) That the defendant company was entitled to charge for work done in the administration of the estate or in the execution of the trusts of the will as varied by the deed of family arrangement, dated May 14, 1938, and the deed of appointment, dated July 13, 1938, and in accordance with the terms set out in the English booklet, and, in the events which have happened, to charge special fees commensurate with the special services rendered under each of sub-clauses (i), (iii), (v) and (vii) of para. 5 in that booklet. (b) That the company was entitled to include, as part of the special fees under para. 5 (iii) aforesaid, the reasonable and proper charges of their head office in Canada in respect of any proper litigation in Canada upon the basis of the said Canadian booklet and on the basis that such litigation formed part of the "preliminary administration" within the meaning of that booklet. (c) That the company was entitled to include, as part of the special fees under para. 5 (v) aforesaid, the reasonable and proper charges of their head office in Canada on the basis of the Canadian booklet in respect of all property in Canada or the U.S.A. administered by or through such head office, but excluding any charges separately made under para. 5 (iii) in respect of litigation.

We pause here to observe, and, indeed, counsel for the company agreed, that this paragraph is open to the objection that it involves duplication of charges as the company would be entitled to charge for the same work under (a) an acceptance fee and under (c) a reasonable charge for "preliminary administration." It was agreed that, if we were prepared to affirm the order, para. 1 would require amendment to prevent duplication of charges. Paragraph 2 of the order provided that such part of the remuneration of the company for work done by the English branch in the administration as properly falls under the head of an income fee was to be calculated down to June 15, 1941, in accordance with the terms as printed in para. 2 in the English booklet and thereafter in accordance with the terms of the said paragraph as amended in the English booklet.

From this order the plaintiff appeals. In substance, the appeal was aimed only against that part of the order which directed any reference to the Canadian booklet. Counsel for the plaintiff was prepared to accept para. 1 (a) of the order, but he said that the English booklet must govern the whole matter. Having regard to the nature of the estate, he admitted that the company would be entitled to special fees commensurate with the special services rendered in relation to property situate outside England, and he recognised that it would be open to the company to put forward their Canadian booklet and their practice as evidence of what charges were commensurate with the special services rendered, but he objected to the order which had the effect of making the Canadian booklet conclusive evidence on that subject. He supported the appeal by the argument which we have already summarised and, in our opinion, that argument is well founded.

We are unable to accept the view that, on the proper construction of the testator's will, he contemplated two rates or modes of charging in force at the same time. We think that, on its true construction, the will contemplates one scale or rate of charging in force at any particular time, though it might vary from time to time. If that be so, we think that the terms of the will inevitably lead to the conclusion that the scale or mode of charging which the testator had in mind was that applied by the English branch. He uses a clause which, in substance, accords with the clause which it was the practice of the English branch to suggest for inclusion in wills where the English branch was asked whether the company would be prepared to act as executors. The will is in English form, it was executed in England and it contains an express declaration that the testator desired that the solicitors to be employed in the administration of the estate should be an English firm whose only address given in the will was in London. VAISEY J., relied, among other things, on the fact that only approximately one fifth of the testator's estate was situate here. We do not think much importance can be attached to that circumstance in view of the fact that the English booklet itself contains the passages we have quoted in relation to Canadian property and to property situate abroad. He also relied on the declaration as to domicile in Monaco and pointed out that there are indications that the testator did not wish it to be supposed that he was predominantly, or at all, an Englishman. We cannot help suspecting that this declaration and these indications were directed to tax provisions rather than to forum of administration, since the testator must have known that, as he had property in England, the will must be proved here. When we are considering the question as between England and Canada, the declaration and the other indications to which we have referred seem to us to be neutral, since we can find no indication that the testator had any desire to be particularly associated with Canada. VAISEY, J., says that he did not think it would be right for him to say that this is an ordinary English administration such as would be, no doubt, within the purview of the English booklet. We do not think that, having regard to that booklet as a whole, and, in particular, having regard to the references to Canadian and foreign property to which we have already referred, the ambit of the English booklet was limited to ordinary English administrations.

For the reasons we have given, we come to the conclusion that by cl. 3 of the will the testator had in mind one rate or mode of charging and that rate or mode of charging was the one in practice at the English branch at the time of making his will. We derive further support for this conclusion from the fact that there was no evidence to suggest that the company had or has a method of charging under which, in the case of an estate comprising property both in England and in Canada, the fees in respect of the former are based on the scales in the English booklet and those in respect of the latter on the scales in the Canadian booklet. There is nothing in either booklet to suggest such a composite method of charging. The English booklet provides for a commensurate charge in respect of foreign property. This is not to say that the scale of fees mentioned in the Canadian booklet is, as such, to apply in respect of Canadian assets. The Canadian booklet does not suggest that, in the case of an estate comprising property both in Canada and in England which is accepted on the terms of that booklet, the scale of fees contained in the English booklet is to apply to the property in England. In fact, so far as the evidence goes, the practice of the company is to apply one booklet or the other, never a combination of both. The language used by the testator clearly refers to the methods of charging actually employed by the company and cannot be construed so as to entitle them to introduce an entirely novel method of charging devised to meet the case of this will. We would add that the procedure in fact adopted by the company when the testator died, accords with the conclusion we have reached. They proved the will in England through the medium of attorneys from the staff of their English branch. They never proved the will in Canada. When it became necessary to get in the Canadian property, proceedings were commenced in Canada and the company submitted to judgment in favour of the English administrators.

In our opinion, therefore, the appeal must be allowed. Paragraphs (b) and (c) of para. 1 of the declaration made by VAISEY, J., must be struck out and in lieu of para. 2 the following declaration must be substituted :

In answer to para. 2 of the said originating summons that the income fees payable under para. 2 on p. 12 of the said English booklet is to be calculated down to June 15, 1941, in accordance with the terms printed in such paragraph and thereafter in accordance with the terms of the said paragraph as amended in ink in the said English booklet.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors : Hilder, Thompson & Dunn, agents for Bircham & Co. (for the plaintiff) ; Bischoff & Co. (for the defendant company).

[Reported by C. N. BEATTIE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re INNS, INNS v. WALLACE AND OTHERS.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Wynn-Parry, J.), July 2, 10, 1947.]

Wills—Family provision—Provision for wife—Life interest in marital home and gift of income—Income insufficient to enable wife to live in marital home—Inheritance (Family Provision) Act, 1938 (c. 45), s. 1.

By his will a testator gave to his trustees the sum of £85,000, on trust to pay the income thereof to his wife during her widowhood, and a freehold house, which had been the marital home, on trust to permit the wife to live there during her widowhood, subject to her keeping it in good repair and comprehensively insured. The house was a large one, and, according to the wife's estimate, to be able to live in it she would require £3,612, whereas the income which she would receive under the will was £3,244 and she had no other source of income. During her widowhood the house could not be sold without her consent and that of the local authority to whom, under the will, it was to be offered on her death or remarriage. The value of the testator's net estate was £607,780. On an application by the wife under the Inheritance (Family Provision) Act, 1938, s. 1, for additional income out of the estate, she contended that the provision made for her by the will was not reasonable because it was insufficient to enable her to live in the marital home as the testator had intended her to do :—

HELD : the Inheritance (Family Provision) Act, 1938, proceeded on the postulate that a testator should continue to have freedom of testamentary disposition, provided that his disposition as regards dependants could be regarded by the court, in all the circumstances, as reasonable, and, so, the jurisdiction given to the court by the Act was essentially a limited jurisdiction, and was to be cautiously, if not sparingly, exercised ; the same principles must be applied in the case of a large estate as in that of a small one ; the provision which the testator had made for his wife by his will could not be considered unreasonable merely because he had intended that she should continue to live in the marital home but had given her insufficient income to enable her to do so ; and, therefore, she was not entitled to an order under the Act.

Re Styler, Styler v. Griffith ([1942] 2 All E.R. 201) and Re Pugh, Pugh v. Pugh ([1943] 2 All E.R. 361) applied.

[AS TO PROTECTION OF TESTATOR'S FAMILY, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 34, pp. 439-445, paras. 486-505 ; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Supplement, Wills, Nos. 11, 163a-11,163j.]

Cases referred to :

- (1) Re Styler, Styler v. Griffith, [1942] 2 All E.R. 201 ; [1942] Ch. 387 ; 111 L.J. Ch. 263 ; 167 L.T. 295 ; Digest Supp.
- (2) Re Brownbridge, Brownbridge v. Brownbridge, (1942), 193 L.T. Jo. 185.
- (3) Re, Pugh, Pugh v. Pugh, [1943] 2 All E.R. 361 ; [1943] Ch. 387 ; 112 L.J. Ch. 311 ; 169 L.T. 284 ; Digest Supp.

A by a widow for additional provision for her maintenance out of the estate of her husband, on the ground that the provision made for her by her husband's will was unreasonable because he had intended her to continue to live in the marital home but had made insufficient provision for her to do so. WYNN-PARRY, J., held that the provision was not unreasonable and dismissed her application. The facts appear in the judgment.

B Danckwerts for the widow.
Milner Holland for the trustees.
J. A. Wolfe for a pecuniary legatee.
J. A. Reid for a residuary legatee.

Cur. adv. vult.

C July 10. WYNN-PARRY, J., read the following judgment. The plaintiff in this summons is the widow of Jeremiah Inns, who died on Aug. 28, 1945, and to whom I will refer as "the testator." The plaintiff was born on May 31, 1895, and married the testator, whose second wife she was, on Apr. 24, 1933, when she was 37 years old and he was 55 years old. Throughout the marriage the plaintiff and the testator, who was a very successful business man, lived at a house called "Springfield," High Street, Stevenage, Hertfordshire, the freehold of which was owned by the testator. The house is described by the plaintiff as follows :

D Springfield, though attractive artistically, is not at all an easy house to run . . . It has 9 bedrooms and 4 reception rooms in addition to the usual domestic offices and has a garden of about 3 acres. The staff required to run the house is three maids, in addition to two gardeners for the garden.

E The evidence leads to the conclusion that the parties lived together in a reasonable state of amity and in some little style. The plaintiff stated that the testator, in emphasising the need of economy on more than one occasion, observed that it cost £3,000 or £4,000 a year to live at "Springfield." The plaintiff further says that, from various statements made to her by the testator from time to time, it was plain to her that he anticipated that she would continue to live at "Springfield" after his death.

F By cl. 2 of his will, which is dated Apr. 18, 1945, the testator appointed the defendants, Walter Wallace and Richard Alfred Victor White, to be his executors and trustees. By cl. 3 he bequeathed his personal articles and effects to his trustees on trust to permit the plaintiff to have the use and enjoyment thereof, or such parts thereof as she might select, so long as she should remain his widow, subject to her keeping them in good repair and condition and insured at her own cost, and after her death or remarriage, if the Stevenage Urban District Council should accept the offer of "Springfield" for use as a hospital, as later provided in the will, the testator bequeathed those chattels to the council for the use or benefit of the hospital, but, if the offer should not be accepted by the council, he directed that they should fall into and form part of his residuary estate. By the same clause, after some ancillary directions as to the chattels, the testator bequeathed to the plaintiff absolutely his wines, liqueurs and consumable stores. By cl. 4 he devised "Springfield," with an exception to which it is not material to refer, to his trustees on trust that they should sell the property, but during the plaintiff's widowhood only with her consent and with the consent of the council, with power to postpone such sale and conversion, and he directed his trustees to invest the residue of the moneys in their names or under their control in or on investments of trust funds, with the usual power to change such investments. The testator directed that his trustees should stand possessed of "Springfield," if unsold, or the investments representing the proceeds of sale, and were to permit the plaintiff to reside in "Springfield" for so long as she should remain his widow, subject to her keeping it in good repair and condition, reasonable wear and tear excepted, and also the garden in good condition and the house and outbuildings comprehensively insured. Secondly, to pay the income from the investments to the plaintiff during her widowhood, and from and after her death or remarriage he directed his trustees to stand possessed of "Springfield," if unsold, on trust to offer it to the council to be used for the purpose of a hospital on the terms mentioned in the will. By cl. 5 he provided that after the death or remarriage of the plaintiff, if the council should accept the offer of "Springfield," then he bequeathed to them the sum of £10,000 free of duty for the equipment and maintenance of the hospital. By cl. 6 he bequeathed to his trustees the sum of £85,000 free of all duties, on trust to invest the same in their names or under their control in any investments authorised by law for the time being for the investment of trust funds, with power to vary such investments for others of a like nature, and to stand possessed of the said investments and of the annual income thereof, on trust to pay the income to the plaintiff during her widowhood, and from and after her death or remarriage the testator declared that the capital and income of such investments should fall into and form part of his residuary estate. By cl. 7 and 8 he bequeathed the sums of £9,000 for the establishment of certain almshouses, and by cl. 9 he bequeathed trust funds of £7,000 each for 18 persons who were named in that clause for their lives, and after their deaths for their respective children for their lives. By cl. 10 he bequeathed pecuniary legacies amounting in the aggregate to £21,850, and by cl. 11, 12, and 13 he bequeathed three charitable legacies of £500 each. By cl. 14 the testator gave, devised and bequeathed all his real and personal estate whatsoever (except property otherwise disposed of by his will) to his trustees on trust for conversion, and directed his trustees to stand possessed of the residue in trust for the children of a number of named persons, on terms to which I need not refer.

On the face of the will there would appear to be substantial provision made for the plaintiff, but she maintains that the provision which has been made is not reasonable in the circumstances of this case. The value of the net estate as defined by the Inheritance (Family Provision) Act, 1938, s. 5 (1), is £607,780, which, invested at 3 per cent., would produce approximately £18,230 per annum. The amount required to implement various legacies, including the £85,000 in which the plaintiff has a life interest, is £323,550. The capital sum of £85,000 invested at 3 per cent. per annum would produce £2,550 less tax. In fact, the trustees have, to a large extent, appropriated mortgages to meet this legacy, and the income from this fund, it is estimated, should be approximately £3,244 per annum. Apart from her interests under the will, the plaintiff states that she has no property save a few pieces of jewellery, some furniture and a motor-car. The value of the chattels included in cl. 3 (a) of the will in which she has a life interest is £1,744. The value of the wines and consumable stores which are given to her absolutely by cl. 3 (b) is £551, while the value of "Springfield" is estimated at £7,500.

The plaintiff maintains that the testator intended her to be able to live at "Springfield," but with the income at her disposal she will be unable to do so, and that, therefore, in the circumstances, the provision made for her by the will is not reasonable. In support of her allegation that her income will be insufficient to maintain both herself and "Springfield," she has put in evidence an estimate of expenditure which she says she must incur in order to live in and maintain "Springfield." The various items total £2,073 2s. 10d., and there are added income tax at the standard rate obtaining for the financial year 1946-1947 £1,384 4s. 9d. and sur-tax £154 14s., making a total of £3,612 1s. 7d., a figure which exceeds the figure of estimated income, viz., £3,244. The plaintiff's estimate of expenditure includes the wages, insurance and keep of three indoor servants, together with an annual sum for their uniform, totalling £631. It also includes the wages and insurance of two gardeners, totalling £410 14s. 8d. Thus, there is a provision of over £1,040 for the wages of five servants to look after one woman, the plaintiff. The other items are of the usual nature, but the amounts thereof are, in the case of fuel and light and similar items, calculated on the basis of four persons living in the house. I mention the details of this estimate, not with a view to making any criticism of the scale on which the plaintiff is living, or on which she would propose to live, which is no concern of mine, but because it is necessary to have a clear picture of the whole position in mind before coming to a conclusion on the question which I have to resolve, namely, whether in all the circumstances of this case the provision which the testator has made for the plaintiff is reasonable or not.

The question whether or not the jurisdiction which is given to the court by the Act should be exercised is, on occasion, a difficult one to answer. In Re Styler, Styler v. Griffith (1), MORTON, J., said ([1942] 2 All E.R. 204) :

A There are one or two observations in the cases decided on this Act to which I desire to refer, although I fully appreciate that every case must rest upon its own facts. In Re Brownbridge (2), BENNETT, J., said that the Act did not throw upon the testator a duty to make provision for his dependants. It only gave the court the right to interfere if it came to the conclusion that the dispositions which were made were unwarranted. In that . . . case BENNETT, J., did not think it right to interfere with the testator's disposition. I respectfully agree with those observations. I do not think the court should interfere with a . . . testator's dispositions merely because the judge may think that he would have been inclined, if he were in the position of the testator . . . to make some provision for a particular person. I think the court has to find that it was unreasonable on the part of . . . the testator to make no provision for the person in question or that it was unreasonable not to make a larger provision.

B Again, as appears from Re Pugh, Pugh v. Pugh (3), the mere circumstance that, if a judge had been sitting in the testator's armchair, he would have made more provision for the dependants is no ground, of itself, for exercising the jurisdiction. I must be satisfied that the provision is unreasonable. On the other hand, I must take into account the relations between the parties, their mode of living and the size of the testator's fortune. What would be a reasonable provision for the widow of, for instance, a farm labourer would in ordinary circumstances be unreasonable provision for the widow of a wealthy man.

C D Nevertheless, I cannot assent to the proposition which is involved in the argument of counsel for the widow that, if it appears that the testator intended his widow to live in the marital home, but by the same will by which he gave her the right to do so he made provision which was insufficient to enable her to do so, the provision that he has made for her must, therefore, be held to be unreasonable. In my view, the proposition only requires to be stated to be demonstrated unsound. By the law of England as it stood before the coming

E into effect of the Inheritance (Family Provision) Act, 1938, no man could be compelled to leave any part of his estate to any person who under the Act was a dependant. Still less could he be compelled to make provision that his wife, for instance, should be enabled to live in circumstances similar to those in which, during his life, he and she had lived together. The Act is not designed to bring about any such compulsion. It proceeds on the postulate that a testator should continue to have freedom of testamentary disposition, provided that

F his disposition as regards dependants should be capable, having regard to all the circumstances, of being regarded by the court as reasonable. From this it follows that the jurisdiction is essentially a limited jurisdiction. The legislature, presumably in its wisdom, gave no guidance to the court how the jurisdiction should be exercised, but the court in previous cases has evolved certain principles on which it should proceed. The previous decisions clearly

G establish that the jurisdiction is one which should be cautiously if not sparingly used. The main difference between this and earlier cases is that this, so far as the reported cases are concerned, is the first in which an estate of this magnitude has had to be considered. Notwithstanding the size of the estate, however, the same principles must be applied—and, applying those principles, it appears to me impossible to say that the provision which the testator has made for his widow is unreasonable, merely because there appears from the evidence

H and on the face of the will to be an anticipation by him—or even an intention on his part—that his widow should continue to live in the marital home, in which, for the purpose, he gives her a life interest followed by a gift of income which, in the event, proves insufficient to enable her to do so.

I cannot, therefore, accede to the application of the plaintiff that she should be provided with additional spending money out of the estate so that, with the income which is provided for her under the will, she will have sufficient money to maintain the previous style of living at "Springfield," and have, in addition, a spending fund for herself. She asks that this extra spending fund shall be at the rate of £1,000 per annum, a rate which would necessitate a payment at a very large rate out of the income of the estate, having regard to the present incidence of income tax. There remains, however, the question whether any lesser additional provision should be made for the plaintiff out of the estate. I have given this aspect of the matter careful consideration, but I cannot feel justified in making any order in her favour. After an exhaustive consideration of all the circumstances, I come to the conclusion that, while, if I had been sitting in the testator's armchair, I might well have avoided tying up "Springfield," so that only the plaintiff's consent to its sale in her lifetime would have been required, and I might well have provided a somewhat larger fund than the £85,000 in view of the size of the estate, yet, bearing in mind the principles on which I am directed to proceed by the authorities which I regard as binding on me, and with which I am respectfully in agreement, I cannot bring myself to the conclusion that what has been provided is so little as to be unreasonable. From the plaintiff's point of view the provisions regarding "Springfield" are unfortunate in that neither she nor the trustees can bring about a sale during her lifetime. Nevertheless, the trustees have power to let the property under the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 28. It was urged on me on behalf of the plaintiff that in all probability it would be difficult to effect a profitable letting of "Springfield." That may or may not be the case, but, in the absence of evidence on behalf of the plaintiff (on whom the onus lies) from some competent valuer or estate agent, I cannot proceed on any such assumption. Therefore, I cannot assume that the interest in the house given to the plaintiff under the will is valueless. But, further, even if I had been able to come to the conclusion that the interest in the house given to the plaintiff under the will was in the circumstances valueless, I do not see how, in exercising my jurisdiction under the Act, I could have come to the conclusion that the income of a fund of £85,000 during widowhood represents so small a provision to the plaintiff as to be unreasonable. The result of the framing of the testator's will may well be, and would appear to be, unfortunate from the plaintiff's point of view, in that she may be unable to continue to reside at "Springfield," at any rate, in the style in which she and the testator resided there, but that is the highest that this case can be put, and, so put, it affords me no ground for rewriting the will to any extent. I must, therefore, dismiss the application.

Order accordingly. Costs of all parties between solicitor and client to be taxed and paid out of the estate.

Solicitors : Park Nelson & Co. (for the widow); Sharpe, Pritchard & Co., agents for Longmores, Hertford (for the trustees); Nicholl, Manisty, Few & Co. (for a pecuniary legatee); Durrant Cooper & Hambling (for a residuary legatee).

[Reported by R. D. H. OSBORNE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re RIDSDEL, RIDSDEL v. RAWLINSON AND OTHERS.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Jenkins, J.), July 1, 1947.]

Trusts and Trustees—Judicial trustee—Power of compromise—Audit of accounts—Extent of auditors' duty—Sending of copy of accounts to beneficiaries—Judicial Trustees Act, 1896 (c. 35), s. 1 (1)—Trustee Act, 1925 (c. 19), s. 15 (f)—Judicial Trustee Rules, 1897, r. 12 (1), r. 15 (2).

The Judicial Trustee Rules, 1897, r. 12 (1), by which: "A judicial trustee may at any time request the court to give him directions as to the trust or its administration," does not have the effect of depriving the judicial trustee of the power of compromise conferred on trustees by the Trustee Act, 1925, s. 15 (f).

Where a payment in compromise of a claim has been made by a judicial trustee under s. 15 (f) of the Act of 1925, to justify the payment it is not necessary to establish that the claim would have succeeded had there been no compromise.

Re Shenton ([1935] Ch. 651) considered.

An officer of the court conducting the audit of a judicial trustee's account is not confined to the mere mechanical business of vouching those accounts

(Thomas v. Devonport Corpn. ([1900] 1 Q.B. 16), applied). Where he finds a payment which is improper on the face of it, it is his duty to disallow it, but where there is a payment of an authorised character, e.g., a payment in compromise of a claim, supported by a statement by the trustee that the claim was made and that he considered it in the interest of the trust estate that payment should be made in settlement thereof, the auditor would be exceeding his function by disallowing the payment. If he thinks that the transaction might in any way give rise to some claim on the part of the beneficiaries (e.g., if the propriety of a compromise appears to him to be open to doubt), his proper course is, not to disallow the payment, but to leave it in the account with an appropriate note calling attention to the relevant circumstances which might, in his view, give rise to a claim on the part of the beneficiaries.

The most satisfactory method of carrying out the requirement of the Judicial Trustee Rules, 1897, r. 15 (2), which provides for a copy of the accounts to be sent to beneficiaries, would be for the beneficiaries to receive copies of the account as submitted for audit, and, if there were any corrections or comments made on the audit, for them then to receive copies of those corrections and comments.

[AS TO JUDICIAL TRUSTEES, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 33, pp. 332-335, paras. 574-585; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 43, pp. 1032, 1033, Nos. 4721-4732.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Re Shenton, [1935] Ch. 651; 153 L.T. 343; sub nom. Re Shenton, Ex p. Bates, 104 L.J.Ch. 311; sub nom. Re Shenton, Bates v. Harris, [1934-5] B. & C.R. 201; Digest Supp.
- (2) Thomas v. Devonport Corpn., [1900] 1 Q.B. 16; 69 L.J.Q.B. 51; 81 L.T. 427; 63 J.P. 740; 33 Digest 90, 597.

PROCEDURE SUMMONS by the judicial trustee of a testator's will for an order that a payment made by the judicial trustee in compromise of a claim, which had been disallowed by the court examiner on the audit of the judicial trustee's account, should be allowed as a proper disbursement. JENKINS, J., now held that the item should be allowed on audit. The facts appear in the judgment.

J. H. Stamp for the judicial trustee.

J. L. Arnold for beneficiaries.

JENKINS, J.: This is an application by the Westminster Bank, Ltd., the judicial trustee appointed by an order dated Aug. 23, 1940, of the will of the testator, Ernest Bramwell Ridsdel. The application asks for an order that a certain item in the trustee's account in the following terms: "Yacht 'Aronia.' Oct. 19, 1945. Three months' hire to Oct. 31, 1945, paid to purchasers, £223 10s." disallowed by the court examiner on the audit of the judicial trustee's account, should be allowed as a proper disbursement.

The history of the matter is briefly this. Probate of the will was granted on Sept. 18, 1939. In Nov., 1939, the yacht to which the item relates was requisitioned by the Ministry of Shipping. On Aug. 23, 1940, the Westminster Bank was appointed judicial trustee. It seems that in Apr., 1945, the judicial trustee quite properly instructed Lieut. Stanley Gibbs Jones, a shipbroker, to see if he could find a purchaser for the yacht. Lieut. Jones appears to have found a purchaser who was prepared to pay £11,250. An agreement for sale at that price was entered into dated June 28, 1945. The agreement provided for a deposit of 10 per cent. of the purchase price to be paid on the signing of the agreement:

... and the balance by cash in London within 3 business days of vessel being ready for delivery (subject to charter) and receipt of permit sanctioning transfer of the vessel to the purchasers and in exchange for legal bill of sale.

The vessel was to be purchased:

... as she lies at Lowestoft and as inspected by or on behalf of the purchasers on June 13, 1945.

The purchaser was to take possession of the vessel with the benefit of the charter of the Ministry of War Transport, the terms of which were set out in a letter addressed to the sellers by the Ministry. There was a provision in the agreement for sale that:

The hire shall not be apportioned from day to day, but the sellers shall retain all monthly instalments of hire due before the date of payment of the balance of the purchase price and the buyers shall be entitled to all such instalments due thereafter.

It will be noted that no date was fixed for completion of the transaction. The evidence of Lieut. Jones is that in the ordinary way the sale of a vessel such as this yacht could be completed in ten days or a fortnight, but, when the title to the yacht was looked into with a view to completing the transaction, it was found that she was still registered in the name of the testator, and the registration had to be altered before the sale could be completed. That took a considerable time, and the judicial trustee was not in a position to complete the sale until Oct., 1946. In the meantime the purchaser became restive and threatened to rescind the contract and to make claims against the estate for loss of profit. In those circumstances the judicial trustee, by way of compromise and to settle the matter, paid to the purchaser this disputed item of £223 10s., representing three months' hire at the rate which was being paid by the Ministry of Shipping, namely, the rate of £74 10s. a month. Section 15 (f) of the Trustee Act, 1925, (with certain qualifications not here material with respect to sole trustees) empowers a trustee, as he thinks fit, to compromise, compound, abandon, submit to arbitration, or otherwise settle any debt, account, claim, or thing whatever relating to the testator's or intestate's estate or to the trust . . .

The section further provides that for any of those purposes he . . . may enter into, give, execute, and do such agreements, instruments of composition or arrangement, releases, and other things as to him . . . seem expedient, without being responsible for any loss occasioned by any act or thing so done by him . . . in good faith.

Therefore, prima facie, the payment in question was one which the trustee had power to make under s. 15 (f) in view of the claim that the purchaser was putting forward. It may be that the trustee was open to criticism for not having put the title to the yacht in order at some earlier date, but that is really a different matter and does not go to the power or the propriety of making this compromise in the circumstances which existed when it was made.

On the audit of the account under the provisions of the Judicial Trustees Act, 1896, and the rules made thereunder, the officer of the court conducting the audit disallowed the item. The Judicial Trustees Act, 1896, by s. 1 (1) empowers the court, in the circumstances there mentioned, with respect to any trust, in its discretion, to :

. . . appoint a person (in this Act called a judicial trustee) to be a trustee of that trust, either jointly with any other person or as sole trustee, and, if sufficient cause is shown, in place of all or any existing trustees.

In exercise of that power in this case the Westminster Bank was appointed in place of all existing trustees. I apprehend that, subject to the express provisions of the Act (see s. 1 (3), as to a judicial trustee being subject to the control and supervision of the court, s. 1 (4) as to the power of the court to give directions, and s. 1 (6), as to the auditing of accounts) a trustee thus appointed is in the position of any other trustee and exercises all the powers of any other trustee, including the statutory powers of compromise. I do not think there is anything else in the Act (apart from the power to make rules under s. 4) to which I need refer.

Turning to the Judicial Trustee Rules, 1897, made under s. 4, one finds in r. 8 this provision :

(1) a judicial trustee must, unless in any case the court considers that it is unnecessary, as soon as may be after his appointment, furnish the court with a complete statement of the trust property, accompanied with an approximate estimate of the income and capital value of each item.

By r. 9 (1) :

A judicial trustee, if not an official of the court, must give security to the court . . .

By r. 10 (2) :

All title deeds and all certificates and other documents which are evidence of the title of the trustee to any of the trust property shall be deposited either with that bank or in such other custody as the court directs.

There is a further provision in r. 10 (3) about the method of depositing such deeds and documents. By r. 12:

(1) A judicial trustee may at any time request the court to give him directions as to the trust or its administration. (2) The request may be accompanied by a statement of the facts with regard to which directions are required, and by the fee required under these rules in respect of a communication from the court with regard to the administration of the trust. (3) The court may require the trustee or any other person to attend at chambers if it appears that such an attendance is necessary or convenient for the purpose of obtaining any information or explanation required for properly giving directions, or for the purpose of explaining the nature of the directions.

By r. 14:

(1) The court shall give directions to a judicial trustee as to the date to which the accounts of the trust are to be made up in each year, and shall fix in each year the time after that date within which the accounts are to be delivered to it for audit. (2) The accounts shall in ordinary cases be audited by the officer of the court, but the court, if it considers that the accounts are likely to involve questions of difficulty, may refer them to a professional accountant for report, and order the payment to him of such amount in respect of his report as the court may fix.

Rule 15 provides:

(1) The accounts of any trust of which there is a judicial trustee, with a note of any corrections made upon the audit, shall be filed as the court directs. (2) The judicial trustee shall send a copy of the accounts, or, if the court thinks fit, of a summary of the accounts, of the trust to such beneficiaries or other persons as the court thinks proper.

There is provision for allowing any person to inspect the accounts, and, in r. 17, provision for the remuneration of a judicial trustee.

The question for me is whether, having regard to the provisions of the rules and to the circumstances in which the payment of £223 10s. was made, the officer of the court conducting the audit was right in disallowing that payment. I have had the advantage of an argument addressed to me by counsel for the beneficiaries interested in income, and he strongly contends that the course taken on the audit was right. He says that on the face of it the compromise under which this payment of £223 10s. was made was not a proper compromise, and invites me to hold that it was clear on the face of the transaction that the purchasers of the vessel had no possible claim, so that the trustee was, in effect, merely making them a present. I am unable to share that view. It seems to me that, on the evidence of Lieut. Jones, the shipbroker who acted in the matter, there was a delay of a most unusual character in the completion of the transaction. It may well be that the claim made by the purchaser was well founded. It may also well be, and this would have been more serious, that the purchaser, owing to the delay, might have got out of the bargain altogether. It must be remembered that the price seems to have been highly advantageous. Lieut. Jones thought it was. Therefore, I decline to hold that this payment was, on the face of it, improper as a compromise payment. Then it is said that the necessity for a compromise arose from the negligence of the trustee bank in failing to see that the vessel was registered in their name. As to that, I do not think it is necessary for me to express any view. If it be true that there was negligence in that matter of such a character as would make the trustee personally liable, then it is open to any beneficiary who thinks it worth his while to take proper proceedings against the trustee to make good the resulting loss to the estate, but I cannot see that that possible liability can in any way affect the sum of £223 10s., appearing in the account for what it is, namely, a payment made in compromise of a claim.

Counsel for the beneficiaries referred me to Re Shenton (1), which was cited for the proposition that a payment under the Trustee Act, 1925, s. 15 (f), must be made in compromise of a claim. That I agree, but it does not follow that, to justify a compromise payment, it must be established that the claim, if there had not been a compromise, would have succeeded. It seems to me that, if one so treats a power of compromise, one reduces it in effect to a nullity. The only other case cited by counsel for the beneficiaries which I need mention is Thomas v. Devonport Corpn. (2), which was a claim for remuneration by an auditor to a local authority. In considering that claim, it became necessary for the court to consider the amount of work which such an auditor had to do. LORD RUSSELL OF KILLOWEN, C.J., said ([1900] 1 Q.B. 20, 21) :

As regards the plaintiff's services as auditor of the urban sanitary authority, he was entitled to remuneration at the rate of not less than two guineas a day in respect of the days properly occupied in the work. If the matter had rested there, and the learned judge, having heard the witnesses, had come (as he did in fact) simply to the conclusion that 4 days in each half-year were ample for the work the plaintiff had to do in auditing the accounts, it would not be for the court to review that conclusion. But language was used which, in my view, suggests too narrow a judgment of what the proper duties of the elective auditor are. I do not subscribe to the doctrine that his sole duty is to see whether there are vouchers, apparently formal and regular, justifying each of the items in respect of which the authority seeks to get credit upon the accounts put before the auditors for audit. I think that is an incomplete and imperfect view of the duties of the auditors. I think an auditor is not only entitled, but justified and bound to go further than that, and by fair and reasonable examination of the vouchers to see that there are not amongst the payments so made payments which are not authorised by the duty of the authority, or contrary to the duty of the authority, or in any other way illegal or improper. If he discovers that any such improper or illegal payments appear to have been made, his duty will certainly be to make it public by report to the authority itself, and the burgesses who create that authority.

If I may say so, with respect, there is nothing whatever in that case with which I would venture to disagree. I propose to apply it so far as I can to the audit of a judicial trustee's account. It seems to me that the officer of the court conducting the audit is certainly not confined to the mere mechanical business of vouching those accounts. It seems to me also that, where he finds a payment in the account which is on the face of it improper—as, to give an example suggested by counsel for the judicial trustee, a sum paid in the purchase of an investment which, on the face of the trust instrument, is palpably an unauthorised investment—it is his duty to disallow the payment. Or again, if, on looking at the terms of the trust, he finds that income which ought to have been paid to X has, in fact, been paid to Y, that, being a payment which has no warrant or justification, likewise should be disallowed. But where there is a payment of an authorised character, such as a payment in compromise of a claim supported by a statement by the trustee that the claim was made and he (the trustee) considered it was in the interests of the trust that a payment should be made in settlement of it, it seems to me that by disallowing the payment so made the auditor would be exceeding his function. There is the payment. Qua payment it was actually made; that is proved. There is statutory warrant for making it. Therefore, it seems to me that an auditor should not strike it out. If, on going into the circumstances, it appears to him that the propriety of the compromise was open to doubt, or the necessity for compromise arose from some antecedent negligence of the trustee, or that the transaction in question might in some other way give rise to some claim on the part of the beneficiaries, it seems to me his proper course is, not to disallow the payment, but to leave it in the account with an appropriate note calling attention to whatever the relevant circumstances may be which, in his view, might give rise to some claim on the part of the beneficiaries. If he does that, he will, I think, properly discharge his duty. It will be noted that the Judicial Trustee Rules, 1897, include a provision under which the beneficiaries are to receive copies of the account [r. 15 (2)]. By acting in the manner which I have suggested, the auditor will, I think, fully protect the beneficiaries. They will have the account properly audited, palpably erroneous payments disallowed, and attention called to payments made in circumstances which, in the view of the auditor, are or may be open to question.

There is only one other point with which I need deal. It is suggested that the provision in the Judicial Trustee Rules, 1897, r. 12 (1), that the judicial trustee may at any time request the court to give him directions as to the trust or its administration, by implication deprives the judicial trustee of the power of compromise under the Trustee Act, 1925, s. 15 (f). I cannot think that that is the effect of this rule. After all, the object of the Judicial Trustees Act, 1896, as I understand it, was to provide a middle course in cases where the administration of the estate by the ordinary trustees had broken down and it was not desired to put the estate to the expense of a full administration. In those circumstances, a solution was found in the appointment of a judicial trustee who acts in close concert with the court and under conditions which enable the court to supervise his transactions. I cannot think that it was intended to complicate the matter by prohibiting such a trustee from exercising any discretion without first going to the court and asking for directions. That, as counsel for the judicial trustee points out, would involve that, whenever the trustee wanted to exercise some discretion, such as the power of compromise under the Trustee Act, 1925, s. 15, he would, perforce, have to come to the court for directions. But (to give only one instance) the court would give no directions without summoning before it all persons interested in the exercise of the discretion, that the matter might be argued and decided in the presence of all parties. One would thus reduce the administration of an estate by a judicial trustee to very much the same position as where an estate is being administered by the court and every step has to be taken in pursuance of the court's directions. It does not seem to me to be right or necessary to construe the Judicial Trustee Rules, 1897, as having any such effect.

For the reasons which I have stated, it seems to me that the item of £223 10s. ought not to have been disallowed on audit. I wish to make it clear that the allowance of the item is without prejudice to any claim which a beneficiary may think it worth while to make against the Westminster Bank for negligence or breach of trust alleged to have been committed by the bank in relation to this matter. All I am saying is that, as a matter of audit, the item of £223 10s. should be allowed for what it is, namely, a compromise payment, without prejudice to any question which may be raised about the propriety of the payment, or the judicial trustee's conduct in the matter of the yacht, or any liability the judicial trustee may be under in respect of it.

Arnold (for the beneficiaries): There is one further matter on which your Lordship might give a direction. It is the practice at the moment that the accounts of the judicial trustee are circulated to the beneficiaries before the audit. In view of what has fallen from your Lordship, it might be that your Lordship would think it proper that circulation should in future take place afterwards.

Stamp (for the judicial trustee): Would not the best plan be to circulate before the audit, any addition by the auditor to be supplied afterwards? The beneficiaries would be then in a position to criticise the accounts.

JENKINS, J.: The Judicial Trustee Rules, 1897, r. 15, is ambiguous on the point. It says:

(1) The accounts of any trust of which there is a judicial trustee, with a note of any corrections made upon the audit, shall be filed as the court directs. (2) The judicial trustee shall send a copy of the accounts, or . . . a summary of the accounts, of the trust to such beneficiaries or other persons as the court thinks proper.

I think it would be consistent with that to take the course which you suggest, Mr. Stamp, which seems to me to be the most satisfactory course, that is to say, the beneficiaries should receive copies of the account as submitted for audit, and, if there are any alterations or corrections or any comments made on the account, then the beneficiaries should receive copies of those corrections and comments.

Declaration accordingly.

Solicitors: Rawlinson & Son (for the judicial trustee); Bower, Cotton & Bower (for beneficiaries).

[Reported by R. D. H. OSBORNE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

GOODMAN v. SERLE.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., Macnaghten and Lynskey, JJ.), July 8, 14, 1947.]

Street and Aerial Traffic—Public carriage—Fare—Metropolitan police area—Journey exceeding six miles—Agreed fare in excess of prescribed rates—London Hackney Carriage Act, 1853 (c. 33), s. 17 (1) (2)—Metropolitan Public Carriages Act, 1869 (c. 115), s. 9 (3), restriction (2)—London Cab Order, 1934 (S.R. & O. 1934, No. 1346).

A licensed taxicab driver, while plying for hire within the metropolitan police district, was hired by a passenger to convey her on a journey in excess of six miles, and it was orally agreed that the charge for the hire should be 12s. The amount shown on the meter at the end of the journey was 6s. 6d. The driver was convicted of demanding more than the proper fare, contrary to the London Hackney Carriage Act, 1853, s. 17 (1) :—

HELD : in view of the terms of s. 17 of the London Hackney Carriage Act, 1853, of s. 9 of the Metropolitan Public Carriages Act, 1869, and of the London Cab Order, 1934 (made by the Secretary of State under the Act of 1869), by which are fixed the fares for distance to be paid for hackney carriages within the metropolitan police district, those fares apply only to journeys not exceeding six miles, and, if a passenger wishes to be carried beyond that distance, the taxicab driver may make a bargain with regard to the fare, and, therefore, no offence had been committed by the driver in the present case, and the conviction should be quashed.

Per curiam : Section 44 of the London Hackney Carriage Act, 1831, may be regarded as obsolete.

[AS TO HACKNEY CARRIAGE FARES WITHIN THE METROPOLIS, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 31, p. 763, para. 1183; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 42, p. 860, Nos. 129-132.]

CASE STATED by Middlesex Quarter Sessions, who dismissed an appeal by the appellant against his conviction by Tottenham justices for demanding as a taxicab driver more than the proper fare, contrary to s. 17 of the London Hackney Carriage Act, 1853. The Divisional Court allowed the appeal and quashed the conviction.

Gerald Gardiner and O. S. MacLeay for the appellant.
F. H. Lawton for the respondent.

Cur adv. vult.

July 14. LORD GODDARD, C.J., read the following judgment of the court. This is a Special Case stated by the Middlesex Quarter Sessions who dismissed an appeal by the appellant against his conviction by a court of summary jurisdiction sitting at Tottenham for that he being the driver of a motor cab did demand more than the proper fare. The facts of the case are that on July 16, 1946, the appellant, who is a licensed cab driver, was plying for hire at a cab rank in the East India Dock Road. He was hired by a Mrs. Ryan to drive her from the cab rank to Mile End Hospital and thence to an address at Finsbury Park, a distance in excess of six miles. The Case finds also that it was orally agreed between Mrs. Ryan and the appellant at the hospital that the charge for the said hire should be 12s. and the quarter sessions find that it was an implied term of the agreement that the appellant and Mrs. Ryan should disregard whatever amount was shown on the taximeter. It would appear that this bargain had been made over the telephone, because the quarter sessions find that, on arriving at the address at Finsbury Park, Mrs. Ryan asked the appellant : "How much?" and he answered : "You know what the agreement over the telephone was, 12s." which sum she paid. The amount shown on the taximeter was 6s. 6d. It would, therefore, appear that Mrs. Ryan, regretting the bargain she had made, put the law in motion, and this information was preferred by a police officer.

The whole question depends on whether, the distance being over six miles, the agreement to pay 12s. was a lawful agreement. There appears to be no authority on the point, and it is obvious that a question of considerable importance both to cab drivers and to hirers of cabs is raised by the Case. It is necessary to refer as briefly as may be to the various Hackney Carriage

Acts that have been passed from time to time and to the London Cab Order, 1934. The first Act is the London Hackney Carriage Act, 1831. By s. 43 of that Act it is provided :

No agreement whatever made with the driver of any hackney carriage for the payment of more than his proper fare, as the same is allowed and limited by this Act, shall be binding on the person making the same . . .

A and provision is made for the recovery of any excess fare on a complaint made against the driver before a justice and a penalty upon the driver for demanding it. In sched. I to this Act rates and fares are laid down for the hire of hackney carriages whether by distance or time. By s. 44 it is provided :

B It shall be lawful for any person to require the driver of any hackney carriage to drive such hackney carriage, for a stated sum of money, a distance in the discretion of such driver, and in case such driver shall exceed the distance to which such person was entitled to be driven for such stated sum of money such driver shall not exact or demand more than the sum for which he was so engaged to drive . . .

C The construction of this section, were it necessary for the purposes of this present case, having regard to the terms of s. 43, would present very considerable difficulties. Though still unrepealed, we do not think that at the present day anyone avails themselves of its provisions and for all practical purposes it may be regarded as obsolete. In any case we do not find it necessary to consider it in arriving at a decision in this appeal.

D We turn next to s. 17 of the London Hackney Carriages Act, 1853. Here, again, the driver commits an offence if he demands or takes more than the proper fare set forth in the schedule, and he also commits an offence if he refuses to drive to any place within the limits of the Act, not exceeding six miles. This is the first Act in which the limit of six miles is prescribed. A further Act was passed in the same year known as the London Hackney Carriage (No. 2) Act, 1853, which gives the driver a right to make an increased charge for every mile that he is required to drive outside a four mile radius from Charing Cross. Reading the two Acts together, it is quite clear that, though a driver may be required to go beyond the four mile radius, he cannot be compelled to undertake a journey of more than six miles.

E We now come to the Metropolitan Public Carriages Act, 1869, and s. 9 of that Act seems to us to be the most important provision in this case. Under that section the Secretary of State may from time to time by order make regulations for certain purposes described in the section, and among them is :

(3) For fixing the rates or fares, as well for time as distance, to be paid for hackney carriages, and for securing the due publication of such fares . . .

F Those regulations are again subject to this restriction, that no hackney carriage shall be compelled to take any passenger a greater distance for any one drive than six miles. By s. 15 all the provisions of the Acts relating to hackney carriages which are in force at the time of the commencement of this Act are to continue in force. In 1907 the London Cab and Stage Carriage Act was passed which was the first Act which authorised taximeters to be fixed to cabs, and on Dec. 11, 1934, the London Cab Order was made by the Secretary of State in pursuance of this last mentioned Act and of the Act of 1869. The order prescribes the fares calculated by time and distance combined which G may be taken by drivers of taxicabs, but there is again a provision in art. 34 that the driver shall not be compelled to accept a hiring for a distance of more than six miles or a duration of more than one hour.

H The argument for the respondent in this case is that, while there is no obligation on a cab driver to accept a hiring for more than six miles, if he does so and agrees to drive, say, twelve miles, and all those twelve miles are within the metropolitan police area, he is only entitled to charge the prescribed fare for the whole twelve miles. The appellant contends that, if he agrees to drive a person who hires him for a longer distance than six miles, he is at liberty to make any bargain he likes as a condition of going beyond that distance.

The offence which it is said the driver has committed was an offence under s. 17 of the Act of 1853, which is continued in force by s. 15 of the Act of 1869, that is, demanding more than the proper fare. The proper fare is no longer that prescribed by the Act of 1853, but is the fare prescribed by the London Cab Order, 1934. As has been pointed out above, that order is made under

s. 9 of the Act of 1869 and for this purpose that section can be read in this way: "The Secretary of State may from time to time by order make regulations for fixing the rates or fares for distance to be paid for hackney carriages, provided that no hackney carriage shall be compelled to take any passenger a greater distance for any one drive than six miles." In our opinion, it follows that where the cabman has agreed to convey a fare more than six miles on one drive, no fare has been prescribed and it is left to a bargain between the parties. The purpose of the Acts is to protect ordinary cab users from extortionate fares demanded by drivers who are obliged to drive them if required. Cabs which ply for hire in London streets are primarily for short distances within the area for which they are licensed, certainly for distances not exceeding six miles. There seems no reason, therefore, why one should hold that a bargain made between cab driver and hirer for a long distance journey for which a hired motor car would certainly be equally, and probably more, appropriate should be held illegal unless there are words in the statute which compel one to do so. It is true that in 1831 when the London Hackney Carriage Act was passed voiding agreements to pay more than the fare prescribed in that Act there was no distance limit laid down beyond which a driver could refuse to go, but the subsequent Acts seem clearly to contemplate that anything above six miles is to be regarded as something in the nature of an abnormal hiring. If it were laid down by this court that a driver who is hired for a long distance, which in many circumstances it might be unreasonable to oblige him to undertake, but which he might be willing to perform for a special fare, cannot make a special bargain, it might well result that no taximan would ever take a fare for a greater distance than six miles, or at the end of six miles would stop and tell his fare to alight as he was going to turn round to go home.

We do not pretend to find the construction of these Acts at all easy, and in these days of mechanical vehicles capable of far longer journeys than the old horse cabs, it might be of assistance both to the trade and the public if the Secretary of State made an order which would put the matter beyond controversy, as he has clearly power to do, but, of the two possible constructions of the Acts, we prefer the one which seems to us the more reasonable and the one productive of the least inconvenience and hardship both to the public and the drivers, and that is to regard the fares as fixed by the Secretary of State as applying only to drives not exceeding six miles, i.e., drives which a taxicab driver who is hired is bound to undertake, if required. In our opinion, if a fare desires to be carried beyond that distance, the taxicab driver is at liberty to make a bargain without regard to the prescribed fares. For these reasons, in our opinion, this appeal succeeds and the conviction is quashed, with costs to the appellant here and below.

Appeal allowed with costs.

Solicitors: Philip Conway, Thomas & Co. (for the appellant); Solicitor for the Metropolitan Police (for the respondent).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL v. SHELLEY.

HARCOURT AND OTHERS v. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., Macnaghten and Lynskey, JJ.), July 11, 1947.]

Public Health—Housing—Accommodation of working classes—Recovery of possession—Rent exceeding £20—Summary procedure before justices—Suspension of warrant—Small Tenements Recovery Act, 1838 (c. 74), s. 1—Housing Act, 1936 (c. 51), ss. 83 (1), 156 (1) (a) (2).

The letting of premises to a member of the working classes is within the powers of management vested in a local authority by s. 83 (1) of the Housing Act, 1936, even although the eviction from the premises of another member of the working classes is involved. (R. v. Snell, ex p. Marylebone Borough Council, [1942] 1 All E.R. 612, followed, but criticised). Therefore, in such a case, a local authority may, by virtue of s. 156 (1) (a) and s. 156 (2) of the Act, recover possession under the Small Tenements Recovery Act, 1838, whatever may be the rent of the premises, and the Rent Restrictions Acts are excluded. Accordingly, a warrant made by a magistrate for the possession of such premises cannot be suspended under the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1920, s. 5 (4), for such time as the magistrate directs, but only for a maximum of 30 days under the Small Tenements Recovery Act, 1838, s. 1.

[AS TO RECOVERY OF POSSESSION OF CONTROLLED HOUSES, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 26, pp. 581, 582, para. 1233; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST Supp., Vol. 38, title Public Health, No. 509e.]

Case referred to:

- (1) R. v. Snell, Ex p. Marylebone Borough Council, [1942] 1 All E.R. 612; [1942] 2 K.B. 137; 111 L.J.K.B. 530; 167 L.T. 13; 106 J.P. 160; Digest Supp.

CASES STATED by metropolitan magistrates.

In London County Council v. Shelley a complaint was preferred before the Tower Bridge magistrate by the appellant landlords, the London County Council, under the Small Tenements Recovery Act, 1838, s. 1, against the respondent tenant, Shelley, for neglecting to deliver up possession of a tenement, notwithstanding the determination of her tenancy by notice to quit and service on her by the council of a notice in writing under s. 1 of the Act of their intention to apply for the issue of a warrant to recover possession. The magistrate issued a warrant for possession of the premises, but, acting in accordance with s. 5 (4) of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920, she directed that the warrant should remain in force for three months and should not be executed until the last day of such period, and she further informed Shelley that she could apply before the expiration of that time for an extension of the period. The council now appealed against the determination and direction and the granting of liberty to apply for an extension of the period. The appeal was allowed.

In Harcourt v. London County Council a similar complaint under the Small Tenements Recovery Act, 1838, s. 1, was preferred by the landlords before the Clerkenwell magistrate. In this case the magistrate issued a warrant for delivery of possession within 30 days, the limit prescribed by s. 1 of the Act of 1838. The tenant, Harcourt, now appealed, and the appeal was dismissed.

The facts appear in the judgment of LORD GODDARD, C.J.

Lloyd-Jones for the London County Council.

Ackner for the tenant, Shelley.

H. Newman for the tenant, Harcourt, and others.

LORD GODDARD, C.J. : These are two Cases stated, one by the magistrate at the Tower Bridge police court, Miss Campbell, and the other by Mr. Bertram Reece at Clerkenwell.

In applications in each case by the London County Council for possession of a house or flat, their property, Miss Campbell made an order for possession under the Small Tenements Recovery Act, 1838, but suspended the operation of the warrant for three months, and indicated to the tenant that she could apply before the expiration of the period of three months for further extension, whereas the magistrate at Clerkenwell did not suspend the warrant, but issued a warrant giving the landlords possession within thirty days, which is the time mentioned in the Small Tenements Recovery Act, s. 1.

Mrs. Shelley is in occupation of a flat, 8, Barnaby Buildings, of which the rateable value is only £11 a year, for which she pays 14s. 5d. a week, and notice to quit was served on her expiring on Dec. 9, 1946. She did not give up possession, and the council, acting under s. 156 (2) of the Housing Act, 1936, instituted proceedings under the Small Tenements Recovery Act to obtain possession of the premises. The same may be said of Mrs. Harcourt's house. The only difference in the two cases was that no complaint whatever was made against Mrs. Shelley as a tenant, while Mrs. Harcourt had committed a breach of covenant. It is conceded that the provisions of the Housing Act, 1936, apply to both the house and the flat. By s. 83 of the Act:—

(1) The general management, regulation and control of houses provided by a local authority under this Part of this Act shall be vested in and exercised by the authority, and the authority may make such reasonable charges for the tenancy or occupation of the houses as they may determine.

Section 156, which is the section which gives rise to the difficulty in this case provides :

(1) Nothing in the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Acts, 1920 to 1933, as amended by any subsequent enactment shall be deemed to affect the provisions of this Act relating to the obtaining possession of a house with respect to which a demolition order or a clearance order has been made, or to prevent possession being obtained—(a) of any house possession of which is required for the purpose of enabling a local authority to exercise their powers under any enactment relating to the housing of the working classes ; . . . (2) Where a local authority, for the purpose of exercising their powers under any enactment relating to the housing of the working classes, require possession of any building or any part of a building of which they are the owners, then, whatever may be the value or rent of the building or part of a building, they may obtain possession thereof under the Small Tenements Recovery Act, 1838, as in the cases therein provided for, at any time after the tenancy of the occupier has expired, or has been determined.

The first question which has to be considered is whether the provisions of the Small Tenements Recovery Act, 1838, under which both magistrates purported to act, applies to these cases. That seems to me to be concluded by the decision in R. v. Snell, Ex p. St. Marylebone Borough Council (1), where it was held that, so long as the purpose for which the local authority require possession is to let the premises to another member of the working classes, the matter is one of the "management" of the premises within s. 83 of the Act, and the authority, acting under s. 156 (2), may proceed under the Small Tenements Recovery Act, 1838, although the rent is over £20 a year, which ordinarily is the limit of rent for the purposes of that Act. I confess that I have had some difficulty in satisfying myself that where a house is occupied by a member of the working classes, as these premises were, the county council can be said to be exercising their powers of management under the Act of 1936 by turning out one member of the working classes to put in another. I expressly say nothing about the merits of this case because we have not gone into them. I do not want to assume that the London County Council are acting oppressively, but the plain fact in Shelley's case is that a member of the working classes, against whom, apparently, no suggestion is made as a tenant, is being ejected from her flat that another member of the working classes may be put in. This court, however, has held that if the council require a flat for a member of the working classes, although it involves turning out another member of the working classes, they are exercising their powers of management under s. 83. I hope that that decision will become the subject of review by a higher court, but at the moment this court is bound by R. v. Snell, Ex p. Marylebone Borough Council (1).

The council contend that when they have taken action under the Small Tenements Recovery Act, the provisions of the Rent Restrictions Acts do not apply, so that the court has only the discretion which it had before those Acts as regards giving the tenant extended possession of the house although the tenancy has expired. That raises a question of vital importance to hundreds and thousands of tenants of local authorities all over England, who are living in houses—and, I suggest, not only in houses, but also in fools' paradises, because they may think that, by reason of the rateable value of their houses, they have the security of tenure which the Rent Restrictions Acts give, whereas, in fact, they have not got that protection because the Housing Act, 1936, s. 156 (1) (a), provides that nothing in the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Acts shall be deemed to affect the provisions of the Housing Act relating to the obtaining of possession of a house where the local authority require it for the exercise of their powers under the Housing Act. If letting to another member of the working classes is, as has been held in Snell's case (1), an exercise of their powers under the Act relating to the housing of the working classes, it follows that none of the provisions of the Rent Restrictions Acts applies. Whether Parliament intended that result, it is not for me to discuss. Counsel for the London County Council called our attention to the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1939, s. 3 (2), which lends support to the suggestion that Parliament may have intended this result for it provides :

The principal Acts shall not . . . apply—(c) to any dwelling-house being, or forming part of, a house or dwelling in respect of which a local authority for the purposes of Part V of the Housing Act, 1936, are required by s. 128 of that Act to keep a Housing Revenue Account, other than a house or dwelling to which sub-s. (3) of s. 129 of that Act applies.

If, therefore, this house is one of the houses described in that sub-section, it is clear that the Rent Restrictions Acts do not apply at all.

What is the result? By s. 5 (4) of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920:

A . . . every warrant for delivery of possession of, or to enter and give possession of, any dwelling-house to which this Act applies, shall remain in force for three months from the day next after the last day named in the judgment or order for delivery of possession or ejectment, or, in the case of a warrant under the Small Tenements Recovery Act, 1838, from the date of the issue of the warrant, and in either case for such further period or periods, if any, as the court shall from time to time, whether before or after the expiration of such three months, direct.

B It is evident from the report that the judges who decided Snell's case (1) were very much pressed with the fact, as HUMPHREYS, J., said, that there should be this great distinction between houses which belonged to a local authority and other houses, so that the local authority could not only go to the magistrates whatever the rent, but also were entitled to obtain possession without the court having a discretion to refuse to grant it. Their attention seems to have been called to s. 5 of the Act of 1920, and they thought that that applied, C but it looks as if they must have been under some misapprehension because, in holding that the matter came within s. 156 (2) of the Act of 1936, they could not have had in mind s. 156 (1) which provides that nothing in the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Acts, 1920 to 1933, shall be deemed to affect the provisions of the Housing Act, 1936, relating to possession in certain circumstances, one of which existed in that case as it does here. I cannot hold D that this provision of s. 5 (4) of the Act of 1920 applies, and, accordingly, it seems to me that the magistrate in the first case now before us had no option but to issue a warrant which she could not suspend for more than 30 days.

Counsel for the tenants has argued that under the Small Tenements Recovery Act, 1838, there always was a discretion in the court to issue a warrant for possession. I am afraid I cannot read the Act in that way. It is true that the expression used in s. 1 of the Act is:

E . . . it shall be lawful for the landlord of the said premises or his agent to cause the person so neglecting or refusing to quit and deliver up possession to be served . . . with a written notice . . . and if the tenant . . . shall not thereupon appear at the time and place appointed, and show to the satisfaction of the justices . . . reasonable cause why possession should not be given . . . and shall still neglect or refuse to deliver up possession of the premises, or of such part thereof of which he is then in possession, to the said landlord or his agent, it shall be lawful for such landlord or his agent to give to such justice proof of the holding, [and upon proof of service, and so forth] it shall F be lawful for the justices . . . in petty sessions assembled . . . to issue a warrant . . .

It is said by counsel for the tenants that, first, because the words "it shall be lawful" are used, and, secondly, because it is provided that it shall be lawful for the justices to issue their warrant if the tenant shall not appear and show to the satisfaction of the justices reasonable cause why possession should not be given under the provisions of this Act, the justices hearing a G complaint under the Small Tenements Recovery Act always have had a power equivalent to that which was conferred on courts under the Rent Restrictions Acts. Considering that this Act has been in force for 109 years, I cannot now say for the first time that that is its proper construction. The expression "it shall be lawful" was used because a wholly new jurisdiction was being conferred on justices. I think it means that the court is given full jurisdiction to deal with the case, and must deal with it if it comes before them. It cannot be read H as conferring on justices in 1838 the powers given to courts by the Rent Restrictions Acts. With regard to the words "reasonable cause," I think that where it is said in an Act that, if a landlord takes proceedings before a competent court, that court is to act in a certain way unless the tenant can show "reasonable cause," that must mean, unless the tenant has a defence, legal or equitable, and, as there is no pretence that there is any defence here, whether legal or equitable, I do not think the magistrate had any discretion to refuse to issue her warrant or suspend it for more than 30 days, which is the maximum the Small Tenements Recovery Act provides.

In these circumstances, the appeal must be allowed in London County Council v. Shelley, while the appeal in Harcourt v. London County Council must be dismissed. In my opinion, these cases are very fit to be taken before a court which has the power to reconsider Snell's case. It may be that such a court would take a different view of the matter which has given trouble to myself, and, I think, also to my brethren, viz., the proper meaning to be attached to the words in the Housing Act, 1936, with regard to a local authority exercising their powers under any enactment relating to the housing of the working classes, especially considering the context and the place where they appear in the Act. A higher court may consider whether or not, in such cases as these, magistrates have a discretion similar to that exercised by county court or High Court judges under the Rent Restrictions Acts.

MACNAGHTEN, J. : I am of the same opinion, and I must confess I have been puzzled as to the meaning of s. 156 (2) of the Housing Act, 1936. I hope that some day it may be cleared up in another place. What seems to me so puzzling is that s. 155 is stated to deal with the recovery of possession of buildings, subject to demolition or clearance orders. Section 156 is stated to deal with the recovery of possession of controlled houses, and does, in fact, deal with that matter in sub-s. (1), but, when it comes to sub-s. (2), it seems to revert to s. 155 and deal only with buildings and not with houses, at least by name.

LYNSKEY, J. : I agree. If I had not been bound by authority I should probably have taken a different view from that which was taken by the court in R. v. Snell (1), but it is not necessary that I should come to a final conclusion on that point because, in my view, the decision in R. v. Snell covers this case, and we are bound by it. I agree that it is desirable that it should be tested elsewhere.

Order accordingly.

Solicitors : J. H. Pawlyn (for the London County Council) ; E. L. Thackray (for the tenant, Shelley) ; Geoffrey B. Gush & Co. (for the tenant, Harcourt, and others).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Applied. LAVENDER v. DIAMINTS, LTD. [1948] 2 All E.R. 249.

Applied. HOSKING v. DE HAVILLAND AIRCRAFT CO., LTD. [1949] 1 All E.R. 540.

WHITBY v. BURT BOULTON & HAYWARD, LTD. AND ANOTHER.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Denning J.), July 7, 8, 9, 1947.]

Factories and Shops—Building operations—Operations in factory—Applicability of whole Act—Factories Act, 1937 (c. 67), ss. 26, 107.

Section 107 of the Factories Act, 1937, which provides that certain provisions of the Act (not including s. 26) shall apply to building operations, deals only with building operations which are not conducted in a factory. The whole of the Act applies in respect of building operations which are conducted in a factory, and, therefore, s. 26 applies and puts the responsibility on the occupier to provide safe means of access to every place at which any person has to work, even though the building operations are being carried out by a contractor.

[FOR THE FACTORIES ACT, 1937, s. 107, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 30, p. 274.]

Case referred to :

- (1) Speed v. Swift (Thomas) & Co., Ltd., [1943] 1 All E.R. 539 ; [1943] 1 K.B. 557 ; 112 L.J.K.B. 487 ; 169 L.T. 67 ; Digest Supp.

ACTION for damages for negligence.

The first defendants, who were the occupiers of a factory, engaged independent contractors, the second defendants, to repair damage done in the factory by enemy action during the war. Corrugated iron sheets were required for part of the work, and the occupiers authorised the contractors to take down and use sheets put up as a war time measure under a glass skylight in the roof of the factory. The sheets were nailed on to defective timber, and, in removing one of them, one of the timbers collapsed and the plaintiff, who was employed by the second defendants, fell some 20 ft. to the floor, thereby sustaining injuries, in respect of which he claimed damages from both defendants. Judgment was given for the plaintiff.

Beney, K.C., and Edgedale, K.C., for the plaintiff.

A Paull, K.C., and Humfrey Edmunds for the occupiers.

R. Marven Everett for the contractors.

DENNING, J, [stated the facts, held that at common law there was no liability on the occupiers, but that, applying the principles stated by LORD GREENE, M.R., in Speed v. Thomas Swift & Co. (1), the contractors were liable, and continued] :—The other head of claim was under the Factories Act, 1937.

B It was said for the plaintiff that the first defendants were the occupiers of the factory and liable under the Act, particularly under s. 26, which requires that :

(1) There shall, so far as is reasonably practicable, be provided and maintained safe means of access to every place at which any person has at any time to work.

C It is said that the means of access which was provided to these iron sheets and the nails fastening them to the timber were unsafe, and that, therefore, there was a breach of s. 26 for which the occupiers are liable. The occupiers raised an important point under the Act. They said that these were "building operations" and that s. 26 does not apply in respect of building operations because the only provisions which apply to "building operations" are those specified in s. 107, which do not include those of s. 26. In my opinion, however,

D s. 107 only deals with "building operations" which are not conducted in a factory. As a matter of construction I am satisfied that the whole of the Factories Act applies to building operations which are conducted in a factory. Any other construction would lead to remarkable results. For instance, in the circumstances of the present case, if a man had been sent up to clean at the top of this building, it would not have been a "building operation" and would be within the Factories Act, but, if he had been sent up to repair or maintain part of it it would have been a "building operation" and, accordingly, outside the Act. I am satisfied that no such result was intended. It is impossible to extricate building operations within a factory from other operations within a factory. Section 26, in my judgment, applies to this case and the occupiers were responsible for seeing that there was provided and maintained safe means of access. Although this may appear a harsh law when the occupiers of a factory employ contractors or sub-contractors, the consequences, so far as criminal responsibility is concerned, can be fairly adjusted under s. 137 of the Act and, so far as civil liability is concerned, can be fairly adjusted under the Law Reform (Tortfeasors) Act, 1935. I hold, therefore, that for the safeguarding of people in factories s. 26 applies and puts the responsibility on the occupier even though the building operations are being carried out by a contractor.

G [His LORDSHIP then held that there had been a breach of s. 26 of the Act, for which the occupiers were liable. Judgment for £4,000 was given against both defendants, but His LORDSHIP directed that the occupiers should be indemnified in that sum by the contractors, who should also pay the costs.]

Order accordingly.

Solicitors : W. H. Thompson (for the plaintiff); L. Bingham & Co. (for the occupiers); Hair & Co. (for the contractors).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

BARNES v. BARNES (AYRES cited).

[PROBATE, DIVORCE AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION (Hodson, J.), June 16, 17, 18, 19, 23, 1947.]

Divorce—Costs—Condonation—Revival of condoned offence—Effect on liability of co-respondent or party cited.

Condonation of adultery is not the same thing as forgiveness in the ordinary sense of that word. It operates merely as a suspension of the husband's rights to divorce, and that suspension lasts only so long as the wife is, in effect, of good behaviour. As soon as she misbehaves in a way (not necessarily in an adulterous way) which entitles the husband to come to the court, the protection of condonation is gone both as against the wife and as against the co-respondent or a party cited, who may, therefore, be ordered to pay the costs of the proceedings.

[AS TO REVIVAL OF CONDONED ADULTERY, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 10, p. 680, para. 1006; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 27, pp. 345, 346, Nos. 3266-3276.]

Cases referred to :

- (1) Norris v. Norris, Lawson & Mason, (1865), 4 Sw. & Tr. 237; 30 L.J.P.M. & A. 111; 27 Digest 346, 3270.
- (2) Lloyd v. Lloyd and Hill, [1947] 1 All E.R. 383.
- (3) Beard v. Beard, [1945] 2 All E.R. 306; [1946] P. 8; 114 L.J.P. 33; 174 L.T. 65; Digest Supp.
- (4) Bernstein v. Bernstein, [1893] P. 292; 69 L.T. 513; sub nom. Bernstein v. Bernstein, Turner & Sampson, 63 L.J.P. 3.

PETITION by the wife for divorce on the ground of cruelty, with cross-prayer by the husband for divorce on the ground of desertion reviving condoned adultery with the party cited. The wife's petition was dismissed, and the husband's prayer allowed with costs against the party cited. The report is confined to the question of costs.

Linton Thorpe, K.C. and E. Bradley for the wife.

C. E. B. Roberts for the party cited.

Melford Stevenson, K.C. and R. T. Barnard for the husband.

HODSON, J. : This case raises a question of jurisdiction to condemn a co-respondent or party cited in costs. RAYDEN ON DIVORCE, 4th edn., p. 360, contains this statement :

Once adultery has been condoned it is only a co-respondent's fresh adultery which will revive a right, even as to costs, against him.

The authority mentioned is Norris v. Norris, Lawson and Mason (1). I also considered Lloyd v. Lloyd and Hill (2).

It is true that, with regard to the two co-respondents in the earlier case to which I have referred, the Judge Ordinary said (4 Sw. & Tr. 237) :

I cannot condemn Lawson in costs. The petitioner, by condoning his wife's adultery with Lawson, has waived all right to any proceedings against him in this court. The usual course is to grant costs against a co-respondent when his conduct has made the suit necessary. Here the wife's subsequent misconduct, and not her adultery with Lawson, rendered the suit necessary.

In the present case the wife did not commit further adultery, but she deserted her husband and thereby revived the earlier adultery in accordance with the decision of the Court of Appeal in Beard v. Beard (3). Norris v. Norris, Lawson and Mason (1), was referred to in the Court of Appeal by two of the Lords Justices in Bernstein v. Bernstein, Lampson and Turner (4), and it is important to see exactly what the Court of Appeal were deciding in that case. They decided as stated in the headnote ([1893] P. 292) :

. . . that a condonation by a husband of adultery with one person is not avoided by the fact that the wife had previously to the condonation committed acts of adultery with another person of which he was not aware.

The second point they decided is :

. . . that, although at common law condonation by the husband of an act of adultery was no bar to an action for criminal conversation against the adulterer, but only went in mitigation of damages, the case is different under the Divorce and Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857 (sic), and where, on a petition for divorce and for damages against the co-respondent, a divorce is refused on the ground that the adultery has been condoned, the petitioner is not entitled to a judgment, even for nominal damages, against the co-respondent.

A Neither of those points has anything to do with revival, but the learned Lords Justices did talk about revival and LINDLEY, L.J., certainly used language to indicate that any idea of revival was abhorrent to him. He said ([1893] P. 318):

... to condone a particular act of adultery and afterwards to make it the subject of a petition to which the wife is a party, to publish her condoned misconduct and to expose her to shame and misery, is to pursue a course of conduct so utterly inconsistent with condonation that I cannot bring myself to believe that the legislature intended to allow it.

B It is clear that LINDLEY, L.J., would have found it difficult to accept the doctrine of revival, but that that doctrine does exist and that the wife's previous misconduct can be revived even when condoned is clear from the decision in the Court of Appeal in Beard v. Beard (3). There the wife had committed adultery, it was condoned, and she afterwards left her husband who thereupon brought a petition.

C That being the case, one must appreciate that condonation is not the same thing as forgiveness in the ordinary sense of that word. It merely operates as a suspension of the husband's rights to divorce, and that suspension only lasts so long as the wife is of good behaviour. As soon as she misbehaves in a way (not necessarily in an adulterous way) which entitles the husband to come to the court, the protection of condonation is gone.

D So far as the party cited is concerned, it does not seem to me to help him to say that he had nothing to do with the misbehaviour by the wife which caused the condonation to disappear he having had nothing to do with the wife's desertion. For a number of years he had the benefit of a protection which was extended to the wife, and prevented any relief being obtained against either of them so long as the husband's rights were suspended. It seems to me impossible to come to any other conclusion but that, he not having in any sense been forgiven, and no charge having been waived or withdrawn against him (as I suppose might be the case if, for example, a deed were entered into between the husband and himself), once the condonation has gone against the wife, it must also go against him.

I come to the conclusion, in all the circumstances, that it would be right to make an order that the party cited, should pay the whole costs of the suit.

Order accordingly.

F Solicitors: Woodhouse, Smith & Co. (for the wife and the party cited); Wilkinson, Howlett & Moorhouse (for the husband).

[Reported by R. HENDRY WHITE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

G BACON v. BACON.

PROBATE, DIVORCE AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION (Willmer, J.), June 9, 16, 1947.]

H Divorce—Maintenance—Consent order—"Settlement" within Settled Land Act—Husband to secure house jointly held to wife "for her life occupation"—Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925 (c. 49), s. 192—Settled Land Act, 1925 (c. 18), s. 1 (1) and (7).

The parties purchased a house out of their joint moneys, the conveyance providing that they were to hold it in fee simple as joint tenants upon trust for sale. In pronouncing a decree nisi, which was duly made absolute, a consequential order was made, by consent, under s. 192 of the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925, that the husband should secure the house to the wife for her occupation "for her life":—

HELD: the consent order was an "agreement" within the meaning of s. 1 (1) of the Settled Land Act, 1925, the effect of which was to create a life tenancy of the house under the Act, which took priority over the trust for sale, and the wife was entitled to the appropriate vesting deed and trust instrument under the Act.

[AS TO "SETTLEMENT" WITHIN SETTLED LAND ACT, 1925, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 29, p. 668, para. 952; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 40, pp. 726-728, Nos. 2572-2589.

AS TO VARIATION OF SETTLEMENTS BY COURT, see HALSBURY, Vol. 10, p. 800, para. 1274; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 27, pp. 518-521, Nos. 5583-5631.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Re Carne's Settled Estates, [1899] 1 Ch. 324; 68 L.J.Ch. 120; sub nom. Re St. Donats Settled Estates, 79 L.T. 542; 40 Digest 735, 2647.
- (2) Re Norton, Pinney v. Beauchamp, [1929] 1 Ch. 84; 98 L.J. Ch. 219; 140 L.T. 348; Digest Supp.
- (3) Re Sharpe's Deed of Release, Sharpe v. Fox, [1938] 3 All E.R. 449; 54 T.L.R. 1039; Digest Supp.
- (4) Re Hanson, Hanson v. Eastwood, [1928] 1 Ch. 96; 97 L.J. Ch. 86; 138 L.T. 462; 40 Digest 753, 2828.
- (5) Smith v. Smith, [1945] 1 All E.R. 584; 114 L.J.P. 30; 173 L.T. 8; Digest Supp.
- (6) Lievesley v. Gilmore, (1866), L.R. 1 C.P. 570; Har. & Ruth, 849; 35 L.J.C.P. 351; 15 L.T. 386; 2 Digest 314, 14.
- (7) Worthington & Co., Ltd. v. Abbott, [1910] 1 Ch. 588; 79 L.J. Ch. 252; 101 L.T. 895; 35 Digest 538, 2677.
- (8) Carmichael v. Carmichael, (1925), 42 T.L.R. 133; 27 Digest 332, 3125.

REFERENCE from Birmingham District Registry. In pronouncing a decree nisi, which was made absolute in due course, an order was made, by consent, that the husband should secure to the wife a house jointly owned by them, "for her life occupation." The question for consideration was the nature of the instrument which should be executed by the parties to give effect to the order. WILLMER, J., now held that the effect of the order was to create a "settlement" within the meaning of the Settled Land Act, 1925, and that the wife was, therefore, entitled to the appropriate vesting deed and trust instrument under the Act.

W. T. Elverston for the wife.

R. L. Travers for the husband.

Cur. adv. vult.

June 16. WILLMER, J.: On Dec. 18, 1945, a decree nisi of dissolution was pronounced in this case by DENNING, J., at Birmingham Assizes. In pronouncing the decree nisi, the learned judge made certain further consequential orders. One of these, which has led to the present dispute, was in the following terms:

It is further ordered, by consent, that the petitioner, the husband, do secure to the respondent, the wife, for her life occupation of the house, 25, Erskine Road, Colwyn Bay, in the county of Denbigh . . .

The house in question was purchased by the parties in Apr., 1941, out of moneys belonging to them on a joint account, and the conveyance provided that they were to hold it in fee simple as joint tenants. It was further provided that they should stand possessed of the premises conveyed upon trust to sell the same, with power at discretion to postpone any sale, and that they should stand possessed of the net proceeds of sale, and of the net rents and profits until sale, in trust for themselves as joint tenants beneficially. The decree of dissolution was made absolute on Nov. 11, 1946.

The dispute which has arisen concerns the nature of the deed or instrument which should be executed by the parties in order to give effect to the agreement of the parties with regard to the occupation of the house as embodied in the consent order made by DENNING, J. The question is whether or not the effect of the order is to create a settlement within the meaning of the Settled Land Act, 1925. In view of the nature of the questions which arose I thought it right to adjourn the matter into court for argument, and I have taken time to consider my judgment.

The following are the relevant provisions of the Settled Land Act, 1925, omitting unnecessary words: Section 1 (1):

Any deed, will, agreement for a settlement or other agreement, Act of Parliament, or other instrument . . . under or by virtue of which instrument . . . any land

... stands for the time being . . . (i) limited in trust for any persons by way of succession ; . . . creates or is for the purpose of this Act a settlement and is in this Act referred to as a settlement, or as the settlement, as the case requires . . .

Section 1 (7) (added by the Law of Property (Amendment) Act, 1926) :

This section does not apply to land held upon trust for sale.

Section 19 (1) :

A The person of full age who is for the time being beneficially entitled under a settlement to possession of settled land for his life is for the purposes of this Act the tenant for life of that land and the tenant for life under that settlement.

The argument for the wife was that, whatever the parties may have contemplated or intended at the time, the effect of the consent order made by DENNING, J., was to create a settlement under the Settled Land Act, i.e., a beneficial interest to the wife for life, with remainder to the husband and wife as joint tenants.

B The only proper way, therefore, of giving effect to the consent order would be by way of the appropriate vesting deed and trust instrument under the Settled Land Act, drafts of which were submitted for my consideration. For the husband, on the other hand, it was contended that the effect of the consent order was not such as to create a settlement under the Settled Land Act, with all the consequences which would follow from that, but that its effect was intended to be limited to what it says, viz., that the husband should secure to

C the wife for her life occupation of the house, no more and no less. It was suggested that effect could be given to the order by means of a deed, whereby the house would be conveyed to trustees upon trust to sell, with a proviso that they should not sell during the lifetime of the wife without the consent of both parties, and it should also be provided that, so long as the house remained unsold, the trustees should permit the wife to occupy it, and on its

D eventual sale they should hold the proceeds in trust for the husband and wife equally. A draft deed was submitted, which, with certain drafting amendments admittedly necessary, would achieve this result.

The crucial question which I have to determine is whether the consent order made by DENNING, J., amounted to an "agreement," or, alternatively, an "other instrument," so as to create a settlement, within the meaning of s. 1 (1) of the Settled Land Act, 1925. If there is a settlement within the Act, it was

E argued on behalf of the wife, and not disputed by the husband, that the effect of conferring a right to occupy for life would be to create a life tenancy. This seems to be the plain effect of s. 19 (1) of the Act, and the wife's contention is also supported by the decisions in Re Carne's Settled Estates (1), and the other later cases which were cited to me. It was also contended for the wife, and not disputed by the husband, that, if a life tenancy in favour of the wife were created, this would take priority over the trust for sale contained in

F the original conveyance, so that s. 1 (7) could not be relied on to exclude the operation of the Act. A trust for sale is defined by s. 205 (1) (xxix) of the Law of Property Act, 1925, in the following terms :

"Trust for sale," in relation to land, means an immediate binding trust for sale, whether or not exercisable at the request or with the consent of any person, and with or without a power at discretion to postpone the sale ; . . .

G I was referred to the decisions of the Chancery Division in Re Norton (2), Re Sharpe's Deed of Release (3), and Re Hanson (4). Having regard to these decisions and to the definition of trust for sale in the Law of Property Act, I am satisfied that the argument for the wife on this point is well founded, viz., that, if a life tenancy were created in consequence of the consent order, the trust for sale in the original conveyance would be postponed thereto, and could not, therefore, operate to exclude the Settled Land Act.

H I come back, therefore, to the vital question in this case. Was the consent order an "agreement" within the meaning of s. 1 (1) of the Act ? I would say in passing that I think counsel for the husband was well founded in submitting that what was done by DENNING, J., when he made his consent order, was done, and could only have been done, in the exercise of the powers conferred by s. 192 of the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925, i.e., the power to vary the application of property the subject of a post-nuptial settlement. In Smith v. Smith (5), where a house was purchased in the joint names of husband and wife in circumstances similar, and on terms similar, to those in the present case, it was held by the same learned judge that the conveyance was a post-nuptial settlement within the meaning of s. 192 of the Act. I see no distinction between that and the present case, and I must, accordingly, assume that when DENNING, J., made the consent order in the present case he did so in the exercise of his power under s. 192 of the Act. The point is of some importance, in view of the argument addressed to me by counsel for the husband, because under s. 10 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1937, which provides that proceedings under s. 192 of the Act of 1925 may be commenced at any time after the presentation of the petition, no order under that section can be made unless and until a decree nisi is pronounced, and no such order, save in so far as it relates to the preparation, execution or approval of a deed or instrument, and no settlement made in pursuance of any such order, can take effect unless and until the decree is made absolute. Here, of course, the order was made at the time of pronouncing the decree nisi, i.e., the earliest moment at which it could have been made—and the decree has since been made absolute. A B

What is said for the wife is that the agreement between the parties with regard to the occupation of this house is none the less an agreement for being embodied in an order of the court. In effect, it is argued that a consent order is an agreement, so as to fall within s. 1 (1) of the Settled Land Act. In support of this proposition two cases were cited. The first of these, Lievesley v. Gilmore (6), is not, I think, of much assistance. In that case a consent order was made referring all matters in dispute to arbitration, and, subsequently, a further agreement was endorsed by the parties on the order empowering the arbitrator to order what the parties should do to prevent a repetition of the injuries complained of. The arbitrator made certain orders, and, the defendant having failed to comply with them, the plaintiff brought an action for the non-performance of the award. It was held that the action would lie as there was good evidence of an agreement that the arbitrator should have power to order what the parties should do. I think that counsel for the husband was well founded in distinguishing this case on the ground that it arose out of an arbitration, which, unlike divorce, is essentially contractual in its nature—more particularly as the breach complained of was a breach of an agreement subsequently and freely endorsed by the parties on the judge's order. The other case cited was Worthington & Co. v. Abbott (7), which arose out of a dispute between several mortgagees of a property. In the course of the proceedings a consent order had been made upon a summons, and it was argued that, properly construed, such an order was, in effect, an agreement embodying terms to and in which all the parties to the action subscribed and concurred. With regard to this argument, EVE, J., who heard the case, said ([1910] 1 Ch. 594): C D E

I am inclined to think that is the true construction to be placed on a consent order, and that, when the parties to an action agree an order purporting to be a consent order throughout, they are, in effect, putting their hands to an agreement which must be treated as embodying terms to which all assent and by which all are bound. F

I should certainly hesitate long before differing from such an expression of opinion, but it is argued by counsel for the husband that, although this may be a correct statement of the effect of a consent order in any other Division of the court, totally different considerations apply in this Division to a petition for divorce. The parties to a divorce suit are not free, as in other suits, to settle their disputes by agreement, and just as an agreement for a divorce would be void, so also an agreement during the pendency of a divorce suit with regard to maintenance or variation of a settlement would, to say the least, taint the transaction with suspicion of collusion, and should be avoided: see, e.g., Carmichael v. Carmichael (8). It seems clear that any such agreement, entered into during the pendency of the suit, would not be such as either party could sue on. Up to the time of decree nisi, at any rate, there could be no binding agreement. There could be no more than an agreed proposal for the judge's approval—a proposal which would be of no effect without such approval, and one which the judge would be free to sanction, or not, as he thought fit. It was, accordingly, submitted on behalf of the husband that in this case there was no agreement, but that the order of DENNING, J., must be treated as an order of the court pure and simple, the fact that it was made by consent being G H wholly irrelevant. I find this argument extremely attractive, but, in my judgment, it is wholly fallacious. I am not informed as to how precisely the consent order in this case came to be made and embodied in the decree nisi—whether there had been prior consultation between the parties resulting in the submission to the judge of a proposed consent order, or whether they put their heads together after the pronouncing of the decree nisi and by a process of mutual concession arrived at an order to which both were prepared to consent. I must, however, assume that DENNING, J., was not unmindful of the duty laid upon the court by s. 178 (1) of the Judicature Act, 1925, as amended by s. 4 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1937, and that before pronouncing a decree nisi he satisfied himself that no collusion existed between the parties. Let it be that during the pendency of the suit it was not competent for the parties to enter into a binding agreement with regard to variation of the post-nuptial settlement. Equally, as I have pointed out, it was not competent for the court to make an order with regard thereto until the decree nisi was pronounced, but, once the decree was pronounced, the court had power to make the order—though, of course, it would not become operative until the decree was made absolute—and once the court had power to make the order, I do not see why it was not open to the parties to agree what order should be made, subject, of course, to the approval of the court. Here the court did approve of what the parties agreed, and made an order accordingly. At that stage of the suit it seems to me that the parties were in the same position as parties to any other kind of action in any Division of the court—i.e., if they chose to agree an order with regard to variation of the settlement, which only required the judge's approval to make it binding, they were, in the words of EVE, J., “in effect putting their hands to an agreement which must be treated as embodying terms to which all assent and by which all are bound.”

For these reasons, my conclusion is that the order of DENNING, J., must be treated as evidence of a binding agreement between the parties, and, therefore, as being within the terms of s. 1 (1) of the Settled Land Act, 1925. This conclusion renders it unnecessary for me to express any opinion on the further question whether the order of DENNING, J., if not an agreement, should at least be held to be an “other instrument” within the meaning of the section. It follows from what I have already said that, in my judgment, the effect of the agreement was to constitute the wife a life tenant of the house under the Settled Land Act. In these circumstances it appears to me that the wife is entitled to an order approving the draft deeds submitted on her behalf, at any rate, so far as the house is concerned. There was some question about certain articles of furniture mentioned in the order of DENNING, J., but this has not been argued before me, and I express no opinion thereon.

Order accordingly.

Solicitors : Amphlett & Co. (for the wife) ; W. J. Pitman & Sons, agents for Charles C. Ladds, Birmingham (for the husband).

[Reported by R. HENDRY WHITE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

G WINTER GARDEN THEATRE (LONDON), LTD. v. MILLENIUM PRODUCTIONS, LTD.

[HOUSE OF LORDS (Viscount Simon, Lord Porter, Lord Simonds, Lord Uthwatt and Lord MacDermott), April 24, 25, 28, 30, May 1, 2, July 28, 1947.]

Landlord and Tenant—Licence—Revocation—Length of notice—Reasonable notice —Licence for use of theatre—Express term entitling licensee to determine licence
 —No provision for determination by licensor.

The appellants, Winter Garden Theatre (London), Ltd., granted a licence of their theatre to the respondents, Millenium Productions, Ltd., for the purpose of producing stage plays, concerts or ballets. By the terms of the agreement, the licence was for 6 months from July 6, 1942, at £80 a week, with an option to continue for a further period of 6 months in consideration of an increased payment. On the expiration of the two periods of 6 months, the licensees were “to have the option of further continuing the licence of the theatre " at a " rental " of £300 a week, and they were to give the licensors one month's notice of their intention of terminating the licence. They were to give 6 weeks' notice of their intention to exercise the first option and similar notice of their intention to exercise their " option to continue thereafter." The agreement provided for payments in advance and for the licensors to have 4 weeks' " rent " in hand. It further provided (inter alia) that the licensors should retain the bars and cloakrooms and the right to sell programmes, etc., but that the licensees were to participate equally in the net profits and losses thereof; that the licensees were not to grant a sub-licence of the theatre without the consent of the licensors, but that such consent would not be unreasonably withheld; and that the licensees were to leave the theatre in the same state and condition as then existed, reasonable wear and tear, etc., excepted. On Apr. 24, 1943, the licensees exercised their option to prolong the licence beyond the end of the 12 months from July 6, 1942. On Sept. 11, 1945, the licensors gave the licensees notice to vacate the theatre on Oct. 13, 1945, but they stated that they were prepared to give fresh notice for a later date if the licensees required further time to make other arrangements. The licensees contended that the licence was not revocable by the licensors, and, alternatively, that, if it were revocable, reasonable notice had not been given because, on Aug. 2, 1945, the licensees had entered into an agreement with L. & D., Ltd., for a play to be produced at the theatre :—

HELD: (i) whether the licence was or was not revocable was entirely a question of the construction of the contract, and, on the true construction of the terms of the contract, the licence was not intended to be perpetual.

Llanelly Ry. & Dock Co. v. London & North Western Ry. Co. (1875) (L.R. 7 H.L. 550) distinguished. Wood v. Leadbitter (1845) (13 M. & W. 838) "no longer law."

(ii) the contract was not such as to permit an immediate withdrawal of the licence, but there was an implied stipulation that, after the expiration of the first year, it might be terminated by the licensors on the expiration of a reasonable notice period duly communicated to the licensees.

(iii) in determining what was a reasonable notice, the commitments of the licensees which existed at the date of the notice, and which were consistent with the legitimate user of the rights granted by the licence, should be taken into consideration, and, in the circumstances, the notice given by the licensors must be considered valid and effectual.

Decision of the Court of Appeal ([1946] 1 All E.R. 678) reversed.

[AS TO REVOCATION OF LICENCE, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 20, pp. 10-12, para. 6; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 30, pp. 512-514, Nos. 1669-1700.]

Cases referred to :

- (1) Thomas v. Sorrell, (1673), Vaugh. 330; 3 Keb. 264; Freem. K.B. 137; 30 Digest 501, 1594.
- (2) Llanelly Ry. & Dock Co. v. London & North Western Ry. Co., (1875), L.R. 7 H.L. 550; 45 L.J.Ch. 539; 32 L.T. 575; affg., (1873), 8 Ch. App. 942.
- (3) Hurst v. Picture Theatres, Ltd., [1915] 1 K.B. 1; 83 L.J.K.B. 1837; 111 L.T. 972; 30 Digest 513, 1682.
- (4) Wood v. Leadbitter, (1845), 13 M. & W. 838; 14 L.J. Ex. 161; 4 L.T.O.S. 433; 9 J.P. 312; 30 Digest 515, 1708.
- (5) Kerrison v. Smith, [1897] 2 Q.B. 445; 66 L.J.Q.B. 762; 77 L.T. 344; 30 Digest 512, 1675.
- (6) Webb v. Paternoster, (1619), 2 Roll. Rep. 143; Godb. 282; Palm. 71; Poph. 151; sub nom. Plummer v. Webb, Noy, 98; 30 Digest 513, 1684.
- (7) R. v. Horndon-on-the-Hill (Inhabitants), (1816), 4 M. & S. 562; 30 Digest 504, 1628.
- (8) Heulins v. Shippam, (1826), 5 B. & C. 221; 7 Dow. & Ry. K.B. 783; 4 L.J.O.S.K.B. 241; 19 Digest 7, 2.
- (9) Cornish v. Stubbs, (1870), L.R. 5 C.P. 334; 39 L.J.C.P. 202; 22 L.T. 21; 30 Digest 513, 1685.
- (10) Mellor v. Watkins, (1874), L.R. 9 Q.B. 400; 30 Digest 513, 1686.
- (11) Wilson v. Tavener, [1901] 1 Ch. 578; 70 L.J.Ch. 263; 84 L.T. 48; 30 Digest 514, 1693.
- (12) Canadian Pacific Ry. Co. v. R., [1931] A.C. 414; 100 L.J.P.C. 129; 145 L.T. 129; Digest Supp.

- (13) Minister of Health v. Bellotti, [1944] 1 All E.R. 238; [1944] 1 K.B. 298; 113 L.J.K.B. 436; 170 L.T. 146; Digest Supp.
 (14) Doe d. Martin v. Watts, (1797), 7 Term Rep. 83; 30 Digest 470, 1329.
 (15) Lowe v. Adams, [1901] 2 Ch. 598; 70 L.J.Ch. 783; 85 L.T. 195; 30 Digest 514, 1696.
 (16) Mackay v. Dick, (1881), 6 App. Cas. 251; 12 Digest 610, 5045.
 (17) Luxor (Eastbourne), Ltd. v. Cooper, [1941] 1 All E.R. 33; [1941] A.C. 108; 110 L.J.K.B. 131; 164 L.T. 313; Digest Supp.

A APPEAL by the licensors, Winter Garden Theatre (London), Ltd., from a decision of the Court of Appeal (LORD GREENE, M.R., SOMERVELL and COHEN, L.JJ.), dated Apr. 12, 1946, and reported [1946] 1 All E.R. 678, reversing an order of ROXBURGH, J., dated Mar. 6, 1946.

B By an agreement contained in two letters dated June 10, 1942, the licensors granted a licence of their theatre, on terms set out in the letters, to Countess de la Marr, and by an agreement dated Oct. 1, 1942, the licensors consented to the assignment of the licence by Countess de la Marr to the respondents, Millenium Productions, Ltd. On Sept. 11, 1945, the licensors purported to determine the licence. The licensees, Millenium Productions, Ltd., thereupon brought an action claiming (i) a declaration that the licence was not revocable by the licensors except on breach by the licensees of the terms of the licence; C (ii) alternatively, a declaration that the licence, if revocable at the option of the licensors, was valid and effective until after the expiration of a reasonable notice, or, alternatively, after the expiration of a reasonable period from the receipt by the licensees of notice of revocation. The licensors, in a counter-claim, claimed (i) a declaration that the licensees' licence to use the theatre had been determined and that the licensees had no right to use the theatre after the lapse of a time reasonably sufficient to vacate it; (ii) an injunction D to prevent the licensees from using the theatre; (iii) damages for trespass. ROXBURGH, J., dismissed the action, and on the counterclaim declared that the licensees' licence to use the theatre had been determined, and that, after the lapse of a time reasonably sufficient to vacate the theatre, they had no right to use it. The Court of Appeal reversed the decision of ROXBURGH, J., holding that the licensors had no power to revoke the licence and that an injunction E could be granted to restrain them from acting on the purported revocation, which was a breach of contract. On this appeal by the licensors to the House of Lords, the House reversed the decision of the Court of Appeal and restored the order of ROXBURGH, J. The facts and the relevant clauses of the agreement appear in the opinion of VISCOUNT SIMON.

Sir Valentine Holmes, K.C., and T. G. Roche for the appellants (the licensors).
Beyfus, K.C., and Michael Albery for the respondents (the licensees).

F The House took time for consideration.

July 28. The following opinions were delivered.

G VISCOUNT SIMON: My Lords, this is an appeal from an order of the Court of Appeal (LORD GREENE, M.R., SOMERVELL and COHEN, L.JJ.), allowing the respondents' appeal from the judgment of ROXBURGH, J., in an action in which the respondents were plaintiffs and the appellants defendants, and also plaintiffs by counter-claim. The judge dismissed the respondents' claim and gave judgment for the appellants on their counter-claim. The Court of Appeal reversed this decision, finding for the respondents on their claim and dismissing the appellants' counter-claim. The appellants are appealing from the order of the Court of Appeal in regard to both claim and counter-claim. The appeal relates to a licence under which the respondents were permitted to use the Winter H Garden Theatre, Drury Lane, which is the property of the appellants, for the purpose of producing stage plays, concerts or ballets, in return for a weekly payment which, at the time when the appellants sought to terminate the licence, amounted to £300 a week. There was no express term in the licence providing that the appellants could revoke it and the principal question of the case is whether, as the respondents contend, and as the Court of Appeal decided, the respondents are entitled to continue their use of the theatre in perpetuity if they so desire and continue the weekly payments, or whether, as the appellants contend, the licence is revocable by them by reasonable notice.

By letter dated June 10, 1942, from the appellants to the Countess de la Marr (hereinafter referred to as the countess), the appellants purported to grant to a company to be formed by the countess under the name Millenium, Ltd., a licence to use the theatre on the terms and conditions there set out. A counterpart of the said letter was signed by the countess "for and on behalf of Millenium, Ltd., in course of registration." By a further letter of the same date, the appellants stipulated that the licensees should keep deposited with the appellants a sum equal to four weeks' "rent" at the rate from time to time payable under the licence. By an agreement in writing dated Oct. 1, 1942, to which the appellants, the countess and the respondents were parties, the appellants consented to the assignment of the licence by the countess to the respondents and also consented to the respondents granting a sub-licence of the theatre to Messrs. Tom Arnold and Jack Hylton on certain terms and conditions. The parties have proceeded on the view that the effect of the agreement of Oct. 1 was to constitute the respondents from that date licensees of the theatre from the appellants. The Arnold and Hylton sub-licence came to an end in Sept., 1943, long before the matters now in question arose, and after such determination the respondents' licence was governed by the terms of the letter of June 10, 1942.

Many of the terms of this letter have required close examination during the argument of the appeal. The most important matters contained in it are as follows. Clause 1 provided that the licence should be for six months from July 6, 1942, at a weekly "rent" of £80 per week. Clause 2 provided that the respondents should have the following options:

At the expiration of the 6 months you are to have the option of continuing for a further period of 6 months at a rental of £100 per week plus 10 per cent. of the gross weekly receipts in excess of £500 (such receipts to be calculated after deduction of library discounts and entertainment tax) but it is understood and agreed that the maximum rental in any week, including this percentage, shall be £200. Further should an armistice be signed between Germany and Italy and Great Britain during the second period of your licence the rent which shall become due and payable shall be at the flat rate of £200 per week. On the expiration of the two periods of 6 months before mentioned you are to have the option of further continuing the licence of the theatre on the payment each week of a flat rental of £300 per week and you will give us one month's notice of your intention of then terminating the licence. You are to give us previous 6 weeks' notice of your intention to exercise your option to continue the licence for the further period of 6 months and 6 weeks' notice of your intention to exercise your option to continue thereafter.

Clause 3 provided that the respondents should be responsible for the running expenses of the theatre and should take over the existing staff. Clause 4 provided that the appellants should retain the bars and cloak rooms and the right to sell programmes and the profits or losses arising on these matters should be divided equally. Clause 5 provided that the respondents should comply with the terms of the Lord Chamberlain's licence and all other regulations and with the reasonable requests of the appellants' resident manager. Clause 6 provided that the respondents should not enter into any sub-licence of the theatre without the consent of the appellants, such consent not to be unreasonably withheld, provided mutual arrangement was made for a division of the resulting profit. The agreement further provided: (a) that possession of the theatre was retained by the appellants, but that the respondents should have the unrestricted right over all the rooms of the theatre with the exception of a certain office and the bars and cloakrooms; (b) that prices of admission should be fixed by the respondents who were, however, to do nothing which would affect the status of the theatre as a West End theatre; (c) that the appellants should pay all rates, taxes, assessments, licence fees and insurances; that the respondents would on the termination of the licence leave it in the same state as it then was (reasonable wear and tear, damage by storm, tempest and King's enemies excepted); any liability on the respondents for external or structural repairs was excluded; (d) that the agreement should not constitute a partnership. By letter dated Nov. 23, 1942, the respondents exercised their first option and by letter dated Apr. 24, 1943, the respondents exercised their further option to continue to use the theatre after the expiration of the two fixed periods.

It is to be noted that, although the expression "rent" or "rental" was used in the documents, it is agreed between the parties (as is plainly the fact) that the respondents acquired no interest in land but were pure licensees for value, the consideration taking the form of a weekly payment. Such a licence is a contract, and this contract contains the express term that, if the respondents on proper notice, opt to continue the use of the theatre beyond the first twelve months, they may do so with the right of giving one month's notice of their intention of then terminating the licence. The licensors, on the other hand, are given by the documents no express right to terminate the licence at all. The question is : Is such a right to be implied, and, if so, on what terms ?

On Sept. 11, 1945, the appellants gave the respondents notice to vacate the theatre on Oct. 13, 1945, but, in case the respondents might require further time to make other arrangements, the appellants wrote a covering letter stating that, if Oct. 13 was not a convenient date, they would be prepared to give a fresh notice for some later date provided that the date of vacation was not seriously delayed. On Sept. 14 the respondents replied challenging the authority of the appellants to terminate the licence in this way. They added that they were heavily committed at the theatre, but did not suggest any other date for vacation. On Sept. 20 the appellants answered that they were entitled to revoke the licence, but that they recognised that the respondents were entitled to a reasonable period within which to move out and again asked the respondents to suggest a later date. On Sept. 25 the respondents replied that the licence was not revocable and that they were not prepared to vacate the theatre. They made no suggestion, then or later, of what would be a convenient date.

The respondents issued their writ on Oct. 9 claiming a declaration that the licence was not revocable by the appellants except on breach by the respondents of its terms. In the alternative, they claimed a declaration that, if the licence was revocable at the option of the appellants, such revocation did not become effective until after the lapse of a reasonable time from the notice of revocation and that such time had not elapsed. By an amendment made at the hearing, they claimed, in the further alternative, a declaration that the licence was only revocable by a reasonable notice and that no such notice had been given. The appellants' defence and counterclaim was delivered on Nov. 27, 1945. It alleged that the respondents' licence was revocable by notice and that after the lapse of a reasonable time from such notice the respondents had no further right to use the theatre and that a reasonable time had elapsed between the notice of Sept. 11 and the delivery of the counterclaim on Nov. 27. The appellants claimed declarations and an injunction in accordance with these allegations, and damages for trespass.

The effect of a licence by A to permit B to enter upon A's land or to use his premises for some purpose, is, in effect, an authority which prevents B from being regarded as a trespasser when he avails himself of the licence (Thomas v. Sorrell (1) (Vaugh. 351)). Such a licence may fall into one of various classes. It may be a purely gratuitous licence in return for which A gets nothing at all, e.g., a licence to B to walk across A's field. Such a gratuitous licence would plainly be revocable by notice given by A to B. Even in that case, however, notice of revocation conveyed to B when he was in the act of crossing A's field could not turn him into a trespasser until he was off the premises, but his future right of crossing would thereupon cease. There is another class of licences which may be called licences for value, in which B gives consideration for the permission he obtains from A, and this last class may be further subdivided. In some cases the consideration may be given once for all, as, for example, by the payment of a capital sum or by conferring a single benefit at the beginning. Llanelli Ry. & Dock Co. v. London & N.W. Ry. Co. (2), to which I will refer later, is an example of this. In other cases, the consideration may take the form of a periodic payment, as is the case in the appeal we are now considering. There is yet a third variant of a licence for value which constantly occurs, as in the sale of a ticket to enter premises and witness a particular event, such as a ticket for a seat at a particular performance at a theatre or for entering private ground to witness a day's sport. In this last class of case, the implication of the arrangement, however it may be classified in law, plainly is that the ticket entitles the purchaser to enter and, if he behaves himself, to remain on the premises until the end of the event which he has paid his money to witness. Such, for example, was the situation which gave rise to the decision of the Court of Appeal in Hurst v. Picture Theatres, Ltd. (3). I regard this case as rightly decided, and repudiate the view that a licensor who is paid for granting his licensee to enter premises in order to view a particular event, can nevertheless, although the licensee is behaving properly, terminate the licence before the event is over, turn the licensee out, and leave him to an action for the return of the price of his ticket. The licence in such a case is granted under contractual conditions, one of which is that a well-behaved licensee shall not be treated as a trespasser until the event which he has paid to see is over, and until he has reasonable time thereafter to depart, and in Hurst's case (3), where the plaintiff was forced to leave prematurely, substantial damages for assault and false imprisonment rightly resulted. ✓

This brings up for reconsideration the oft-quoted and oft-considered decision of the Court of Exchequer in 1845 in Wood v. Leadbitter (4). I think that this decision can only be rightly understood by bearing in mind the state of the pleadings on which the decision depended. The old system of pleading was far more strict than the system now prevailing. The action was an action for the tort of assault and false imprisonment arising out of the circumstances that Wood had bought a ticket for admission to the grandstand at the Doncaster races, but that, while the races were going on, the defendant, acting under the orders of Lord Eglintoun, who was steward of the races and must be treated as having sold Wood his ticket, turned the plaintiff out. The defendant's plea was that the plaintiff was on Lord Eglintoun's ground, to which the plaintiff filed a replication that he was there "by the leave and licence of Lord Eglintoun." There was a traverse to this replication and issue was joined on that traverse. ALDERSON, B., at the beginning of his judgment sets all this carefully out and the language of the replication is printed in italics in the report. In Hurst v. Picture Theatres, Ltd. (3) KENNEDY, L.J., pointed out ([1915] 1 K.B. 13) that in Wood v. Leadbitter (4):

... it was not there suggested by the plaintiff "my right to remain is not merely by leave and licence of Lord Eglintoun; I have an implied contract that I should be there and that contract is not subject to revocation."

KENNEDY, L.J., went on:

Therefore, as I say, one must deal with that case upon the pleading, and upon that pleading the judgment of the court cannot be put more specifically or more correctly than in the passage I have quoted from the headnote.

The passage in the headnote [of Wood v. Leadbitter (4)] referred to by KENNEDY, L.J., is as follows:

A right to come and remain for a certain time on the land of another can be granted only by deed; and a parol licence to do so, though money be paid for it, is revocable at any time, and without paying back the money.

It seems plain, therefore, that the only issue to be decided in Wood v. Leadbitter (4) was whether the plaintiff, when he was forcibly removed from Lord Eglintoun's land, continued to have the leave of Lord Eglintoun to be there, and he had not this leave because it had been withdrawn. On the pleadings in that case the question was not open whether or not the effect of the contract was to preserve the plaintiff from being treated as a trespasser until the races were over. Until the Common Law Procedure Act, 1852, permitted the joinder of different causes of action in the same suit, a plaintiff in the position of Wood had to sue either in tort, as he did, or in assumpsit. In Kerrison v. Smith (5) COLLINS, J., referring to Wood v. Leadbitter (4), said ([1897] 2 Q.B. 448):

It was conceded that the grantor has a right to revoke a licence, but the point set up by the plaintiff, that there was a contract, for the breach of which the plaintiff was entitled to recover damages, was never properly dealt with.

It does not seem necessary to discuss, now that we are more than a hundred years from the decision, whether, if the Judicature Acts had then been passed, the Court of Exchequer could have protected Wood from what was an injustice. The instances given by the judges who were in a majority in Hurst's case (3) show how manifest the injustice is. Wood's position really was that Lord Eglintoun had agreed with him, for reward, not to treat him as a trespasser till the races were over and till he had a reasonable time after that to withdraw, but this was not the issue directly raised by the pleadings. It is enough to say that, at any rate since the fusion of law and equity, no court in this country would refuse to a plaintiff in Wood's situation the remedy for which he asked, and the case, in my opinion, should no longer be regarded as an authority.

I had reached this point in drafting my opinion when I had the advantage of reading in print the opinion prepared by my noble and learned friend, LORD MACDERMOTT, in this appeal. He has so precisely and clearly expressed the view which I had formed on the case before us that it becomes unnecessary to deal independently with the application of the principles I have endeavoured to formulate to the matter in hand. I agree with him entirely that the decision of this House in Llanelly Ry. & Dock Co. v. London & North Western Ry. Co. (2) does not assist the present respondents, for the reasons he states. On the other hand, I accept his conclusion that, when the clauses of the present licence are carefully studied, the proper inference from the language used is that the licence was not perpetual but that the intention of the parties, to be inferred from the document, though not expressly stated, was that, upon the appellants' indicating their decision that the permission given by the licence would be withdrawn, the respondents were to have a reasonable time to withdraw after which they would become trespassers. There is, in my opinion, no reason at all for saying that the only alternative to a perpetual licence is an instant termination of the respondents' right without any period of notice at all. I entirely agree with the analysis to which my noble and learned friend, LORD MACDERMOTT, has subjected the arrangement of Aug. 22, 1945, made between the respondents and Linnit and Dunfee, Ltd., [under which Linnit and Dunfee, Ltd., produced at the theatre a play entitled "Young Mrs. Barrington"] from which it follows that this agreement was really a sub-licence entered into without the appellants' consent, thus constituting a breach of cl. 6 of the letter of June 10, 1942. Consequently, the respondents are precluded from relying on it in support of their plea that, if the licence were revocable, reasonable notice had not been given. The result is, as LORD MACDERMOTT points out, that the respondents failed to show that the time which the appellants were prepared to give them to withdraw was insufficient. The notice given by the appellants must be considered valid and effectual. I move that the appeal be allowed.

LORD PORTER: My Lords, on June 10, 1942, the appellants granted to the Countess de la Marr a licence of the Winter Garden Theatre for the purpose of producing stage plays, concerts or ballets. As I understand, the terms of this licence were meant to be a preliminary step towards establishing a contractual relationship between the appellants and the respondent company which had not then been registered. It was, however, formed shortly afterwards and on Oct. 1, 1942, a further agreement was entered into between the appellants, the countess and the respondents, whereby she was authorised to assign her licence to the respondents and they in their turn were permitted to grant a sub-licence to Messrs. Arnold and Hylton for a period which by a series of options granted to those gentlemen might extend for 7 years or even longer if a successful play were running at the expiry of the last optional period. Clause 4, however, contained a term that :

... the possession of the theatre and the effects is retained by the licensees' landlord, and whilst the same are being used by the licensees, no parting with the possession thereof shall be deemed to have taken place by the licensees' landlords.

The agreement of Oct. 1 modified the provisions of that of June 10 in some respects, but in terms provided by cl. 7 that, on the termination of the Arnold and Hylton sub-licence, the terms and conditions contained in it should cease to apply and the terms of the licence of June 10 should forthwith have full force and effect and be binding upon the parties. The sub-licence to Messrs. Arnold and Hylton, in fact, expired long before any date material for your Lordships' consideration and is, I think, only of importance as indicating that the appellants were at one time contemplating the possible continuance of the respondents' licence for 7 years and upwards. Two further documents are of importance, viz., an assignment of the licence by the countess to the respondents on Oct. 1, 1942, and an agreement of Aug. 22, 1945, whereby the respondents purported to engage Linnit and Dunfee, Ltd., to produce a play entitled "Young Mrs. Barrington" at the theatre. A question whether this agreement constituted an unauthorised licence of the theatre to Linnit and Dunfee will have to be considered later, but cannot be solved until the terms of the original licence and the terms of the (alleged) unauthorised licence are examined.

Before these matters are considered, your Lordships must, I think, decide what are the principles in the light of which a licence to enter into and carry out activities on land has to be construed. On this subject there is a wide divergence of view, the appellants contending that prima facie a licence is revocable at will, though it may be that due notice of the date at which the revocation is to take place must be given and though the licensee must at least be given reasonable time to wind up his activities having regard to all the circumstances of the case. They add that this view is, of course, not inconsistent with the existence of a term in the licence, whether express or implicit, making it irrevocable altogether or for a named period. The Court of Appeal, however, has held, and the respondents maintain, that no such principle is to be applied, even prima facie, in construing a licence. That contract, they say, like many others must be construed in the light of its own terms and with no leaning towards revocability or irrevocability.

My Lords, there are very few, if any, contracts which can be construed without taking into consideration a long background of gradual development and the implication of customary provisions, and I do not think that the meaning of a licence can be reached by considering the matter, as it were, in the air. Its incidents have a long history behind them. What the effect of that history or, indeed, what it is, may well be in dispute, but, whatever it is, I do not think it can be neglected. The general proposition as to the rights conferred by a licence is to be found as early as 1673 in the judgment of VAUGHAN, C.J. (Vaugh. 351), in Thomas v. Sorrel (1), in the words :

A dispensation or licence properly passeth no interest, nor alters or transfers property in anything, but only makes an action lawful, which without it had been unlawful. This statement was quoted in Wood v. Leadbitter (4) by ALDERSON, B., delivering the judgment of the court (13 M. & W. 844), and for the proposition that every licence is and must be revocable so long as it is a mere licence, he refers to BROOKE'S ABRIDGEMENT, sub. tit. "Licence," para. 15, to the judgment of DODDERIDGE, J. (2 Roll. Rep. 152), in Webb v. Paternoster (6), to R. v. Horndon-on-the-Hill (Inhabitants) (7), and to Hewlins v. Shippam (8). It has been suggested that the decision in Wood v. Leadbitter (4) turned merely on the pleadings and decided only that a right to enter and remain on land, though for no more than a limited period, required a deed to make it effective. I cannot think so. It is true that the decision ultimately turned on this point and equally true that the contention might not be good after the passing of the Supreme Court of Judicature Act, 1873, enjoining common law courts to take into consideration the doctrines of equity, but, as I read the case, it is assumed that a licence is prima facie revocable. Throughout the whole of the judgment this point is stressed. Indeed, ALDERSON, B., said (13 M. & W. 845) :

It may further be observed, that a licence under seal (provided it be a mere licence) is as revocable as a licence by parol . . .

It was said on behalf of the respondents that this principle applied only to licences given without consideration, and that the phrase "mere licence" was used to exclude licences given for a consideration. If this contention were confined to a limited licence to do a particular act or series of acts, I do not think I should disagree, provided the performance of a particular act had been actually begun. So limited, the proposition does not conflict with the view that, normally, a licence is revocable, but, if applied generally, it does, as I think, conflict with the principles laid down in Wood v. Leadbitter (4), and, in particular, with the statement that a licence under seal (which does not require consideration) is as revocable as a parol one. In Wood v. Leadbitter (4) the licence was for a limited purpose and for a limited time and for valuable consideration. It may well be that now that common law and Chancery remedies can be administered by any branch of the High Court, a different decision would be given, but, even if that be conceded, it does not seem to me to have any bearing on the case now presented to your Lordships. It is one thing to say that a limited and temporal licence remains in force until the particular object for which it is given is fulfilled or the definite period of time has elapsed ; it is quite a different matter to allege that a licence once given in general terms can never be terminated. To my mind the whole historical development of the law is against such a contention. Cornish v. Stubbs (9), Mellor v. Watkins (10), Kerrison v. Smith (5), Wilson v. Tavener (11), Canadian Pacific Ry. Co. v. R. (12), Minister of Health v. Bellotti (13) are all against it, and even Hurst v. Picture Theatres, Ltd. (3) is not antagonistic.

A The respondents, however, relied in particular on Llanelly Ry. & Docks Co. v. London & North Western Ry. Co. (2). Undoubtedly, in that case, running powers over their line given by one railway company to another were held to be irrevocable, but they formed part of a general agreement, under which a large sum was lent, and formed part of the consideration for the loan. In any case running powers are in a class by themselves, involving special arrangements, preparations and expenditure, which may well influence the construction of an agreement under which they are granted. The actual decision was that all the provisions of the agreement showed that it was a permanent and not a terminable one. It is true that LORD SELBORNE said (L.R. 7 H.L. 567) that :

B . . . an agreement de futuro, extending over a tract of time which, on the face of the instrument, is indefinite and unlimited, must (in general) throw upon anyone alleging that it is not perpetual, the burden of proving that allegation, either from the nature of the subject, or from some rule of law applicable thereto.

Whether such a proposition is too widely stated, though in general it may be true, is not a matter which, in my opinion, it is material to decide. The other members of the House gave their decision upon the construction of the document itself, and, in any case, qualified it by bringing to the inquiry a consideration of the nature of the subject-matter involved.

C The rule of law applicable to the licence granted to the respondents in the present case is, I think, that prima facie licences are revocable. This was a licence to use a theatre and the particular circumstances are to be found in the terms of the document itself. Judging from the terms of the document alone, I should think it revocable. The licence is for the purpose of producing stage plays, concerts and ballets, and starts with two rights of option to retain the licence for six months each. These provisions are succeeded by an option of further continuing the licence. Speaking for myself, I should not, unless compelled, construe such a document as granting a perpetual licence. If it were a tenancy, I should interpret it as requiring no more than reasonable notice, and, indeed, as rent is payable weekly, it might require only a week's notice. I cannot think that the rights acquired by means of a licence exceed those which a tenancy would give.

E It is, however, said (i) that the licensees were put to considerable expense in war time in providing black-out material, and (ii) that the licensees have to give a month's notice to terminate the licence, whereas no provision for its termination by the licensors is to be found. As to the first objection, the answer, as I think, is that the respondents were granted at least a year certain and a possibility of seven years enjoyment, and, as to the second, that, if my view of the law be right, the licensees are entitled to a reasonable time after notice to put an end to their commitments, whereas the licensors would have no protection against the licensees walking out at any moment, and, therefore, require some notice of an intention to do so. Primarily, of course, the question whether the respondents' licence is revocable or irrevocable must depend on the language of the document of June 10, 1942, and from that contract I cannot find grounds for supposing it to be irrevocable. Apart from the circumstances already mentioned, the retention of the bars and cloak rooms, the right on the part of the appellants to sell programmes, etc., their retention of the possession of the theatre and their acceptance of responsibility for payment of all rates, taxes, assessments and theatre and excise licenses are not obligations which one would expect the grantors of a perpetual licence to undertake. Much less would they render themselves liable for external and structural repairs, external painting and decoration and repairs to roof and main drainage. I have not forgotten that the licence was granted and accepted in war time and at a substantial and increasing rent. Such a consideration may have some weight in a case where the construction of a document is doubtful. In the circumstances of the present case, it cannot, I think, influence the decision.

H There remains the subordinate question whether the appellants did not bring their action too soon. On this issue the respondents put forward two contentions (i) that the month's notice given by the letter of Sept. 11, 1945, is too short ; (ii) that, in the case of a licence, they are entitled to a reasonable time to wind up their commitments after the termination of the time given by the notice for surrender of the premises. My Lords, speaking for myself on an occasion when I do not think it necessary to come to a final conclusion on the matter, I take the provisional view that a licence is prima facie terminable at once after notice to determine has been given, but that the licensee must be given a reasonable time to vacate the licensed premises, and what is a reasonable time must depend on all the circumstances of the case. In the case of a theatre, it might even extend to the run of a play, if no suitable alternative premises could be found, but in the present instance I do not think a question of this kind, which may give rise to a marked difference of view, calls for decision. Whether the submission be that notice to determine a licence is required and a month was too short in the circumstances, or that, a month's notice having been given, the respondents were entitled to a reasonable time to dispose of their commitments and that no sufficient time had been given when the appellants delivered their counter-claim for a declaration and injunction on Nov. 27, the issue is still the same: Was a month's notice sufficient and was a reasonable time for vacating the theatre given, whether that time is to count from the date of giving the notice or from the time at which possession was demanded? In either case the respondents sought to rely on the agreement which they had entered into with Linnit and Dunfee, and on it alone, as a circumstance to be taken into consideration in determining the time which should be given for vacating the premises. If that agreement was permissible under the terms of the licence of June 10, the time given was, undoubtedly, too short. For the appellants, however, it is said, and ROXBURGH, J., who alone dealt with the matter, decided, that it was a sub-licence, and void under cl. 6 of that document, as it had not been authorised by the grantors. The material portion of that clause reads as follows:

You are not to enter into a sub-licence of the theatre without consent of the company, but this consent would not be unreasonably withheld provided a mutual arrangement is made between us for our company to participate in any profit on any sub-licence to be entered into by you.

In fact, no permission to sub-licence was asked, nor was any agreement made for participation in the profit arising from the agreement between the respondents and Linnit and Dunfee. That agreement had not been authorised and, if it was a sub-licence, was entered into in defiance of cl. 6 and cannot be relied upon as prolonging the time to which the respondents were entitled before vacating the premises. Is it then a sub-licence? I think it is. The judge who tried the case has gone through the agreement clause by clause and it is not necessary for me to repeat his analysis. I think it is sufficient to say that the original licence of June 10 authorised the use of so much of the theatre as was required for the production of stage plays, concerts or ballets, reserving only an office, the right to bars and cloakrooms and some general control. Similarly, Linnit and Dunfee obtained the right to use so much of the theatre as they required to produce a particular play with not dissimilar reservations. As the judge observed, there is only one thing in the latter agreement which supports the contention of the respondents, viz., the phrase: "The theatre company agrees to engage the production company to produce," and, in his opinion, those words could not prevail against the substance of the agreement as a whole. With this view I concur. I also take the same view as ROXBURGH, J., in thinking that there is no sufficient evidence to prove that the appellants knew of and acquiesced in the impugned agreement. A knowledge that the programmes contained the words "By arrangement with Mala de la Marr, Linnit and Dunfee present 'Young Mrs. Barrington'" seems to me quite insufficient for that purpose. On all points, therefore, I find myself in agreement with the judge who tried the case and would allow the appeal and restore his judgment.

LORD UTHWATT: My Lords, the letter of June 10, 1942, gave to the licensees the option, which they duly exercised:

... of further continuing the licence of the theatre on the payment each week of a flat rental of £300 per week and you [i.e., the licensees] will give us one month's notice of your intention of then terminating the licence.

The letter did not contain any other provision in terms directed to the period for which the extended licence was to continue. In my opinion, a right to continue, without more, does not mean anything except a right to continue for a period which is left at large. The language of the letter is consistent with the implication of the term for which the licensees contend, namely, that the licence was to continue for ever subject only to the right of determination given to them, but unless that term can be implied—it is, in effect, a stipulation that the licensors will not revoke the licence—it is, to my mind, an inevitable consequence that the licensors might determine the licence by notice given at any time.

- A The question whether any such term can be properly implied is purely a question of the construction of the contract. On that (a) the subject-matter of the bargain (viz., the right to the exclusive use for defined purposes of practically the whole theatre, possession being retained by the licensors), (b) the presence in the contract of obligations incumbent on the licensees the non-performance of which might subject the licensors to serious loss, coupled with the absence of any power of determination in the licensors in the event of breaches by the licensees of their obligations, and (c) the personal relation between licensors and licensee arising out of the retention of parts of the theatre for use by the licensors appear to me to negative the propriety of making the implication suggested. If the implication is to be made, it can only be made by stressing the contrast between the presence in the licence of a power to determine given to the licensees and the absence of any such power in favour of the licensors. Is it a proper inference from this contrast that the true intendment of the bargain was that the licence was to be determinable only at the wish of the licensees? In my opinion, it is not. If the provision giving the licensees power to determine were absent, it might be inferred from the reservation of a weekly rent that the licensees could determine the licence by a week's notice. I read the provision requiring a month's notice as in substance only a proviso directed to securing a notice longer than that thought to be inherent in a transaction essentially determinable, the choice of a month marching with the stipulation, contained in the accompanying letter of even date, as to maintenance in the hands of the licensors of 4 weeks' rent. I cannot read the provision as marking out the only way in which, consistently with performance of the bargain, the licence might be brought to an end. I am unable, therefore, to imply a term providing for continuance of the licence for ever. The consequence is, in my opinion, that the licensors might determine by notice given at any time.

- E The next question is whether the notice given must be a reasonable notice, or whether it may be a notice operating at once to determine the licence, the licensees in that event having a reasonable time within which to vacate the theatre. In my opinion, it is the former. I cannot think that any other notice would reflect the intention of reasonable men in the position of the licensors and licensees in the present case. No reasonable man would in that connection deny the relevance of the general proposition that he who sows should be allowed to reap. To my mind, working effect to that proposition is best given in the present case by requiring that the licence should determine when the fruits have been reaped i.e., at the expiration of a notice the length of which is determined by the commitments of the licensees as they stood under the contract at the date of the notice, rather than by permitting an immediate determination of the licence on the giving of the notice coupled with a right in the licensees to work out the position that existed at the date of the notice. The latter alternative would resemble the exceptional position of a tenant of land expressed to hold at will whose tenancy has been determined by an immediate notice. Under the law relating to emblements he is entitled, paying no rent after his tenancy has determined, to enter and gather his crops. Presumably in the present case, were notice other than a reasonable notice sufficient and given, the licensees working out their position would not in respect of the period after the determination of the licence be under any obligation to pay rent. That is not a commercial proposition. The former alternative that a reasonable notice is necessary accords with the law that a reasonable notice is necessary to determine a tenancy of land held under a general occupation at a rent, where the tenancy is not expressly a tenancy at will: Doe d. Martin v. Watts (14). Where rent is reserved by the year, the rule has long ago been rigidly fixed that a reasonable notice is a half year's notice expiring on the last day of the year of the tenancy (cf., 13 H. VIII, 15 b) and similar rules refining the application of the principle have been laid down as respects general occupation of land at a monthly or weekly rent. But these are rules only. The assertion of the principle and an example of its application will be found in Lowe v. Adams (15). The licence here very closely resembles a tenancy under a general occupation and I would, as respects the nature of right of the licensors to determine it, apply the principle which governs the right to determine such a tenancy. In my opinion, therefore, a reasonable notice was necessary in order to determine the licence. A

In a case such as the present, the question what is or is not a reasonable notice to quit cannot be determined by reference only to the nature of the user authorised by the licence. It is necessary to take into account the actual user. Those commitments of the licensees which exist at the date of the notice, and which are consistent with legitimate user of the rights granted by the licence, must be taken into consideration. That may be thought to subject the licensors to practical difficulties in determining the proper length of the notice to be given by them, but, in my opinion, the licensors are entitled to require from the licensees—who alone may be assumed to know all the relevant facts—such information as is necessary to enable them to form an opinion as to the proper length of a reasonable notice. A correct analysis of the licensors' position is that they have the right to give notice, but are subject to the obligation to give a reasonable notice. On that footing the licensees are, in my opinion, under an implied obligation upon request to give the licensors such information as is requisite for the proper performance of the licensors' obligation (cf., Mackay v. Dick (16) (6 App. Cas. 263)). The requirement of a reasonable notice does not, therefore, create an impracticable position. B C

The remaining question is whether the notice given by the licensors was, in fact, a reasonable notice. The notice given was a calendar month's notice. D It was, therefore, notice for a date later than the expiry of the period for which the licensors had rent in hand. No difficulty, therefore, arises on that head. The only point taken was that, consistently with the licence, "Young Mrs. Barrington" was being produced at the theatre by the licensees and that the arrangements for its production could not be terminated before the calendar month expired. The month was, on that ground, said to be too short. The contention of the licensors was that the play was not being produced by the licensees, but was being produced by Linnitt and Dunfee, Ltd. (the production company) under an agreement which involved a sub-licence of the theatre, E and that the agreement so made was a breach of the provision contained in the licence "not to enter into a sub-licence of the theatre" without the consent of the licensors. If this construction of the agreement with Linnitt and Dunfee, Ltd., is correct, there is no doubt that the demands on the theatre for the purposes of the play should be disregarded. The agreement opens with a provision that the licensees agree "with the production company to produce the play 'Young Mrs. Barrington'" for a specified term. The form of words used to describe the arrangements made does not determine its character. F The terms of the whole agreement must be taken into account. Under those terms the licensees had no control over the casting of their play, the salaries paid, or the production of the play. They were given no voice in fixing the tariff. G Employees, other than the acting manager and box office employees, were taken over by the production company, but the salaries of the excepted employees were to be recouped to the licensees. The production company were to pay the running charges for light and gas and heat. Not even the electric globes were forgotten. Broken globes were to be paid for and a fixed payment per unit of electricity consumed was to be made in respect of the maintenance of electric globes. H On the other hand, the licensees remained in charge of the box office, but they were bound to account to the production company for the gross receipts less the sums properly retainable by them. That provision is only machinery. The licensees were to be responsible for the rent payable to the licensors, and certain small accommodation and a few boxes and seats were reserved to the licensees. The financial arrangement was a division of gross receipts under which the licensees received the first £330 weekly and 17½ per cent. of the gross receipts in excess of £1,750. The production company received the balance of the gross receipts. The outstanding features are that the licensees had no control over production or expenses and had no interest in net profits. In these circumstances, it is to my mind merely toying with words to say that the play was being produced for the licensees. The control of the theatre was for all the purposes of a particular play handed over to the production company and there was, therefore, in truth a sub-licence of the theatre. The exceptions from the subject-matter handed over are immaterial.

A My view as to the construction of the agreement renders it unnecessary to consider whether Hurst v. Picture Theatres, Ltd. (3) was rightly decided, or to express any concluded opinion on the question of the remedies now open in every court to a bare licensee who claims that the licensor has in breach of his bargain affected to revoke it. I merely confess my present inability to see any answer to the propositions of law stated by LORD GREENE, M.R., in his judgment in the case under appeal. The settled practice of the courts of equity is to do what they can by an injunction to preserve the sanctity of a bargain. To my B mind, as at present advised, a licensee who has refused to accept the wrongful repudiation of the bargain which is involved in an unauthorised revocation of the licence is as much entitled to the protection of an injunction as a licensee who has not received any notice of revocation, and, if the remedy of injunction is properly available in the latter case against unauthorised interference by the licensor, it is also available in the former case. In a court of equity, wrongful acts are no passport to favour. I would allow the appeal.

C LORD MACDERMOTT: My Lords, the first question in this appeal is whether the licence granted by the appellants was, according to the contract creating it, revocable when the present dispute arose. The answer depends, in my view solely, on the true construction of the letters of June 10, 1942, as ascertained in conformity with the ordinary principles applicable to the interpretation of written instruments.

D On this aspect of the case the respondents relied on the decision of this House in Llanelly Ry. & Dock Co. v. London & North Western Ry. Co. (2), and, in particular, on the passage in LORD SELBORNE'S speech (L.R. 7 H. L. 567) which reads:

E . . . an agreement de futuro, extending over a tract of time which, on the face of the instrument, is indefinite and unlimited, must (in general) throw upon any one alleging that it is not perpetual, the burden of proving that allegation, either from the nature of the subject, or from some rule of law applicable thereto.

F My Lords, when the facts of that case are examined, it is plain that the contract for running powers which was there held to be permanent in character had little in common with the contract between the parties to this appeal, save that in neither instance was express provision made for revocation by the licensors. In the Llanelly case (2) the agreement not only contained terms which indicated the construction adopted, but, as a perpetual arrangement, it conferred rights of a kind contemplated by the railway legislation then in force—a circumstance which LORD CAIRNS, L.C., obviously regarded as important for he observed (ibid., 559):

G As those other terms, secured by Act of Parliament, would have been continuing, so this agreement, carrying more favourable terms, appears to me in its nature to be a continuing agreement.

H In the present case there is no such statutory background and a close scrutiny of what the parties have agreed has failed to reveal any stipulation which I can regard as manifesting an intention that the licence was to go on for ever if the licensees so desired. No doubt, the dictum of LORD SELBORNE, which I have quoted above, is in wide terms, but it is not expressed as a universal rule of construction (as the cautionary words "in general" show), and I doubt very much if it was intended to have any applicability to circumstances such as those now under consideration. If it has, I would, for my part, be prepared to arrive at the same conclusion as if it had not, for, even if an onus rests on the appellants in this matter, the whole tenor of the letters of June 10, 1942, and the nature of their subject-matter, seem to me to negative, quite definitely, the idea of irrevocability so strongly urged on behalf of the respondents. The expressed purpose of the licence, the periodic payments, the complete retention of possession by the appellants, the various stipulations which give each of the parties a close and lively interest in the conduct and integrity of the other while the licence lasts, and, not least, the provisions of para. (c) of cl. 6 of the letter agreement as to the maintenance of the premises and the state and condition in which they are to be left on the termination of the licence, all point to this conclusion and away from the notion that the permission of the appellants was perpetual. For these reasons, which I need not elaborate, I am of opinion that, on the construction of this contract, the licence was revocable during the period material to this appeal.

But if so, how could revocation be effected? Like the first, this question involves the construction of the contract and it also requires consideration as to what term, if any, should be implied therein to give effect to the intention of the parties. My Lords, the profusion and diversity of licences and the freedom of contract regarding them are such as to discourage any unnecessary formulation of general propositions on the subject, but it is, I think, safe, as well as desirable for the decision of this case, to say that one who remains on the land of another after his licence to use it has terminated will not be considered a trespasser before he has had a reasonable time in which to vacate the premises. That is well settled, though the assessment of what is reasonable may depend on a great variety of factors and cause considerable difficulty in particular instances. This period of grace can, of course, be the subject of agreement, but it exists for gratuitous as well as for contractual licensees and, on that account, must, I think, be generally ascribed to a rule of law rather than to an implied stipulation. For that reason it need not be read into this contract. It has, however, a bearing on the question which I am now discussing. It supervenes after the licence has terminated. Its purpose is to enable the former licensee to adjust himself to the new situation by vacating the premises. Measured reasonably and fairly, it will often provide sufficiently for the consequences of the licensor's change of will, but its object is not to prolong the user sanctioned by the licence merely for the benefit and convenience of the licensee for, ex hypothesi, the licence has ceased, and where, as, for example, in cases of a specialised user involving obligations to third parties or the public, the circumstances of the contract are such as to show that an immediate cessation of the authorised use or activity was not contemplated or intended, the rule of law to which I have referred may well, and notwithstanding a liberal measurement of its reasonable period, fall short of meeting the just requirements of the position.

Turning to the present case, the question then arises whether the true intention of the contract was such as to permit an immediate withdrawal of the licence. My Lords, on that I think it is as clear that the parties did not contemplate an immediate, out-of-hand revocation as it is that they did not intend a perpetual arrangement. What was granted was a licence to use the theatre "for the purpose of producing stage plays, concerts or ballets." That purpose as everyone knows, connotes a wide range of activity and a highly specialised user of the premises. It involves considerable expenditure and a host of contractual relationships with those who provide and those who seek the entertainment offered. Whatever the legal attributes of a bare and unqualified licence may be, the expressed object of this licence makes it hard to believe that either of the parties ever intended that it could be withdrawn instantly, regardless of the respondents' commitments and leaving them only such time as they might require to remove themselves and their possessions from the theatre. This view must, of course, be subject to the terms which the parties have agreed. I cannot, however, find anything in the contract to modify it. On the contrary, the provisions as to (a) the payment of rent in advance, (b) the continuation of the licence after the first year, and (c) the granting of sub-licences, though insufficient to raise an implication of permanence, all go, in my opinion, to support the conclusion which the nature of the subject-matter suggests.

If this be the position, it is clear that the right to revoke must necessarily be the subject of an implied term. It is, perhaps, not so clear what, precisely, the term should be. My Lords, in approaching that question I think it well to recall the warning given by LORD WRIGHT in Luxor (Eastbourne) Ltd. v. Cooper (17) ([1941] 1 All E.R. 52, 53), when he said:

The general presumption is that the parties have expressed every material term which they intended should govern their agreement, whether oral or in writing. It is well recognised, however, that there may be cases where obviously some term must be implied if the intention of the parties is not to be defeated, some term of which it can be predicated that "it goes without saying," some term not expressed, but necessary to give to the transaction such business efficacy as the parties must have intended. This does not mean that the court can embark on a reconstruction of the agreement on equitable principles, or on a view of what the parties should, in the opinion of the court, reasonably have contemplated. The implication must arise inevitably to give effect to the intention of the parties.

- A With that caution in mind, and leaving what I may call the packing-up period to the general rule of law already mentioned, the conclusion I reach is that in this contract there should be implied a stipulation to the effect that, after the expiration of the first year, the licence might be terminated by the licensors on the expiration of a reasonable notice period duly communicated to the licensees. That, to my mind, is what accords best with the express terms of the contract and the nature of the transaction. Whatever the results of disregarding such a stipulation as to notice may be (and on that I express no opinion, as it does not call for decision on the view I take), it is, I think, beyond question that the parties were at liberty so to agree if they chose. I am not unmindful that an implication of this nature makes it incumbent upon the licensors to specify a reasonable period and that they may not be fully versed concerning all the relevant circumstances when they have to do so. I do not think the appellants can well complain on this score, however, when their own document is silent on the point, and, apart from that consideration, I see no practicable alternative which would not leave both parties in a state of even greater uncertainty.
- B
- C

It remains to be determined whether the licence has been revoked in accordance with this implied term. The precise meaning of the notice given by the appellants on Sept. 11, 1945, is not beyond debate, but, taken in conjunction with its covering letter of the same date, I have little doubt that it should be read as intimating

- D that the licence would be terminated on Oct. 13, 1945, and it is clear that this was what it conveyed to the respondents, for their reply of Sept. 14 inquires concerning the appellants' authority "to give a month's notice terminating the said licence." But was this a reasonable period? Apart from the term providing for payment of four weeks' rent in advance, the only evidence adduced on this issue was the agreement dated Aug. 22, 1945, between the respondents and Linnit and Dunfee, Ltd., which the respondents pleaded and proved and under
- E which Linnit and Dunfee, Ltd., produced a play at the appellants' theatre entitled "Young Mrs. Barrington." It was admitted that the respondents were unable to terminate this agreement sooner than they did (which was on Jan. 5, 1946), but the appellants contended that it constituted a breach of cl. 6 of the agreement of June 10, 1942, which provided that the respondents were "not to enter into a sub-licence of the theatre" without the appellants' consent, and that the respondents were, accordingly, precluded from relying on it in support
- F of their plea that, if the licence were revocable, reasonable notice had not been given. The respondents argued that this agreement was not a sub-licence and, further, that the appellants knew of the agreement and had acquiesced in the production of "Young Mrs. Barrington" so as to waive the alleged breach of cl. 6. This last point the respondents entirely failed to establish and it need not be further noticed. Nor need very much be said on the question whether
- G the agreement of Aug. 22, 1945, was a sub-licence of the theatre. It is true that it denied Linnit and Dunfee, Ltd., the use of certain relatively small portions of the premises which were the subject of the agreement of June 10, 1942, and this, it was said, avoided a breach of cl. 6 just as a sub-lease of part only of demised premises avoids contravention of a covenant against sub-letting. My Lords, whatever the virtues of that analogy may be in abstract, I do not consider that this contention had substance in the present case. When cl. 6 speaks of a sub-
- H licence "of the theatre," I think that, as a matter both of good sense and sound construction, it refers to the theatre premises or so much thereof as will enable the purpose of the licence, the production of "stage plays, concerts or ballets," to be achieved by the sub-licensees. Clause 6 proceeds to stipulate that the appellants' consent to a sub-licence will not be unreasonably withheld if a mutual arrangement is made between them and the respondents for sharing the profits. It is difficult to conceive that the true meaning of this clause was such as to enable this financial provision to be circumvented to the loss of the appellants and the advantage of the respondents by the reservation of a few seats in the auditorium or some unessential office accommodation. It is also difficult not to feel that this profit-sharing term of the contract may explain why the agreement of Aug. 22, 1945, was cast in the form of an engagement. It is now admitted that Linnit and Dunfec, Ltd., were not the respondents' agents or employees. They made the agreement on their own account and by its terms were given the use of the theatre for a production, the financial risks of which they were to bear. My Lords, I find it unnecessary to detail the various clauses of this somewhat peculiar document. Whatever its guise, I am satisfied that, as ROXBURGH, J., has held, it was in its substance a sub-licence and amounted to a breach of clause 6.

It must, therefore, be left out of account. This means that there is virtually no evidence before your Lordships as to what would, in the circumstances, have been a reasonable period of notice. But having regard to the course of the proceedings and the issues which are raised, the onus in this matter rested, in my opinion, upon the plaintiffs and present respondents. They have not discharged that onus and the result, in my view, is that the notice given by the appellants must be considered valid and effectual. On similar, if not identical, grounds I think the time between Oct. 13 and Nov. 27, 1945—the date of the counterclaim—must be taken as a sufficient period of grace to enable the respondents to vacate the theatre. For these reasons I would allow this appeal.

My Lords, my noble and learned friend, LORD SIMONDS, authorises me to say that, having read this opinion, he concurs in its reasoning and conclusion, and wishes to add nothing to it.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors: Richards, Butler & Co. (for the appellants); Herbert Oppenheimer, Nathan & Vandyk (for the respondents).

[Reported by C. ST. J. NICHOLSON, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

Applied. LANCASTER v. L.P.T.B.
[1948] 2 All E.R. 976.

GLASGOW CORPORATION v. NEILSON.

[HOUSE OF LORDS (Viscount Simon, Lord Thankerton, Lord Porter, Lord Oaksey and Lord MacDermott), June 5, 6, July 28, 1947.]

Master and Servant—Common employment—“Common work”—“Special risk”—Omnibus collision on highway—Injury to conductress.

A motor bus owned by the appellant corporation, on which the respondent in the course of her employment by the corporation was acting as a conductress, was run into from behind by another of the corporation's buses which was negligently driven by one of the corporation's drivers, and the respondent was injured. The buses were on different services, but a substantial portion of the routes followed in those services was common to both and they were timed to travel along the street where the accident happened at an interval of a minute. The street in question was one of the main thoroughfares of the city for traffic of all sorts:—

HELD: the respondent had no “special interest” in the skill and caution of the negligent driver arising out of their relationship as fellow servants, but was the victim of a risk of the road which might equally well have arisen from the negligent conduct of any driver of any vehicle moving close behind the bus on which she was, and, consequently, the doctrine of common employment did not apply and the corporation were liable.

Miller v. Glasgow Corporation ([1947] 1 All E.R. 1) distinguished.

[AS TO THE DOCTRINE OF COMMON EMPLOYMENT, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 22, pp. 191-194, paras. 322-328; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 34, pp. 207-220, Nos. 1697-1824.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Radcliffe v. Ribble Motor Services, Ltd., [1939] 1 All E.R. 637; [1939] A.C. 215; 108 L.J.K.B. 320; 160 L.T. 420; Digest Supp.
- (2) Graham (or Miller) v. Glasgow Corpn., [1947] 1 All E.R. 1; [1947] L.J.R. 239; 176 L.T. 142, H.L.; affg. 1946 S.C. 109.
- (3) Kerr v. Glasgow Corpn., 1946 S.C. 335; Digest Supp.
- (4) Metcalfe v. London Passenger Transport Board, [1939] 2 All E.R. 542; 108 L.J.K.B. 733; 160 L.T. 599; 103 J.P. 246; Digest Supp.
- (5) The Petrel, [1893] P. 320; 62 L.J.P. 92; 70 L.T. 417; 34 Digest 213, 1747.

APPEAL from a decision of the Second Division of the Court of Session, dated July 19, 1946, and reported 1946 Sc.L.T. 356. In the action the respondent claimed damages from the appellant corporation and the negligent driver of the other omnibus for the injuries suffered by her as the result of that driver's negligence. The LORD ORDINARY (LORD SORN), before whom the case came at first instance, held that the doctrine of common employment applied and gave judgment for the corporation, but the Second Division of the Court of Session (the LORD JUSTICE-CLERK (COOPER) and LORD STEVENSON, LORD MACLEAN dissenting) reversed his decision. The corporation appealed to the House of Lords.

The House took time for consideration, and now affirmed the majority decision of the Second Division. The facts appear in the opinion of VISCOUNT SIMON.

Clyde, K.C., Sherwood Calver, K.C., and R. Smith Johnston (all of the Scottish Bar) for the appellants.

M'Kechnie, K.C., and J. H. Shearer (both of the Scottish Bar) for the respondent.

VISCOUNT SIMON: My Lords, the respondent was employed by the appellant corporation as a bus-conductress, and on Dec. 7, 1944, was on duty in such employment on a motor-bus engaged on service No. 19. At about 11.40 a.m. this bus was run into from behind by another of the corporation's motor-buses, which was being driven by a servant of the corporation named Pantrini. This bus was engaged on service No. 2. A substantial portion of the routes followed in these two services is common to both. The accident occurred while both buses were travelling westwards along Great Western Road, Glasgow, which is one of the main arteries of the city for traffic of all sorts. The time-tables of the two services show that the buses operating thereon run at frequent intervals, and it must often happen that such buses travel in close proximity to each other, though, if the prescribed timing could always be strictly observed, there would be a larger space between successive vehicles than there was in this instance. The cause of the collision was that the leading bus had to apply its brakes to avoid a pedestrian, and that the following bus, which happened to be close behind, skidded into the former on the ice-bound road, thus injuring the respondent. The respondent brought her action against both Pantrini and the corporation, alleging that Pantrini had caused her injuries by driving negligently and that the corporation was answerable as his employer. Pantrini put in no defence, and the corporation admitted that the collision and consequent damage were caused by the negligence of Pantrini, but they went on to plead that Pantrini and the respondent were fellow-employees engaged in a common work, and that, consequently, the corporation were not liable to the respondent. This defence raised the sole issue in the appeal. The LORD ORDINARY (LORD SORN) held that this defence succeeded, and considered that, in so deciding, he was applying the principle of Radcliffe v. Ribble Motor Services (1), as further expounded by the Inner House in Miller v. Glasgow Corporation (2). These authorities certainly justify the conclusion that the defence of common employment does not necessarily fail because two vehicles belonging to the same employer collide in a public thoroughfare, but it remains true that to exonerate the employer in such instances the risk must be more than the ordinary risk of colliding traffic and must arise out of some special relation between the injured and the negligent fellow-servants. The Second Division (the LORD JUSTICE-CLERK (COOPER) and LORD STEVENSON, LORD MACKAY dissenting) reversed the LORD ORDINARY's decision, holding that the risk to which the respondent was exposed was not due to any special relation, but was an ordinary traffic risk. The respondent's contract of employment with the corporation could not be regarded as containing an implied term that she would in no case hold the corporation liable for the negligence of their bus-drivers in the public road.

After the hearing of the present case in the Court of Session, this House had occasion, in deciding the appeal of Miller v. Glasgow Corporation (2), to expound afresh the limits of the doctrine of common employment as a defence to the employer of two fellow-servants, one of which negligently injures the other in the course of service, and in the opinions delivered in that case the nature of the test of "common work" was explained. In that appeal, this House, in effect, adopted the judgment of the LORD JUSTICE-CLERK (COOPER). I venture to quote from my own opinion in Miller v. Glasgow Corporation (2), with which the other members of the House agreed, as being the most convenient way of setting out the principles to be applied. I said ([1947] 1 All E.R. 4) :

"Common work" is not limited to the sharing of the same task, like the task of two sawyers in a saw-pit, or of engine-driver and stoker on the footplate of a locomotive. The phrase covers the case where the work of one is so related to the work of the other that the risk of injury to the one, due to the carelessness of the other, is not merely fortuitous, but is a special risk involved in the relationship itself, so that that risk must be deemed to have been in contemplation of the injured servant when he entered into his contract of service.

By "fortuitous" in traffic cases is meant "the ordinary risk of contiguous traffic." I continued :

Radcliffe's case (1), therefore, does not support the broad proposition that the defence of common employment is never available when two vehicles driven by fellow-servants of the same employer collide in the high road. If the risk of collision between them is merely the ordinary risk arising from contiguity in traffic, i.e., the risk of being run into by another vehicle, whoever is its driver, then the injured party has no special interest in the skill and caution of a driver who is his fellow-servant. The risk he runs is a mere risk of the road in the sense that he might equally well be run into by anyone else driving in his vicinity, but, if the relation between the work of the two fellow-servants is such that one of them depends for his safety from harm in a special degree on the care and skill of the other, then they are engaged in a "common work" and the term in the contract of employment exonerating the common employer from liability has to be implied.

In Miller's case (2) the collision occurred between two of the corporation's tramcars engaged in the same service and following the same uphill route on the same pair of rails. The significant circumstance was that, if danger of collision between them arose, neither car could avoid it by lateral movement, for each car could move only along the same fixed grooves. It was this circumstance which led the House to take the view, affirming the Court of Session, that the risk of collision was not merely the ordinary risk arising from contiguity in traffic of two vehicles, but that the injured party serving on one car had a special interest in the skill and caution of the driver of the other car who was his fellow-servant.

Every case in this branch of the law depends on its own facts, and fine distinctions are inevitably involved, but in the present case it appears to me that the majority of the judges dealing with the matter in the Court of Session are right, for the risk which the respondent was running from the careless driving of another vehicle which was moving close behind her own bus did not in the least depend on the fact that the vehicle in connection with which the risk arose was another bus of the corporation. I may point out (without expressing any view whether the difference would be material) that the two buses were not drawing up one behind the other at an appointed stopping-place, but were both using the road in course of ordinary transit. The decision in Kerr v. Glasgow Corporation (3) (where the colliding buses were within the precincts of a large garage) indicates that such refinements may be important, but the collision here was a risk of the road which might equally well have arisen if the vehicle which ran into the respondent's bus had belonged to somebody else and was not a corporation bus at all. In other words, the respondent had no "special interest" in the skill and caution of Pantrini arising out of the relationship between them, but was the victim of a risk of the road which might equally well have arisen from the negligent conduct of any driver of any vehicle moving close behind her. I move that the appeal be dismissed, with costs.

My Lords, LORD THANKERTON authorises me to say that he concurs in the opinion I have just delivered.

LORD PORTER : My Lords, the doctrine of common employment is common to the law of England and of Scotland. It has often been considered and sometimes criticized, but it is firmly established and its principles must be followed where they are applicable. Its tenets were formulated by counsel for the corporation in the circumstances of the present case in the phrase : "Was the nature of the employment such as to bring the two buses into association with one another at the time and place of the accident." If this means :

Was the nature of the employment such that there was some particular risk beyond that to which all traffic on the roads is exposed?, I should not dissent, but it is not enough that the risk was of a type to which all those carried in a vehicle in a public thoroughfare are exposed. It must arise out of the special relationship between the injured person and the negligent servant of the same employer. The corporation contended that in the present case there was such a peculiar relationship. Two buses, they said, following one another along the same route at an interval of a minute, were at least likely to pass and repass one another from time to time, and, therefore, exposed their drivers and conductors to a risk which traffic in general did not share, and they relied on Miller v. Glasgow Corporation (2) in support of their argument. Miller's case (2), however, involved different considerations. There two trams were timed to follow one another immediately, and, being trams, could advance or turn back only on the same line. Inevitably, the risk of injury of tram by tram was greater than that of bus or car by another such vehicle. The difference has been analysed by the LORD JUSTICE-CLERK (COOPER) and I need not repeat it.

In the present case there was no greater likelihood of injury of bus by bus than there was of damage by any passing vehicle to another. Even if it be accepted that, owing to the interval between their prescribed times being no more than a minute, there was a likelihood of the two buses passing and repassing, I should still think the risk that to which all traffic in general is exposed, but, indeed, it is possible to take the view that the time-table which seeks to keep the buses apart lessens rather than increases the risk of collision as compared with that to which other traffic is exposed. In my view, the nature of the employment of the respondent was not such as to expose her to any greater risk of injury from a collision between the bus in which she was acting as conductress and the bus which collided with it than from a collision with any other vehicle. There was no especial association, juxtaposition, or proximity—call it what you will—between the one and the other. For these reasons, which but repeat what has been said by the LORD JUSTICE-CLERK, with whose judgment I agree on all points, I would dismiss the appeal.

LORD OAKSEY (read by LORD MACDERMOTT): My Lords, I agree with the motion proposed by VISCOUNT SIMON. The question, in my opinion, is whether there was any "special risk" involved in the relationship between the respondent and Pantrini, to use the words of VISCOUNT SIMON in Miller v. Glasgow Corporation (2) ([1947] 1 All E.R. 4). It is argued that the respondent and Pantrini were in common employment because the corporation's bus, on which the respondent was conductress, and the corporation's bus driven by Pantrini were due, according to their respective time boards, to pass the same point at an interval of one minute. It is said that it was inevitable that these two buses should pass each other and so come within what may be called colliding distance. I cannot agree that it was inevitable that they should pass each other, though, no doubt, it was probable, but, if the fact of two vehicles of one owner passing each other according to some definite route or some definite time-table involves a special risk which gives rise to the doctrine of common employment, then, whenever two vehicles belonging to one owner pass each other in that way, however seldom, the risk is a special one which the servants travelling in the vehicles must be held to contemplate. I entirely agree with the LORD JUSTICE-CLERK in the present case and with LORD GREENE, M.R., in Metcalfe v. London Passenger Transport Board (4) ([1939] 2 All E.R. 546), that the risk is not in any sense a special risk and is no more within the contemplation of the servants of a single master than any other traffic risk and that to sustain the plea of common employment in this case would give an incalculable extension to the operation of the doctrine of common employment.

LORD MACDERMOTT: My Lords, much of the corporation's argument was directed to showing that the servants in question were employed on "common work" by reason of the degree of juxtaposition demanded by the character of their duties. Where an employment is such as to render those engaged therein liable to injury by the negligence of others who are their fellow servants I am not certain that this test of "common work" will always suffice, in itself, to decide the applicability of the doctrine now in question, and I incline to the view that on occasion it may be necessary to treat the principle enunciated in

The Petrel (5), and approved by this House in Radcliffe's case (1), as a distinct criterion. However that may be, it is clear that the doctrine cannot constitute a defence if that principle applies, and, on the conclusion I have reached, it, therefore, becomes unnecessary to consider further what the attributes of "common work" are according to the authorities. My Lords, expressed in general terms, the principle of The Petrel (5) appears to be that a risk must be treated as a general risk, and not a special risk of the employment, and must, therefore, be regarded as outside the implied stipulation on which the doctrine of common employment rests, if it may spring as readily from the fault of those who are not fellow servants of the injured person as from the fault of those who are. The decision of your Lordships' House in Miller's case (2) affords a good example of a special risk, for there, owing to the nature of the service, what occurred was much more likely to happen through the negligence of a fellow servant of the injured person than through the negligence of anyone else. Here, the case falls, in my opinion, as clearly on the other side of the line. Despite the proved frequency of the corporation's bus services along the Great Western Road, the risk exemplified by this accident might, on the evidence, have arisen as readily from the fault of some other driver on that busy thoroughfare who was not in the employment of the corporation. I, therefore, agree that the appeal should be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors: Martin & Co., agents for Simpson & Marwick, W.S., Edinburgh (for the appellants); Herbert Smith & Co., agents for J. & R. A. Robertson, W.S., Edinburgh (for the respondent).

[Reported by C. St.J. NICHOLSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Applied. GRANT v. SUN SHIPPING Co., LTD. [1948] 2 All E.R. 238.

ADMIRALTY COMMISSIONERS v. NORTH OF SCOTLAND AND ORKNEY AND SHETLAND STEAM NAVIGATION CO., LTD.

[HOUSE OF LORDS (Viscount Simon, Lord Thankerton, Lord Porter, Lord Oaksey, Lord MacDermott), June 2, 3, 5, July 28, 1947.]

Negligence—Contributory negligence—Collision at sea—Vessel overtaking in swept channel—Narrow berth given—Overtaken vessel changing course.

On Nov. 9, 1941, at 9.35 a.m., in broad daylight with good visibility, the drifter "Boy Andrew" was proceeding eastward in a swept channel in the Firth of Forth, followed, in parallel course, by the "St. Rognvald." The "St. Rognvald" approached on the starboard quarter of the "Boy Andrew" whose course was 300 ft. from the southern edge of the channel, and made to pass her at about 100 ft. When the stem of the "St. Rognvald" was almost level with the stern of the "Boy Andrew," the "Boy Andrew," negligently and in contravention of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, moved, and then swerved hard, to starboard. The two ships collided and the "Boy Andrew" was lost with all hands. Nautical assessors advised that in the circumstances to attempt to pass at 100ft. was negligent.

HELD: the negligence of both ships continued right up to the moment of the collision, and, LORD MACDERMOTT dissentiente, each was to blame for the damage which was the result of the continued negligence of both.

Davies v. Mann, (1842), 10 M. & W. 546 distinguished.

The Eurymedon, [1938] 1 All E.R. 122 applied.

[AS TO CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 23, pp. 679-684, paras. 963-967; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 36, pp. 109-118, Nos. 726-790.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Davies v. Mann, (1842), 10 M. & W. 546; 12 L.J.Ex. 10; 7 J.P. 53; 36 Digest 113, 751.
- (2) Radley v. L. & N.W. Railway Co., (1876), 1 App. Cas. 754; 46 L.J.Q.B. 573; 35 L.T. 637; 41 J.P. 484; 36 Digest 109, 729.
- (3) The Eurymedon, [1938] P. 41; 107 L.J.P. 81; 158 L.T. 445; sub nom. Corstar Owners v. Eurymedon Owners, The Eurymedon, [1938] 1 All E.R. 122; Digest Supp.

- (4) Admiralty Comrs. v. S.S. Volute, [1922] 1 A.C. 129; 91 L.J.P. 38; 126 L.T. 425; 41 Digest 780, 6417.
- (5) British Columbia Electric Ry. Co., Ltd. v. Loach, [1916] 1 A.C. 719; 85 L.J.P.C. 23; 113 L.T. 946; 36 Digest 117, 781.
- (6) British Fame (Owners) v. Macgregor (Owners), The Macgregor, [1943] 1 All E.R. 33; [1943] A.C. 197; 112 L.J.P. 6; 168 L.T. 193; Digest Supp.
- (7) S.S. "Courtfield" (Owners) v. S.S. "Atlantis" (Owners), (1919), 1 LL.L.R. 328.
- (8) Orduna (Owners) v. Shipping Controller, The Orduna, 90 L.J.P. 67; 41 Digest 741, 5925.
- A (9) The Highgate, (1890), 62 L.T. 841; 6 Asp. M.L.C. 512; 41 Digest 749, 6010.
- (10) Spraight v. Tedcastle, (1881), 6 App. Cas. 217; 44 L.T. 589; 36 Digest 113, 758.
- (11) The Margaret, (1884), 9 P.D. 47; 53 L.J.P. 17; 50 L.T. 447; on appeal, sub nom. Cayzer v. Carron Co., 9 App. Cas. 873; 41 Digest 764, 6170.
- (12) Anglo-Newfoundland Development Co., Ltd. v. Pacific Steam Navigation Co., [1924] A.C. 406; 93 L.J.P.C. 182; 131 L.T. 258; 36 Digest 115, 768.
- (13) The Bywell Castle, (1879), 4 P.D. 219; 41 L.T. 747; 36 Digest 118, 791.
- B (14) M'Lean v. Bell, 1932 S.C. (H.L.) 21.
- (15) Cork Steamship Co., Ltd. v. Kiddle, (1920), 2 LL.L.R. 505.

APPEAL from a decision of the First Division of the Court of Session, reported at 1946 S.C. 223.

THE LORD ORDINARY (KEITH), who tried the case, found that the collision was due to the negligence of both vessels and apportioned the blame between them. On appeal, the First Division held that the "St. Rognvald," though at fault in steering a course so close to that of the "Boy Andrew," was not to be regarded as partly responsible for the collision, and that the "Boy Andrew" was wholly to blame. The House of Lords now restored by a majority the interlocutor of the LORD ORDINARY (KEITH).

The facts appear in the opinions of VISCOUNT SIMON and LORD PORTER.

Carpmael, K.C., and W. Ross McLean for the appellants.

D Hill Watson, K.C., Porges and C. J. D. Shaw for the respondents.

The House took time for consideration.

VISCOUNT SIMON: My Lords, the collision between these two vessels occurred in the Firth of Forth at about 9.35 a.m., on Nov. 9, 1941. The "Boy Andrew" was a herring drifter converted for naval service, flying the white ensign, and employed by the Admiralty in anti-submarine work. She was 90 ft. long with 20 ft. beam and approximately 10 ft. draught. The "St. Rognvald" is a British commercial vessel 230 ft. long, 31 ft. beam, and her draught at the time of the collision was 12 ft. forward and 17ft. 8 ins. aft. Both vessels were proceeding on an easterly course in a swept channel running east and west which was two cables wide and was marked by a line of buoys placed in the centre line of the channel at intervals of about a mile. The wind was from the south-east, of a strength of about 5 on the beaufort scale, and there was an ebb tide running out at about one and a half or two knots. Visibility was reasonably good. When the "St. Rognvald" entered the buoyed channel from Leith harbour, there were three vessels proceeding eastward along the channel ahead of her—a Ben Line ship immediately ahead, the "Boy Andrew" ahead of the Ben Line ship, and ahead of that again a Norwegian vessel, the "Sverre Nergaard," the pilot of which was called as a witness by the owners of the "St. Rognvald" and gave important evidence. The Ben Line ship overtook both the "Boy Andrew" and the "Sverre Nergaard" before the collision, passing the "Boy Andrew" on the latter's port side, and so disappears from the case. The "Boy Andrew" was doing 8 knots before the collision, and the "St. Rognvald" 9 knots. When the "St. Rognvald" had proceeded about three miles down the swept channel and was approaching number 7 buoy, she had the "Boy Andrew" on her port bow. At that time both vessels were pursuing the same compass course, the "Boy Andrew" being slightly to the north of the middle line of the southern half of the swept channel, thus leaving rather more than 300 ft. of swept water on her starboard side. The "St. Rognvald" was pursuing a parallel course about 100 ft. in lateral distance to the south of the course of the "Boy Andrew," and she held to this course after passing number 7 buoy and while making to overtake the "Boy Andrew." The relation between the "St. Rognvald" and the "Boy Andrew" was, therefore, that of overtaking and overtaken vessels, and by art. 24 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea the overtaking vessel was under a duty to keep out of the way of the overtaken vessel, while, by art. 21, the overtaken vessel was under a duty to "keep her course and speed." It may be useful to point out that these articles prescribing what is to be done when one ship overtakes another do not exactly correspond with the rules of the road. An overtaking motor is, of course, under the duty so to steer as to keep out of the way of the motor in front, but the motor in front is not bound, when about to be overtaken, to maintain its course. If there is room, it may prudently provide more space for the overtaking car to pass by turning in towards the near kerb. The reason is that on land an overtaking car should overtake by passing on the right side of the vehicle in front, whereas at sea cases may arise when the overtaking ship will pass to port of the vessel it is overtaking and not to starboard. Hence at sea the overtaken vessel is required to maintain its previous course, at any rate, until a collision is imminent, for to do otherwise might produce confusion and help to cause a collision.

While the "St. Rognvald" was approaching the "Boy Andrew" to pass her as described, and when the stem of the former was nearly, but not quite, level with the stern of the "Boy Andrew," the latter made a move to starboard, which suddenly developed into a swerve hard astarboard. Counsel for the appellants before us endeavoured to convince us that what happened was merely a "yaw" of the "Boy Andrew" of the sort which was caused to this comparatively small vessel of slight draught owing to the opposition of wind and tide. In such circumstances the bows of the drifter would naturally "yaw" from side to side, and the course she was pursuing could only be maintained by constant helm action to neutralise such "yaws." The House was advised by the two nautical assessors who were assisting us in matters of navigation that if the "Boy Andrew," having regard to her draught, size and speed, was being properly kept as far as could be on her course, with the then state of wind, sea and tide, her bows would not be diverted by "yawing" from either side of the course she was endeavouring to steer by more than 25 ft. from the middle line. It is quite evident from the evidence in the case that what occurred to the drifter immediately before the collision was a much more serious change of direction. The captain of the "St. Rognvald" said that he noticed a slight movement to starboard on the part of the "Boy Andrew" and at first thought she might be getting nearer in order to hail his ship or deliver some message, but he went on to say that this slight manoeuvre "developed very suddenly into a sudden swerve or hard astarboard, and as soon as that happened I gave the order to the helmsman: 'Hard astarboard,' and rang to stop the engines." The pilot on board the Norwegian vessel entirely confirms this, for, looking back, he had seen the "Boy Andrew" (which was then fine on his starboard quarter) "pitching and sheering about a little," as a small craft in such circumstances might be expected to do, when he observed her taking this sudden turn to starboard, and formed the conclusion (which he expressed to the captain of the "Sverre Nergaard") that "this little fellow is going out of the channel." The cause of this sudden and unexpected move of the "Boy Andrew" remains a mystery, for when the "St. Rognvald" collided with her the lamentable consequence was that every one of the 13 men on board the drifter was drowned. There was evidence that the steering gear of the drifter had been inspected and overhauled a month before the collision and there is no material in the evidence to show whether this fatal movement by the "Boy Andrew" was intentional or accidental. It was, of course, on the face of it, a breach of art. 21, and in the absence of any evidence pointing to any other conclusion, must be regarded as a negligent breach of the ordinary rules of proper navigation which caused, in whole or in part, the damage resulting from the collision. Both LORD KEITH, who tried the case, and the First Division of the Court of Session (the LORD PRESIDENT (NORMAND), with LORDS MONCREIFF, CARMONT, and RUSSELL) have held the "Boy Andrew" to blame for causing the disaster, and I agree with LORD NORMAND in his view (1946 S.C. 232) that:

... in the absence of any reasonable explanation, I have no doubt that the LORD ORDINARY was correct in finding that the navigation of those in authority on the "Boy Andrew" was grossly in fault.

The matter on which LORD KEITH and the Court of Session differed was whether the action of the "St. Rognvald" should also be regarded as a cause of the collision, so that both ships were to blame. LORD KEITH thought this was the case, but LORD NORMAND and his colleagues took a different view. The point is a fine one, because both the courts in Scotland adopted the advice of their nautical expert that the course steered by the "St. Rognvald" was faulty in that she was aiming to pass the "Boy Andrew" too close. Our own nautical advisers take the same view. The House put to them the following question:—

A Please put out of your minds that an accident did happen in this case and advise us whether, when the "Boy Andrew" was following its course in the south band of the swept channel and the "St. Rognvald" was on a parallel course to the south of her, it was good seamanship in the circumstances for the latter to steer to pass the former at 100 feet.

The answer was :

B We are agreed that it was not good seamanship in the circumstances.

I understand this to mean that, before attempting to pass, the "St. Rognvald" should have starboarded so as to leave a wider berth between herself and the drifter, both in order to reduce the risk if the "Boy Andrew" happened to move somewhat nearer, and also to give the "St. Rognvald" more time to avoid a collision if a danger of this sort presented itself. The master of the "St. Rognvald" admitted in his evidence that there would have been no accident if the lateral distance had been 200 ft.

C The ground on which the LORD PRESIDENT (NORMAND) and his colleagues held that the "St. Rognvald," though at fault in steering a course so close to that of the "Boy Andrew," was not to be regarded as partly responsible for the collision was that they considered this fault as being merely a causa sine qua non, and not as contributing to the disaster. If, indeed, the navigation of the "St. Rognvald" did not operate as a cause of the collision, then, of course, the owners of that vessel are free from liability, however faulty the conduct of their vessel may have been. Negligence, whether on land or at sea, does not constitute a good cause of action unless it is a cause of the damage that occurs as the result of it. LORD NORMAND considered that the situation was analogous to that dealt with in Davies v. Mann (1). In that famous case, the defendant's servant, by driving his waggon negligently along a highway, ran over and injured a donkey belonging to the plaintiff, which the latter had negligently left on the road, so hobbled that it could not get out of the way. The Court of Exchequer held that the injury was caused by the negligent driving of the waggon, and that the plaintiff could recover, notwithstanding that he, at an earlier stage, had been negligent in leaving the animal in this condition on the road. The principle in Davies v. Mann (1), has been approved and applied by this House in Radley v. L. & N.W. Railway (2), and in cases where it is relevant the principle can be applied to collisions at sea, no less than to road accidents. The principle of Davies v. Mann (1), has often been explained as amounting to a rule that when both parties are careless, the party which has the last opportunity of avoiding the results of the other's carelessness is alone liable. The suggested test of "last opportunity" seems to me inaptly phrased and likely in some cases to lead to error, as the Law Revision Committee said in their report (Cmd. 6032, p. 16) :

In truth, there is no such rule—the question, as in all questions of liability for a tortious act, is, not who had the last opportunity of avoiding the mischief, but whose act caused the wrong ?

H In Davies v. Mann (1), the negligence of the absent donkey-owner, serious as it was, created a static position where nothing that he could do when collision threatened would have avoided the result, whereas the negligence of the driver of the vehicle continued right up to the moment when the collision became inevitable. As by driving more carefully he could have avoided hitting the donkey, his negligence was the sole cause. The negligence of the donkey-owner was, therefore, a fault not contributing to the collision. It was merely a causa sine qua non. With the greatest respect, I am unable to see how the doctrine of Davies v. Mann (1), is applicable here. One may well ask—which of these two vessels corresponds to the hobbled donkey ? Both ships were moving and answering their helms, though the rule imposed on the "Boy Andrew" the duty of maintaining her course and speed. The LORD PRESIDENT considered that the "St. Rognvald" was in the donkey-owner's situation. He said (1946 S.C. 233):

Although the "St. Rognvald" was in motion, her position was just as clearly defined and as calculable [by those on the "Boy Andrew" who should have looked astern] in relation to the "Boy Andrew" as was the tethered donkey in relation to the driver who drove over it in Davies v. Mann.

Surely this is treating the "St. Rognvald" as though she was moving along tramlines at a pre-destined speed, whereas she was able, if she chose, to starboard and to reduce her speed. The House put to its nautical advisers the question whether as a matter of seamanship a small vessel like the "Boy Andrew," with a bigger ship coming up behind her at a lateral distance of 100 ft., would be entitled to expect the latter ship to steer so as to give her a wider berth when passing her, and we were advised that this might well be expected in the circumstances and would be the proper navigation. The truth is that the "St. Rognvald's" course was not stabilised in fact or in law. She could have given the "Boy Andrew" a wider clearance without leaving the swept channel.

The application of Davies v. Mann (1), when two vessels are about to collide was carefully discussed in the English Court of Appeal in The Eurymedon (3). This case was not referred to in the argument before the House, nor, I think, in the proceedings in Scotland, but it is much in point. The Eurymedon was a large vessel coming up the Thames at night, and was held to blame for not reducing speed, owing to her failure to appreciate in time that the plaintiff's ship was lying at anchor in an improper position nearly athwart the river. The latter ship was also negligent in continuing to lie where she was, but it was contended that, on the principle of Davies v. Mann (1), the Eurymedon should be held solely to blame. The contention failed. GREER, L.J., analyses the Davies v. Mann (1), principle in a series of propositions of which the fourth is ([1938] P. 50):

... if the negligence of both parties to the litigation continues right up to the moment of collision, whether on land or on sea, each party is to blame for the collision and for the damage which is the result of the continued negligence of both. —

This exactly applies here. I cannot agree with LORD NORMAND that the "negligence of the 'St. Rognvald' was in every practical sense antecedent." The case seems to me to fall within the class described ([1922] 1 A.C. 144) by LORD BIRKENHEAD, L.C., in Admiralty Comrs. v. S.S. Volute (4), where the proper conclusion is, as the LORD ORDINARY (KEITH) found, that both vessels by faulty navigation contributed to the disaster.

Reference was made to the decision of the Judicial Committee in British Columbia Electric Ry. Co. v. Loach (5). There a waggon was negligently driven on to a gateless level-crossing without considering that a train might be just coming, and the collision occurred because the train approached the crossing at an excessive speed and owing to faulty brakes was unable to pull up in time. The Board, through the mouth of LORD SUMNER, held that the railway company's negligence was the sole cause of the accident, and that this remained true even though the train's inability to stop was due to faulty driving and equipment originating before but continuing after the negligence attributed to Loach. The decision supports the view I take, that the "St. Rognvald" cannot escape liability.

The apportionment of blame decreed by the LORD ORDINARY (KEITH) must stand. As indicated in the decision of this House in British Fame (Owners) v. Macgregor (Owners) (6), an appellate court should not undertake to alter the proportions fixed by the judge who tried the case save in exceptional circumstances such as were there indicated, and no such exceptional circumstances are shown to exist here. I move that the interlocutor of LORD KEITH be restored, and that the appeal be allowed with costs.

My Lords, my noble and learned friend, LORD THANKERTON, who is unable to be here, wishes me to say that he concurs in this opinion.

LORD PORTER: My Lords, the sole question for your Lordships decision is who was to blame for a collision which took place between the steam drifter "Boy Andrew" and the "St. Rognvald" on Nov. 9, 1941, in the swept channel of the Firth of Forth at 9.35 a.m. in broad daylight. The "Boy Andrew" was a herring drifter, 90 ft. long by 20 ft. beam and drawing about 10 ft. The "St. Rognvald" is a steel screw steamship of 1,069 tons gross register, 230 ft. long, 31 ft. beam, drawing at the material time about 12 ft. forward and 17 ft. aft. At the material time both vessels were proceeding eastward on parallel courses down the swept channel, the "St. Rognvald" at about 9 knots and the "Boy Andrew" at about 8 knots through the water. Both were overtaking a third ship the "Sverre Nergaard," but though her pilot was able to see and testify as to the events I do not think she was near enough to have any effect on the manoeuvres of the two vessels involved in the collision. The swept channel down which the ships were proceeding was marked by a line of buoys and extended to a cable's length on each side of them. The "Boy Andrew" was steaming in the middle of the southern half of the channel, i.e., about 300 ft. or a little more from the edge of the swept channel: the "St. Rognvald" was on her starboard quarter a little to the south of the drifter's line of advance. The "St. Rognvald" continued to gain and made to pass the "Boy Andrew" at about 100 ft. When her stem was nearly but not quite level with the stern of the "Boy Andrew" the latter vessel made a move to starboard which suddenly developed into a swerve hard to starboard. The master of the "St. Rognvald" thereupon gave the order hard-a-starboard and rang the engine room to stop, but the "Boy Andrew" ran across his bows, was struck aft about 15 ft. from her stern, pushed bodily under water and lost with all hands. The sudden swerve of the drifter is unexplained.

In the circumstances the duty of each vessel is clearly shown in arts. 21 and 24 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, the material portions being :

Article 21 : Where by any of these rules one of two vessels is to keep out of the way, the other shall keep her course and speed. Article 24 : Notwithstanding anything contained in these rules, every vessel overtaking any other, shall keep out of the way of the overtaken vessel . . .

Both rules are, of course, subject to the general provisions of art. 27 :

In obeying and construing these rules, due regard shall be had to all dangers of navigation and collision, and to any special circumstances which may render a departure from the above rules necessary in order to avoid immediate danger.

Article 21 itself contains the note :

When, in consequence of thick weather or other causes, such vessel finds herself so close that collision cannot be avoided by the action of the giving-way vessel alone, she also shall take such action as will best aid to avert collision.

These qualifications, however, do not entitle the overtaken vessel to alter her course or speed except in the face of immediate danger of a collision or excuse her if she takes premature action.

In S.S. "Courtfield" (Owners) v. S.S. "Atlantis" (Owners) (7), SCRUTTON, L.J., said (1 LL.L.R. 330) :

The safe thing for the stand-on ship is to keep her course and speed until it is clear that a collision cannot be avoided.

See also Orduna (Owners) v. Shipping Controller (8).

The obligation of the stand-on vessel is, I think, accurately stated in the article in SHIPPING AND NAVIGATION by the late LANGTON, J., Vol. XXX, art. 983, p. 760, in the words :

The stand-on vessel is not justified in altering her course because the other vessel is cutting it fine, since the other vessel's action is guided on the assumption that the stand-on vessel will keep her course, a statement in support of which the decision in The Highgate (9), is quoted, which seems to me none the less applicable though the stand-on vessel in that case was a sailing ship.

In these circumstances the LORD ORDINARY (KEITH) held both vessels to blame, the "Boy Andrew" in two thirds and the "St. Rognvald" in one third, but the First Division of the Court of Session reversed his judgment and found the "Boy Andrew" alone to blame. All nautical assessors in both courts below and in your Lordships' House have advised that, in the circumstances, to attempt to pass at 100 ft. was negligent, since there was ample room to starboard and the space given did not make sufficient allowance for an accidental deviation, whether negligent or involuntary, which ought to have been envisaged as possible and which would bring the "Boy Andrew" across the course of the "St. Rognvald," and this view was strengthened by the fact that wind and tide were meeting and causing a confused sea and resulting in a "yawing" of the drifter which ought to have been and was not seen from the "St. Rognvald." The master of the latter vessel was not asked whether he saw this "yawing," but he denied that he saw any sheering. It was suggested on his behalf that he might by that word mean something more pronounced than "yawing" and despite the "yawing" deemed it safe to pass at 100 ft. I do not so read his evidence, but I think his meaning immaterial since all the nautical assessors are agreed that as a matter of good seamanship he ought to have given a wider berth.

Each ship accepted the finding that she was to blame, but maintained that her negligence was not the cause or even a cause of the collision. On behalf of the "Boy Andrew" it was said that notwithstanding her sheer the sole cause of the collision was the fact that the "St. Rognvald," by attempting to pass too close had put herself in such a position that she was unable to avoid an accident, or, at any rate, that accident. That negligence, it was submitted, was prior in point of time to the negligence of the "Boy Andrew," and, accordingly, it was said, that, under the ruling in Loach's case (5), the "St. Rognvald" was alone to blame, since she had herself put it out of her power to avoid the accident by reason of her prior negligence. I cannot accept this contention. That the "Boy Andrew" was negligent is plain: it was her duty to keep her course and speed yet she starboarded right across the course of the "St. Rognvald." Her fault had not ended before the collision took place: she was always in action and her wrong-doing persisted right up to the moment of this accident: she was always an active party in the final result: her negligence and that of the "St. Rognvald" were at least contemporaneous and some blame—perhaps the major portion though not necessarily the whole—must be attributed to her.

The "St. Rognvald," however, argued that, whatever might be her fault, the "Boy Andrew" alone caused the accident by a manoeuvre which no one could have anticipated, and in any case could have avoided the collision by porting when she realised that the "St. Rognvald" was committed to passing at so short a distance. That the accident was unpredictable and unforeseeable is not, in my view, material. The very reason for which it is undesirable to pass so close is that accidents will happen. Seamen like everyone else may be negligent and a prudent ship master ought to envisage an aberration of course, even beyond that which a more skilful or more careful captain would avoid. Neither, as I think, is it to the point that the particular accident was such as no seaman would expect. It is enough that the second ship should have foreseen the possibility that some occurrence, which was not abnormal, might bring the first vessel across her bows even though that event would not happen save for the negligence of the first. But, it is said, such a view is merely to prove negligence, and not to establish that negligence as the cause or a cause of the collision. The argument is, perhaps, most forcibly and attractively put in the judgments of the Inner House. The "Boy Andrew," it is suggested, could see the course of the "St. Rognvald" throughout and finding her approaching negligently close should have gone to port so as to allow the sea room which that vessel failed to give. She could, therefore, have avoided the accident in the end and was solely to blame.

In my opinion, there are two answers to this argument, one of fact and one of law. As to the facts, your Lordships' House asked the assessors who advised it up to what moment those navigating the "Boy Andrew" might reasonably expect the "St. Rognvald" to move to starboard so as to give her more room when passing. Their answer, as seamen, was "up to the last minute." Even if no such answer had been given, the fact cannot be neglected that it was the duty of the "Boy Andrew" to keep her course and speed and to take no other step unless and until an accident appeared inevitable unless she took some step. It has not been suggested, so far as I understood, nor do I think it could rightfully be contended, that any such stage had been reached. Of course, if it could be shown that the "Boy Andrew" deliberately took the risk of starboarding across the course of the "St. Rognvald" it might be said that she caused the collision by a deliberate act taken in defiance of all rules of prudence. I do not take the view that such a deduction should be drawn. The true inference is, I think, that, by an incorrect order or a correct order wrongly interpreted, or by a "yaw" which the master or helmsman negligently failed to correct in time, the drifter took the unexpected sheer. Until then it was her duty to keep and she did keep her course and speed.

A There are, undoubtedly, cases in which one vessel involved in a collision having been negligent is yet not the cause or one of its causes in the sense in which that word is legally interpreted because the other vessel involved failed by a subsequent and independent fault to avoid the consequences of that negligence. Spaight v. Tedcastle (10), The Margaret (11), and Anglo-Newfoundland Development Co. v. Pacific Steam Navigation Co. (12), are examples of cases in which this principle has been followed in your Lordships' House, but B to make it applicable the negligence of the second ship, must in truth be subsequent and severable or independent. The approach to the decision in this class of case has, in my opinion, never been more accurately stated than in the speech of LORD BIRKENHEAD, L.C., in The Volute (4), ([1922] 1 A.C. 136) :

C In all cases of damage by collision on land or sea, there are three ways in which the question of contributory negligence may arise. A is suing for damage thereby received. He was negligent, but his negligence had brought about a state of things in which there would have been no damage if B had not been subsequently and severably negligent. A recovers in full . . . At the other end of the chain, A's negligence makes collision so threatening that though by the appropriate measure B could avoid it, B has not really time to think and by mistake takes the wrong measure. B is not held to be guilty of any negligence and A wholly fails . . . In between these two termini come the cases where the negligence is deemed contributory, and the plaintiff in common law recovers nothing, while in Admiralty damages are divided in some proportion or other.

D Again (at p. 144) :

E Upon the whole I think that the question of contributory negligence must be dealt with somewhat broadly and upon common-sense principles as a jury would probably deal with it. And while no doubt, where a clear line can be drawn, the subsequent negligence is the only one to look to, there are cases in which the two acts come so closely together, and the second act of negligence is so much mixed up with the state of things brought about by the first act, that the party secondly negligent, while not held free from blame under the Bywell Castle (13), rule, might, on the other hand, invoke the prior negligence as being part of the cause of the collision so as to make it a case of contribution. And the Maritime Conventions Act with its provisions for nice qualifications as to the quantum of blame and the proportions in which contribution is to be made may be taken as to some extent declaratory of the Admiralty rule in this respect.

F My Lords, in The Margaret (11), LORD BLACKBURN expressed the opinion that the rule was the same in Admiralty as in common law, and, whatever may have been the position before the common law was altered, I think it clearly is the same today when the common law rule has been brought into line with that obtaining in Admiralty, and in each the problem should be approached broadly avoiding those fine distinctions which were apt to be drawn when some slight act of negligence on the part of the plaintiff might defeat his claim altogether. In the present case there seems to me to be no clear dividing line G between the operation of one act of negligence and the other. Both were, I think, in operation at the same time and both seem to me to have contributed to the accident.

The only further act of negligence on the part of the "St. Rognvald" seriously relied on by the drifter was a failure to reverse her engines. I cannot think that such an omission had any real effect. The LORD ORDINARY (KEITH) H found that it had not and he has the support of his assessor and the Inner House found that they had no sufficient material before them to give effect to such an argument. In these circumstances I do not think it is incumbent upon your Lordships to determine how far a ship partially to blame can rely upon the rule that a navigator is excused for a wrong action if that action is brought upon by a sudden emergency arising from the action of another ship. I would allow the appeal, restore the judgment of the LORD ORDINARY (KEITH), and, in accordance with your Lordships' general practice, would leave the proportion of blame unchanged.

LORD OAKSEY : My Lords, I agree. The sheering of the "Boy Andrew" to starboard is in the unhappy circumstances of this case unexplained, and she must, therefore, be held to blame. The judgment of the First Division of the Inner House proceeds, I think, on the view that she was also to blame for not keeping a proper look-out aft and that she, therefore, had a last opportunity of avoiding the fault of the "St. Rognvald" in overtaking the "Boy Andrew" without giving her sufficient clearance. In my opinion, the inference that there was no proper look-out in the "Boy Andrew" cannot properly be drawn, for at any moment the "St. Rognvald" might have steered to starboard and so given the "Boy Andrew" adequate clearance. The "Boy Andrew's" duty was to keep her course and speed and she was entitled to assume that the "St. Rognvald" would keep out of the way. That the "St. Rognvald" was in fault has been held by both courts and by all the nautical assessors, including those who have advised your Lordships, and, in my opinion, that fault continued up to and at the very moment that the "Boy Andrew" committed her fault in sheering to starboard. The two faults were, in my opinion, contemporaneous and I can see no ground for holding that the fault of the "St. Rognvald" was not synchronous or had become a stabilised factor like the tethered donkey in Davies v. Mann. (1).

LORD MACDERMOTT : My Lords, all the nautical assessors who have advised, during the course of this litigation are agreed that the lateral clearance of approximately 100 ft. which the "St. Rognvald" gave the "Boy Andrew" in overtaking on her starboard side was insufficient and out of keeping with the standards of good seamanship. Both the LORD ORDINARY (KEITH) and the First Division accepted this view and held the "St. Rognvald" at fault in this respect. They also held that the "Boy Andrew," in making the sudden and unexpected swerve to starboard which brought her across the bows of the overtaking vessel was at fault in a manner which directly contributed to the accident. Further, they found, that the "St. Rognvald" was not at fault in the efforts she made to avoid collision after the "Boy Andrew's" change of course. My Lords, there was ample material on which to reach these findings and it is clear they must stand.

In these circumstances the first question to be determined is whether the fault found against the "St. Rognvald" in fact contributed to the collision. This must depend on whether a clearance sufficient to satisfy the requirements of good seamanship would have enabled her to avoid the "Boy Andrew" when the latter made her strange turn to starboard. The material available to found a conclusion on the point is scant, but there was evidence that a lateral distance of 200 ft. would have allowed the "St. Rognvald" to keep clear, and it is plain that this could have been given without bringing that vessel too close to the unmarked southern edge of the swept channel and the perils which might reasonably be supposed to lurk beyond it. I do not think the advice of the assessors can be interpreted as meaning that a prudent mariner, overtaking in these narrow waters, would have anticipated the "Boy Andrew's" sudden move and have regulated his distance accordingly, but on the whole evidence and in all the circumstances I think there is enough (though perhaps not much more) to sustain the conclusion that good seamanship would have left the "St. Rognvald" in a position to keep clear and, accordingly, that her fault must be regarded as contributing in some degree to the accident. It should, however, be added that there was neither finding nor evidence that this fault would, in itself, have caused a collision under the conditions then prevailing. It must rank as a factor because, and only because, it left the "St. Rognvald" in a position which made collision inevitable when the drifter swung across the channel.

The next question is whether, notwithstanding this conclusion, the fault of the "Boy Andrew" should be regarded in law as the sole cause of the collision; or, to put it another way, whether the fault of the "St. Rognvald" was but a causa sine qua non. My Lords, notwithstanding the provisions of the Maritime Conventions Act, 1911, this question has still to be settled according to common law rules. The apt test in the present case may be taken from the well-known illustration by LORD BIRKENHEAD, L.C., in The Volute (4), ([1922] 1 A.C. 136). Was the "Boy Andrew" subsequently and severably negligent? The same decision gives important guidance on the manner of applying this test. The answer should not rest on over-fine distinctions or on the sort of analysis which makes various actions and reactions appear to stand apart when, in fact, they were mixed up or pressed together. A line is not to be drawn between the negligent acts unless it can be drawn clearly. "The question of contributory negligence must be dealt with somewhat broadly and upon common sense principles as a jury would probably deal with it," (per LORD BIRKENHEAD, L.C., [1922] 1 A.C. 144).

- A There is another matter to which I would refer before returning to the facts. Once started, the negligence of each ship continued up to the moment of impact. It was said that in law this precluded any finding other than one of joint responsibility. There is, indeed, support for this proposition in certain dicta of the Court of Appeal in The Eurymedon (3), but, in my opinion, it is too absolute to be sound and more likely to hinder than help the broad treatment enjoined in The Volute (4). It appears to be in conflict with the view of this House as expressed by LORD WRIGHT in M'Lean v. Bell (14) (1932 S.C. (H.L.) 30), and, apart from Davies v. Mann (1) itself and the instances given by PARKE, B., in the concluding paragraph of his judgment in that case (10 M. and W. 549), there is, I apprehend, ample authority in decisions of your Lordships' House for the view that the continuance of the negligent acts concurrently for some period ending with the accident is not necessarily incompatible with one of such acts being subsequent to the other and the sole cause in law of the damage: see, for example, The Margaret (11) and Cork Steamship Co. v. Kiddle (15), (both cited in The Volute), and Anglo-Newfoundland Development Co. v. Pacific Steam Navigation Co. (12).

- C In the present case both vessels were pursuing parallel courses before the emergency arose. The "Boy Andrew" was proceeding in a manner which gave no indication of fault on her part. The "St. Rognvald" was coming up too close. The rapid change in this situation is best described in the words of the LORD ORDINARY (1946 S.C. 225):

- D After passing buoy 7 the "St. Rognvald" made to overtake the drifter on her starboard side at a lateral distance between the vessels of about 100 ft. At this point the drifter made a move to starboard which suddenly developed into a sudden swerve hard to starboard. The "St. Rognvald" was then on the starboard quarter of the "Boy Andrew," and her stem must have been nearly, but not quite, level with the stern of the "Boy Andrew."

- E Now at that time it was daylight, visibility was reasonably good and the position of the overtaking vessel plain to be seen. As the LORD ORDINARY further remarked (ibid. p. 226):

- F Any observation aft from the "Boy Andrew" must have disclosed the proximity of the "St. Rognvald" and shown that any movement to starboard by the "Boy Andrew" at the time the movement was made was fraught with the gravest peril.

- G Yet, without warning the drifter swerved across the "St. Rognvald's" bows and made inevitable the collision which occurred but a minute or less afterwards. If, as has been found, this movement was negligent, it must, I think, follow that the "Boy Andrew" failed to take due care for her own safety. She knew, or ought to have known, that she was being overtaken. That is the basis of the fault of not maintaining course found against her. And she knew, or ought to have known, when she starboarded that the "St. Rognvald," then committed to passing too closely, was in a position which made any reduction in the lateral interval highly dangerous. The reason for the drifter's swerve is unknown, but in that situation the explanation does not seem material once her action has been held negligent.

- H Was this negligence subsequent? On the facts I regard it as clear that it was, for the "Boy Andrew" did nothing to contribute to the accident until the fault of the "St. Rognvald" had brought her to a position which should have warned the drifter that a move to starboard "was fraught with the gravest peril." The time which the "Boy Andrew" had to realise the risks of not maintaining course may not have been lengthy, but it must have been appreciable, and it was, to my mind, sufficient to mark her fault as subsequent without resort to any fine distinctions. This matter of time has to be considered in relation to all the material circumstances, and, in particular, to what the demands of reasonable skill and care on the part of the "Boy Andrew" were. If she had been forced to manoeuvre, an appropriate allowance would have to be made, but, in fact, all she had to do was to do nothing but keep her course and speed.

If, then, as I would hold, the "Boy Andrew's" negligence was subsequent, was it also severable? I think it was. The negligent acts were distinct and independent. There is nothing in the available material to show that the fault of the "St. Rognvald" in any way hampered the due navigation of the drifter or induced a single false step on her part. Indeed, it may well be said that this tragic event occurred not because the conduct of the "St. Rognvald" affected the navigation of the "Boy Andrew" but because it did not. I am not unmindful that your Lordships' assessors expressed the view that the "Boy Andrew" could reasonably have expected the "St. Rognvald" to sheer off and give more room as she came up to pass. This might be important if the fault charged against the overtaken ship was that she did not seek safety by going to port. As things are, it cannot account for what happened and has, in my view, no real significance.

For these reasons I am of opinion that the fault of the "Boy Andrew" was both subsequent and severable and that she alone was to blame. I would, accordingly, affirm the interlocutor of the First Division and dismiss the appeal.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors: the Treasury Solicitor, agent for Boyd, Jameson & Young, W.S., Edinburgh (for the appellants); Ince and Co., agents for Beveridge, Sutherland and Smith, W.S., Leith, and Morice and Wilson, Aberdeen (for the respondents).

[Reported by C. ST. J. NICHOLSON, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

MUNRO v. DAW.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Tucker, Somervell and Evershed, L.JJ.), July 18, 1947.]

Landlord and Tenant—Rent restriction—Recovery of possession—Dwelling-house required by landlord as residence for employee—Dwelling-house let to tenant "in consequence of employment" by landlord—Relationship of landlord and tenant—No evidence that house let in consequence of particular employment—Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933 (c. 32), sched. I (g) (i).

The Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933, sched. I (g) (i), gives the court power to make an order for the possession of a dwelling-house within the Rent Restrictions Acts if the dwelling-house is reasonably required by the landlord for occupation as a residence for some person engaged in his whole-time employment, and the tenant was in the employment of the landlord or a former landlord and the dwelling-house was let to him "in consequence of that employment" and he has ceased to be in that employment. The words "in consequence of that employment" refer solely to the relationship of employer and employee, and do not require that the letting should have been in consequence of the particular employment of the tenant.

Where, therefore, it was found as a fact that it was reasonable to make an order for possession, that the dwelling-house was reasonably required by the landlord for occupation as a residence for a person engaged in his whole-time employment, and that the tenant was in the employment of the landlord, and it was submitted that, although there was evidence on which the judge could come to the conclusion that the house was let to the tenant in consequence of the fact that she was the landlord's servant, there was no evidence that the house was let to her in consequence of the particular capacity in which she was employed by him, viz., as an office-cleaner.

Held: it was only necessary for the landlord to prove a letting in consequence of the relationship of employer and employee between the landlord and the tenant, and the court had power to make an order for possession.

[AS TO POSSESSION REQUIRED FOR LANDLORD'S EMPLOYEE, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 20, p. 331, para. 395; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 31, pp. 576-578, 580-581, 583, Nos. 7256-7269, 7292-7295, 7318-7320.]

Cases referred to :

- (1) Braby (Frederick) & Co. v. Bedwell, [1926] 1 K.B. 456; 95 L.J.K.B. 412; 134 L.T. 320; 31 Digest 583, 7320.
- (2) Braithwaite & Co., Ltd. v. Elliott, [1946] 2 All E.R. 537; [1947] K.B. 177; [1947] L.J.R. 172; 176 L.T. 62.

APPEAL by the tenant from an order of HIS HONOUR JUDGE CAREY EVANS at King's Lynn County Court, dated Apr. 17, 1947.

A In an action by the landlord against the tenant for possession, the county court judge found that the dwelling-house was let to the tenant in consequence of her employment, within the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933, sched. I (g) (i). The tenant appealed on the ground that there was no evidence on which the judge could so find. The Court of Appeal now dismissed the appeal.

T. F. Southall for the tenant.

B Ackner for the landlord.

TUCKER, L.J. : This is an appeal by the defendant to an action which was brought against her claiming possession of certain premises of which she was the tenant. In 1944, the landlord, who was a house agent, had bought the house for his managing clerk. The managing clerk left his service in July or Aug., 1945, and in September of that year the landlord let the premises to the tenant who had been in his employment since Apr., 1945, as a domestic help, and from June or July, 1945, also as an office cleaner. The tenant left the landlord's employment in Dec., 1946, and at the time of the issue of the summons in these proceedings he required possession of the premises for his new managing clerk.

The claim for possession was made under the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933, s. 3, and sched. I (g). Section 3 provides :

D (1) No order or judgment for the recovery of possession of any dwelling-house to which the principal Acts apply or for the ejectment of a tenant therefrom shall be made or given unless the court considers it reasonable to make such an order or give such a judgment, and . . . (a) the court has power so to do under the provisions set out in sched. I to this Act . . .

Schedule I provides :

E A court shall, for the purposes of s. 3 of this Act, have power to make or give an order or judgment for the recovery of possession of any dwelling-house to which the principal Acts apply or for the ejectment of a tenant therefrom without proof of suitable alternative accommodation (where the court considers it reasonable so to do) . . . (g) the dwelling-house is reasonably required by the landlord for occupation as a residence for some person engaged in his whole-time employment or in the whole-time employment of some tenant from him or with whom, conditional on housing accommodation being provided, a contract for such employment has been entered into, and . . . (i) the tenant was in the employment of the landlord or a former landlord, and the dwelling-house was let to him in consequence of that employment and he has ceased to be in that employment . . .

In the present case the judge found as facts that it was reasonable to make the order for possession, that the dwelling-house was reasonably required by the landlord for occupation as a residence for some person engaged in his whole time employment, that the tenant was in the employment of the landlord, that the dwelling-house was let to her in consequence of that employment, and that she has ceased to be in that employment. None of those findings is disputed except the finding that the dwelling-house was let to the tenant in consequence of her employment, it being said that there was no evidence on which the judge could arrive at that finding. It is submitted (and, I understand, it is not disputed) that there was evidence on which the judge could come to the conclusion that the dwelling-house was let to her in consequence of the fact that she was the landlord's servant, but it is said that there is no evidence that the house was let to her in consequence of the fact that she was employed by him as an office cleaner.

H The question, therefore, arises whether or not the judge has properly interpreted the meaning of the words "in consequence of that employment." In that connection two authorities have been cited to us, but, speaking for myself, I can derive very little assistance from them in the solution of the particular problem which has been put before us. The first of them is Frederick Braby & Co., Ltd. v. Bedwell (1). The headnote of that case reads ([1926] 1 K.B. 456) :

By s. 5 (1) (i) of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920, the existence of alternative accommodation shall not be a condition of an order for the possession of a dwelling-house where the tenant was in the employment of the landlord, and the dwelling-house was let to him "in consequence of that employment," and he has ceased to be in that employment:—Held, that it must be shown not only that the landlords let but also that the tenant took the premises in consequence of the employment.

In his judgment SHEARMAN, J., who was one of the members of the Divisional Court which decided that case, having pointed out that this was a question of fact, said (ibid. p. 459) :

Counsel for the plaintiffs contended that it is sufficient to establish that the plaintiffs would not have let the house to the defendant had he not been in their employment. I do not think that that is sufficient. The words "in consequence of" imply causation, and mean that the tenancy was created in consequence of the employment. The court must be satisfied not only that the landlords let the premises to the defendant in consequence of his being in their employment, but also that the defendant took the premises in consequence of his being in their employment.

In Braithwaite & Co., Ltd. v. Elliott (2), which was before this court in the autumn of last year, the court overruled Braby's case (1), and held that it was not essential to the causation that the tenant should have taken the premises in consequence of having been in the landlords' employment, that is to say, knowledge on the part of the tenant was immaterial. Dealing with this matter, MORTON, L.J., said ([1946] 2 All E.R. 539) :

In my view, the material question is: What was the reason which actuated the landlord in letting the cottage to the defendant? The wording of the Act is: "and the dwelling-house was let to him in consequence of that employment." When there is an agreement of letting, the landlord agrees to let and the tenant agrees to take, and, in my view, under the section one has to inquire only: What was in the mind of the person who let? Was the house let to the defendant in consequence of his employment or was it let to him for some other reason?

ASQUITH, L.J., who was the only other member of the court who referred to this point, said (ibid., 541) :

Who let this cottage? Obviously the plaintiffs. Why did they let it to the defendant? Because he was employed by them. That is what the county court judge has found, and it seems to me to conclude the matter.

In that case the point which is now taken before us was not taken and it was not material in that case to take it, namely, that "employment" means, not the relationship of master and servant, but the nature of the particular employment for which the particular tenant was employed.

It is sufficient for me to say that I think the natural meaning of the words in sched. I is the relationship of employer and employed, and that there is nothing in the language of the schedule to suggest that what was intended was a requirement in consequence of the nature of the particular employment of the tenant. I think it would be straining the language used to put such an interpretation on the words. Therefore, as I think, the judge applied the proper test, and, his finding being one of fact, there is no material upon which this court can interfere with his finding.

SOMERVELL, L.J. : I agree.

EVERSHED, L.J. : I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors :—Pritchard, Sons, Partington & Holland, agents for Alan G. Hawkins & Co., King's Lynn (for the tenant); Field, Roscoe & Co., agents for Sadler, Lemmon & Gethin, King's Lynn (for the landlord).

[Reported by R. L. ZIAR, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

TYNE IMPROVEMENT COMMISSIONERS v. ARMEMENT ANVERSOIS SOCIETE ANONYME AND OTHERS.

THE BRABO.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Scott, Bucknill and Wrottesley, L.JJ.), June 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, July 16, 1947.]

Constitutional Law—Action against Minister of Crown—Competency—Minister of Supply—Privileges and immunities inherent in Crown—Action by conservancy authority against Minister as cargo owner to recover expenditure incurred in removing wrecked ship—War Department Stores Act, 1867 (c. 128), s. 20—Ministry of Supply Act, 1939 (c. 38), s. 2 (3)—Ministry of Supply (Transfer of Powers) (No. 1) Order, 1939 (S.R. & O., 1939, No. 877).

Practice—Writ—Service—Service out of the jurisdiction—Action “properly brought” against defendants within jurisdiction—Action by conservancy authority against shipowners and Minister of Supply as cargo owner to recover expenditure incurred in removing wreck—Shipowners outside jurisdiction—R.S.C., Ord. 11, r. 1 (g).

Before allowing service out of the jurisdiction of a writ of summons or notice of a writ of summons, under R.S.C., Ord. 11, r. 1 (g), it is the duty of the court to see not only whether the person to be served is a necessary or proper party to the action, but also whether the action is properly brought against the defendants within the jurisdiction. Where it is apparent on the admitted facts (and no question of foreign law is involved) that the plaintiff cannot succeed against the defendants served within the jurisdiction, the action is not properly brought within the meaning of R.S.C., Ord. 11, r. 1 (g), and service out of the jurisdiction on another defendant cannot be allowed.

A conservancy authority incurred heavy expenditure in clearing the obstruction caused by the wreck of a Belgian ship and its cargo consisting of ordnance stores which were the property of the Crown. Under the War Department Stores Act, 1867, as adapted by the Ministry of Supply Act, 1939, and the Ministry of Supply (Transfer of Powers) (No. 1) Order, 1939, the Minister of Supply was empowered to institute or defend any action in regard to these stores. By the conservancy authority's special Act, (the Tyne Improvement Act, 1890, s. 42), the authority could recover from the shipowners and cargo owners the expenses incurred in removing a wreck. In an action against the shipowners and the Minister of Supply to recover the expenditure incurred, the conservancy authority asked for leave to serve notice of a concurrent writ out of the jurisdiction on the shipowners, who were a Belgian company, registered and resident in Belgium:—

Held: (i) the War Department Stores Act, 1867, s. 20 (as adapted by the Ministry of Supply Act, 1939, and the order made thereunder), which gave the Minister power to defend an action, did not deprive the Crown of any defences otherwise open to it, and the proviso to the section made it clear that, though the party sued was not the Crown but the Minister, the Minister had all the privileges and immunities inherent in the Crown, with the result that the Minister was not liable under the Act for any expenditure incurred by the authority in clearing the wreck.

Minister of Supply v. British Thomson-Houston Co., Ltd. ([1943] 1 All E.R. 615) distinguished.

(ii) the conservancy authority had no right of action against the Crown under the Tyne Improvement Act, 1890, s. 42, because, under the Tyne Improvement Act, 1934, the rights of the Crown had been expressly reserved.

(iii) since the Minister of Supply was not liable to the conservancy authority, the action against him was not “properly brought,” within the meaning of R.S.C., Ord. 11, r. 1 (g), and service out of the jurisdiction on the ship owners could not be allowed.

The law relating to liability for the cost of wreck-removal criticised by SCOTT, L.J.

[AS TO SERVICE OUT OF THE JURISDICTION, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 26, pp. 31-33, para. 44; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Practice, pp. 355-362, Nos. 690-741.]

AS TO LEGAL PROCEEDINGS AGAINST THE CROWN AND ITS SERVANTS, see HALS-

BURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 6, pp. 486-491, paras. 599-603, and supplement; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 11, pp. 523, 524, Nos. 284-293.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) The Hagen, [1908] P. 189; 77 L.J.P. 124; 98 L.T. 891; Digest Practice 340, 579.
- (2) Russell (John) & Co., Ltd. v. Cayzer, Irvine & Co., Ltd., [1916] 2 A.C. 298; 85 L.J.K.B. 1152; 115 L.T. 86; Digest Practice 362, 739.
- (3) Massey v. Heynes, (1888), 21 Q.B.D. 330; 57 L.J.Q.B. 468; 59 L.T. 470; Digest Practice 356, 701.
- (4) Minister of Supply v. British Thomson-Houston Co., Ltd., [1943] 1 All E.R. 615; [1943] K.B. 478; 112 L.J.K.B. 520; 168 L.T. 389; Digest Supp.
- (5) Young v. The Scotia, [1903] A.C. 501; 72 L.J.P.C. 115; 89 L.T. 374; 1 Digest 109, 130.
- (6) Pearson v. Holborn Union Assessment Committee, [1893] 1 Q.B. 389; 62 L.J.M.C. 77; 68 L.T. 351; 57 J.P. 169; 38 Digest 486, 444.

INTERLOCUTORY APPEAL by the first defendants, Armement Anversoise Societe Anonyme, owners of S.S. Brabo, from an order of PILCHER, J., dated Jan. 27, 1947.

To recover expenditure incurred by them in clearing the wreckage of the Brabo, the plaintiffs, the Tyne Improvement Commissioners, a conservancy authority, brought an action against the shipowners (the first defendants), the Minister of Supply (the second defendant) as cargo owner on behalf of the Crown (since the cargo consisted of ordnance stores), and the British Iron and Steel Corporation, Ltd. (the third defendants), as agents of the cargo owner. On learning that the first defendants were a Belgian company, registered and resident in Belgium, the plaintiffs, on June 6, 1946, obtained ex parte leave from PILCHER, J., to serve notice of a concurrent writ out of the jurisdiction on these defendants. On an application by the first defendants to set aside service of notice out of the jurisdiction, PILCHER, J., held, by his order of Jan. 27, 1947, that they were a "necessary or proper party" within the meaning of R.S.C., Ord. 11, r. 1 (g), as co-defendants to the action brought against the Minister and the Steel Corporation, and that the action was "properly brought" against the last two defendants, and he refused to set aside the notice.

The Court of Appeal now held that the action against the Minister and the corporation could not be regarded as one that was "properly brought," within the meaning of R.S.C., Ord. 11, r. 1 (g), because, on the correct view of the law as applied to the submitted facts, the Minister and corporation were not liable to the plaintiffs, and they allowed the appeal. The facts appear in the judgment of SCOTT, L.J.

Carpmael, K.C., and A. J. Hodgson for the conservancy authority.
Willink, K.C., and Mocatta for the Belgian company.

Cur. adv. vult.

July 16. SCOTT, L.J., read the following judgment. I am about to read the judgment of the court, with the caution that towards the end of it I say some things on my own behalf to which I do not feel justified in committing my brethren. They will say what they think right with regard to that matter.

This is the agreed judgment of the court. The plaintiffs' claim in this action is for the net expenditure incurred by them as the conservancy authority for the River Tyne and the Port of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, in exercise of their statutory powers of clearing the obstruction caused by the wreck of S.S. Brabo and its cargo, consisting partly of steel billets and slabs and partly of wood pulp. At all material times the Brabo was owned by a Belgian company registered in Belgium and resident there. By order, dated Jan. 27, 1947, PILCHER, J., refused to set aside service of notice of a concurrent writ out of the jurisdiction on the owners of the Brabo, for which ex parte leave had been refused by the assistant registrar, but granted by himself on June 6, 1946. By his order of Jan. 27, 1947, he held (i) that the appellants (to whom we shall refer as the Belgian company) were a "necessary or proper party" within the meaning of R.S.C., Ord. 11, r. 1 (g), as co-defendants to the action brought on Mar. 20, 1946, by the plaintiffs, the Tyne Commissioners, against the Minister of Supply and the British & Iron Steel Corpn., Ltd. (to whom we shall refer as "the Minister" and "the corporation" respectively), and (ii) that that action was "properly brought" against those two defendants within the meaning of that rule. In the exercise of the discretion given to the judge by R.S.C., Ord. 11, he held that it was right that the Belgian company should be called on to appear as a defendant in that action. That company had, in fact, been made the first defendant on the writ for service within the jurisdiction issued on Mar. 20, 1946, because the plaintiffs then believed that the Belgian company was at that time carrying on business in England. It was only when the judge held that belief to be mistaken that the plaintiffs had to resort to R.S.C., Ord. 11, r. 1 (g), for leave to serve the Belgian company in Belgium. The present appeal is against the order of PILCHER, J.

A The various circumstances in which the courts of this country will compel a person resident in a foreign country to come over here and answer in proceedings are to be found in R.S.C., Ord. 11. For the most part the cases set out in the rule are self explanatory, for instance where the subject-matter is land in this country, but sub-r. (g) varies in kind from the other cases since the test is whether the person sought to be served and so made amenable to process in this country, although resident abroad, is a necessary or a proper party to an action properly brought against a person duly served in this country. To all cases alike, however, the three rules laid down by FARWELL, L.J. ([1908] P. 201) in The Hagen (1) apply. The first of these rules is that the court ought to be exceedingly careful before it allows a writ to be served out of the jurisdiction. The second is that, if there is any doubt whether the case comes within the order, the doubt must be resolved in favour of the foreigner. The third is that full and fair disclosure must be made by the party making the original ex parte application, and failure to make it is a reason for discharging the order, while leaving the party free to apply again subsequently. While the courts of this country have made it clear that they will not try the action when called on to decide whether or not to grant leave to serve the writ, yet they never refuse to hear what the defendant proposed to be served has to say when he enters, as in this case, a conditional appearance and moves to set aside the service of the writ on the ground that the facts do not bring the case within the terms of R.S.C., Ord. 11. As LORD SUMNER said ([1916] 2 A.C. 304) in John Russell & Co., Ltd. v. Cayzer, Irvine & Co., Ltd. (2) :

The words "properly brought" enure to the protection of the person out of the jurisdiction whom it is proposed to serve with process.

E In the case now before us, it was argued by counsel for the plaintiffs that the second and third defendants might waive any defence that was open to them. To permit the possibility of such a waiver to influence our decision in this case would be contrary to the spirit of the decision of the House of Lords in John Russell & Co., Ltd. v. Cayzer, Irvine & Co., Ltd. (2), where the fact that one of the defendants resident abroad had submitted to the jurisdiction of the English court was held not to establish that the action had been properly brought so as to enable a foreign defendant to be served with the writ. It seems to us that the duty is always on the court to see whether the action is properly brought, and that an action is not properly brought when the facts are all admitted and there is no question of foreign law, and on those facts it is apparent that the plaintiffs cannot succeed against the defendants served within the jurisdiction. In this particular case we think that it is clear that the court should be specially careful before allowing the writ to be served on the foreign defendant. We were informed that the ship was about 3,700 tons gross register, and it appears from the judgment of PILCHER, J., that the expense involved in salving what could be salvaged and in removing the obstruction will amount to some £250,000. Service of the writ on the foreign defendant may result in a tremendous financial liability on an entirely innocent shipowner. Inasmuch as the plaintiffs' claims against ship and cargo interests arise out of the same set of circumstances, viz., the sinking of the ship in a position where she and her cargo constituted an obstruction to the harbour, necessitating the removal operations of the plaintiffs, it seems clear to us that the owners of the ship and cargo would have been properly joined as co-defendants under R.S.C., Ord. 16, r. 4. The test laid down by LORD ESHER, M.R., (21 Q.B.D. 338), in Massey v. Heynes (3) applies, and we agree with the judge that the Belgian company would have been a "proper" party, and, therefore, that the first condition precedent of the rule under consideration is satisfied. Whether the Belgian company would have been a "necessary" party is another question. Prima facie, that condition means that without the addition of the foreign party the defendant within the jurisdiction is not or may not be liable, but that with that defendant also before the court his liability may be established.

The only issue for decision by us is, therefore, that which arises on the second condition, viz.: Can the action for the purpose of service out of the jurisdiction be regarded as one that was "properly brought?" Counsel for the Belgian company conceded that, if the plaintiffs' claim were based on allegations of fact which, although disputed by the defendants, would, if established, entitle them to succeed in the action, the action ought to be treated as properly brought. In such a case the issues of fact would have to be decided at the trial, but he argued that, when all the relevant facts are admitted and none is in dispute, and on the correct view of the law those facts do not entitle the plaintiffs to succeed in their action, then the second condition is not satisfied, the action is not "properly brought," and service out of the jurisdiction on another defendant cannot be allowed. Counsel for the plaintiffs contended that, if there is an arguable question of law which has to be solved before judgment can be given against the existing defendants on the record, it is sufficient to make the action one "properly brought." We agree with the submissions of counsel for the Belgian company as to the principles applicable. The judge, though disposed to think that in the end the Minister and the corporation would be held free from liability, held that the difficulty of solving that legal problem was enough to allow him in his general discretion to treat the great convenience of having the owners of the ship, as well as the owners of cargo, before the court as a sufficient reason for allowing service of the writ on the foreign defendant.

We proceed, therefore, to consider the question whether on the submitted facts it can be reasonably argued that the Minister or the corporation are liable to the plaintiffs in this action. First, we will discuss the legal liability of the Minister. Under the Ministry of Supply Act, 1939, the Minister, thereby created, is given power by s. 2 (1) (a) "to buy or otherwise acquire . . . articles required for the public service," which, by s. 19, are defined as including such things as made up the cargo of the Brabo. Section 2 (3) is as follows :—

His Majesty may by Order in Council apply in relation to the Minister or property for the time being vested in or under the control of the Minister, with any necessary modifications or adaptations, any of the provisions of the enactments set out in pt. II of the schedule to this Act.

Part II of the schedule includes the War Department Stores Act, 1867, s. 20, which contains the following provisions :

The Secretary of State for War may institute and prosecute any action, suit, or proceeding, civil or criminal, concerning military or ordnance stores, or other Her Majesty's stores under the charge or control of the Secretary of State for War, or any stores sold or contracted to be delivered to or by the Secretary of State for War for the use or on account of Her Majesty . . . and may defend any action, suit, or proceeding concerning any such stores, matter or thing as aforesaid . . . Provided always as follows : (1) Nothing herein shall take away or abridge in or in relation to any such action, suit, or proceeding any legal right, privilege, or prerogative of the Crown ; and in all such actions, suits, and proceedings, and in all matters and proceedings connected therewith, the Secretary of State for War may exercise and enjoy all such rights, privileges, and prerogatives as are for the time being exercised and enjoyed in any proceeding in any court of law or equity by the Crown, as if the Crown were actually a party to such action, suit, or proceeding : (2) It shall be lawful for Her Majesty, if and when it seems fit, to proceed by information in the Court of Exchequer, or by any other Crown process, legal or equitable, in any case in which it would have been competent for Her Majesty so to proceed if no provisions respecting procedure had been inserted in this Act.

The power of delegated legislation conferred by the Ministry of Supply Act, 1939, s. 2 (3), was duly exercised by the Ministry of Supply (Transfer of Powers) (No. 1) Order, 1939, art. 6 and sched. II, so as to put the Minister of Supply in the same statutory position in regard to s. 20 of the War Department Stores Act, 1867, as is occupied by the Secretary of State for War. The adaptation in sched. II to the order is in these words :

In s. 20 [of the War Department Stores Act, 1867] references to "the Secretary of State for War" shall be construed as including references to the Minister of Supply and the reference to "military or ordnance stores" as including a reference to any article belonging to or supplied by or for the purposes of the Minister of Supply.

Prima facie, no Minister is owner of Crown or government property. He is a mere agent of the Crown. He may be given by statute a right of action as if he were owner of such property—whether real or personal—but that does not make him an owner in fact or put on him the liabilities attaching to an owner in fact, and we cannot read into the Ministry of Supply Act, 1939, an intention to do more in the case of that Minister. Both parts of the Brabo's cargo would have come within the expression "military or ordnance stores," even if the Ministry of Supply (Transfer of Powers) (No. 1) Order, 1939, had never been passed, but the order makes that interpretation doubly clear. Steel bought at that time for war purposes by the British Purchasing Commission on behalf of the government and consigned to the corporation as agent of the Minister (as is stated in the affidavit of Mr. Fenwick, and not controverted by any evidence of the plaintiff authority) obviously was so acquired in the war as "ordnance stores," and the court can have no doubt that the wood-pulp also was. That brings the whole cargo within the terms of s. 20 of the Act of 1867, which in express terms treats all ordnance stores as the property of the Crown, and not of the Minister.

In so far as the question of ownership in the present case is one of fact, it was conceded by the plaintiffs both below and before us that the whole cargo was "government owned," and the judge so held in express terms. His findings on this cardinal point of fact are so definite that they should be quoted :

It was not disputed that the cargo on board the Brabo in respect of which some of the plaintiffs' expenses were incurred, was what is known as "government owned" and in that sense the property of the Crown. I had before me an affidavit sworn by Mr. Fenwick on behalf of the first defendants in which he states that the Minister of Supply was dealing with the cargo under the powers conferred upon him by the Ministry of Supply Act, 1939, and that the British Iron & Steel Corporation were the consignees named in the bill of lading covering certain steel billets, the shippers being the British Purchasing Commission. Mr. Fenwick also said that the third defendants were acting as agents for the Minister of Supply and were not themselves the owners of the goods. There is really no dispute in fact in the present case. Whilst the second defendant is a Minister of State and the third defendant a limited liability company, there is no doubt that the cargo was, to use once again the popular, but technically incorrect, expression, "government owned." It was conceded by Mr. Carmichael, who appeared for the plaintiffs, that the property in the Brabo's cargo was in the Crown subject to any qualification or limitation upon the Crown's proprietary rights which might properly be inferred from the provisions of the Ministry of Supply Act, 1939.

It is thus clear beyond doubt that the corporation also was a mere agent acting for the convenience of the Crown in performing ministerial duties such as customs entries in respect of imported steel. It is equally clear that the position of the Minister was not that of "owner" in the natural sense of the word, although the Ministry of Supply Act, 1939, must be scrutinised to see whether its terms require the court to hold that he is thereby made a statutory "owner" in some artificial sense for the purpose of the Acts under which the plaintiff authority was entitled to recover its wreck removal expenses from the "owner." Whether that is so is a question of interpretation of (a) the Ministry of Supply Act, 1939, and (b) the Acts containing the special powers on which the plaintiffs rely.

First, it is necessary to bear in mind the nature of the plaintiffs' claim. That claim is in respect neither of a contract, express or implied, nor of a tort. The indorsement on the writ is not so precise as we could wish in such a case, but it became clear in the course of the hearing here and below that it is based on a section in one of the plaintiffs' special Acts (the Tyne Improvement Act, 1890, s. 42). The first question that arises, once it is clear that the defendants within the jurisdiction are mere agents of the Crown in respect of goods which were the property of the Crown, is whether the Crown can be regarded as affected by a section which does not either expressly or by necessary implication mention the Crown. The only words which could be relied on for this purpose in the War Department Stores Act, 1867, [as adapted by the Ministry of Supply Act, 1939, and the order made thereunder] are the words in s. 20 :

... and [the Minister] may defend any action, suit, or proceeding concerning any such stores, matter or thing as aforesaid.

In view of the decision of this court in Minister of Supply v. British Thomson-Houston Co., Ltd. (4), it may be that the effect of these words is to confer on the subject, and so on the plaintiffs in this case, the right to bring an action as distinct from a petition of right against the Minister in respect of the cargo of the Brabo, and that it is no longer necessary for the plaintiffs to claim against the Crown by name nor to proceed by petition of right, but beyond this that section does not go, nor does it, apart from the proviso, deprive the Crown of any defences which otherwise would be open to it, and the proviso to the section makes it doubly clear that, though the party sued is not the Crown, but the Minister, yet the Minister has all the privileges and immunity which inherein the Crown.

Unless, therefore, something can be found in the special Acts of the plaintiffs, or the clauses incorporated with them, to negative what has been said above, the Minister of Supply is no more liable to a claim under the statute on which the plaintiffs sue than he would be for a claim in salvage. There it is well established that salvors of Crown property have no right to claim salvage even by a proceeding in rem. KENNEDY ON THE LAW OF CIVIL SALVAGE, 3rd ed., p. 77, states :

No salvage action in rem can be prosecuted against such ships [i.e., ships belonging to our own or to a foreign Sovereign State] or against stores on board of them, even though the ship is engaged in trade.

There is a reference to the speech of the EARL OF HALSBURY, L.C. ([1903] A.C. 504, 505) in Young v. The Scotia (5) :

Where you are dealing with an action in rem for salvage, the particular form of procedure which is adopted in the seizure of the vessel is only one mode of impleading the owner, and if the owner is the King the action cannot be maintained, since it is impossible to contend that the King can be impleaded in his own courts.

We turn, therefore, to the plaintiffs' special Acts. The Tyne Improvement Act, 1890, s. 42, on which the plaintiffs rely, is as follows :

In addition to the powers conferred upon the commissioners and the harbour master by the Harbours, Docks and Piers Clauses Act, 1847, s. 57, and to the powers conferred upon the commissioners by the Removal of Wrecks Act, 1877, and by the Tyne Improvement Act, 1886, s. 10, or any other Act the commissioners may on giving notice of their intention by advertisement inserted three times in each of two local newspapers circulated in the Tyne district sell break up or otherwise dispose of or may cause to be sold broken up or otherwise disposed of any wreck or any vessel or thing sunk stranded or abandoned or any obstruction within the port and may recover and receive the moneys (if any) arising therefrom and may retain out of such moneys any expenses incurred by them in lighting watching advertising buoying raising removing breaking up or selling such wreck vessel thing or obstruction or any part thereof or otherwise in any manner or for any purpose whatsoever in respect or on account of such wreck vessel thing or obstruction or any part thereof and also any charges or expenses incurred by the commissioners or the harbour master under the Harbours, Docks, and Piers Clauses Act, 1847, s. 57, or the Removal of Wrecks Act, 1877, s. 4, rendering the balance (if any) to the person who was the owner of such wreck vessel thing or obstruction immediately before it became a wreck or obstruction or was sunk stranded or abandoned and if there be no such moneys or if any such moneys be insufficient to cover all of such expenses and charges the commissioners may recover such expenses and charges or the unsatisfied balance thereof from such person or from any person who was the owner of such wreck vessel thing or obstruction at any time after it became a wreck or obstruction or was sunk stranded or abandoned and before it was sold by the commissioners by proceeding or action in any court of summary or competent jurisdiction. Provided always that for the purposes of this clause the word "vessel" shall include and extend to everything included in the same word in the Removal of Wrecks Act, 1877, under or by virtue of s. 6 of that Act.

The Removal of Wrecks Act, 1877, s. 6, defines "vessel" as including everything on board the vessel including the cargo.

So far as the second and third defendants in this case are concerned, we have seen that their "ownership" of what was on board this vessel was as agents of the Crown. Thus, here again, since the Crown is not expressly or by necessary implication touched by the section, the defendants are as free from liability as was, for instance, Lt.-Col. Pearson in Pearson v. Holborn Union Assessment Committee (6), (the case of lands purchased for a depot and training ground for a volunteer corps), but the careful analysis made by counsel for the Belgian company of the plaintiffs' special Acts relied on by counsel for the plaintiffs disclosed this further difficulty for the plaintiffs. Section 3 (1) of their Act of 1934 [Tyne Improvement Act, 1934] incorporates into each of their Acts from 1850 onwards various sections of the Harbours, Docks, and Piers Clauses Act, 1847. Of these sections, s. 99 is as follows :—

Nothing in this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith contained, shall extend to alienate, defeat, vary, lessen, abrogate, or prejudice any estate, right, title, interest, prerogative, royalty, jurisdiction, or authority, of or appertaining to the Queen's most excellent Majesty, nor to abridge, vary, or abrogate any of the powers or authorities by law vested in the Admiralty, or in the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Customs, or in the Commissioners of Woods, in relation to the possessions and land revenues of Her Majesty in right of her Crown, or otherwise howsoever.

This section may be compared with s. 28 of the same Act (also incorporated in the Act of 1934), exempting vessels in Her Majesty's or the public service from rates. As though s. 99 of the Act of 1847 were not a sufficient assertion of the Crown's reserved rights, we find s. 81 of the Act of 1934, which is as follows :

Nothing in this Act affects prejudicially any estate right power privilege or exemption of the Crown and in particular nothing herein authorises the commissioners to take use or in any manner interfere with any portion of the shore or bed of the sea or of any river channel creek bay or estuary or any land hereditament subjects or rights of whatsoever description belonging to His Majesty in right of His Crown and under the management of the commissioners of Crown lands or of the Board of Trade respectively without the consent in writing of the commissioners of Crown lands or the Board of Trade (as the case may be) on behalf of His Majesty first had and obtained for that purpose.

It was not, therefore, necessary for the Belgian company to go further and establish, as, nevertheless, they did to our satisfaction, that, even if the reservation of all Crown rights had not prevented any cause of action accruing against the second and third defendants, those defendants could have shown that the word "owner" in the Tyne Improvement Act, 1890, s. 42, carries no statutory extension of its meaning, except as regards a ship, where it includes "any charterer to whom the vessel is demised," the expanded meaning given to the word by s. 2 (2) of the plaintiffs' Act of 1934. The artificial meaning given to the words "'owner' in relation to goods" by s. 3 of the Act of 1890, viz., so as to include consignor, consignee, importer, shipper, exporter, receiver, broker or agent for sale or custody, is, in our opinion, there inserted only for the purposes of the collection of "harbour rates." It does not apply to claims under s. 42 against owners of wrecked vessels or their cargoes. The fact, therefore, that the corporation is said to have been consignee of some of this cargo is irrelevant, and affords no ground of liability under the section.

The judge in the court below appears to have read into the judgments of this court in Minister of Supply v. British Thomson-Houston Co., Ltd. (4), a wider scope than was intended by the Lords Justices or was germane to their decision. Had the claim in the present action against the Minister of Supply been based on contract to which he was a party, made within the powers conferred on him by statute, different considerations might apply, but, in respect of a claim of the kind made here, nothing in the Ministry of Supply Act, 1939, nor in the special Acts of the plaintiffs deprives the Crown (or the Crown's agents) of any of the legal rights, privileges or prerogatives of the Crown, except that, by reason of the Ministry of Supply Act, 1939, the Minister (we say nothing of the third defendant) cannot object to a proceeding against him taking the form of an action commenced by a writ, or to a counterclaim against him in an action in which he is plaintiff. It follows that, in our opinion, the appeal must be allowed.

That is the end of our joint judgment, but before we state the resultant orders of the court, I desire for myself only, and without committing my brethren, to call public attention to certain aspects of our British legislation about wreck removal. Whether the rights of action conferred on the Tyne Commissioners are identical with, or wider or narrower than, the statutory rights conferred on other harbour authorities in the United Kingdom I have not examined, but I assume that they are similar. If they are, the position revealed by the litigation before us gives ground for thought. Both the judge and we were informed that the total expenditure incurred by the plaintiffs in the "wreck removal" of the Brabo and her cargo was about £250,000. Of the Brabo we know little, except that she was a small steamer owned in Belgium and flying the Belgian flag, and at the time was under charter to the British government. Whether, under the plaintiffs' statutory powers of wreck-removal, owners of ship and cargo are jointly and severally liable, or each only in respect of his own interest on some basis of proportionate adjustment, has, of course, not been argued before us, but the plain fact stares us in the face that the sinking of the Brabo in the plaintiffs' harbour was not caused by any tortious act of her owners, the Belgian company, towards the harbour authority. She was towed into the harbour, instead of being beached outside in some innocuous position, in all probability for some reason of war expediency, and without consultation with her owners. And if the owners of the ship were not guilty of any tort towards the plaintiffs, a fortiori the owners of her cargo were not. It is equally true that the harbour authority have done nothing wrong and that, because of their duty to clear the port of obstructions, they had to meet an unexpected and tremendous expense, and, if they cannot recover it from any third party, that means a great hardship for them. These plain facts seem to demand reconsideration by Parliament of the whole question of statutory liability for wreck-removal. It may be that the national interest of keeping our harbours clear of obstructions would justify a financial policy of treating that type of expenditure as one to be borne by the national exchequer.

There is a further principle of legislative policy regarding maritime commerce, to which also this appeal invites public attention, that of limitation of shipowners' liability. That principle has been applied in the western world for two centuries or more, the basic rule on the continent making the value of the ship at the end of the voyage the limit of her owner's liability, whereas the United Kingdom in the middle of last century converted that measure into a sterling limit per ton of registered tonnage, based on the then average value of ships. On the continent the cost of wreck-removal, when recoverable from the owner of the ship, has always been treated as one of the marine liabilities of the voyage and, as such, has been brought within the continental system of limitation of shipowners' liability. In the United Kingdom that has never been the case. The right of recovery was only obtained from Parliament by the harbour authorities gradually, and the shipowners were never given the right to limit that liability. Under the continental system, if there was a total loss before the end of the voyage, its owner's liabilities were at an end. In 1926, as the result of the efforts of the Comité Maritime International (the unofficial international body which prepared the draft conventions on collisions and salvage which were, after diplomatic ratification, passed into law by our Parliament in 1911 [the Maritime Conventions Act, 1911]), an international convention on the limitation of shipowners' liability was passed at Brussels by a diplomatic conference—as I know because I signed it on behalf of H.M.'s Government (ad referendum). Its object was to bring about a world-wide uniformity in the law of the sea relating to limitation of shipowners' liability. That convention included wreck removal as one of the heads of liability to be limited. Our government was then prepared to ratify the convention subject only to two exceptions. One was about damage to the property of docks and harbour authorities (for which Parliament had in 1906 granted a certain limitation); and the other was a reservation of the right to exclude liability for wreck-removal altogether, or, alternatively, only to ratify on condition of reciprocity on that head. On the other hand, Belgium, in 1929, passed the whole convention into law, thus including limitation for wreck-removal, and under the convention the limit of liability was still the value of the ship at the end of the voyage, although the British limit of £8 per ton was added as a maximum with another £8 in case of life claims. It follows that in Belgian law the owners of the Brabo would be under no liability at all for the costs of removing her wreck, if she had sunk in a Belgian port, or if the present proceedings were taken in Belgium.

There is an additional reason for immediate consideration being given to the above aspects of public policy by all the interests affected. The Comité Maritime International is holding an international conference in Antwerp on Sept. 24, 1947, to re-consider the Limitation Convention with a view to its more general legislative adoption, together with two other conventions already passed by diplomatic conferences, ratified by many countries and passed into law by some—one on maritime mortgages and liens (the latter subject affecting the Limitation Convention), and the other on the present immunity of state-owned ships from legal proceedings (see Cmd. Papers of 1938, 5672-3). It will be very helpful to the attainment of uniformity in maritime law, if the conference then has the benefit of the views of those interests in this country which are affected by the aspects to which I have drawn attention, as arising out of the present appeal.

A BUCKNILL, L.J. : I have had an opportunity of reading my Lord's rider to the judgment of the court. I agree with him in thinking that the statute which imposes an unlimited liability on the innocent owner of a sunken ship to repay the cost of raising her deserves the consideration of Parliament with a view to amendment. By "an innocent owner" I mean an owner who is not to blame for the sinking of the ship. I also agree with my Lord that international unification of law as to the liability of a shipowner for the cost of raising his ship is very desirable, and that efforts should be made to arrange agreement about that among all maritime countries or such as are worthy of the support of our government.

B WROTIESLEY, L.J. : I lay no claim to the knowledge or experience which enables SCOTT, L.J., to speak with authority concerning the international convention on the limitation of shipowners' liability, but every lawyer must, I think, agree on the desirability of the law relating to such a claim as is dealt with in our judgment being uniform in all countries with shipping interests. In particular, I cannot but notice that the section under which the claim in this case is framed is not even the general law of this country, but is a section in a private Act relating to this particular harbour. There are fields, such as public health, a domestic matter, in which private Acts granting new and special powers are most beneficial, heralding important reforms which only later find their way into the country's general law, but the law which is going to govern the shipping of the world at large should not, in my judgment, come under such a heading.

Appeal allowed with costs.

Solicitors: Bentleys, Stokes & Lowless (for the conservancy authority); Holman, Fenwick & Willan (for the Belgian company).

[Reported by C. ST. J. NICHOLSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

E NOTE.

W. DAVIS (SPITALFIELDS), LTD. v. HUNTLEY AND OTHERS.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Tucker, Somervell and Evershed, L.J.J.), June 26, 27, 1947.]

Landlord and Tenant—Notice to quit—Validity of notice—Lease determinable by 3 months' notice at any time—No date for possession specified in notice.

APPEAL by the tenants from a decision of HENN COLLINS, J., dated Jan. 13, 1947 ([1947] 1 All E.R. 246).

F A lease made on May 14, 1935, was determinable by 3 calendar months' notice at any time. By a written notice dated Apr. 21, 1945, and delivered by post on Apr. 23, 1945, the landlords gave to the tenants 3 months' notice terminating the lease, but without specifying the date on which possession was to be given. The tenants served a notice on the landlords under the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927, s. 5 (1), requiring a new lease of the premises in lieu of compensation. At the same time they claimed that the notice to quit was not a valid notice and that the lease of 1935 was still subsisting. G HENN COLLINS, J., held (i) that the notice to quit was valid and the period of 3 months commenced to run from the date of its receipt by the tenants; (ii) that a tenant who asks for a new tenancy under the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927, s. 5 (1), cannot be heard to say that the old tenancy is still subsisting, even if he fails to obtain a new tenancy and eventually claims compensation. The tenants appealed.

Kennedy Kisch for the tenants.

Gerald Upjohn, K.C., and Squibb for the landlords.

H THE COURT OF APPEAL rejected the argument of counsel for the tenants that the notice to quit was invalid for uncertainty, holding that the terms of the notice to quit did not leave the tenants in any doubt as to its intended effect and that the notice was valid. As the notice to quit was valid and the tenancy thereby terminated, the court did not decide the point whether a tenant who asks for a new tenancy under the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927, s. 5 (1), thereby admits that the original tenancy has been terminated.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: James H. Fellowes (for the appellants); Lucien A. Isaacs (for the respondents).

[Reported by R. L. ZIAR, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

MILLER v. MINISTER OF PENSIONS.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Denning, J.), July 2, 25, 1947.]

Royal Forces—Pension—Burden of proof—Medical evidence—Death from cancer—Royal Warrant Concerning Retired Pay, Pensions, etc., 1943 (Cmd. 1943, No. 6489), art. 4 (2) (3) (4).

The applicant's husband served in the army from 1915 until his death in 1944. He served in the Middle East from 1940 until 1944, when he became hoarse and found difficulty in eating. He reported sick and his disease was diagnosed as cancer of the gullet. He died within a month of reporting sick. The tribunal rejected the applicant's claim for the higher pension granted to widows of soldiers whose death was due to war service :—

HELD : the tribunal had properly directed itself as to the burden of proof, and the conclusion of fact drawn by the tribunal—that the whole of the probabilities were that war service played no part—could reasonably be drawn from the primary facts having regard to the burden of proof.

Per curiam : In cases falling under art. 4 (2) and art. 4 (3) of the Royal Warrant Concerning Retired Pay, Pensions, etc., 1943 (which are generally cases where the man was passed fit at the commencement of his service but is later afflicted by a disease which leads to his death or discharge) there is a compelling presumption in the man's favour which must prevail unless the evidence proves beyond reasonable doubt that the disease was not attributable to or aggravated by war service, and for that purpose the evidence must reach the same degree of cogency as is required in a criminal case before an accused person is found guilty. That degree is well settled. It need not reach certainty, but it must carry a high degree of probability. Proof beyond reasonable doubt does not mean proof beyond the shadow of a doubt. The law would fail to protect the community if it admitted fanciful possibilities to deflect the course of justice. If the evidence is so strong against a man as to leave only a remote possibility in his favour which can be dismissed with the sentence "of course it is possible, but not in the least probable," the case is proved beyond reasonable doubt, but nothing short of that will suffice.

In cases falling under art. 4 (2) and art. 4 (4) (which are generally cases where the man was fit on his discharge, but incapacitated later by a disease) there is no compelling presumption in his favour, and the case must be decided according to the preponderance of probability. If at the end of the case the evidence turns the scale definitely one way or the other, the tribunal must decide accordingly, but if the evidence is so evenly balanced that the tribunal is unable to come to a determinate conclusion one way or the other, then the man must be given the benefit of the doubt. This means that the case must be decided in favour of the man unless the evidence against him reaches the same degree of cogency as is required to discharge a burden in a civil case. That degree is well settled. It must carry a reasonable degree of probability, but not so high as is required in a criminal case. If the evidence is such that the tribunal can say: "We think it more probable than not," the burden is discharged but, if the probabilities are equal, it is not.

It is useless for a medical man to give an opinion that a disease is or is not attributable to, or aggravated by, war service without giving his reasons. Such an opinion should be disregarded by a tribunal because it involves not only his scientific knowledge, but also his views on causation, the meaning of "attributable," "war service," and so forth, all of which are matters for the tribunal and not for him. Such an opinion is merely his view as to the way the tribunal ought to decide, and is an opinion which, if rightly formed, could only be drawn from the same premises as those from which the tribunal are to determine the matter. To be of value, a medical opinion should not be in general terms such as to usurp the function of the tribunal, but should point out the probable or possible causes of the disease and of any aggravation of it, giving the degree of probability, and then leaving it to the tribunal to decide whether or not on the facts of the particular case the claim should be allowed. In cases where the aetiology, i.e., the scientific origin of the disease is known, there is or should be little difficulty in stating the causes of the disease and of any aggravation of it, but the cases where the aetiology is unknown or imperfectly known present great difficulty. If nothing else appears except that the cause is unknown, the only proper conclusion is that the Minister cannot discharge the burden of proof because the unknown cause may be a cause incidental to war service.

A [AS TO WAR PENSIONS, GENERALLY, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 34, pp. 777 et seq., paras. 1094 et seq.; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST Supp.]

Cases referred to :

- (1) Bracegirdle v. Oxley, [1947] 1 All E.R. 126; [1947] K.B. 349; 176 L.T. 187.
- (2) Donovan v. Minister of Pensions, (1946), not reported.
- (3) Starr v. Minister of Pensions, Nuttall v. Minister of Pensions, Bourne v. Minister of Pensions, [1946] 1 All E.R. 400; [1946] K.B. 345; 115 L.J.K.B. 449; 175 L.T. 1; Reports of Selected War Pensions Appeals, Vol. 1, p. 125.
- B (4) Williams v. Minister of Pensions, (1947), Reports of Selected War Pensions Appeals, Vol. 1, p. 503.
- (5) Briggs v. Minister of Pensions, (1946), Reports of Selected War Pensions Appeals, Vol. 1, p. 211.
- (6) Burbridge v. Minister of Pensions, (1947), Reports of Selected War Pensions Appeals, Vol. 1, p. 307.
- C (7) Forster v. Minister of Pensions, (1946), Reports of Selected War Pensions Appeals, Vol. 1, p. 145.
- (8) Wedderspoon v. Minister of Pensions, [1947] K.B. 562; 177 L.T. 8; Reports of Selected War Pensions Appeals, Vol. 1, p. 347.

APPEAL by the widow of a regular army officer, who had died during war service of cancer of the gullet. The tribunal rejected her claim for the higher pension granted to widows of soldiers whose death is due to war service, and

D DENNING, J., now dismissed her appeal from that decision.

G. H. Crispin for the appellant.

H. L. Parker for the Minister.

Cur. adv. vult.

July 25. DENNING, J., read the following judgment. Captain Miller joined the army in 1915 at the age of 18 and served for 30 years until his death in 1944 at the age of 48. During the recent war he went out to the Middle East in Aug., 1940, and was there continuously until his fatal illness. In the middle of 1944 he became hoarse and could not eat much. He reported sick and was taken to hospital where his illness was diagnosed as cancer of the gullet, or, in medical language, carcinoma of the oesophagus. He was flown back to this country, but he died soon after he arrived here, less than one month after he reported sick. His widow is entitled to a pension on account of his long service, but she claims the higher pension granted to widows of soldiers whose death is due to war service. The tribunal rejected the claim. The question is whether they erred in point of law in so doing.

The first point of law in the present appeal is whether the tribunal properly directed itself as to the burden of proof. The proper direction is covered by decisions of this court. It is as follows.

- G 1. In cases falling under art. 4 (2) and art. 4 (3) of the Royal Warrant Concerning Retired Pay, Pensions, etc., 1943 (which are generally cases where the man was passed fit at the commencement of his service, but is later afflicted by a disease which leads to his death or discharge) there is a compelling presumption in the man's favour which must prevail unless the evidence proves beyond reasonable doubt that the disease was not attributable to or aggravated by war service, and for that purpose the evidence must reach the same degree of cogency as is required in a criminal case before an accused person is found guilty. That degree is well settled. It need not reach certainty, but it must carry a high degree of probability. Proof beyond reasonable doubt does not mean proof beyond the shadow of a doubt. The law would fail to protect the community if it admitted fanciful possibilities to deflect the course of justice. If the evidence is so strong against a man as to leave only a remote possibility in his favour which can be dismissed with the sentence "of course it is possible, but not in the least probable," the case is proved beyond reasonable doubt, but nothing short of that will suffice.
- H

2. In cases falling under art. 4 (2) and art. 4 (4) (which are generally cases where the man was fit on his discharge, but incapacitated later by a disease) there is no compelling presumption in his favour, and the case must be decided according to the preponderance of probability. If at the end of the case the evidence turns the scale definitely one way or the other, the tribunal must decide accordingly, but if the evidence is so evenly balanced that the tribunal is unable to come to a determinate conclusion one way or the other, then the man must be given the benefit of the doubt. This means that the case must be decided in favour of the man unless the evidence against him reaches the same degree of cogency as is required to discharge a burden in a civil case. That degree is well settled. It must carry a reasonable degree of probability, but not so high as is required in a criminal case. If the evidence is such that the tribunal can say: "We think it more probable than not," the burden is discharged, but, if the probabilities are equal, it is not.

The present case falls under the first category. There are passages in the transcript of the proceedings before the tribunal, which, taken by themselves, look as if the tribunal were not properly directing themselves as to the degree of probability required to discharge the burden of proof, but, when the transcript is read as a whole, I think the tribunal had the proper test in mind.

The second point of law is whether the conclusion of fact drawn by the tribunal could reasonably be drawn from the primary facts, having regard to the burden of proof: see Bracegirdle v. Oxley (1), ([1947] 1 All E.R. 130). This involves an assessment of the medical evidence. It is useless for a medical man to give an opinion that a disease is or is not attributable to, or aggravated by, war service without giving his reasons. Such an opinion should be disregarded by a tribunal because it involves not only his scientific knowledge, but also his views on causation, the meaning of "attributable," "war service," and so forth, all of which are matters for the tribunal and not for him. Such an opinion is merely his view as to the way the tribunal ought to decide, and is an opinion which, if rightly formed, could only be drawn from the same premises as those from which the tribunal are to determine the matter. To be of value, a medical opinion should not be in general terms such as to usurp the function of the tribunal, but should point out the probable or possible causes of the disease and of any aggravation of it, giving the degree of probability, and then leaving it to the tribunal to decide whether or not on the facts of the particular case the claim should be allowed. In cases where the aetiology, i.e., the scientific origin of the disease is known, there is or should be little difficulty in stating the causes of the disease and of any aggravation of it, but the cases where the aetiology is unknown or imperfectly known present great difficulty. If nothing else appears except that the cause is unknown, the only proper conclusion is that the Minister cannot discharge the burden of proof because the unknown cause may be a cause incidental to war service. That was the position in Donovan's case (2), concerning the rare disease called lymphadenoma or Hodgkin's disease. In many cases, however, although the aetiology is unknown, experience and statistics are able to throw light on the circumstances in which the disease arises or develops. Thus, in disseminated sclerosis the aetiology is unknown, but experience shows that external factors may influence its onset or development, and claims have been allowed accordingly: see Nuttall (3), and Williams (4); whereas in schizophrenia, although the precise cause is unknown, experience shows that in the great majority of cases it is essentially independent of external circumstances. That makes it highly probable that in the ordinary way schizophrenia is not attributable to or aggravated by war service, and claims have been rejected accordingly: see Briggs (5), and Burbridge (6); but the weight of this evidence may be counter-balanced if there is anything reasonably to suggest in the particular case that any incident of war service may have played a part, such as exceptional stress or strain immediately preceding the onset of symptoms. Medical men cannot exclude that as a precipitating cause, because statistics show that in a minority of cases schizophrenia has been preceded by severe stress. In such cases, therefore, claims have been allowed: see Forster (7).

I turn now to the evidence in the present case. It is regarded as a test case of cancer of the oesophagus and was referred to an independent medical expert, Sir Ernest Rock Carling. His opinion was adverse to the claim, but

- there were other opinions in evidence favourable to it. One thing is clear, and that is that the aetiology of cancer is unknown. That means that, despite all the research that has been done, medical men have not been able to find out the origin of the disease so as to demonstrate, as a matter of science, how it arises. Such knowledge as they have of its cause, and it is very little, is based, not on science, but on experience and statistics. For instance, the percentage of chimney sweeps who suffer from carcinoma of the scrotum is sufficiently high to warrant the inference that the irritation of soot has something to do with it, and there are cancers in other parts of the body which on statistical grounds can be associated with irritation of one kind or another. On this account Dr. Beaumont thought that carcinoma of the oesophagus might have resulted in this case from an irritant in food, swallowed in the Middle East, such as sand. This suggestion was rejected, however, by other doctors because of the rarity of cancer of the oesophagus in men serving in the desert. Sir Ernest Rock Carling said the suggestion was highly speculative, and Dr. Dixon dismissed it as quite outside the bounds of probability. Another suggestion given by a text book in reference to carcinoma of the oesophagus was that "there is often an apparent connection with irritants in the form of spirit drinking and the habitual consumption of excessively hot liquids." This was rejected by Sir Ernest Rock Carling who pointed out that cancer of the oesophagus is predominantly a male disorder, and the habits there mentioned are not confined to men. Even if the suggestion is well founded, however, those habits are habits in the man's personal sphere and not attributable to war service: see Wedderspoon's case (8). No other external factor was mentioned by any doctor, but many were negatived. There was evidence, based, no doubt, on experience and statistics, that for all practical purposes cancer is not looked on as contagious or infectious, and that cancer of the oesophagus is unrelated to employment or environment. There was also the striking fact that there have been, apparently, 45 cases only of cancer of the oesophagus among men in the services from all theatres of war, including the United Kingdom, between 1939 and 1946, or roughly 7 cases a year, which is a minute fraction of the total number of cases reported in the United Kingdom every year, viz., 1,700. The very fact that, despite the close attention that has been given to the problem, experience and statistics can point to no external factor, seems to support Dr. Kirby's view that:

... in general cancer pursues its inevitable and inexorable course without being influenced by the intervention of external factors or agencies.

There remains the doubt, however, due to its unknown aetiology, that it is possible that war service played some part. On that account Mr. Horace Evans said:

- I am unable to state with any degree of certainty that service factors have played no part.

Sir Ernest Rock Carling said:

It is impossible to assert that nothing whatever in the environment had an influence in causation.

- The question is: What degree of doubt do those opinions impart? Do they give rise to a reasonable doubt or not? That was essentially a matter for the tribunal.

- The weight to be attached to the various opinions and the assessment of the degree of probability were essentially matters for the tribunal. They came to the conclusion that the whole of the probabilities were that war service played no part. They recognised the existence of a possibility the other way, but dismissed it as too remote saying, in effect: "Of course, it is possible, but not in the least probable." I cannot say they could not reasonably come to that conclusion. The appeal, is, therefore, dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Culross & Trelawney (for the appellant); Treasury Solicitor (for the respondent).

[Reported by W. J. ALDERMAN, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

TERRITORIAL FORCES ASSOCIATION v. PHILPOT.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Denning, J.), July 24, 1947.]

Landlord and Tenant—Rent restriction—Crown property—Flat owned by county Territorial Association—Whether exempt from Rent Restrictions Acts.

In 1908, on the formation of the Territorial Army, a county Territorial and Auxiliary Forces Association took a transfer of a lease of premises consisting of gun sheds on the ground floor, with flats above used by instructors of the Territorial Army. In 1930 the association acquired the freehold. About 1941, the flats became vacant and were let to various people unconnected with the Territorial Army, including the defendant. The premises were later required by the association for a permanent staff of instructors, and they, therefore, sought possession of them.

Held: premises acquired in this way and held by the association were held for the public purposes of the country, for the purposes of government, and for the defence of the realm, and were, therefore, within the exemption of the Crown from the operation of the Rent Restrictions Acts.

[AS TO PREMISES WITHIN THE RENT RESTRICTIONS ACTS, see HALSBURY, Halsam Edn., Vol. 20, pp. 312-316, paras. 368-373; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 31, pp. 557-559, Nos. 7042-7067; and DIGEST SUPP., title Landlord and Tenant, No. 7028a et seq.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Clark v. Downes, Clark v. Mawby, (1931), 145 L.T. 20; Digest Supp.
- (2) Mersey Docks & Harbour Board v. Cameron, Jones v. Mersey Docks, (1865), 11 H.L. Cas. 443; 20 C.B.N.S. 56; 6 New Rep. 378; 35 L.J.M.C. 1; 12 L.T. 643; 29 J.P. 483; 38 Digest 466, 286.
- (3) Wixon v. Thomas, Lambert v. Thomas, Burrows v. Thomas, [1911] 1 K.B. 43; 80 L.J.K.B. 104; 103 L.T. 731; 75 J.P. 58; 38 Digest 487, 447.
- (4) Derby (Territorial Army Association) v. Derby (South Eastern Area) Assessment Committee, [1935] 2 K.B. 373; 104 L.J.K.B. 611; 153 L.T. 340; 99 J.P. 260; Digest Supp.

Action for possession of a flat. The facts appear in the headnote and the judgment.

R. M. Wilson for the landlords.

Aarvold for the tenant.

DENNING, J.: In this case the Territorial and Auxiliary Forces Association of the County of London, seek possession of flat No. 14, Territorial House, Reedworth Street, Lambeth, which was let to Mr. Philpot, the defendant, in Oct., 1942, at a weekly rent of £1 7s. 6d. Notice to quit has been given, and the association claim possession.

The case falls within the Rent Restrictions Acts, and prima facie, therefore, the tenant is protected by those Acts, but it is said that this dwelling-house is exempted from the operation of the Acts as being Crown property. It has been settled, ever since Clark v. Downes (1), that Crown property is outside the Rent Restrictions Acts. The question is whether this flat is Crown property within the meaning of the exemption. That depends on the purposes for which the property was, and is, held by the association.

The facts, as I find them, are that before 1908 this property was in the occupation of a volunteer force. In 1908, when the Territorial Army was formed, the lease of the property was transferred to the Territorial Association, who eventually acquired the freehold in 1930. On the ground floor gun sheds were erected, and the upper part consisted of flats for the use of instructors of the Territorial Army, other parts of the premises being used as drill grounds. The whole was one curtilage, intended for the exclusive use of the Territorial Army, and that was its condition up to the outbreak of war. On the outbreak of war, when the Territorial Force merged into the regular army, the association did not have so many administrative functions to fulfil, and in 1941 or 1942 these flats became vacant. With the bombing, there was a great shortage of accommodation, and the association let the flats to individuals who were in need of accommodation. One of the people to whom one of the flats was let was the tenant, Mr. Philpot, and he has continued to occupy it until the present day. The Territorial Army has now become active again, and the association need the premises for the accommodation of permanent staff instructors. A number of instructors of the Territorial Army are working in London for the association, and they are sorely in need of accommodation. Therefore, the association have brought this action to test the position whether or no the tenant is protected by the Rent Restrictions Acts.

A A number of cases have been cited to me dealing with rating, and it is plain that, if premises are occupied for public purposes and are, therefore, deemed part of the use and service of the Crown, they are exempted from rating. The true principle, and the only one, of exemption in the old days from the Statute of Elizabeth [43 Eliz. c. 2] in regard to rating is that which is furnished by the rule that the sovereign is not bound by statute unless there is express intention to that effect. This appears from the judgment of LORD WESTBURY in Mersey Docks & Harbour Board v. Cameron (2), approving, as he was, the opinion of BLACKBURN, J., in that case and giving the opinion of the majority. That B exemption in rating cases has been granted to premises acquired by county associations under the Territorial Forces Act, 1907, e.g., in Wixon v. Thomas (3).

So much for common law and where the exemption is by statute in rating, where a hereditament is occupied by or on behalf of public services: see Derby (Territorial Army Association) v. Derby (South Eastern Area) Assessment Committee (4). I have read the statutes in relation to these associations and I have read the regulations made under the Territorial and Reserve Forces C Act, 1907, s. 4. It is plain that these associations are incorporated bodies acting for the public purposes of this country in relation to the training of the Territorial Army, and that their expenses come out of the Army funds which are voted each year by Parliament, and, further, that in all their doings, not only in relation to the instructors and staff, but in their properties and their D lettings, they are all subject to the direct control of the War Office and the Army Council. I have no doubt that properties acquired in this way and held by these associations are held for the public purposes of the country, for the purposes of government, and, indeed for the defence of the realm. I, therefore, hold that this property is within the exemption in favour of the Crown and does not fall within the Rent Restrictions Acts, and, therefore, the plaintiffs are entitled to possession.

Judgment for plaintiffs.

E Solicitors: Fladgate & Co. (for the landlords); Neil McLean & Co. (for the tenant).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

MORRIS v. MORRIS, MORRIS AND MANNING (KING'S PROCTOR SHOWING CAUSE).

F [PROBATE, DIVORCE AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION (Willmer, J.), July 17, 18, 24, 1947.]

Divorce—Evidence—Non-access—Bastardization of issue—Evidence directed solely to issue of condonation.

Evidence by a husband denying intercourse, even though it be directed solely to the issue of condonation, is inadmissible if the effect of such evidence is to bastardize a child born in wedlock.

G Observations of LORD MERRIMAN, P., and PILCHER, J., in Glenister v. Glenister ([1945] 1 All E.R. 514) disagreed with.

Observations of LORD DUNEDIN in Russell v. Russell ([1924] A.C. 687 at pp. 728, 729) considered and explained.

[AS TO THE RULE IN Russell v. Russell, see HALSBURY, Vol. 10, p. 663, para. 976; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 27, pp. 297-298, Nos. 2743-2753.]

H Cases referred to:

- (1) Russell v. Russell, [1924] A.C. 687; 93 L.J.P. 97; 131 L.T. 482; 27 Digest 297, 2743.
- (2) Glenister v. Glenister, [1945] 1 All E.R. 513; [1945] P. 30; 114 L.J.P. 69; 172 L.T. 250; 109 J.P. 194; Digest Supp.
- (3) Goodright d. Stevens v. Moss, (1777), 2 Cowp. 591; 98 E.R. 1257; 3 Digest 365, 58.
- (4) Rowell v. Rowell, [1900] 1 Q.B. 9; 69 L.J.Q.B. 55; 81 L.T. 429; C.A.; 27 Digest 246, 2172.
- (5) Gaskill v. Gaskill, [1921] P. 425; 90 L.J.P. 339; 126 L.T. 115; 27 Digest 298, 2753.

INTERVENTION by the King's Proctor to set aside a decree nisi of divorce obtained on the ground of adultery. The learned judge held that the adultery alleged in the petition had been condoned by the husband with full knowledge of the facts and rescinded the decree.

John Syms for the King's Proctor.

Petrie for the husband.

The wife was not represented.

Cur. adv. vult.

July 24. WILLMER, J., read the following judgment. This case arises out of an intervention by the King's Proctor to show cause why a decree nisi pronounced in favour of the husband on Oct. 31, 1946, should not be made absolute. The petition was based on the alleged adultery of the wife with two named co-respondents. The case, which was undefended, came before MR. COMMISSIONER WETHERED, when the adultery was proved by confessions voluntarily made by the wife and both co-respondents. It is now alleged by the King's Proctor that the husband presented a false case, in that he omitted to inform the court that he had condoned the alleged adultery by living with the wife and having intercourse with her, with full knowledge of the facts after learning of the alleged adultery.

The adultery complained of took place while the husband was away from home on military service during 1943 and 1944, and again in 1945, after the husband's discharge, during a period of some four months when he was living away from home. It is common ground that from then onwards the husband lived with the wife until some time in June, 1946. It is also common ground that on June 15, 1946, the husband and the wife attended together at the office of the husband's solicitors, when the wife voluntarily made and signed a full confession of her adultery. From that time onwards, therefore, on everybody's case, the husband had full knowledge of the wife's adultery. The case for the King's Proctor is that some time previously, early in June, the wife had confessed her adultery privately to the husband. Notwithstanding this it is alleged that the husband continued to live with the wife at the home of the wife's mother, share the same bed with her, and have sexual intercourse with her, until about June 29, when it is said that he went away to live with his own parents. It is further alleged that even after that date the husband continued to visit the wife, and to spend odd nights with her, enjoying sexual intercourse, about twice a week, until the night of August Bank Holiday, 1946. During the material period—i.e., from early June to early August, 1946—there is no evidence to show that the wife committed adultery with any man. The case is complicated by the fact that on Apr. 3, 1947—i.e., some five months' after the decree nisi was pronounced, and some considerable time after the King's Proctor's intervention—the wife gave birth to a child, who is, of course, prima facie a child of the marriage. The evidence of the midwife who was present at the birth is that the child was a full time, normal baby. The child is alive to-day.

In these circumstances the question arises whether, having regard to the rule in Russell v. Russell (1), it is competent for the husband, in order to rebut the allegation that he condoned his wife's previous adultery, to give evidence denying that he had intercourse with her after learning of the adultery. This point was quite properly brought to my attention by counsel on behalf of the King's Proctor, who at the same time disclaimed any desire to succeed on a mere technical rule of evidence or to prevent the husband from having the fullest and most free opportunity of presenting by his own evidence his own version of the facts. Since the parties were present in court, and had travelled a considerable distance to London for the hearing of the case, I deemed it expedient, rather than keep them waiting about while the technical question of the admissibility of the evidence was determined, to take the evidence, not only of the other witnesses but also of the husband and the wife. de bene esse, but, the question having been raised, I must still determine how much, if any, of the husband's evidence was admissible.

In Glenister v. Glenister (2) ([1945] 1 All E.R. 514) LORD MERRIMAN, P., is reported to have said that evidence by a husband denying intercourse was clearly admissible to rebut any question of condonation, notwithstanding the subsequent birth of a child. A similar view was expressed by PILCHER, J., in the same case (ibid., 521). These expressions of view, if they are binding on me, are, of course, completely decisive of the point raised in this case, but it is, I think, to be noted that the actual question which arose for decision in Glenister v. Glenister (2) was whether a reasonable, though mistaken, belief by a husband that his wife had been guilty of adultery was sufficient cause to justify the husband in leaving the wife, so as to afford a good defence to a charge of desertion. The observations made by the learned President and PILCHER, J., were in no wise necessary for the decision of that question, and I think, therefore, that I must

A clearly treat them as obiter. While fully conscious of the respect which is due to such expressions of opinion by two such experienced judges, I conceive it to be my duty, now that the point has arisen directly for decision in the present case, to examine the grounds on which their opinion was based and to form my own conclusions on the point. LORD MERRIMAN, P., cites as his authority for saying that evidence by a husband denying intercourse with his wife must be admissible on the question of condonation a passage in the speech of LORD DUNEDIN in Russell v. Russell (1) ([1924] A.C. 728, 729). What LORD DUNEDIN there said was as follows :

B But then it is said that the testimony of the spouses has been admitted in many other cases—in nullity, condonation, cruelty, and, lastly, in adultery, in the Divorce Court of recent years. Now as regards nullity, cruelty and condonation I do not feel the slightest difficulty ; the whole point of LORD MANSFIELD'S dictum rests on the concluding words : “ and to make the issue spurious,” in other words, it is when conjugal conduct is used, not as a thing in itself, but as leading to other inferences that the harm comes in. No proof of conduct or want of conduct which shows nullity, no proof of cruelty, such as communicating venereal disease, no proof of connection such as in itself is condonation, has the remotest reference to the point of legitimacy of issue. The evidence of the spouses in these cases is the only evidence available to the direct fact in issue, and has in the giving of it no evil consequences.

C This passage has been interpreted to mean that whenever it may be necessary D for the purpose of rebutting any suggestion of condonation a husband is at liberty to give evidence denying intercourse, notwithstanding that the effect of such evidence may be to bastardize a child subsequently born. If this is what LORD DUNEDIN meant, his view is clearly opposed to that of LORD FINLAY, who in terms expressed the contrary opinion (ibid., 719). It is also, in my judgment, equally clearly opposed to the view of LORD BIRKENHEAD, who expressed his conclusion in the following words (ibid., 704) :

E . . . the rule as laid down by LORD MANSFIELD, and other great judges, is a general rule to be applied, in the full generality of its scope, to all cases which it is wide enough to cover.

The rule as laid down by LORD MANSFIELD was laid down in 1777 in Goodright's case (3), in two passages which are quoted by LORD BIRKENHEAD in Russell v. Russell (1) ([1924] A.C. 697). The first of these passages is as follows F (2 Cowp. 592) :

The law of England is clear, that the declarations of a father or mother cannot be admitted to bastardize the issue born after marriage.

In the second passage LORD MANSFIELD said (2 Cowp. 594) :

G As to the time of the birth, the father and mother are the most proper witnesses to prove it. But it is a rule founded on decency, morality and policy that they shall not be permitted to say after marriage, that they had had no connection, and therefore that the offspring is spurious . . .

H If the rule as so stated is to be applied, in the full generality of its scope, to all cases which it is wide enough to cover, how can an exception be made in cases where it is sought to adduce evidence of the kind in question to rebut a suggestion of condonation ? With the greatest respect for the view expressed by LORD MERRIMAN, P., and PILCHER, J., I do not believe that the words used by LORD DUNEDIN, in the passage from his speech which I have quoted, bear the meaning which has been imputed to them.

Earlier in his speech LORD DUNEDIN himself had expressed his general conclusion with regard to the case before him, in the following terms ([1924] A.C. 727, 728) :

I am therefore of opinion that the words of LORD MANSFIELD are directly applicable to this case, and that it is against the interests of decency and public policy that the spouses should be allowed to give evidence of non-access, and thus de facto, even if not de jure, to bastardize their issue, when conception and birth alike fell within the time of wedlock.

I think it is clear that when, in the later passage in his speech, he deals with the question of condonation, he did not have in mind the possibility that evidence by a spouse denying intercourse could possibly have the effect of bastardizing a child subsequently born in wedlock. Indeed, he says that no such evidence has the remotest reference to the point of legitimacy of issue. It seems to me that the clue to what was meant by LORD DUNEDIN in this passage of his speech is to be found in the argument for the respondent (ibid., 695). What had been argued was that evidence of intercourse, or the absence of it, was commonly admitted in the Divorce Court without any suggestion that such evidence constituted a violation of the sanctity of married relations—and by way of illustration the cases of nullity, cruelty and condonation were instanced. With regard to condonation, Rowell v. Rowell (4) was cited—a case in which no question of the legitimacy of a child arose. This part of the argument was not directed to the question whether the admission of the evidence might tend to bastardize a child, but only to the question whether it violated the sanctity of married intercourse. LORD FINLAY and LORD DUNEDIN, as I understand them, dealt with this argument by saying, in effect, that it had nothing to do with the question then before the House—LORD FINLAY going on to say that in cases of condonation the evidence of non-access would nevertheless be inadmissible in the event, as he thought unlikely, of any question arising as to the paternity of a child. I feel sure that equally LORD DUNEDIN would have qualified his remarks in the same way if the possibility of the evidence tending to bastardize a child had been present to his mind. With all respect, I find myself unable to agree with the views expressed by the Divisional Court in Glenister v. Glenister (2), and my conclusion is that evidence by a husband denying intercourse, even though it be directed solely to the issue of condonation, is inadmissible if the effect of such evidence is to bastardize a child born within the time of wedlock.

This being so, the question arises whether the evidence of the husband in this case is such as would have the effect of bastardizing the child subsequently born. The husband's case is that there was no confession of adultery by his wife, or by either of the co-respondents, until the night of June 14, 1946. Until then the husband and the wife lived together as man and wife, and normal relations continued between them. It is only after the night of June 14, 1946, that the husband seeks to deny further intercourse. Would such denial, if he is allowed to give it, have the effect of bastardizing the child? In my judgment, quite clearly it would not. From June 14, 1946, to Apr. 3, 1947, if my reckoning is accurate, is 293 days. The normal period of gestation is, of course, only 275 days, but it is common knowledge that this period is frequently exceeded, sometimes by a considerable margin. Indeed, in Gaskill v. Gaskill (5) it was held in this court, by LORD BIRKENHEAD, L.C., that in the present state of medical knowledge a period of 331 days could not be said to be impossible, and it was, accordingly, decided in that case that evidence of non-access by a husband for that period was not sufficient to prove that the father of the child must have been someone other than the husband, so as to convict the wife of adultery. In the present case evidence that the husband ceased to have intercourse with the wife after the night of June 14, 1946, would clearly be insufficient to prove that the wife must have committed adultery after that date in order to bear a child on Apr. 3, 1947. The evidence of the husband, therefore, could not, in my judgment, have the effect of bastardizing the child, and for that reason I hold that it is admissible.

The issue, accordingly, falls to be determined on all the evidence that has been given, including that of the spouses. [HIS LORDSHIP reviewed the evidence and continued:] In all the circumstances I find as a fact that on frequent occasions up to the beginning of Aug., 1946, the husband lived with, and had intercourse with, the wife, thereby condoning her previous adultery, of which he had full knowledge at least after the middle of June. It follows that the King's Proctor is entitled to succeed on his plea, and to have the decree nisi rescinded and the petition dismissed.

Decree nisi rescinded with costs.

Solicitors: Russell, Orme & Dykes, Ledbury (for the husband); Treasury Solicitor (for the King's Proctor).

[Reported by R. HENDRY WHITE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

KILFORD v. KILFORD.

[PROBATE, DIVORCE AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION (Barnard, J.), May 15, June 23, July 22, 1947.]

Husband and Wife—Maintenance—Maintenance order made by justices—Wife granted divorce—Application to Divorce Court for maintenance order for nominal amount during currency of justices' order—Election by wife—Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925 (c. 49), s. 190 (2).

On Jan. 12, 1944, a wife obtained a maintenance order against her husband before the Colchester justices. On Jan. 13, 1947, she obtained a final decree of divorce against him and then she applied to the Divorce Court for an order under the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925, s. 190 (2), for a nominal amount by way of maintenance in order to preserve her right to apply in futuro under the Administration of Justice (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1938, s. 14, for an increase of the amount directed to be paid. On May 5, 1947, the application came before the registrar and he directed that it should stand adjourned sine die, to be restored for hearing if and when the order of the justices was discharged.

HELD: the wife must elect either to retain the order of the justices or to apply to the justices to have that order discharged under the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895, s. 7, and seek an order in the Divorce Court, and, therefore, the registrar's order must be set aside.

R. v. Middlesex JJ., Ex parte Bond ([1933] 1 K.B. 72) applied.

[AS TO PERMANENT MAINTENANCE AFTER DECREE OF DISSOLUTION, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 10, pp. 785-795, paras. 1244-1262; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 27, pp. 500-502, Nos. 5355-5378.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Scott v. Scott, [1921] P. 107; 90 L.J.P. 171; 124 L.T. 619; 27 Digest 510, 5486.
- (2) Mills v. Mills, [1940] 2 All E.R. 254; [1940] P. 124; 109 L.J.P. 86; 163 L.T. 272; Digest Supp.
- (3) R. v. Middlesex JJ., Ex parte Bond, [1933] 1 K.B. 72; 102 L.J.K.B. 40; 148 L.T. 134; 96 J.P. 487; Digest Supp.
- (4) Higgs v. Higgs, [1935] P. 28; 104 L.J.P. 1; 152 L.T. 24; 98 J.P. 443; Digest Supp.
- (5) Kirk v. Kirk, [1947] 2 All E.R. 118.

SUMMONS adjourned into open court.

The wife appealed against the order of a registrar by which her application for maintenance under the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925, s. 190 (2), was adjourned sine die, to be restored for hearing if and when an order made in her favour by justices was discharged. BARNARD, J., now set aside the order of the registrar and permitted the wife to elect either to rely on the order of the justices or to have her present application adjourned to enable her to apply to the justices to discharge their order.

P. M. O'Connor for the wife.

Coplestone-Boughey for the husband.

Cur. adv. vult.

July 22. BARNARD, J., read the following judgment. This is an application by a wife petitioner for maintenance under the Judicature Act, 1925, s. 190, she having obtained a final decree of divorce against the respondent husband on Jan. 13, 1947. On Jan. 12, 1944, the wife obtained a maintenance order for £2 per week against the husband in a court of summary jurisdiction at Colchester and that order remains an effective order, notwithstanding the divorce, until it is varied or discharged by that court. The husband is now employed as a civil engineering assistant in the engineer's and surveyor's department of the borough of Middleton, Lancashire, at a salary of approximately £420 per annum, and the wife is a state registered nurse employed by the Essex County Hospital, Colchester, as a ward sister at a salary of about £160 per annum, together with free board and lodging. At the present time both parties are content that the payments under the order of the court of summary jurisdiction should continue, but the wife, in addition thereto, asks for an order of this court for payment by the husband to herself of a nominal amount by way of maintenance under the Judicature Act, 1925, s. 190 (2), in order to preserve her rights to apply, in futuro, under the Administration of Justice (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1938, s. 14, for an increase of the amount directed to be paid. This application for maintenance originally came before the registrar on May 5, 1947, and he directed that it should stand adjourned sine die, to be restored for hearing if and when the order of the court of summary jurisdiction was discharged. The wife appealed from this decision and the appeal came before me on May 15, 1947. I thought it right to call for a report from the registrar, and to adjourn the appeal into open court for argument. The matter was further argued before me in open court on June 23, 1947, when I had the registrar's report dated May 16, 1947, before me.

I have come to the conclusion that the registrar was wrong in adjourning the wife's application for maintenance sine die. By the Judicature Act, 1925, s. 190, the court is given power to award maintenance on any decree for divorce, and LORD STERNDALÉ, M.R., in his judgment in Scott v. Scott (1), said ([1921] P. 120), that the word "on" does not mean an unlimited time within the judge's discretion, but it means within a reasonable time having regard to all the circumstances of the case. Again, in Mills v. Mills (2) SIR WILFRID GREENE, M.R., in referring to the court's jurisdiction under s. 190, said ([1940] 2 All E.R. 257):

That jurisdiction can only be exercised on any decree for divorce or nullity of marriage. Accordingly, if an application is made by a wife of which it can fairly be said that an order made upon it would not be made "on" such a decree, the court has no power to accede to the application.

The registrar's order seems to me to offend both the letter and the spirit of the statute, and must therefore be set aside.

The only question, therefore, left for me to decide is whether or not the wife is entitled to a maintenance order from this court, even though it be for a nominal amount, in addition to the order made in her favour by the justices. I consider that it would be most undesirable that there should be two orders for maintenance in existence at the same time. In R. v. Middlesex Justices, Ex parte Bond (3) AVORY, J., said ([1933] 1 K.B. 80):

The inconvenience of holding that there is concurrent jurisdiction in the Divorce Court and in the justices is obvious, for if the justices may make an order as in this case, there is nothing to prevent the husband going to the Divorce Court the next day and asking, possibly successfully, for a contrary order. The question might see-saw between the two courts, producing an absolute scandal.

AVORY, J., was referring to an order for custody made by justices, but this passage was referred to with approval by both LORD MERRIMAN, P., and LANGTON, J., in Higgs v. Higgs (4), in which an order for maintenance made by a metropolitan magistrate was in issue. It might be suggested that, because the wife is only asking for what is called a nominal order in order to preserve her rights, that this could neither conflict with the order made by the justices nor embarrass the husband, but none the less a so-called nominal order is an order for maintenance made under the Judicature Act, 1925, s. 190 (2), and on principle I think that a successful wife petitioner, who has previously obtained a maintenance order from justices, must elect either to retain that order or obtain an order in the Divorce Court. I am fortified in this view of the matter by what LORD MERRIMAN, P., said ([1947] 2 All E.R. 119) in the course of his judgment in Kirk v. Kirk (5):

Assuming that the justices had jurisdiction, in their discretion, to keep the order alive, manifestly one of the matters which would guide them and this court in considering the exercise of that discretion notwithstanding the decree of divorce would be whether the wife had any alternative rights in Scotland where she had obtained her decree, . . .

In that sentence the use of the word "alternative" is to be noted. If, in the present case, the wife desires an order for maintenance from this court, I am prepared to adjourn her application to enable her to apply under the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895, s. 7, to the Colchester justices to have their order discharged. If, on the other hand, she prefers to rely on that order, then her present application for maintenance to this court must be dismissed.

Solicitors: Corbin, Greener & Cook, agents for Thompson, Smith & Puxon, Colchester (for the wife); C. Hampton Vick, agent for S. J. Peters, Cambridge (for the husband).

[Reported by R. HENDRY WHITE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

BRITTLE v. BRITTLE (by his guardian).

[PROBATE, DIVORCE AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION (Willmer, J.), July 16, 1947].

Divorce—Cruelty—Legal responsibility—Onus of proof.

A Where a wife, who is seeking to divorce her husband on the ground of cruelty, proves acts which are prima facie acts of cruelty, the onus of showing that he was not legally responsible for his actions is on the husband, and he must discharge that onus in the same way and to the same extent as he would have to do in criminal proceedings.

Astle v. Astle ([1939] 3 All E.R. 967) applied.

[AS TO INSANITY AS A DEFENCE TO CRUELTY, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 10, pp. 652, 653, para. 958; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 27, p. 293, Nos. 2690-2692, and supplement.]

Case referred to :

B (1) Astle v. Astle, [1939] 3 All E.R. 967; [1939] P. 415; 109 L.J.P. 6; Digest Supp.

PETITION by the wife for divorce on the ground of cruelty. The defence was that the husband was not legally responsible for his actions so as to make acts of violence committed by him amount in law to cruelty. It was held that the onus was on the husband to show that he was not legally responsible and, since the onus had not been discharged, cruelty was proved. The facts appear in the judgment.

J. Montgomerie for the wife.Stuart Horner for the husband.

D WILLMER, J. : The question I have to determine is whether acts of violence committed in 1923 amounted in law to cruelty, and that, in turn, depends on whether or not, at the time when the husband was guilty of the alleged acts, he was (to put it in a single phrase) responsible for his actions. In 1923, following on one attack and preceding another, he was put into a mental home, where he remained for some months, and since 1939 he has been in a mental hospital.

E It is said on behalf of the wife that, once she proves acts which are prima facie acts of cruelty, the onus of showing that the husband was not responsible for his actions is on him and he must discharge that onus in the same way and to the same extent as he would have to in criminal proceedings, i.e., he must show either that he did not know what he was doing, or that he did not know that what he was doing was wrong. The authority for applying that principle to proceedings for cruelty in this Division is Astle v. Astle (1). The wife's argument, therefore, is that, the acts of violence being prima facie cruelty, if I am left in doubt whether the husband had the necessary knowledge, F the wife is entitled to succeed. I have had very considerable doubt, because of the delay in bringing the proceedings, but they could not have been brought before the passing of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1937, and by that time many years of delay had already gone by. One matter, however, which, in itself, is a source of doubt, but which, so far as it goes, is in favour of the wife, is the fact that, although acts of violence in 1923 are complained of by the wife, G who has not lived with the husband since that date, nobody certified the husband for another sixteen years, from which I can only draw the inference that, in the view of those qualified to judge, during that period he retained at least some measure of responsibility for his actions. I think that that consideration sways the balance in favour of the wife.

H I accept the argument put forward by counsel for the wife that the onus of displacing the prima facie case is on the husband. I do not see any answer to that argument and, the wife having proved the necessary acts of violence, I think the only conclusion to which I can come is that she has proved her case of cruelty.

Decree nisi.

Solicitors : L. H. Whitlam Smith, Law Society, Services Divorce Dept. (for the wife); Official Solicitor (for the husband).

[Reported by R. HENDRY WHITE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

G. C. & E. NUTHALL (1917), LTD. v. ENTERTAINMENTS
& GENERAL INVESTMENT CORPN., LTD., AND OTHERS.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Hallett, J.), July 9, 10, 11, 14, 1947.]

Landlord and Tenant—New lease—Reasonableness of grant—Premises required for occupation by landlord—Relevant date—"Landlord"—Compensation—Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927 (c. 36), s. 5 (3).

Section 5 (3) of the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927, provides: "Where the tenant is the applicant, the grant of a new lease under this section shall not be deemed to be reasonable—(a) unless the tenant proves that he is a suitable tenant and that he would be entitled to compensation under the last foregoing section, but that the sum which could be awarded to him under that section would not compensate him for the loss he would suffer if he removed to and carried on his trade or business in other premises; or (b) if the landlord proves—(i) that the premises are required for occupation by himself, or, where the landlord is an individual, for occupation by a son or daughter of his over eighteen years of age; or (ii) that he intends to pull down or remodel the premises; or (iii) that vacant possession of the premises is required in order to carry out a scheme of re-development; or (iv) that for any other reason the grant of such a lease of the premises would not be consistent with good estate management, and for this purpose regard shall be had to the development of any other property of the same landlord . . ." On an application by the tenant under s. 5 of the Act for a grant of a new tenancy:—

HELD: (i) although the tribunal may not be precluded by sub-s. (3) (a) or (b) it may still, in a proper case, come to the conclusion that the grant of a new lease is not reasonable.

(ii) By s. 5 (2) of the Act the tribunal, if precluded from granting a new lease on any of the grounds mentioned in s. 5 (3) (b), may award compensation to the tenant. It follows that, if the tribunal is precluded on any of the grounds mentioned in s. 5 (3) (a), or if, though not precluded from doing so, it considers it unreasonable to grant a new tenancy, it has no power to award compensation.

(iii) the material time for the purposes of sub-s. (3) (b) is the date of the expiration of the tenancy, or, possibly, the date when the tribunal comes to make its decision.

(iv) the "landlord" for the purposes of sub-s. (3) (b) is the person who is entitled to legal possession at the termination of the lease.

(v) that sub-s. (3) (b) (i) may apply, the landlord must prove that he "intends" to use the premises, when he obtains vacant possession of them, for occupation by himself.

[FOR THE LANDLORD AND TENANT ACT, 1927, s. 5 (3), see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 10, p. 382.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Simpson v. Charrington & Co., Ltd., [1934] 1 K.B. 64; 103 L.J.K.B. 49; 150 L.T. 103; C.A.; on appeal, sub nom. Charrington & Co., Ltd. v. Simpson, [1935] A.C. 325; 104 L.J.K.B. 226; 152 L.T. 469; H.L.; Digest Supp.
- (2) Smith v. Metropolitan Properties Co., Ltd., [1932] 1 K.B. 314; 101 L.J.K.B. 110; 146 L.T. 133; Digest Supp.
- (3) Dartford Brewery Co., Ltd. v. Freeman (No. 2), [1938] 4 All E.R. 78; Digest Supp.
- (4) British & Argentine Meat Co., Ltd. v. Randall, [1939] 4 All E.R. 293; 162 L.T. 91; Digest Supp.
- (5) Dale v. Hatfield Chase Corpn., [1922] 2 K.B. 282; 92 L.J.K.B. 237; 128 L.T. 194; 87 J.P. 11; Digest Supp.
- (6) Richards v. Pryse, [1927] 2 K.B. 76; 96 L.J.K.B. 743; 137 L.T. 170; Digest Supp.
- (7) R. v. St. Pancras Assessment Committee, (1877), 2 Q.B.D. 581; 46 L.J.M.C. 243; sub nom. Willing v. St. Pancras Assessment Committee, 37 L.T. 126; 41 J.P. 662; 38 Digest 423, 5.
- (8) Bruce v. McManus, [1915] 3 K.B. 1; 84 L.J.K.B. 1860; 113 L.T. 332; 79 J.P. 294; 42 Digest 924, 188.
- (9) Hurst v. Picture Theatres, Ltd., [1915] 1 K.B. 1; 83 L.J.K.B. 1836; 111 L.T. 972; 42 Digest 905, 23.

ORIGINATING SUMMONS under R.S.C. Ord. 53D, r. 17, for further consideration of the report of one of the panel of referees under the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927. The tenants applied, under s. 5 (1) of the Act, for a new lease of premises known as the Regal Cinema, Colchester, in lieu of compensation for loss of goodwill. The referee found that the landlords had proved the matters specified under s. 5 (3) (b) (i) and (iv), viz., that the premises were required for occupation by themselves and that the grant of a new lease would not be consistent with good estate management. The learned judge upheld the report of the referee and refused to grant a new lease.

Beney, K.C., and Ricardo for the applicants.

Sir Valentine Holmes, K.C., and T. G. Roche for the respondents.

HALLETT, J. : These proceedings are brought under s. 5 of the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927, by the applicants, G. C. & E. Nuthall (1917), Ltd., against the respondents, Entertainments and General Investment Corporation Ltd., and Odeon Associated Theatres, Ltd., to obtain the compulsory grant of a new tenancy of certain premises demised to the applicants by the respondents' predecessors in title under a lease dated June 30, 1933. For convenience the names of the parties are referred to as Nuthalls, Entertainments and O.A.T.S. respectively, the name O.A.T.S. being used to avoid confusion with another Odeon company which it will be necessary to mention. The lease was for a term of 14 years running from Mar. 25, 1933, and had, therefore, expired by effluxion of time on Mar. 25, 1947.

To succeed in such proceedings the applicant must, first of all, give a notice requiring a new lease, as provided by s. 5 (1). That notice must be given not more than 26, nor less than 12, months before the termination of the tenancy where the tenancy will terminate by effluxion of time, and here the notice was duly given on Mar. 12, 1945. The time for giving a notice claiming compensation under s. 4 of the Act and the time for giving notice claiming a new lease under s. 5 is the same. It will be observed, indeed, that under s. 5 (2) the date when an application for a new lease can be made is not less than 9 months before the termination of the tenancy. The notice of Mar. 12, 1945, claims in the alternative a new lease in lieu of (what I will call for short) s. 4 compensation, or, alternatively, s. 4 compensation to the extent of £40,000. It is clear, having regard to the decision of the Court of Appeal in Simpson v. Charrington & Co., Ltd. (1), that such a notice in the alternative is permissible, and, indeed, as was pointed out in that case, at the time when the notice has to be given the tenant may very well not yet have decided which form his claim should take. Simpson v. Charrington & Co., Ltd. (1) subsequently went to the House of Lords, but not on the point which is material for the present purpose.

The notice required by s. 5 (1) having been given, the next step which the applicant must take is to apply to the tribunal as provided by s. 5 (2). The tribunal is normally the county court, but where the parties so agree, as they have done in this case, the tribunal is the High Court : see s. 21 (1), proviso (a). The application to the High Court was made within the prescribed time and was dated Dec. 31, 1945. That application, as originally framed, was merely for a new lease, but it was amended on Jan. 24, 1946, pursuant to leave granted by a master the previous day, so as to claim, in the alternative, a declaration that on the determination of the tenancy the then respondents, Entertainments, would become liable to pay s. 4 compensation. It is, perhaps, a pity that that application for leave was given because it led to a subsequent application, which came before me, to strike out, putting it shortly, that part of the application which asked in the alternative for a declaration as to the payment of compensation under s. 4. I took the view that the claim for a declaration in respect of s. 4 compensation was merely an attempt to get round the decision of the Divisional Court in Smith v. Metropolitan Properties Co. (2). That decision held that a tenant cannot commence an action to recover compensation for goodwill under s. 4 of the Act until the tenancy has terminated and the tenant has quitted the holding. That case was not, so far as I can see, referred to in Simpson v. Charrington (1).

I took, and still take, the view that there is nothing in Simpson v. Charrington (1) which was inconsistent with the decision in Smith v. Metropolitan Properties Co. (2), Simpson v. Charrington (1) dealing with the validity of the notice of claim and Smith v. Metropolitan Properties Co. (2) dealing with the validity of the application to the tribunal, which comes at a later stage. However that may be, I gave leave to appeal against that part of my decision which directed the striking out of the alternative claim, the rest being consequential, but, so far as I am aware, no advantage was taken of that leave and my order stood. The present application, therefore, is solely for the grant of a new lease under the provisions of s. 5. That does not, however, prevent the award of compensation equivalent to the s. 4 compensation under the appropriate part of sub-s. (2) of s. 5.

The next step which was taken was the usual one of referring the matter to a referee. The order of reference was made on Nov. 6, 1946. On May 15, 1947, the referee made his report, but in the meantime, on Jan. 27, 1947, Entertainments agreed to assign to O.A.T.S. a large number of properties. Among the freehold and leasehold properties with their plant, machinery and the undertaking carried on in the properties which were to be sold under that agreement was the premises and undertaking of the Regal Cinema at Colchester. The date for completion fixed by the agreement was Feb. 28, 1947, but completion did not actually take place until Mar. 21, 1947, as appears from the notice given on behalf of the respondents to the solicitors for the applicants, dated Mar. 25, 1947. That sale being contemplated by the respondents on Feb. 4, 1947, an application was made that O.A.T.S. should be added as respondents and an order was made accordingly and the pleadings were amended on Feb. 6, an amended defence being delivered.

The report of the referee, as I have said, was made on May 15, 1947, and this matter has now come before me for further consideration under R.S.C. Ord. 53D, r. 17. The attitude which the court should adopt towards the report of a referee on such further consideration has been dealt with in three cases to which I have been referred and which I have carefully considered. The first is Simpson v. Charrington & Co., Ltd. (1), to which I have already referred. The second is Dartford Brewery Co. v. Freeman (3), where the matter was carefully considered by DU PARCQ, J., and the third is British and Argentine Meat Co. v. Randall (4). I need not read extracts from those cases. It is sufficient to say that the report is in no way binding on the tribunal even as regards its findings of fact. On the other hand, of course, if a referee of great experience has conducted a prolonged and careful investigation into the facts, one should be eager, as one certainly is, to avail oneself of what is found in his report with regard to the facts and, no doubt, one would normally be very loth to disturb what he finds without good reason. In the present case, the report certainly has, apart from its conclusions, been of the greatest value. It has recommended what is the appropriate amount of compensation to be assessed in accordance with the provisions of s. 4 and both parties have agreed that no further evidence should be called before me, and they further agree that I should be exonerated from going into the documents which are before me save in so far as either side drew my attention to anything in them or, of course, as I thought it proper to go into them myself.

When the applicant gets before the tribunal, he must prove certain things. First, he must prove, as appears from s. 5 (3) (a), that he is a suitable tenant. As to that, there has never been any dispute in this case. Next, he must prove that he would be entitled to compensation under s. 4. That has been disputed in this case by the respondents, but there was a great deal of evidence directly pointing to the conclusion that the applicants would be entitled to compensation under s. 4. The referee has reported in favour of the applicants on that point and has assessed that compensation at the sum of £2,100. So far as this further hearing before me has been concerned, it has no longer been disputed by the respondents that the applicants would be so entitled. The effect of the earlier dispute of that point by the respondents will be considered by me when I come to deal with another part of this matter. Next, the applicant has to prove that the sum which could be awarded to him under s. 4 would not compensate him for the loss he would suffer if he removed to, and carried on his trade or business in, other premises. There again, not merely was there a very substantial body of evidence, but, I think, it is now conceded that the referee has, inferentially, at any rate, reported in favour of the applicants because, in fixing the compensation which should be awarded under the proviso to s. 5 (3) (b), the referee has fixed the sum of £3,000. There is a dispute, to which I shall have to refer presently, whether that £3,000 includes the sum of £2,100. At any rate, it is greater than the sum of £2,100 and I have no doubt that the referee intended to report that there was (what I will call for short) a loss to the tenant exceeding the sum which could be awarded under s. 4. In that respect I accept the report of the referee. Lastly, the applicant must, in my judgment, satisfy not the referee, but the tribunal, that the grant of a new lease would in all the circumstances of the case be reasonable.

A Counsel for the applicants has strenuously contended that, if the tribunal is not precluded by the facts of the case, in the light of the provisions contained in s. 5 (3) (a) and (b), from considering the grant of a new lease reasonable, it must consider the grant of a new lease reasonable. I do not agree with that contention. I agree that in, perhaps, the majority of cases, if the tenant proves the matters set forth in sub-s. (3) (b), there may well be no circumstances to induce the tribunal not to consider the grant of a new lease reasonable, but I am firmly of opinion that, although the tribunal may not be precluded by sub-s. (3) (a) or (b), it may still, in a proper case, come to the conclusion that the grant of a new lease is not reasonable. The language of the section seems to me to afford strong support for that view.—What the section says is :

C Where the tenant is the applicant, the grant of a new lease . . . shall not be deemed to be reasonable (a) unless the tenant proves . . . or (b) if the landlord proves . . . What the section should have said, if it were to give effect to counsel's contention, is : "The grant of a new lease shall be considered reasonable if the tenant proves and unless the landlord proves"—it should be the other way round. The section is so drafted, in my opinion, as to make it plain that the court is not precluded from granting a new lease, but it has, none the less, to consider judicially from the evidence whether the granting of the new tenancy is in all the circumstances reasonable. The referee has not expressly dealt with the question of reasonableness.—He considered that the respondents had proved the matters specified under (i) and (iv) of (b) so that the grant of a new lease could not be deemed by the tribunal to be reasonable. Upon that view which he has expressed in his report it might well appear to be irrelevant for the referee in the first instance, and the tribunal thereafter, to consider the question of reasonableness.

E It has been contended by counsel for the applicants that the referee reported on the question of reasonableness in favour of the applicants. I do not agree. I think that the referee, naturally, and, indeed, logically, did not consider that question, having arrived at the conclusion at which he had arrived under (i) and (iv) of sub-s. (3) (b). Counsel's contention that the referee had decided in his favour on the question of reasonableness is based on the fact that it is only where the tribunal is precluded from granting a new lease by reason of the provisions of sub-s. (3) (b) that it can award what I have described as s. 4 compensation. The provisions in the latter part of s. 5 (2) are, perhaps, somewhat curiously worded. They read as follows :

F . . . but if the tribunal is precluded on any of the grounds mentioned in para. (b) of the following sub-section from making such an order [i.e. an order granting a new lease] the tribunal may award such compensation as is provided under the last foregoing section, [i.e., under s. 4].

G It seems to me clear from these words that, if the tribunal is precluded on any of the grounds mentioned in para. (a) from making an order, it is not empowered to award s. 4 compensation. Equally, it seems to me clear that, if the tribunal considers it unreasonable to grant a new tenancy, even though it may not be precluded from doing so, then again it cannot award s. 4 compensation. In my opinion, the words of the section are plain, and, moreover, I think authority for the view which I have expressed is to be found in a case which neither side, so far as I recollect, cited to me in that connection, viz., Smith v. Metropolitan Properties Co. (2). It will be observed that the point is expressly dealt with by TALBOT, J., ([1932] 1 K.B. 332), and, I think, what he there says makes it plain that the view which I have expressed has his great authority behind it.

H I must now turn to sub-s. (3) (b) (i) and (iv). Under those clauses, the tribunal is precluded from granting a new lease if the landlord proves :

(i) that the premises are required for occupation by himself, or, where the landlord is an individual, for occupation by a son or daughter of his over eighteen years of age, or . . . (iv) that for any other reason the grant of such a lease of the premises would not be consistent with good estate management, and for this purpose regard shall be had to the development of any other property of the same landlord.

Before I consider the arguments which have been adduced on those two clauses, there are one or two further facts which I must mention. The original lessors were Agers Cinema Circuit, Ltd. It is desirable for attention to be paid to the plan attached to the lease which shows to some extent the physical connection between the premises which Agers Cinema Circuit, Ltd., were letting to the applicants to carry on a cafe business and the part of the same building which was used for the purposes of a cinema. It is also desirable to have in mind certain protective covenants on the part of the tenant which Agers Cinema, Ltd., thought it desirable to exact, and, in particular, the tenant's covenants (f) and (k). Agers might have decided to use the cafe part of the premises themselves for the purpose of conducting a cafe business therein, but it is plain from the correspondence that they did not wish to do so, and that, on the contrary, they were anxious that the applicants should take a lease from them for the purpose of carrying on the cafe business. I do not know whether Agers, in 1933, had the necessary experience or organisation for carrying on a cafe business. It is plain that running a cafe business is essentially a very different thing from running a cinema or a circuit of cinemas. Another reason why Agers may very well have hesitated to take on the business of running the cafe is that, according to the evidence of Mr. Young, the valuer called by the applicants: "In those days cafes to cinemas were more or less an innovation. The newer cinemas built cafes with them, the older cinemas had nothing of the sort. It was rather a speculation as to how far those cafes attached to cinemas were going to pay," and then he goes on to say how that affected his figures. I mention that because at the time with which I am concerned, viz., 1947, it most certainly, upon the evidence, is no longer an innovation to have cafes attached to cinemas and controlled by the same management, at any rate so far as the cinemas belonging to what is sometimes called the Odeon Group are concerned. There is evidence from a Mr. Marshall, who was called on behalf of the respondents, that of the 300 cinemas now belonging to O.A.T.S. about a third have cafes attached and in only five cases of those roughly 100 cafes are they controlled and managed by tenants and not by O.A.T.S., or by managers employed by O.A.T.S. to do so. Those five cases, according to Mr. Marshall, are only due to the fact that therein, as in the present case, prior to Mar. 25, 1947, tenancies were in existence which could not be got rid of.

Having said that, I can turn to the three points which counsel for the applicants raises in connection with (b) (i). The first question is: What is the material time to look at for the purposes of (b)? Both parties are agreed, and I agree, that the material time is the date of the expiration of the tenancy, or possibly the date when the tribunal comes to make its decision. Both parties are agreed that in this case the distinction makes no difference. I agree with that view and I, therefore, do not propose to waste any time in discussing whether the earlier or the later date in this case is the correct one.

Who then were the landlords for the purpose of (b) at Mar. 25, 1947? The applicants say Entertainments, the respondents say O.A.T.S. I turn, first, to the definition of landlord in s. 25 (1) of the Act:

"For the purposes of this Act, unless the context otherwise requires . . . The expression "landlord" means any person who under a lease is, as between himself and the tenant or other lessee, for the time being entitled to the rents and profits of the demised premises payable under the lease.

There is no question whatever that under that definition O.A.T.S. were the landlords of the premises between Mar. 21, 1947, and the date of the expiration of the lease. Strictly speaking, since Mar. 25, 1947, there has been no landlord or tenant of the premises, although, no doubt, the payment to be made under the order of June 30, 1947, which allowed the tenants to remain in possession for a further period pending the determination of this case, will have to be made to O.A.T.S. I think it is clear that, so far as that definition is concerned, the landlord may be a different person at different times. It will be observed that the definition contains the words "for the time being entitled to the rents" etc. It seems to me quite plain that it is only the person who is entitled to the legal possession of the premises on the determination of the tenancy who can require the premises within (b) (i), or intend to pull them down within (b) (ii), or require vacant possession of the premises in order to carry out a scheme of re-development under (b) (iii). It seems to me abundantly clear that it is only the person who is entitled to the legal possession of the premises at the termination of the tenancy who can offer to sell the interest within s. 5 (7) to which, I think, no reference has been made. Lastly, it seems to me clear, and this is perhaps the most important of all, that no person can be ordered to grant a new lease under the section and no person can be bound to grant a new lease under s. 5 (10) except the person who is entitled to the legal possession at the termination of the lease.

The contention of counsel for the applicants involves these things. First of all, he argues, and, indeed, I think is compelled to argue, that the person to pay compensation under s. 4, if a claim has been made under that section where there has been a change of ownership during the currency of the proceedings, is not the person who came within the s. 25 (1) definition at the termination of the tenancy, but the person who came within that definition at the commencement of the proceedings. Secondly, he argues, and, indeed, is compelled to argue, that the person who can be ordered to grant a new lease by the tribunal, and the person who, under sub-s. (10), is bound to grant a new lease, again is not the person who had the right to legal possession at the termination of the lease or when the tribunal decided, but the person who had that right at the commencement of the proceedings. In other words, on this contention, the tribunal has to order a person who has no power to grant a new lease to grant one and a person who has no power to grant a new lease is bound to grant one under sub-s. (10) as the result of the tribunal's order. That seems to me to be a very difficult contention to make good, but I also think that Smith v. Metropolitan Properties Co. (2), and two other cases which were cited to me by counsel all go a very long way, if not the whole way, towards showing that the person who is liable to pay compensation under s. 4 is the person who was in receipt of the rents and profits immediately before the termination of the tenancy.

The two other cases to which I referred are Dale v. Hatfield Chase Corporation (5), and Richards v. Pryse (6). Counsel's contention, apparently, involves that the person who, by becoming the owner of the premises, gets the benefit of what is sometimes called the adherent goodwill is not the person who has to pay compensation for that adherent goodwill. That, as I have already said, involves that the person who alone can grant a new lease is not the person who can be ordered to grant a new lease. If, in the face of those difficulties, counsel were to argue that one person was the person to pay compensation and the other person the person to grant a new lease, or vice versa, I think his difficulties would be even greater.

Having said so much as to the difficulties of his contention it is now right that I should consider the sole foundation for it which he is able to adduce. I agree that in certain circumstances it might be conducive to justice if a change of landlord during proceedings under s. 5 were not allowed to affect the rights of the tenant. The landlords, when proceedings began, might be landlords who could never hope to prove the things mentioned in (b) (i) and (iv), but be replaced during the proceedings by landlords who could prove those things so that a tenant might begin proceedings for a new lease in circumstances warranting hopes of success and be defeated in the end by a change of circumstances during the proceedings. Again, a change of landlord might be deliberately made in order to defeat the claim for a new lease, the first landlord indirectly getting benefit from the vacant possession to which he was not entitled by selling or assigning for an enhanced price to a second landlord who was in a position to avail himself of the provisions of (b). That is not the case here, and I only mention the possibility to show that counsel has made the most of the argument. Although a section might have been inserted to crystallise, so to speak, the rights of landlord and tenant the question which I have to consider is whether s. 25 (2), on which alone counsel relies, amounts to such a section. That sub-section is as follows :

The designation of landlord and tenant shall continue to apply to the parties until the conclusion of any proceedings taken under or in pursuance of this Act in respect of compensation.

I think that the effect of that section clearly, on ordinary principles of construction, should be reconciled, if possible, with the effect of the immediately preceding s. 25 (1), and, further, that before I give to that sub-section the very strained, and, indeed, extraordinary, meaning contended for by counsel I ought to consider whether it cannot be given a more natural construction which fits in with s. 25 (1) and does not produce the consequences which I have described as following from counsel's argument. Such a construction is extremely easy to find and I think it fits in perfectly with the significant wording of sub-s. (2). As I have already pointed out, and as was pointed out by the court in Smith v. Metropolitan Properties Co. (2), the claim for compensation under s. 4 can only be brought at the termination of the tenancy and on quitting the holding. As soon as the tenancy expires the designations "landlord" and "tenant" obviously become inappropriate. Thereafter, the person against whom the claim for compensation may be made is not, strictly speaking, a landlord and the person making that claim is not, strictly speaking, a tenant. The one might be described as an ex-landlord and the other as an ex-tenant. Accordingly, one can see at once scope for a sub-section laying it down that the designation which the two parties enjoyed at the date of the expiration of the tenancy should continue to apply to them until the conclusion of the proceedings. I emphasise the word "designation" as fitting in, as I think, so well with that explanation of the sub-section, but I also emphasise the last words of the sub-section: "proceedings taken in respect of compensation." All proceedings taken in respect of compensation under s. 4, as I have said, must be taken after the relationship of landlord and tenant has ceased to exist. On the other hand, all proceedings for the grant of a new lease taken under s. 5 must be taken before the tenancy has expired.

The material parts of s. 5 (2) are :

... the tribunal, on application being made for the purpose either by the landlord or by the tenant not less than nine months before the termination of the tenancy, or, where the tenancy is terminated by notice, within two months after the service of the notice . . .

Proceedings for a new lease must, therefore, be begun while the relationship of landlord and tenant still has nine months to run. The proceedings for compensation must be begun when that relationship has ceased to exist. Therefore, it is impossible that one should find those words at the very end of s. 25 (2) qualifying the proceedings referred to as being proceedings in respect of compensation. For these reasons I am satisfied that s. 25 (2) does not have the effect of overriding the provisions of s. 25 (1), and I do not think that it has any application to proceedings under s. 5. I, therefore, decide, as the referee clearly would himself have decided, that O.A.T.S. are the landlords for the purposes of the provisions in (b).

The next word to be considered is the word "required" in (b) (i). I think it might be convenient if I deal first with the words "for occupation by himself." I ask myself, therefore, the question : Are the premises required for occupation by O.A.T.S. ? Admittedly, the premises have not at any time since Mar. 21 and, indeed, I think since Jan. 27, been required for occupation by Entertainments, and that, of course, is why counsel has argued so strenuously that Entertainments have continued to be the landlords since Mar. 21 for the purposes of s. 5 (3) (b). I agree with counsel that a mere legal right to possession is not enough to constitute occupation for the purposes of this provision.

I have considered three cases to which counsel has referred me to see whether they throw any light on the question what does constitute such an occupation. They are R. v. St. Pancras Assessment Committee (7), Bruce v. McManus (8), and, lastly, and most surprisingly, Hurst v. Picture Theatres (9). It is sufficient to say that I find no assistance from any of these cases. I also suggested myself that perhaps some assistance might be derived from a consideration of any cases decided under the Increase of Rent Acts, because the language of (b) (i) in some respects resembles, and, indeed, perhaps, was suggested by, certain provisions in the Increase of Rent Acts, dealing with cases where the landlord requires premises as a residence for himself, or for a son or daughter of his over the age of 18. I do not think I need refer to those provisions in the Increase of Rent Acts because I have come to the conclusion—and, I think, counsel agrees—that a consideration of them, or of any cases decided under them, can be of no help to me for present purposes. The Increase of Rent Acts provisions were dealing with a dwelling-house and residence therein which may well involve physical occupation by the landlord, whereas this Act deals with premises used for a trade or business which can clearly be occupied by a landlord irrespective of whether he is physically present on the premises. Indeed, the section itself expressly recognises that a landlord requiring the premises for occupation by himself may not be an individual, and, if not an individual, any physical occupation must clearly be by proxy. O.A.T.S. have, at least since Mar. 21, unquestionably intended on the expiration of the plaintiffs' lease to use the premises now in question to carry on therein a cafe business belonging exclusively to O.A.T.S. O.A.T.S. would take exclusively any net profits of that business and bear exclusively any net losses of that business. O.A.T.S. would provide any fund outside the takings which might be required for carrying on the business. Someone would have to manage the business carried on in the cafe, engage and dismiss staff, supervise their work, buy provisions, and so on, but the business would not be the business of the manager, and, if the manager were an individual, I think it would be quite out of the question to contend that the occupation of the cafe premises would be occupation by the manager and not occupation by O.A.T.S. Indeed, various parts of the management might be conducted by various persons.

Counsel's argument on this part of the case depends on the fact that Entertainments, in the first instance, and subsequently O.A.T.S., instead of themselves engaging somebody to manage the various branches of their business, which includes besides the cinema business the operation of cafes in conjunction with the cinemas, have chosen to employ another company, which, for short, I will call Odeon, to manage all the branches of Entertainments, and, subsequently, O.A.T.S., business for the latter company. I need not go into details but Odeon may be briefly described as a closely associated company. The first agreement of that kind which is before me is dated Aug. 25, 1944, made between Entertainments and Odeon Theatres, Ltd., not to be confused with Odeon. There was a further agreement made on Aug. 14, 1946, between Entertainments and Odeon Theatres, Ltd., one of the differences between the two agreements being that the remuneration payable to the managers was increased. On the same day, Aug. 14, 1946, there was an agreement made between Odeon Freeholds and Ground Rents, Ltd., which was then the name of the company which subsequently became O.A.T.S., and Odeon Theatres, Ltd. At that time the theatres belonging to Odeon Freeholds and Ground Rents, Ltd., did not include the theatre now in question, but it was an agreement for the management of a large number of theatres, and I think there is no doubt that on the acquisition of the Regal Cinema at Colchester that cinema would fall within the scope of the agreement. Counsel contends that the result of the management agreement made by O.A.T.S. with Odeon makes Odeon the contemplated occupier of the premises and not O.A.T.S. He pointed to the fact that the agreement to employ Odeon as managers is to last for 10 years, but that might equally be the case with an individual manager. He suggests that, if the management agreement was wrongfully terminated, or, to put it in another way, if the manager was wrongfully dismissed before the 10 years had expired, the remedy available to him might not be limited to damages, but might extend to a right to restrain O.A.T.S. from excluding him from the business premises. On that foundation he has sought to argue that Odeon became licensees on the premises with an irrevocable interest for 10 years. There might be cases where the owner of premises, when selling them or letting them, might, by means of a licence, confer such a right to the use of the premises by another as to prevent the owner from saying that he himself was occupying the premises within the meaning of the clause under consideration. I do not think that this could ever happen so long as the trade or business being carried on in the premises was exclusively the trade or business of the owner. The management agreement now under consideration lays down a great many duties that are to be performed by the managing company. I agree that those duties are extensive. I agree that in one respect at least the management agreement may be somewhat unusual, in that it enables a contract to be made by the manager in his own name as an alternative to making it in the name of the theatre owner, but the only right that the manager expressly gets under this agreement is a right to be paid a weekly management fee during the continuance of the employment. That is the only right, and, in my view, there cannot be spelt out of these agreements any such right to occupation of the premises as is necessary if Mr. Beney is to succeed in his argument that the contemplated occupation of the premises is by the manager, Odeon, and not by the owners of the business to be carried on there, viz., O.A.T.S. Counsel again has rightly insisted that for some purposes there is a vital distinction between the relationship of master and servant and the relationship of principal and agent, but in a trade or business to be carried on in premises for and on behalf of another it seems to me that whether the person physically resorting to the premises to carry on the trade or business is in the capacity of a servant or agent makes no difference to the question whether the premises are occupied by the owner of the trade or business. I have no doubt that it is O.A.T.S. who wish to have the premises in question for occupation by themselves.

I have used the word "wish" in order not to beg the remaining question which arises on cl. (b) (i), viz., the true meaning to be given to the word "required." The word "required" by itself is certainly ambiguous. It may mean in some context no more than "desired," and an instance of this can be found in s. 5 (5): "every lease granted under this section shall, if the landlord so requires," etc. It may mean, on the other hand, in other contexts "indispensable," as when one says "human beings require adequate nourishment to maintain proper health." I agree with counsel for the applicants that the first meaning is too narrow in the present context, but I agree, on the other hand, with counsel for the respondents that the second meaning is too wide. I think that useful light on the proper meaning of (b) (i) is afforded by a consideration of (b) as a whole. In the proviso the following language is used:

... if the grant of a new lease is refused by the tribunal on any such ground as is mentioned in para. (b), the tribunal may make it a condition of refusal that if the landlord fails to carry out his intention within such period as may be allowed by the tribunal, the landlord shall pay . . .

There is nothing to indicate that the word "intention" is there limited to the intention mentioned in (b) (ii), and I think it applies also to the intention to occupy contemplated by (i) and the intention to carry out a scheme of redevelopment contemplated by (iii). I, therefore, think that what the landlord has to prove under (i) is that he intends to use the premises for occupation by himself, just as under (iii) he has to prove that he intends to use the premises to carry out a scheme of redevelopment. If that be correct, O.A.T.S. undoubtedly intended at the material time, and still intend, to use the premises for occupation by themselves. If, contrary to my opinion, the word "required" in (i) should be interpreted more favourably to the plaintiffs as meaning "reasonably needed," I should still be of opinion that O.A.T.S. have proved what is necessary to bring the case within that provision. The question as it seems to me is not whether the premises are reasonably needed to carry on the cinema business, but whether they are reasonably needed that O.A.T.S. may be able to carry on a cafe business in conjunction with the cinema business. About that it seems to me there is no doubt, and I, therefore, uphold the report of the referee upon s. 5 (3) (b) (i).

I have felt a little more doubt on s. 5 (3) (b) (iv), but I think the physical connection which I have already described between the parts of the building used for the cinema business and the parts of the building used for the cafe business does render it desirable from the point of view of good estate management that both parties should be under the same control. The fact that the original lessors to the applicants took a different view and were content to rely on protective covenants in the lease, which could be amended, and, indeed, if need be, reinforced in any lease granted by the tribunal, has been present to my mind, but on the whole I have come to the conclusion that to grant now a separate lease of the cafe part of the building would not be consistent with the good management of the estate in which the whole building is comprised. Furthermore, even apart from the connection between the cinema part of the building and the cafe part of the building, I think that to own about 100 cinema premises, to carry on a cafe business in about 95 of them, but cause the cafe businesses in the remaining 5 to be carried on by independent tenants is not, in the absence of some good reason for the distinction, consistent with good estate management, I, therefore, uphold the report of the referee also as regards s. 5 (3) (b) (iv).

These findings render it unnecessary for me to decide whether, if I am not precluded by s. 3 from considering the grant of a new lease to be reasonable, I should consider that the grant of a new tenancy is, in all the circumstances, reasonable. This question, however, has been fully argued before me, and since I have come to a clear conclusion on it I think I ought to state my conclusions. Counsel for the applicants has pointed to the expectation of the renewal held out by the original lessor, to the success made by his client of what was at the beginning an innovation and to the length of time during which they have carried on the business. He also relied on the two points which, unless established, would absolutely preclude the tribunal under s. 3 (a) from granting a new lease—that the applicants have been satisfactory tenants and that the compensation obtainable under s. 4 would not indemnify them for their loss of goodwill. Counsel for the respondents, on the other hand, relied on the physical connection between the parts of the building and on the fact that the cafe is carried on under the name which identifies it with the management of the cinema and on the connection originally contemplated and likely to be required in future between the cafe and the supply of refreshments, etc., in the cinema itself. He points out that the grounds on which the applicants rely as ousting the operation in favour of the respondents of s. 5 (3) (b) (i) are so highly technical that, even if the respondents had not technically brought themselves within (i), their resistance to the grant of a new lease has in substance the same merits as if they had brought themselves within (i). Similarly, he relies on the fact that it is consistent with good estate management to have the cafe under the same control as the cinema. He points out further that these are not the only cafe premises owned by the applicants even in Colchester, and that the loss of these premises does not mean that the applicants' cafe business as a whole will be closed down.

Balancing the hardship to the applicants which is likely to be occasioned by refusing a new lease against the hardship to the respondents which is likely to be occasioned by granting one, I consider, in the exercise of my discretion, that the grant of a new tenancy is not in all the circumstances reasonable. The respondents are content, however, that I should refuse to make an order on the ground that I am precluded from making one on the grounds mentioned in (i) and (iv) of (b), and I, therefore, award compensation calculated under s. 4 as recommended by the referee, viz., £2,100. As regards costs, I have come to the conclusion that the applicants should pay three-fourths of the respondents' costs of the proceedings.

Report upheld.

Solicitors: Goulden, Mesquita & Co. (for the applicants); Richards, Butler & Co. (for the respondents).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

COPLANS v. KING.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Lord Greene, M.R., Cohen and Asquith, L.JJ.), July 30, 1947.]

Landlord and Tenant—Rent restriction—Recovery of possession—Hardship—Comparative hardship—Finality of decision of county court judge—Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933 (c. 32), sched. I, proviso.

Per cur : The decision of the county court judge, when considering whether or not to make an order for the possession of a house within the Rent Restrictions Acts, with regard to the balance of hardship under the proviso to sched. I to the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933, is final and cannot be made the subject of appeal to the Court of Appeal.

Dicta of SCOTT, L.J., in Chandler v. Strevett ([1947] 1 All E.R. 164, 165) not approved.

[AS TO RESTRICTIONS ON THE LANDLORDS' RIGHT TO POSSESSION, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 20, pp. 329-334, paras. 392-399; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 31, pp. 576-578, Nos. 7256-7270.]

Case referred to :

(1) Chandler v. Streveit, [1947] 1 All E.R. 164; 176 L.T. 300.

APPEAL by the tenant from a decision of Judge KONSTAM at Brentford County Court dated Nov. 12, 1946.

The county court judge made an order for possession in favour of the landlord and his decision is now affirmed on a consideration of the evidence. The case is reported on the disapproval by the members of the court of the observations made by SCOTT, L.J., in Chandler v. Streveit (1).

R. L. Travers for the tenant.

Dennis Lloyd for the landlord.

LORD GREENE, M.R. : The landlord was seeking to recover possession from the tenant to whom she had purported to sub-let the whole of the house. She herself had been tenant under a three years' lease which had expired from a company who owned the house, but she had continued to pay rent, which was accepted by the company without comment. The point taken by counsel for the defendant was that the judge found that the landlord's tenancy from the company was not a contractual tenancy, as it would have been in the ordinary case of holding over, but that she was a statutory tenant of the company under the Rent Restrictions Acts; that, as she had parted with possession to the tenant of the whole of the house, she had ceased to be entitled to the protection given by those Acts; and therefore, qua the tenant, she was a stranger who had no right to recover possession. Assuming, however, that the judge directed his mind to the question to which, according to authority, he ought to have directed his mind, namely, what was the true inference from the whole of the evidence which had been given before him, I cannot find any evidence which would justify the inference that the landlord and the company intended that the relationship between them after the termination of the three years' lease should be that of statutory tenant and landlord under the Rent Restrictions Acts. On the contrary, the evidence seems to me to point conclusively to the other inference, namely, that they intended to maintain the ordinary relationship of holding over at common law. It is not necessary, therefore, to discuss the question where the burden of proof would lie in a case where the only evidence before the court was the payment and receipt of rent.

That is sufficient to dispose of the appeal, but counsel mentioned another argument, namely, the question of comparative hardship under the proviso to sched. 1 to the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933. He agrees that, if that had arisen, the only ground on which he could succeed in displacing the finding of the county court judge would be by relying on the dicta of SCOTT, L.J., in Chandler v. Streveit (1). Those dicta were not repeated by either of the two Lords Justices who sat with SCOTT, L.J., on that appeal, and, if I may say so with great respect to SCOTT, L.J., I should require a great deal of persuasion to be induced to follow them. He asks the question ([1947] 1 All E.R. 165): "Did Parliament intend to leave that very difficult task"—i.e., the task of estimating the comparative hardship on either side—"in its entirety and finally to the county court judge to the exclusion of the Court of Appeal and even of the House of Lords?" With the greatest possible deference, I should have thought that that is the very thing that Parliament did intend in view of the class of persons that the statute was intended to benefit. The idea that the question of comparative hardship could be litigated up to the House of Lords appears, again with the greatest deference, to be one which, I should have thought, was clearly contrary to the intention of Parliament. Of course, if in a case there is evidence of hardship on one side and none on the other, the county court judge can come to only one conclusion, and if he finds hardship where the facts are not sufficient to constitute hardship in law—for example, something trivial, like the absence of a view of a neighbouring hill, river, tree, or something pleasant of that kind—he makes an error in law, but, once there is evidence which in law can amount to hardship on two sides, Parliament has deliberately made the county court judge the conclusive judge of the fact which is the greater hardship. So, with great deference to what SCOTT, L.J., said, I find myself constrained to disagree with the principle which I understand him to have suggested in that case. The appeal must be dismissed.

COHEN, L.J. : I agree, and I only desire to say that I share my Lord's difficulty in accepting the dicta of SCOTT, L.J., to which my Lord has referred. In saying this I am not in the least dissenting from the decision in Chandler v. Strevett (1)—indeed, I should not be at liberty to do so. It seems to me to be a good illustration of what my Lord has referred to, a case where the county court judge can be reversed because the evidence will only justify one conclusion regarding hardship. That was the ground for the decision of BUCKNILL, L.J., and SOMERVELL, L.J., in Chandler v. Strevett (1).

ASQUITH, L.J. : I agree.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors : H. N. H. Bransom (for the tenant); Bateman & Co. (for the landlord).

[Reported by C. N. BEATTIE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

B. JOHNSON & CO. (BUILDERS), LTD. v. MINISTER OF HEALTH.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Lord Greene, M.R., Cohen and Asquith, L.JJ.), July 22, 23, 24, 1947.]

C Public Health—Housing—Compulsory purchase order—Confirmation—Duties of Minister—Disclosure of information acquired before order made—"Lis"—"Quasi-judicial"—"Duty to act fairly"—Housing Act, 1936 (c. 51), sched. I (4), (5).

Owners of land comprised in a compulsory purchase order made by a local authority under s. 74 of the Housing Act, 1936, and confirmed by the Minister of Health under sched. I, para. (4) to the Act, applied to the court to quash the order on the grounds that the Minister, in considering objections to it, was bound to act in a quasi-judicial manner and that he had failed in that duty in that he had not made available to the objectors the contents (alleged to be relevant to the consideration of the objections) of certain letters written to the Minister by the local authority before the order was made :—

HELD : the confirmation of the order was essentially an administrative act, and the obligation of the Minister did not go beyond making available to both sides matter which had come into existence for the purpose of the quasi-lis, the inception of which was marked and constituted by the making of the objections. There was, therefore, no obligation on the Minister to make available material which came into his possession before that date.

Miller v. Minister of Health ([1946] K.B. 626), Summers v. Minister of Health ([1947] 1 All E.R. 184), and Price v. Minister of Health ([1947] 1 All E.R. 47) approved.

Board of Education v. Rice ([1911] A.C. 182) and R. v. Westminster Assessment Committee, Ex p. Grosvenor House (Park Lane), Ltd. ([1940] 4 All E.R. 132) distinguished.

[EDITORIAL NOTE.] In the course of his judgment, LORD GREENE, M.R., refers to observations of LORD SHAW in Local Government Board v. Arlidge (2) regarding the disclosure of the records of government departments. In the passage in question ([1915] A.C. 136, 137) LORD SHAW said : "The next proposition is this, that when a public local inquiry has been held in compliance with statute, the person whose interests are affected is entitled to something more, namely, a disclosure of the views of the inspector written out by him, in jottings or otherwise, for the guidance or consideration of the department in dealing with the case . . . I incline to hold that the disadvantage in very many cases would exceed the advantage of such disclosure. And I feel certain that if it were laid down in courts of law that such disclosure could be compelled, a serious impediment might be placed upon that frankness which ought to obtain among a staff accustomed to elaborately detailed and often most delicate and difficult tasks. The very same argument would lead to the disclosure of the whole file. It may contain, and frequently does contain, the views of inspectors, secretaries, assistants, and consultants of various degrees of experience, many of whose opinions may differ but all of which form the material for the ultimate decision. To set up any rule that that decision must on demand, and as matter of right, be accompanied by a disclosure of what went before, so that it may be weakened or strengthened or judged thereby, would be inconsistent, as I say, with efficiency, with practice, and with the true theory of complete parliamentary responsibility for departmental action. This is, in my opinion, implied as the legitimate and proper consequence of any department being vested by statute with authority to make determinations." LORD GREENE, M.R., also referred to the following remarks of LORD LOREBURN, L.C., in Board of Education v. Rice ([1911] A.C. 82): "Comparatively recent statutes have extended, if they have not originated, the practice of imposing upon departments or officers of State the duty of deciding or determining questions of various kinds. In the present instance, as in many others, what comes for determination is sometimes a matter to be settled by discretion, involving no law. It will, I suppose, usually be of an administrative kind; but sometimes it will involve matter of law as well as matter of fact, or even depend upon matter of law alone. In such cases the Board of Education will have to ascertain the law and also to ascertain the facts. I need not add that in doing either they must act in good faith and fairly listen to both sides, for that is a duty lying upon every one who decides anything. But I do not think they are bound to treat such a question as though it were a trial . . . They can obtain information in any way they think best, always giving a fair opportunity to those who are parties in the controversy for correcting or contradicting any relevant statement prejudicial to their view. Provided this is done, there is no appeal from the determination of the Board under s. 7 (3) of this Act. [Education Act, 1902.] The Board have, of course, no jurisdiction to decide abstract questions of law, but only to determine actual concrete differences that may arise, and as they arise, between the managers and the local education authority. The Board is in the nature of the arbitral tribunal, and a Court of law has no jurisdiction to hear appeals from the determination either upon law or upon fact. But if the Court is satisfied either that the Board have not acted judicially in the way I have described, or have not determined the question which they are required by the Act to determine, then there is a remedy by mandamus and certiorari."

AS TO COMPULSORY PURCHASE ORDERS UNDER THE HOUSING ACT, 1936, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 26, pp. 571-573, paras. 1207-1211.

AS TO QUASI-JUDICIAL POWERS, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 26, pp. 284-288, paras. 604-606; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 38, pp. 94-96, Nos. 697-704.]

Cases referred to :

- (1) Robinson and Others v. Minister of Town and Country Planning, [1947] 1 All E.R. 851.
- (2) Local Government Board v. Arlidge, [1915] A.C. 120; 84 L.J.K.B. 72; 111 L.T. 905; 79 J.P. 97; 38 Digest 217, 518.
- (3) Miller v. Minister of Health, [1946] K.B. 626; [1947] L.J.R. 146.
- (4) Price v. Minister of Health, [1947] 1 All E.R. 47; [1947] L.J.R. 291; 176 L.T. 305.
- (5) Summers v. Minister of Health, [1947] 1 All E.R. 184; 176 L.T. 237.
- (6) Errington v. Minister of Health, [1935] 1 K.B. 249; 104 L.J.K.B. 49; 152 L.T. 154; 99 J.P. 15; Digest Supp.
- (7) Board of Education v. Rice, [1911] A.C. 179; 80 L.J.K.B. 796; 104 L.T. 689; 75 J.P. 393; 19 Digest 602, 290.
- (8) R. v. Westminster Assessment Committee, Ex p. Grosvenor House (Park Lane), Ltd., [1940] 4 All E.R. 132; [1941] 1 K.B. 53; 104 J.P. 428; Digest Supp.

APPEAL by the Minister of Health from a decision of HENN COLLINS, J., dated Feb. 14, 1947, quashing a compulsory purchase order made by a local authority under the Housing Act, 1936, and confirmed by the Minister. The Court of Appeal now allowed the appeal and restored the order.

H. L. Parker for the Minister.

Rowe, K.C., and Milmo for the respondents (the objectors to the order).

LORD GREENE, M.R. : On Feb. 4, 1946, the Minister of Health confirmed a compulsory purchase order known as the Huyton-with-Roby (St. John's Road) Compulsory Purchase Order, 1945, which had been made by the local authority. HENN COLLINS, J., on the application of a company called B. Johnson & Co. (Builders), Ltd., the owners of the land comprised in the order, quashed that order for reasons which appear in his judgment. The grounds of the objection to the order may be stated quite briefly. It was said that the Minister, in considering the objection made by the applicants, who are respondents to this appeal—and I will call them "the respondents"—took into account certain letters which had been addressed to him by the local authority, before the order was made, and before, therefore, any question of objections by the respondents, had come into the picture. It is said by the respondents that the Minister, in considering the objections, was bound to act in a quasi-judicial manner, and that he had failed in that duty, because he had failed to make available to the respondents, as objectors, the matters mentioned in that correspondence, which, it was said, were relevant to the consideration of the objections. The crucial point in the argument, and, indeed, the crucial point in the whole appeal, lies in the circumstance that the correspondence in question took place before the Minister came under any statutory duty to consider objections, because no objections had then been made or could have been made. It is said, nevertheless, that the Minister was under a duty to make those matters available to the objectors.

- A The matter arises under the Housing Act, 1936, pt. V, which deals with the provision of housing accommodation for the working classes. Section 71 imposes on local authorities the duty of considering "the housing conditions in their district and the needs of the district with respect to the provision of further housing accommodation for the working classes." There is also in the section an obligation placed on the local authorities, "within three months after notice has been given to them by the Minister"—i.e., the Minister of
- B Health—"to prepare and submit to the Minister proposals for the provision of new houses for the working classes." The Act empowers local authorities to acquire land for the purpose of a scheme for the provision of such houses, and under s. 74 (1), the land may be acquired by agreement, or the local authority "may be authorised to purchase land compulsorily for those purposes by means of a compulsory purchase order made and submitted to the Minister and confirmed by him in accordance with the provisions of sched. I to this Act."
- C Schedule I lays down the necessary procedure for obtaining a compulsory purchase order. I need only refer to one or two of its provisions. I need not trouble with the machinery, previous to the decision of the council, with regard to submitting an order, but para. 3 provides that before submitting the order to the Minister—i.e., submitting it for confirmation pursuant to s. 74—the local authority shall publish notices in newspapers, and serve on owners, lessees and occupiers affected a notice of intention to submit the order for confirmation, specifying the time and manner for making objections. Paragraph 4 is as follows :
- D

Except in the case of an order made under s. 36 of this Act, if no objection is duly made by any of the persons upon whom notices are required to be served, or if all objections so made are withdrawn, then, subject to the provisions hereinafter in this schedule contained, the Minister may, if he thinks fit, confirm the order with or without modification, but in any other case he shall, before confirming the order, cause a public local inquiry to be held, and shall consider any objection not withdrawn and the report of the person who held the inquiry, and may then confirm the order either with or without modification : Provided that the Minister may require any person who has made an objection to state in writing the grounds thereof and may confirm the order without causing a public local inquiry to be held if he is satisfied that every objection duly made relates exclusively to matters which can be dealt with by the arbitrator

E

F by whom the compensation is to be assessed.

- It will be seen that that paragraph makes it compulsory to hold a public inquiry where objections have been made and not withdrawn. The duty placed on the Minister with regard to objections is to consider them before confirming the order. He is also to consider the report of the person who held the inquiry. Having done that, his functions are laid down by the last words of the paragraph,
- G viz., "and may then confirm the order either with or without modification." Those words are important, because they make it clear that it is to the Minister that Parliament has committed the decision whether he will or will not confirm the order after he has done all that the statute requires him to do. There is nothing in that paragraph, or anywhere else in the Act, which imposes on the Minister any obligation with regard to the objections, save the obligation to consider them. He is not bound to base his decision on any conclusion that
- H he comes to with regard to the objections, and that must be so when one gives a moment's thought to the situation. The decision whether to confirm or not must be made in relation to questions of policy, and the Minister, in deciding whether to confirm or not, will, like every Minister entrusted with administrative duties, weigh up the considerations which are to affect his mind, the preponderating factor in many, if not all, cases being that of public policy, having regard to all the facts of the case. I do not think that I need read anything more in that Act, but an amendment was introduced by the Housing (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1944. By s. 2, for a limited period, which was still running at the relevant time in this case, the Minister was relieved of the obligation of causing a public local inquiry to be held. The obligation to consider objections was, however, preserved.

In the present case, the Minister decided not to hold a public local inquiry. Instead, he directed an informal inquiry at which the local authority and the respondents were heard and given an opportunity of pressing the submissions they wished to make. No objection has been made, or, indeed, could be made, to that procedure. The Minister was entitled to inform his mind by informal machinery of that sort, and it was a very convenient method of enabling the objectors to put forward their objections and any arguments that they wished to submit. Having considered the report made after that informal inquiry, and having considered the objections, the Minister confirmed the compulsory purchase order. The whole of that procedure was perfectly in order, subject to one question only, viz., the question which we have to decide, whether the action of the Minister was vitiated by the non-production to the respondents of the correspondence to which I have referred. The objections were contained in a letter of Sept. 17, 1945, and were supplemented in a further letter of Oct. 16, 1945. Those objections, it is common ground, marked and constituted the inception of what is conveniently, but dangerously, referred to as the lis. The correspondence, the non-production of which is complained of, consisted, first, of a letter of Aug. 27, 1945, from the local authority to the Ministry, containing the statement that proposals for the making of a compulsory purchase order had "already been provisionally accepted by the department as the site for the council's second year housing programme." The other statement was this: "I may add that the district valuer's attempts to negotiate the voluntary sale of the land have failed." That statement is denied on behalf of the respondents. They say that there had not been any inquiries for voluntary sale, and the statement that negotiations had taken place and had failed was calculated to affect the mind of the Minister, in considering the objections. The other letter is one of Sept. 6, 1944, and the statement objected to there was this: "A transfer of ownership which was commenced prior to the war was not completed owing to war conditions until some time this year, and the land has now been purchased, I understand, by a firm of speculative builders who have expressed their readiness to sell the land to the council at 5s. per square yard, although, of course, they admit that this is a bargaining offer from which they would be prepared to make concessions." The price there mentioned, it is sufficient to say, is substantially in excess of the estimate given by the district valuer of the price which might be expected to be obtained as the result of an arbitration. The paragraph is stated by the respondents to amount to a statement that they were speculative builders, an expression which is said to be derogatory, who were demanding an excessive price and were out to extract as much as they possibly could in the way of purchase price. That again, it is said, was relevant to the objections, in the sense that with before him that statement and the innuendo said to be implicit in it the Minister would be affected in considering whether to give any, and what, weight to the objections. There is no question that the official in the Ministry who was dealing with this matter had this correspondence before him. What weight he gave to them, is another matter altogether.

Counsel for the Minister, put forward two arguments. He said, first, that, having regard to the date when these letters were received by the Minister, viz., when the Minister's functions and character were purely administrative and not in any sense quasi-judicial, the so-called lis not having begun, he was under no obligation to make them available to the objectors. Alternatively, he said that, if he was under any obligation to disclose anterior documents—i.e., documents anterior to the objections—it could only extend to documents that were relevant to the objections and that these statements were not relevant thereto.

Cases of this kind are to be found in the books in considerable numbers, and, although the provisions of every statute dealing with this class of matter have to be considered by reference to their own language, there are one or two general observations that I think may be made about the particular provisions with which we are concerned. First, the functions of the Minister in carrying these provisions into operation are fundamentally administrative functions.

In carrying them out, he has the duty which every Minister owes to the Crown, viz., to perform his functions fairly and honestly, and to the best of his ability. But his functions are administrative functions, subject only to the qualification that, at a particular stage and for a particular and limited purpose, there is superimposed on his administrative character a character which is loosely described as "quasi-judicial." The language which has always been construed

- A "quasi-judicial" is to be found in the duty to consider the objections, which, as I have said, is superimposed on a process of Ministerial action which is essentially administrative. That process may begin in all sorts of manners—the collection of information, the ascertainment of facts, and the consideration of representations made from all sorts of quarters, and so forth, long before any question of objections can arise under the procedure laid down by the Act.
- B While acting at that stage, to carry the Act into effect or for purposes relevant to it and bearing on it, the Minister is an executive officer of government, and nothing else. The administrative character in which he acts reappears at a later stage because, after considering the objections, which may be regarded as the culminating point of his quasi-judicial functions, there follows something which again, in my view, is purely administrative, viz., the decision whether or not to confirm the order. That decision must be an administrative decision,
- C because it is not to be based purely on the view that he forms of the objections, vis-a-vis the desires of the local authority, but is to be guided by his view as to the policy which in the circumstances he ought to pursue.

- It is manifest that, in the operation of hybrid functions of that kind, no perfectly logical result is to be expected. In the language that is used commonly in these cases, there are three phrases which crop up, and which, I think, deserve a little examination to see, at any rate, what they do not mean. The first of
- D these phrases I have referred to already, viz., the word lis. Lis, of course, implies the conception of an issue joined between two parties. The decision of a lis, in the ordinary use of legal language, is the decision of that issue. The consideration of the objections, in that sense, does not arise out of a lis at all. What is described here as a lis—the raising of the objections to the order, the consideration of the matters so raised and the representations of the local authority and the objectors—is merely a stage in the process of arriving at an
- E administrative decision. It is a stage which the courts have always said requires a certain method of approach and method of conduct, but it is not a lis inter partes, and for the simple reason that the local authority and the objectors are not parties to anything that resembles litigation. A moment's thought will show that any such conception of the relationship must be fallacious, because on the substantive matter, viz., whether the order should be confirmed or not, there is a
- F third party who is not present, viz., the public, and it is the function of the Minister to consider the rights and the interests of the public. That by itself shows that it is completely wrong to treat the controversy between objector and local authority as a controversy which covers the whole of the ground. It is in respect of the public interest that the discretion that Parliament has given to the Minister comes into operation. It may well be that, on considering the objections, the Minister may find that they are reasonable and that the facts
- G alleged in them are true, but, nevertheless, he may decide that he will overrule them. His action in so deciding is a purely administrative action, based on his conceptions as to what public policy demands. His views on that matter he must, if necessary, defend in Parliament, but he cannot be called on to defend them in the courts. The objections, in other words, may fail to produce the result desired by the objector, not because the objector has been defeated by the local authority in a sort of litigation, but because the objections have been
- H overruled by the Minister's decision as to what the public interest demands. Unless that aspect of this stage in the process is thoroughly appreciated, the word lis may result in a completely fallacious approach to the type of problem with which we have to deal. Used in a broadly analogous sense, and in order to avoid undue length of exposition, the phrase is a convenient one, but I am endeavouring to secure that the phrase does not mislead me into pressing what is a very loose analogy to a point which would lead to results which would be quite unacceptable.

The next expression on which I would like to say a word is the word "quasi-judicial." The matter in respect of which this quasi-judicial behaviour is called for is the matter imposed by way of statutory duty, viz., the consideration of the objections. One thing is clear, that the decision of the Minister is not impeachable in the courts on the grounds on which a judicial decision might be impeached. I have given an example of what I mean. It would be impossible for an objector to attempt to get the decision set aside on the grounds that the evidence at the inquiry, or the evidence put before the Minister in his quasi-judicial capacity, was insufficient to support his decision to confirm the order. A

 An attempt was made recently in the Plymouth case (1) before this court to introduce that type of judicial conception into similar administrative provisions, and an attempt was made to show that in that case the evidence before the Minister compelled him, as a matter of law, to take the step which the objectors there said he ought to have taken. This court pointed out that to accept any such argument would involve substituting the opinion of the court as to what considerations should weigh with the Minister for the opinion of the Minister himself, which had been made by Parliament the decisive matter. B
 In a nutshell, the decision of the Minister is a thing for which he must be answerable in Parliament, and his actions cannot be controlled by the courts. Of course, I am speaking on the assumption that everything has been done regularly, and that the Minister has not failed in the duties which are put on him in his quasi-judicial capacity. I merely mention that to illustrate my point that, if the phrase "quasi-judicial" is not very closely watched, it is apt to lead to the fallacious view that the decision of the Minister is in some sense a quasi-judicial decision which can be challenged on the ground of lack of evidence, for instance, in the courts in the same way as a judicial decision might be challenged. C
 In this hybrid mixture of administrative and quasi-judicial function the two elements are closely intermingled, but, as I have said, the basic element is the administrative act which begins, or may begin, before, and ends after, the quasi-judicial stage has been completed. The word "quasi-judicial" again leads to a temptation to import into the area which that expression covers conceptions which are very suitable to the conduct of an ordinary piece of litigation, but which are quite unsuitable to the performance of the acts which have been entrusted to the Minister by Parliament. D

The last phrase about which I might say a word—and I say it particularly because I am disposed to think that HENN COLLINS, J., in this case really, E if I may say so with respect, confused the two meanings and applications of the phrase which I am about to cite—is the phrase "duty to act fairly." As I have said, every Minister of the Crown is under a duty, constitutionally, to the King to perform his functions honestly and fairly and to the best of his ability, but his failure to do so, speaking generally, is not a matter with which the courts are concerned. As a Minister, if he acts unfairly, his action may be challenged and criticised in Parliament. It cannot be challenged and criticised in the courts unless he has acted unfairly in another sense, viz., in the sense of having, while performing quasi-judicial functions, acted in a way which no person performing such functions, in the opinion of the court, ought to act. F
 On the assumption, for instance, that the respondents are wrong in their contention, and that there was no obligation to disclose these documents, I can well understand some people might say: "Well, unless there was some other objection, the Minister ought, in fairness, to have let these people know what he had got in his file on this particular topic." G
 If the Crown is right and the respondents are wrong, the statement that in fairness he ought to have disclosed that information means nothing more than that, as a Minister is expected to act fairly, he might have been expected to do it. It would not mean that his failure to do it amounted to a breach by him of any duty imposed on him by law which could be discussed and enforced in the courts. On the other hand, if the expression "bound to act fairly" is used in strict reference to his semi-judicial functions, H it then bears a totally different meaning. It then means, not that a Minister must be expected under his general duty to act fairly, but that, if he does not act fairly, he breaks a rule laid down by the courts for the behaviour of a quasi-judicial officer. Therefore, it is important, in my opinion, if that phrase is used, to be quite sure in which of those two senses it is being used.

Returning to the present case, certain matters are common ground. It is not disputed by the respondents that the Minister, in coming to his decision whether to confirm or not to confirm a compulsory purchase order, is entitled to have his mind informed in a number of ways. In other words, he is not limited to material contained in the objections—not limited to arguments, evidence, and considerations put forward by the local authority for the purpose of the considerations of the objections, or put forward by the objectors themselves. It is obvious to anyone who has any familiarity with the operations of government departments that matters of high public policy, such as this, are, or may be, under constant consideration and review by the necessary Minister. The problem does not, so to speak, arrive suddenly out of the blue by the putting forward by the local authority of a compulsory purchase order for confirmation. The housing conditions in great cities are the subject of continuous consideration, not merely by one Ministry, but by several. Information may have arrived, reports may have been obtained, representations and arguments may have been put forward by other Ministries, and in a great many cases one would expect to find a fairly bulky file, much of which, if not the whole of it, may bear on some particular application. Obviously, it would be absurd to say that a Minister, in considering whether to confirm the compulsory purchase order, must exclude from his mind information and considerations which have come before him in that sort of way. It is on the obligation alleged, viz., to disclose information of that kind, that the present controversy turns. It is, not unfair to say that, generally speaking, the idea that a Minister can be compelled to disclose to anybody information of that kind, which he has obtained as a purely administrative person, is alien to our whole conception of government in this country. I referred in my judgment in the Plymouth case (1) ([1947] 1 All E.R. 858) to certain observations of LORD SHAW, in Local Government Board v. Arlidge (2) ([1915] A.C. 137), which, so far as I know, have never been contradicted, and which, in my opinion, substantially represent one aspect of our conception of government.* It is, therefore, admitted that matters of that kind can be taken into consideration, and that the decision of the Minister may be affected and governed by them, irrespective of the objections and what may be said or established in support of them. It is further common ground, and indeed, it is clearly established by authority, that statements made by, or obtained from, either of the two quasi-parties to the quasi-lis while it is pending, viz., the local authority and the objector, must be disclosed to the other quasi-party. Information so provided and put before the Minister is information given to enable him to do the thing he is doing at that stage, considering the objections, and it has always been naturally said that information of that kind must be disclosed to the other party to give that other party an opportunity of converting it, or making comments upon it.

Does that obligation extend to a matter brought to the knowledge of the Minister before he assumes the quasi-judicial role, when his functions are purely administrative and his action in receiving the information and putting it in his file is a purely administrative action? The objectors maintain that, subject to certain qualifications which I will mention, material which is obtained and considered by the Minister and may effect his decision whether or not to give effect to the objections ought to be made available to the objectors, even if it was obtained long before any objections were or could be made. That proposition, if accepted, would involve remarkable results. The Minister may have—if I may describe the thing graphically—in his office a file (it may be a very large file) containing matters bearing on the particular case, or matters bearing generally, for instance, on the state of working class housing in a great city without reference to any particular plot of land. There may be a report which the Minister has obtained as to the state of working class houses in a particular city which makes it perfectly clear that, as a matter of public policy, he ought to do everything he possibly can to make land available for the construction of working class houses. A report of that kind may well induce him to say, when he comes to consider the objections: "This objector has got, from his point of view, a very strong case. He is going to be dispossessed, and it will mean a great hardship on him," and matters of that kind, but he may add: "I have got in my file a report which I obtained a year ago as to housing conditions in this city, and the matter contained in that report makes it imperative, in my view, to confirm this order, so as to carry out what I consider to be the proper public policy." A report of that kind would, clearly, be relevant to the objections, because, in the case I put, the report is the thing that has induced the Minister to overrule the objections, however sound in the abstract, and taken by themselves, he may consider them to be. The argument, therefore, if carried to that extreme point, would necessarily, as it seems to me, involve the disclosure to the objectors, and to the local authority, of the Minister's file. That is a proposition from which even counsel for the respondents shrank, and he qualified it by what, as was pointed out by COHEN, L.J., during the argument, is an illogical qualification. He limited the kind of information, the disclosure of which he said was compulsory, to communications received from the other quasi-party to the quasi-lis. So put, the proposition was sufficient to cover what he was striving to secure here, the production of letters originating with the local authority. That, he said, was sufficient for his purpose, but that will not do because the principle on which he bases that limited proposition is one which leads inevitably, if it be right, to the acceptance of the larger proposition, and that larger proposition is one which, I venture to think, is quite unacceptable.

* SEE EDITORIAL NOTE, p. 395 ante.

There is one more qualification which he introduced, consisting of the word "relevant." He said that his principle only relates to relevant material. When asked who was to decide what material was relevant or not, he replied: "The court." Think what that means. The Minister searches in his file for correspondence with the local authority anterior to the submission of the order and the making of the objections. He finds a great deal which he decides is not relevant in any sense to these objections. He, therefore, does not disclose them. His action being challenged on the ground that he has failed to disclose relevant material, and the court then having before it the documents which the objectors say were relevant and the Minister thought were not relevant, the court is to decide which was right. That, again, would lead to very curious results. There may be a matter in the file which helps—or, perhaps, compels—the Minister to confirm the order. I gave an example a moment ago, a report obtained possibly some time before, it may be from the local authority itself, in pursuance of its duty under s. 71 of the Act. That would have to be disclosed because, although it may contain no reference to the land which ultimately becomes the subject of the compulsory purchase order, it is a matter which would affect the general view of policy of the Minister.

